Delegate. A person who is delegated or commissioned to act in the stead of another. Landro v. Pacific Atlantic S. S. Co., D.C.Wash., 30 F.Supp. 538, 539. A person to whom affairs are committed by another; an attorney.

A person elected or appointed to be a member of a representative assembly. Usually spoken of one sent to a special or occasional assembly or convention. Person selected by a constituency and authorized to act for it at a party or State convention. See also Delegation.

Delegates, the high court of. In English law, formerly the court of appeal from the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts. Abolished upon the judicial committee of the privy council being constituted the court of appeal in such cases.

Delegation. A sending away; a putting into commission; the assignment of a debt to another; the entrusting another with a general power to act for the good of those who depute him; a body of delegates. The transfer of authority by one person to another. The act of making or commissioning a delegate.

The body of delegates from a State to a national nominating convention or from a county to a State or other party convention. The whole body of delegates or representatives sent to a convention or assembly from one district, place, or political unit are collectively spoken of as a “delegation.”

In civil law, a species of novation which consists in the change of one debtor for another, when he who is indebted substitutes a third person who obligates himself in his stead to the creditor, or to the person appointed by him so that the first debtor is acquitted and his obligation extinguished, and the creditor contents himself in his stead to the creditor, or to the person appointed by him so that the first debtor is acquitted and his obligation extinguished, and the creditor contents himself in his stead to the creditor, or to the person appointed by him so that the first debtor is Delegation of powers. Transfer of authority by one branch of government in which such authority is vested to some other branch or administrative agency.

U.S. Constitution delegates different powers to the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government. Exercise by the executive branch of the powers delegated to the legislative branch offends this separation and delegation of powers and hence is unconstitutional. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. U.S., 295 U.S. 495, 55 S.Ct. 837, 79 L.Ed. 1570. Certain powers may not be delegated from one branch of government to another, such as the judicial powers or such congressional powers as power to declare war, impeach, or admit new states.

For distinction between delegated powers and various other types of constitutional powers, see Power (Constitutional powers).

De legatis et fidei commissis /diy lẹgèdáyàs et fàdídiyày kàmisà/. Of legacies and trusts. The name of a title of the Pandects.

Delegatus non potest delegare /dèlègèdáyàs nòn pówðdast délègèrìyà/. A delegate cannot delegate; an agent cannot delegate his functions to a subagent without the knowledge or consent of the principal; the person to whom an office or duty is delegated cannot lawfully devolve the duty on another, unless he be expressly authorized so to do.

Delete /dəlɪt/. To erase; to remove; to strike out.

Deleterious /dɛlɪtɛriəs/. Hurtful, morally or physically injurious; poisonous; unwholesome.

Deliberate, v. To weigh, ponder, discuss, regard upon, consider. To examine and consult in order to form an opinion. To weigh in the mind; to consider the reasons for and against; to consider maturely; reflect upon, as to deliberate a question; to weigh the arguments for and against a proposed course of action. People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 156 P.2d 7, 17, 18. See also Deliberation.

Deliberate, adj. Well advised; carefully considered; not sudden or rash; circumspect; slow in determining. Willful rather than merely intentional. Formed, arrived at, or determined upon as a result of careful thought and weighing of considerations, as a deliberate judgment or plan. Carried on coolly and steadily, especially according to a preconceived design; given to weighing facts and arguments with a view to a choice or decision; careful in considering the consequences of a step; slow in action; unhurried; characterized by reflection; dispassionate; not rash. People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 156 P.2d 7, 17, 18.

By the use of this word, in describing a crime, the idea is conveyed that the perpetrator weighs the motives for the act and its consequences, the nature of the crime, or other things connected with his intentions, with a view to a decision thereon; that he carefully considers all these, and that the act is not suddenly committed. It implies that the perpetrator must be capable of the exercise of such mental powers as are called into use by deliberation and the consideration and weighing of motives and consequences. See also Deliberation; Premeditation.

Deliberately. Willfully; with premeditation; intentionally; purposely; in cold blood. Averheart v. State, 158 Ark. 639, 238 S.W. 620, 621.

Deliberate speed. Phrase used in mandate to desegregate public schools and means such speed as is consistent with the welfare of all people of the state, with the maintenance of law and order and with the preservation, if possible, of the common school system. Calhoun v. Members of Bd. of Ed., City of Atlanta, D.C.Ga., 188 F.Supp. 401, 404; Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873.

Deliberation. The act or process of deliberating. The act of weighing and examining the reasons for and against a contemplated act or course of conduct or a choice of acts or means. As used in context of an essential element of first-degree murder, is a weighing in the mind of consequences of course of conduct, as distinguished from acting upon a sudden impulse without exercise of reasoning powers. Davis v. State, 251 Ark. 771, 475 S.W.2d 155, 156. See also Deliberate; Premeditation.

De libertate probanda /diy lìbərtəˈdiːdɨ proˈbændə/. Writ for proving liberty. A writ which lay for such as, being demanded for villeins or nefs, offered to prove themselves free.

De libertatibus allocandis /diy lìbərtəˈtɪbəs əˈlɒkændəs/. A writ of various forms, to enable a citizen to recover the liberties to which he was entitled.

De licentia transfretandi /diy lɪˈsɛntsə trənsˌfretəndi/. Writ of permission to cross the sea. An old writ directed to the wardens of the port of Dover, or other seaport in England, commanding them to permit the persons named in the writ to cross the sea from such port, on certain conditions.

Delict. Criminal offense; tort; a wrong.

In Roman law this word, taken in its most general sense, is wider in both directions than our English term "tort." On the one hand, it includes those wrongful acts which, while directly affecting some individual or his property, yet extend in their injurious consequences to the peace or security of the community at large, and hence rise to the grade of crimes or misdemeanors. These acts were termed in the Roman law "public delicts;" while those for which the only penalty exacted was compensation to the person primarily injured were denominated "private delicts." On the other hand, the term appears to have included injurious actions which transpired without any malicious intention on the part of the doer. A quasi delict is: Roman law was an act whereby a person, without malice, but by fault, negligence, or imprudence not legally excusable, caused injury to another. They were four in number, viz.: (1) Qui judex litem suam fecit, being the offense of partiality or excess in the judex (juryman). (2) Dejectum effusumve aliquid, being the tort committed by one’s servant in emptying or throwing something out of an attic or upper story upon a person passing beneath. (3) Damnum infectum, being the offense of hanging dangerous articles over the heads of persons passing along the king’s highway. (4) Torts committed by one’s agents in the course of their employment.

Delictual fault /dəlɪkˈtʃuːəl fɔɪlt/. An act, productive of obligations, which takes place between persons juridically strangers to each other; it supposes the absence of obligation and its result is the creation of one. Reserve Ins. Co. v. Fabre, 243 La. 982, 149 So.2d 413, 416.

Delictum /dəlɪktəm/. Lat. A delict, tort, wrong, injury, or offense. Actions ex delicto are such as are founded on a tort, as distinguished from actions on contract.

Culpability, blameworthiness, or legal delinquency. The word occurs in this sense in the maxim, “In pari delicto melior est condito defendentis”.

A challenge of a juror propter delictum is for some crime or misdemeanor that affects his credit and renders him infamous. 3 Bl.Comm. 363.

Delimit. To mark or lay out the limits or boundary line of a territory or country; to fix or to mark the limits of; to demarcate; to limit; bound. Walling v. Yeakley, C.C.A., Colo., 140 F.2d 830, 832.

Delimitation. The act of fixing, marking off, or describing the limits or boundary line of a territory, country, authority, right, statutory exception or the like. See Delimit.

Delinquency. Failure, omission, violation of law or duty. State or condition of one who has failed to perform his duty or obligation.

Delinquency charges. As used in the commercial credit field, generally refer to specific pecuniary sums that are assessed against the borrower solely because of his failure to make his payment in timely manner. Johnson v. McCrackin-Sturman Ford, Inc., C.A., Pa., 527 F.2d 257, 265.

Delinquent, n. He who has been guilty of some crime, offense, or failure of duty or obligation.

Delinquent, adj. As applied to a debt or claim, it means simply due and unpaid at the time appointed by law or fixed by contract; as, a delinquent tax.

Delinquent child. An infant of not more than specified age who has violated criminal laws or engages in disobedient, indecent or immoral conduct, and is in need of treatment, rehabilitation, or supervision. In re Garner, 230 Pa.Super. 426, 326 A.2d 581, 584.

Defined by a state statute as: A child who (A) violates any federal or state law, or municipal or local ordinance; or (B) without just cause runs away from his parental home or other properly authorized and lawful place of abode; or (C) is beyond the control of his parents, parent, guardian or other custodian; or (D) has engaged in indecent or immoral conduct; or (E) has been habitually truant or, while in school, has been continuously and overtly defiant of school rules and regulations; or (F) has violated any lawful order of court. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 5001 et seq. See also Disobedient child.

With respect to parental liability for acts of delinquent child, see Parental liability.

Delinquent taxes. Past due and unpaid taxes.

Delirium /dəlɪrɪəm/. Disturbed mental state characterized by a combination of motor restlessness displaying excitement, confusion, incoherence, perplexity, and disorientation, in combination with a dreamlike state and some sensory disturbance, such as hallucinations and delusions. Sometimes caused by an infection or a toxic chemical substance.

Delirium febrile /dəlɪrɪəm februəli/. A form of mental aberration incident to fevers, and sometimes to the last stages of chronic diseases.

Delirium tremens /dəlɪrɪəm trɪmən(d)z/. A delirium due to alcohol (Korsakow’s Syndrome) or other drug poisoning or withdrawal, or to dietary metabolic deprivation resulting from sudden abstinence from alcohol.

Delist. The process by which the privileges of a security listed on an exchange are suspended for failure to meet the requirements of listing. Such delisting may be permanent or temporary.

Deliverance. The verdict rendered by a jury.

At common law, a writ allowed a plaintiff in reprieve, where the defendant has obtained judgment for return of the goods, by default or nonsuit, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him, on giving the same security as before. 3 Bl.Comm. 150.

Delivery. The act by which the res or substance thereof is placed within the actual or constructive possession or control of another. Poor v. American Locomotive Co., C.C.A., 67 F.2d 626, 630. What constitutes delivery depends largely on the intent of the parties. It is not necessary that delivery should be by manual transfer. Jones v. Young, Tex.Civ.App., 539 S.W.2d 901, 904. See also Drop shipment delivery; Misdelivery.

Absolute and conditional. An absolute delivery, as distinguished from conditional delivery or delivery in escrow, is one which is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the possession of the grantor. A conditional delivery is one which passes the thing subject to delivery from the possession of the grantor, but is not to be completed by possession of the grantee, or a third person as his agent, until the happening of a specified event. One of the exceptions to parol evidence rule which permits introduction of evidence to the effect that document was delivered on condition that something be done and it is understood that document does not become operative until such action be taken.

Actual and constructive. Actual delivery consists in the giving real possession to the vendee or his servants or special agents who are identified with him in law and represent him. It is a formal immediate transfer of the property to the vendee.

Constructive delivery is a general term, comprehending all those acts which, although not truly conferring a real possession of the thing sold on the vendee, have been held, by construction of law, equivalent to acts of real delivery. A constructive delivery of personality takes place when the goods are set apart and notice given to the person to whom they are to be delivered, or when, without actual transfer of the goods or their symbol, the conduct of the parties is such as to be inconsistent with any other supposition than that there has been a change in the nature of the holding. "Constructive delivery" is a term comprehending all those acts which, although not truly conferring a real possession of the vendee, have been held by construction of law equivalent to acts of real delivery. Lakeview Gardens, Inc. v. State ex rel. Schneider, Kan., 557 P.2d 1286, 1290. See also Symbolical delivery, infra.

Commercial law. Delivery with respect to instruments, documents of title, chattel paper or securities means voluntary transfer of possession. U.C.C. § 1–201(14).

Deed. The final and absolute transfer of a deed, properly executed, to the grantee, or to some person for his use, in such manner that it cannot be recalled by the grantor. Controlling factor in determining if there has been delivery of a deed is the intention of the parties is such as to be inconsistent with any condition which is not inconsistent with the primary transaction and which is to be released on the occurrence of some specific event or happening. See Escrow.

Delivery bond. A bond given upon the seizure of goods (as under the revenue laws) conditioned for their restoration to the defendant, or the payment of their value, if so adjudged.

Delivery in escrow. Transfer physically of something such as a deed to escrow agent to be held on some condition which is not inconsistent with the primary transaction and which is to be released on the occurrence of some specific event or happening. See Escrow.

Delivery order. A written order to deliver goods directed to a warehouseman, carrier or other person who in the ordinary course of business issues warehouse receipts or bills of lading. U.C.C. § 7–102(1)(d). The primary function of the delivery order is to aid in the breaking down into smaller lots of one large lot of goods (whether fungible or otherwise) which is represented by one bill of lading.

Drugs. In the context of illegal transfer of drugs, "deliver" means the actual, constructive, or attempted transfer from one person to another of a controlled substance. State v. Medina, 87 N.M. 394, 534 P.2d 486, 489.

Second delivery. The legal delivery by the depositary of a deed placed in escrow.

Symbolical delivery. The constructive delivery of the subject-matter of a sale, where it is cumbersome or inaccessible, by the actual delivery of some article which is conventionally accepted as the symbol or representative of it, or which renders access to it possible, or which is the evidence of the purchaser's title to it; as the key of a warehouse, or a bill of lading of goods on shipboard.

De lunatico inquiringo /diˈluːnətɪko ɪnˈkwɪrɪŋəʊ/ The name of a writ directed to the sheriff, directing him to inquire by good and lawful men whether the party charged is a lunatic or not.

Delusion. False, unshakeable belief which is (a) contrary to fact, (b) inappropriate to the person's education, intelligence or culture, and (c) adhered to in spite of tangible evidence that it is false. A reality judgment which cannot be accepted by people of the same class, education, race and period of life as the person who expresses it and which cannot be changed by logical argument or evidence against it. Three common delusions are: (1) delusions of persecution; (2) delusions of grandeur; and (3) delusions of personal unworthiness. The first two are common to schizophrenia. Delusion appears to spring from a distorted world view created by the subject in order to satisfy his inner needs or to reconcile conflicting elements of his personality. See Insane delusion.

Dem. An abbreviation for "demise"; e.g., Doe dem. Smith, Doe, on the demise of Smith.

De magna assisa eligenda /diˈmæɡnə əsˈsaɪza əlɪˈdɛnda/ A writ by which the grand assise was chosen and summoned.

Demain. See Demesne.

De majori et minori non variant jura /de məˈdɔːri ət ˈmɪnɔːri nɒn vərˈveɪnt juːrə/ Concerning greater and less laws do not vary.

De malo /diˈmæləʊ/ Of illness. This phrase was frequently used to designate several species of essoin (q.v.), such as de malo lecti, of illness in bed; de malo veniendi, of illness (or misfortune) in coming to the place where the court sat; de malo vila, of illness in the town where the court sat.

Demand, v. To claim as one's due; to require; to ask relief. To summon; to call in court.

Demand, n. The assertion of a legal right; a legal obligation asserted in the courts. An imperative request preferred by one person to another, under a claim of right, requiring the latter to do or yield something or to abstain from some act. A debt or amount due. An asking with authority, claiming or challenging as due. Smith v. Municipal Court of Glendale Judicial Dist., Los Angeles County, 167 Cal. App.2d 534, 334 P.2d 931.

The seeking after a commodity or service. It is not something static, but necessarily contains the idea of "competition" and a realization that markets are as much limited by sales efforts as by capacity to produce. Mendota Coal & Coke Co. v. Eastern Ry. & Lumber Co., C.C.A.Wash., 53 F.2d 77, 82.

See also Call; Liquidated demand; On demand; Payable on demand.

Cross-demand. A demand that is preferred by one party to an action in opposition to a demand already preferred against him by his adversary. See Counterclaim; Cross-claim.
Demand clause. Provision in note which allows holder to compel full payment if maker fails to meet any installment. See Demand note.

Demand deposits. Any bank deposit which the depositor may demand (withdraw) at any time in contrast to time deposit which requires depositor to wait the specified time before withdrawing or pay a penalty for early withdrawal. Funds accepted by bank subject to immediate withdrawal; such represent largest element in money supply of the United States. U. S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, D.C.Pa., 201 F.Supp. 348, 360.

Demand draft. Sight draft; draft payable on demand.

Demand loan. Loan which may be called by lender at any time because there is no fixed maturity date. See Demand note.

Demand note. A note which expressly states that it is payable on demand, on presentation or at sight; a note in which no time for payment is expressed. Cassity v. Cassity, 147 Kan. 411, 76 P.2d 862, 866; Kent v. Lampman, 59 Cal.App.2d 407, 139 P.2d 57, 59; Tarlton v. Johnson, Mo.App., 138 S.W.2d 49, 52. A note issued, accepted or indorsed when overdue, as regards person so issuing, accepting or indorsing it. Nees v. Hagan, 22 Tenn.App. 78, 118 S.W.2d 566, 568.

Legal demand. A demand properly made, as to form, time, and place, by a person lawfully authorized.

Personal demand. A demand for payment of a bill or note, made upon the drawer, acceptor or maker, in person.

Demandant /dáméndnt/. The plaintiff or party suing in a real action.

Demandress /dáméndrəs/. A female demandant.

De manucapitione /dɪ miːnʊˈkæpəʃiʊniː/. Writ of manucaption, or mainprise. A writ which lay for one who, being taken and imprisoned on a charge of felony, had offered bail, which had been refused; requiring the sheriff to discharge him on his finding sufficient mainpernors or bail.

De manutenendo /dɪ mənʊˈtɛnəndəʊ/. Writ of maintenance. A writ which lay against a person for the offense of maintenance.

Demarcation. The marking of a boundary line on the ground by physical means or a cartographic representation. State ex rel. Buckson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Del., 267 A.2d 455, 459.

Demeanor /dəˈmeɪnər/. As respects a witness or other person, relates to physical appearance, outward bearing or behavior. Faircloth v. State, 44 Ala.App. 295, 208 So.2d 66, 70. It embraces such facts as the tone of voice in which a witness' statement is made, the hesitation or readiness with which his answers are given, the look of the witness, his carriage, his evidences of surprise, his gestures, his zeal, his bearing, his expression, his yawns, the use of his eyes, his furtive or meaning glances, or his shrugs, the pitch of his voice, his self-possessing or embarrassment, his air of candor or seeming levity. Rains v. Rains, 17 N.J.Misc. 310, 8 A.2d 715, 717.

Demeanor evidence. Species of real evidence consisting of behavior of witness on the witness stand and which may be considered by trier of fact on issue of credibility.

De mediate language /dɪ miːdɪˈeɪtəl lɪŋɡwɪ/. Of the half tongue; half of one tongue and half of another. This phrase describes that species of jury which, at common law, was allowed in both civil and criminal cases where one of the parties was an alien, not speaking or understanding English. It was composed of six English denizens or natives and six of the alien's own countrymen.

De medio /dɪ miːˈdiːoʊ/. A writ in the nature of a writ of right, which lay where upon a subinfeudation the mesne (or middle) lord suffered his under-tenant or tenant paravall to be distrained upon by the lord paramount for the rent due him from the mesne lord.

De melioribus damnis /dɪ miːliɔrɪbəs ˈdæmniːz/. Of or for the better damages. A term used in practice to denote the election by a plaintiff against which of several defendants (where the damages have been assessed separately) he will take judgment.

Judgment de melioribus damnis (of, or for, the better damages). Where, in an action against several persons for a joint tort, the jury by mistake sever the damages by giving heavier damages against one defendant than against the others the plaintiff may cure the defect by taking judgment for the greater damages (de melioribus damnis) against that defendant, and entering a nolle prosequi (q.v.) against the others.

Demens /dɪˈmɛns/. One whose mental faculties are enfeebled; one who has lost his mind; distinguished from amens, one totally insane.

Demented /dəˈmɛntɪd/. Of unsound mind.

Dementia /dəˈmeɪnətɪs/. Form of mental disorder in which cognitive and intellectual functions of the mind are prominently affected; impairment of memory is early sign; total recovery not possible since organic cerebral disease is involved. See also Insanity.

Dementia praecox /dəˈmeɪnətɪs praˈɛkɔks/. A term used to include a wide range of mental disorders which occur in early life. It is also called adolescent insanity and schizophrenia. Dementia praecox includes three types, namely, primary dementia, catatonia, and hebephrenia. See also Insanity.

Demesne /dəˈmiːsn/. Domain; dominical; held in one's own right, and not of a superior; not allotted to tenants.

In the language of pleading, own; proper; original. Thus, son assault demesne, his own assault, his assault originally or in the first place.

Ancient demesne. See Ancient.
Demesne as of fee. A man is said to be seised in his demesne as of fee of a corporeal inheritance, because he has a property, dominium or demesne, in the thing itself. But when he has no dominion in the thing itself, as in the case of an incorporeal hereditament, he is said to be seised as of fee, and not in his demesne as of fee. 2 Bl.Comm. 106.

Demesne lands. In old English law, those lands of a manor not granted out in tenancy, but reserved by the lord for his own use and occupation. Lands set apart and appropriated by the lord for his own private use, as for the supply of his table, and the maintenance of his family; the opposite of tenamental lands. Tenancy and demesne, however, were not in every sense the opposites of each other; lands held for years or at will being included among demesne lands, as well as those in the lord's actual possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 90.

Demesne lands of the crown. That share of lands reserved to the crown at the original distribution of landed property, or which came to it afterwards by forfeiture or otherwise. 1 Bl.Comm. 286.

De minis /dīy mīnas/. Writ of threats. A writ which lay where a person was threatened with personal violence, or the destruction of his property, to compel the offender to keep the peace.

Deminutio /dīyminūtio/. In the civil law, a taking away; loss or deprivation. See Capitis diminutio.

Demi-sangue, or demy-sangue /dēmīsāŋg(k)/. Half-blood.

Demise, v. To convey or create an estate for years or life. To lease; to bequeath or transmit by succession or inheritance.

Demise, n. A conveyance of an estate to another for life, for years, or at will (most commonly for years); a lease. Originally a posthumous grant. Commonly a lease or conveyance for a term of years; sometimes applied to any conveyance in fee, for life, or for years. "Demise" is synonymous with "lease" or "let". The use of the term in a lease imports a covenant for quiet enjoyment, Evans v. Williams, 291 Ky. 484, 165 S.W.2d 52, 55; sixty-third and Halsted Realty Co. v. Chicago City Bank & Trust Co., 299 Ill.App. 297, 20 N.E.2d 162, 167; and implies a covenant by lessor of good right and title to make the lease, Evans v. Williams, 291 Ky. 484, 165 S.W.2d 52, 55.

The word is also used as a synonym for "decease" or "death". In England it is especially employed to denote the death of the sovereign.

Demise and redemise. In conveyancing, mutual leases made from one party to another on each side, of the same land, or something out of it; as when A. grants a lease to B. at a nominal rent (as of a pepper corn), and B. redemises the same property to A. for a shorter time at a real, substantial rent.

Demise of the crown. The natural dissolution of the king is generally so called; an expression which signifies merely a transfer of property. By demise of the crown we mean only that, in consequence of the disunion of the king's natural body from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor, and so the royal dignity remains perpetual. 1 Bl.Comm. 249.

Several demises. In English practice, in the action of ejectment, it was formerly customary, in case there were any doubt as to the legal estate being in the plaintiff, to insert in the declaration several demises from as many different persons; but this was rendered unnecessary by the provisions of the common-law procedure acts.

Single demise. A declaration in ejectment might contain either one demise or several. When it contained only one, it was called a "declaration with a single demise."

Demised premises. That property, or portion of a property which is leased to a tenant.

Demisi /dāmīzay/. Lat. I have demised or leased.

Demisi, concessi, et ad firmam tradidi; have demised, granted, and to farm let. The usual operative words in ancient leases, as the corresponding English words are in the modern forms. 2 Bl.Comm. 317, 318.

Demissio /dāmīsh(i)ow/. L. Lat. A demise or letting. Chiefly used in the phrase ex demissione (on the demise), which formed part of the title of the cause in the old actions of ejectment, where it signified that the nominal plaintiff (a fictitious person) held the estate "on the demise" of, that is, by a lease from, the real plaintiff.

Demittendo tenorem recordi /dīy matēndōw tanōrām rakōrday/. A writ to send the tenor of a record, or to exemplify it under the great seal.

Demobilization. The dismissal of an army or body of troops from active service.

Democracy. That form of government in which the sovereign power resides in and is exercised by the whole body of free citizens directly or indirectly... through a system of representation, as distinguished from a monarchy, aristocracy, or oligarchy.

De moderata misericordia capienda /diy modaréyda mizarakórdíya kápiyéná/. Writ for taking a moderate amercement. A writ, founded on Magna Charta (c. 14), which lay for one who was excessively amerced in a court not of record, directed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amercement of the party.

De modo decimandi /diy módow désamánday/. Of a modus of tithing. A term applied in English ecclesiastical law to a prescription to have a special manner of tithing. 2 Bl.Comm. 29.

De molendino de novo erecto non jacet prohibition /diy mowléndanow díy nówvow sréktow nón jéysat prów-(h)abish(y)ow/. A prohibition lies not against a newly-erected mill.

Demolish. To throw or pull down; to raze; to destroy the fabrication of; to pull to pieces; hence to ruin or destroy. Star Mfg. Co. v. Quarries, 172 Okl. 550, 46 P.2d 497, 498. To destroy totally or to commence the work of total destruction with the purpose of completing the same.

Demonetization /dýlmónadzéyshən/. The disuse of a particular metal for purposes of coinage. The withdrawal of the value of a metal as money. For example, in the United States gold has been demonetized.

Demonstrate. To teach by exhibition of samples; to derive from admitted premises by steps of reasoning which admit of no doubt; to prove indubitably. To prove indubitably. To show or prove value or merits by operation, reasoning, or evidence.

Demonstratio /démonstréysh(i)yow/. Lat. Description; addition; denomination. Occurring often in the phrase, "Falsa demonstratio non nocet" (a false description does not harm). 2 Bl.Comm. 382.

Demonstration. Description; pointing out. That which is said or written to designate a thing or person. Show or display of attitudes toward a person, cause, or issue. See also False demonstration.

Demonstrative bequest. A testamentary gift which, by its terms, must be paid from a specific fund; e.g. bequest of one thousand dollars to be paid from testator's shares of stock in X Corporation. Hence, it is partly a general bequest and partly a specific bequest. See also Legacy.

Demonstrative evidence. That evidence addressed directly to the senses without intervention of testimony. Real ("thing") evidence such as the gun in a trial of homicide or the contract itself in the trial of a contract case. Evidence apart from the testimony of witnesses concerning the thing. Such evidence may include maps, diagrams, photographs, models, charts, medical illustrations, X-rays.

Demonstrative legacy. See Legacy.

Demonstrator. One who stands, walks or parades in public in support of a cause to inform the public of the legitimacy of the cause and to enlist support for such cause.

De morte hominis nulla est cunctatio longa /diy mór'diy hómanas nàla èst kàkpéakyén(y)yow lóngga/. Where the death of a human being is concerned [in a matter of life and death], no delay is [considered] long.

Demotion. A reduction to lower rank or grade, or to lower type of position. See also Degradation.

Demur /dámár/. To present a demurrer; to take an exception to the sufficiency in point of law of a pleading or state of facts alleged. See Demurrer.

Demurrable /dámár'abl/. Subject to a demurrer. A pleading, petition, or the like, is said to be demurrable when it does not state such facts as support the claim, prayer, or defense put forward.

Demurrage lien. Carrier's right to possession of goods for unpaid demurrage charges.

Demurrant /dámárr't/. One who demurs; the party who, in pleading, interposes a demurrer.

Demurrer. An allegation of a defendant, which, admitting the matters of fact alleged by complaint or bill (equity action) to be true, shows that as they are therein set forth they are insufficient for the plaintiff to proceed upon or to oblige the defendant to answer; or that, for some reason apparent on the face of the complaint or bill, or on account of the omission of some matter which ought to be contained therein, or for want of some circumstances which ought to be attendant thereon, the defendant ought not to be compelled to answer. The formal mode of disputing the sufficiency in law of the pleading of the other side. In effect it is an allegation that, even if the facts as stated in the pleading to which objection is taken be true, yet their legal consequences are not such as to put the demurring party to the necessity of answering them or proceeding further with the cause. An assertion that complaint does not set forth a cause of action upon which relief can be granted, and it admits, for purpose of testing sufficiency of complaint, all properly pleaded facts, but not conclusions of law. Balsbaugh v. Rowland, 447 Pa. 423, 290 A.2d 85, 87. A legal objection to the sufficiency of a pleading, attacking what appears on the face of the document. People v. Hale, 232 Cal.App.2d 112, 42
DEMURRER

Cal.Rptr. 533, 538. See Calif. Code of Civil Proc. § 430.10. See also Demurrer to evidence.

By Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (adopted in whole or part in most states) demurrers, pleas and exceptions for insufficiency of a pleading are abolished. Rule 7(c). Every defense in law shall be made by motion or by answer; motions going to jurisdiction, venue, process, or failure to state a claim are to be disposed of before trial, unless the court orders otherwise. Objections to the pleadings by means of demurrer still exists however in certain states; see e.g. Calif. Code of Civil Proc. § 430.10 et seq.

Classification of Demurrers

General demurrer. A general demurrer is a demurrer framed in general terms, without showing specifically the nature of the objection, and which is usually referred to where the objection is to matter of substance. Thus, a demurrer on the ground that the complaint sets forth no cause of action is a general demurrer (see e.g. Calif. Code of Civil Proc. § 430.10(e)), and a motion to dismiss a bill on grounds that there is no equity apparent on the face thereof or that there is no equity apparent on the face thereof or that court has no jurisdiction is treated as a general demurrer.

A general demurrer to an indictment challenges only matters of form and substance appearing on its face. It is one which raises an objection that averments are insufficient in law to support the action or defense without specifying any particular cause or defect, and is sufficient only to reach matters of substance.

The Federal Rules equivalent to a general demurrer is a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted. Fed.R. Civil P. 12(b).

Special demurrer. A special demurrer goes merely to structure or form of pleading which it attacks, and usually only to some portion thereof, and must distinctly specify wherein defect lies. Cameron v. Evans Securities Corp., 119 Cal.App. 164, 6 P.2d 272, 274. It is one which excepts to the sufficiency of the pleadings on the opposite side, and shows specifically the nature of the objection, and the particular ground of the exception. Johanson v. Cudahy Packing Co., 107 Utah 114, 152 P.2d 98, 105. See e.g. Calif. Code of Civil Proc. §§ 430.50, 430.60. The Federal Rules analogue of the special demurrer is the motion to make more definite and certain. Fed.R. Civil P. 12(e).

Speaking demurrer. A speaking demurrer is one which, in order to sustain itself, requires the aid of a fact not appearing on the face of the pleading objected to, or, in other words, which alleges or assumes the existence of a fact not already pleaded, and which constitutes the ground of objection and is condemned both by the common law and the code system of pleading. Preston A. Blair Co. v. Rose, 56 Idaho 114, 51 P.2d 209, 212. A speaking demurrer is one which alleges some new matter, not disclosed by the pleading against which the demurrer is aimed and not judicially known or legally presumed to be true.

Parol demurrer. A parol demurrer (not properly a demurrer at all) was a staying of the pleadings; a suspension of the proceedings in an action during the nonage of an infant, especially in a real action. Now abolished. 3 Bl.Comm. 300.

Demurrer book. A record of the issue on a demurrer at law, containing a transcript of the pleadings, with proper entries, and intended for the use of the court and counsel on the argument.

Demurrer ore tenus. An objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the complaint or petition fails to state a cause of action. Peerless Fixture Co. v. Frick, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1089, 1090. This name is sometimes given to a ruling on an objection to evidence, but is not properly a demurrer at all. It should be considered as a general demurrer only.

Demurrer to evidence. This proceeding is analogous to a demurrer to a pleading. It is an objection or exception by one of the parties in an action at law, to the effect that the evidence which his adversary produced is insufficient in point of law (whether true or not) to make out his case or sustain the issue. The practice has been largely superseded by motions for nonsuit and directed verdict. Thus, a motion to nonsuit, a motion to dismiss at close of plaintiff's evidence for failure to prove essential facts, and a defendant's motion for a directed verdict, made at close of the evidence, have been held to be equivalent to a "demurrer to the evidence" for insufficiency to sustain a verdict for plaintiff. A motion to exclude evidence has the effect of a demurrer to the evidence, the chief points of difference being the stage of the proceeding at which each is available and the consequences resulting from deferring the motion to exclude. Thornhill v. Thornhill, 172 Va. 553, 2 S.E.2d 318, 319.

Demurrer to interrogatories. Where a witness objects to a question propounded (particularly on the taking of a deposition) and states his reason for objecting or refusing to answer, it is called a "demurrer to the interrogatory," though the term cannot here be understood as used in its technical sense.

Demy sanke, or demy sangue /dēmi siŋg(k)/. Halfblood. A corruption of demi-sang.

Den and strond /dēn an(d) strónd/. In old English law, liberty for ships or vessels to run aground, or come ashore (strand themselves).

Denariate /dənəriət/. In Old English law, as much land as is worth one penny per annum.

Denaril /dənərīl/. In Old English law, a sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. The French use the word "denier" in the same sense,—payer de ses propres deniers.

Denarius Dei /dənəriəs dyiə/. (Lat. "God's penny.") Earnest money; money given as a token of the completion of a bargain. It differs from arrhe in this: that arrhe is a part of the consideration, while denarius Dei is no part of it. The latter was given away in charity, whence the name.

Denationalization. As applied to a person, the act of depriving him of national rights or status. As applied to an industry or function, the act of returning it to private ownership and control after a period of national or sovereign ownership and control.

De nativo habendo /dī nēyədəvəw habəndəw/. A writ which lay for a lord directed to the sheriff, command-
Denial. A traverse in the pleading of one party of an allegation of fact set up by the other; a defense. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, denials must be specific and directed at the particular allegations controverted. Denials may be made in part or in whole, but, in the main should be specific and "fairly meet the substance of the averments denied." Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(b).

General and specific. In code pleading, a general denial is one which puts in issue all the material averments of the complaint or petition, and permits the defendant to prove any and all facts tending to negative those averments or any of them. A specific denial is a separate denial applicable to one particular allegation of the complaint. An answer by way of a general denial is the equivalent of, and substitute for, the general issue under the common-law system of pleading. It gives to the defendant the same right to the word, is a natural-born subject of a country.

Denier /dE.nE.y/ . L. Fr. In old English law, denial; refusal. Denier is when the rent (being demanded upon the land) is not paid.

Denier a dieu /dE.nE.y a de/ . In French law, earnest money; a sum of money given in token of the completion of a bargain. The phrase is a translation of the Latin denarius Dei (q.v.).

Denization /dE.nE.zE.shE.n/ . The act of making one a denizen; the conferring of the privileges of citizenship upon an alien born. See Denizen.

Denize /dE.nE.z/ . To make a man a denizen or citizen.

Denizen /dE.nE.zan/ . In English law, a person who, being an alien born, has obtained, ex donazione regis, letters patent to make him an English subject,—a high and incomunicable branch of the royal prerogative. A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien and a natural-born subject, and partakes of the status of both of these. The term is used to signify a person who, being an alien by birth, has obtained letters patent making him an English subject. The king may denize, but not naturalize, a man; the latter requiring the consent of parliament, as under the naturalization act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict., c. 14. A denizen holds a position midway between an alien and a natural-born or naturalized subject, being able to take lands by purchase or devise (which an alien could not until 1870 do), but not able to take lands by descent (which a natural-born or naturalized subject may do). The denizen becomes a British subject from the date of the letters while a naturalized person is placed in a position equivalent to that of a natural-born subject. Naturalization of aliens is now governed by British Nationality Act.

In American law, a dweller; a stranger admitted to certain rights in a foreign country or as one who lives habitually in a country but is not a native born citizen; one holding a middle state between an alien and a natural born subject. One who has some relation to the enemy nation which is not lost by the alien's presence within the United States. United States ex rel. Zdunic v. Uhl, C.C.A.N.Y., 137 F.2d 858, 861; United States ex rel. D'Esquiva v. Uhl, C.C.A. N.Y., 137 F.2d 903, 905. Thus, one who lived and worked in Austria in 1938 at time Germany obtained control of Austrian government, and continued to live there until leaving for the United States in 1939, at which time he was issued a German passport, was a "denizen" of Germany, within Enemy Alien Act. United States ex rel. Zdunic v. Uhl, D.C.N.Y., 47 F.Supp. 520.

A denizen, in the primary, but obsolete, sense of the word, is a natural-born subject of a country.

Denman's (Lord) Act /Edm. den'mE.n/ . An English statute, for the amendment of the law of evidence (6 & 7 Vict., c. 85), which provides that no person offered as a witness shall thereafter be excluded by reason of incapacity, from crime or interest, from giving evidence.

Denman's (Mr.) Act /mistar den'mE.n/ . An English statute, for the amendment of procedure in criminal trials (28 & 29 Vict., c. 18), allowing counsel to sum up the evidence in criminal as in civil trials, provided the prisoner be defended by counsel.

Denombrement /daNo.brE.mE.n/ . In French feudal law, a minute or act drawn up, on the creation of a fief, containing a description of the fief, and all the rights and incidents belonging to it.

Denominatio fieri debet a dignioribus /daNo.mE.n'EstiE.shi/ . An English society of individuals known by the same name, usually a religious society.

Denominational, adj. /daNo.mE.n'EstiE.shishEs/ . Of, or pertaining to, a denomination; sectarian.

Denominational institution. Institution controlled or operated by a religious sect or organization and hence forbidden to receive governmental aid because of constitutional separation of church and state.

De nomine proprio non est curandum cum in substantia non erretur; quia nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles /di'EnimE.nE.paRiE'ptiE.nE.n/ . As to the proper name, it is not to be regarded where it errs not in substance, because names are changeable, but things immutable.

De non apparentibus, et non existentibus, eadem est ratio /di'Eni'non si'paRan'EpttE.nE.n/ . As to things not apparent, and those not existing, the rule is the same.

De non decimando /di'Eni'non de'zimE.nE.ndE.n/ . Of not paying tithes. A term applied in English ecclesiastical law to a prescription or claim to be entirely discharged of tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. 2 Bl.Comm. 31.
DENOUNCE

De non procedendo ad assisam /diə nɒn prəʊsədəndəʊ əd əsəɪzəm/. A writ forbidding the justices from holding an assise in a particular case.

De non residentia clerici regis /diə nɒn rɛzədənʃ(ɪ)ə kələrɪsi rɛdʒɪs/. An ancient writ where a parson was employed in the royal service, etc., to excuse and discharge him of non-residence.

De non sane memorie /diə nɒn sən(ɪ) jɛri/ sən(ɪ) mɛməri/. L. Fr. Of unsound memory or mind; a phrase synonymous with non compos mentis.

Denounce. To declare (an act or thing) to be a crime and prescribe a punishment for it. To pronounce or condemn something as being evil or morally wrong. The word is also used (not technically but popularly) as the equivalent of "accuse" or "inform against." The term is frequently used in regard to treaties, indicating the act of one nation in giving notice to another nation of its intention to terminate an existing treaty between the two nations. The French denoncerer means to declare, to lodge an information against.

Denunciation. An application to the authorities for a grant of the right to work a mine, either on the ground of new discovery, or on the ground of forfeiture of the rights of a former owner, through abandonment or contravention of the mining law. Castillero v. U. S., 67 U.S. 17, 2 Black 17, 1 L.Ed. 360; Stewart v. King, 85 Or. 14, 166 P. 55, 56. An application for the acquisition of land for mining purposes, under certain rules prescribed by Mexican laws. The application is called the "denouncement," and, when approved by the Mexican government, is called "concession" or "title," sometimes "patent." It is then a grant given by the government to use the land applied for, for the purpose of mining, and is called the "title." Winningham v. Dyo, Tex.Com.App., 48 S.W.2d 600, 603.

In Spanish and Mexican law, a judicial proceeding for the forfeiture of land held by an alien.

De novo operis nunciatione /diə nəvə əpərɪs nʌŋsɪˈʃənəs/ nʌŋsɪˈʃənəs/ /ɪəvə əpərɪs ˈnʌŋsɪˌʃənəs/. In the civil law, a form of interdict or injunction which lies in some cases where the defendant is about to erect a "new work" (q.v.) in derogation or injury of the plaintiff's rights.

De novo /diə nəvəʊ/ /diə nəvəʊ/. Anew; afresh; a second time. A venire de novo is a writ for summoning a jury for the second trial of a case which has been sent back from above for a new trial.

De novo hearing. See Hearing de novo.

De novo trial. Trying a matter anew; the same as if it had not been heard before and as if no decision had been previously rendered. Farmingdale Supermarket, Inc. v. U. S., D.C.N.J., 336 F.Supp. 534, 536.

De nullo, quod est sua natura indivisible, et divisionem non patitur, nullam partem habebit vidua, sed satisfaciat el ad valentiam /diə nəluː ˈkwɒd əst s(y)əˈnərə nət(y)ərə əd əvəntəˈliːən nət(y)ərə nəpətərəm nələm pərtərm hæbət vid(y)əwa səd sədəsfəˈʃiːət ləˈjoʊ əd əvəntəˈliːəm/. A widow shall have no part of that which in its own nature is indivisible, and is not susceptible of division, but let the heir satisfy her with an equivalent.

De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagii, fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramentum /diə nəluː tənəˈmɛntəʊ ˈkwɒd ətənəˈmɛntəʊ əd təˈriːnəm ɪn əd əfəˈdiːləˈtætɪs ˈsəkəˌməntəm/ /diə nəluː tənəˈmɛntəʊ ˈkwɒd ətənəˈmɛntəʊ əd təˈriːnəm ɪn əd əfəˈdiːləˈtætɪs ˈsəkəˌməntəm/. In no tenement which is held for a term of years is there an avail of homage; but there is the oath of fealty.

Denunciation. The act of present payment.

Denunciation. Act of denouncing.

In the civil law, the act by which an individual informs a public officer, whose duty it is to prosecute offenders, that a crime has been committed.

The giving of an information in the ecclesiastical courts by one who was not the accuser.

Denuntiatio /dənəntʃiˈeɪʃ(ʌ)n/ /dənəntʃiˈeɪʃ(ʌ)n/. In Old English law, a public notice or summons.

Deny. To traverse. To give negative answer or reply to. To refuse to grant or accept. To refuse to grant a petition or protest. Safeway Stores v. Brown, Em. App., 138 F.2d 278, 280. See Denial.

De odio et atia /diə ˈɔdiəʊətəʃ(ə)ə/ /diə ˈɔdiəʊətəʃ(ə)ə/. A writ ancienly called "breve de bono et malo," addressed to the sheriff to inquire whether a man committed to prison upon suspicion of murder were committed on just cause of suspicion, or only upon malice and ill will (propter odium et atiam); and, if upon the inquiry, due cause of suspicion did not appear, then there issued another writ for the sheriff to admit him to bail. 3 Bl.Comm. 128.

De office /d(ə)ʊˈfɪʃ/ /d(ə)ʊˈfɪʃ/. L. Fr. Of office; in virtue of office; officially; in the discharge of ordinary duty.

De onerando pro rata portione /diə ˈɒnərændəʊ prəˈrətə pərˈtəʊnəʊ/ /diə ˈɒnərændəʊ prəˈrətə pərˈtəʊnəʊ/. Writ for charging according to a rateable proportion. A writ which lay for a joint tenant, or tenant in common, who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land came to.

De pace et legalitate tenenda /diə ˈpɛsɪəɻ ɪt leɡəˈlətədɪə ˈtenəndə/. For keeping the peace, and for good behavior.

De pace et plagiis /diə ˈpɛsɪəɻ ɪt ˈplədʒɪs/ /diə ˈpɛsɪəɻ ɪt ˈplədʒɪs/. Of peace (breach of peace), and wounds. One of the kinds of criminal appeal formerly in use in England, and which lay in cases of assault, wounding, and breach of the peace.

De pace et roberia /diə ˈpɛsɪəɻ ɪt ˈrəbəriə/ /diə ˈpɛsɪəɻ ɪt ˈrəbəriə/. Of peace (breach of peace) and robbery. One of the kinds of criminal appeal formerly in use in England, and which lay in cases of robbery and breach of the peace.

De parco fracto /diə pərkə ˈfræktəʊ/ /diə pərkə ˈfræktəʊ/. A writ or action for damages caused by a pound-breagh (q.v.). It has long been obsolete. 3 Bl.Comm. 146.
Depart.  To go away from; leave; die.

De partitione facienda /dyi partishiyóñiy feý-s(h)ıyéndä/. A writ which lay to make partition of lands or tenements held by several as coparceners, tenants in common, etc.

Department.  One of the territorial divisions of a country.  The term is chiefly used in this sense in France, where the division of the country into departments is somewhat analogous, both territorially and for governmental purposes, to the division of an American state into counties.

One of the major administrative divisions of the executive branch of the government usually headed by an officer of cabinet rank; e.g. Department of State.  Generally, a branch or division of governmental administration.  Also, a division of a business, or of something comparable thereto.  U. S. v. Elgin, J. & E. Ry. Co., Ill., 298 U.S. 492, 56 S.Ct. 841, 80 L.Ed. 1300.

Department of State.  See State Department.

Departure.  A deviation or divergence, from a standard rule, measurement or course of conduct.

A variance between pleading and proof.  Kintner v. U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 71 F.2d 961, 962. In common law pleading, the statement of matter in a replication, rejoinder, or subsequent pleading, as a cause of action or defense, which is not pursuant to the previous pleading of the same party, and which does not support and fortify it.  Under Rules of Civil Procedure, no provision is made for "departure" but there are liberal amendment provisions.  Fed.R. Civil P. 15.

See also Variance.

Departure in despite of court.  In old English practice, the tenant in a real action, having once appeared, was considered as constructively present in court until again called upon.  Hence if, upon being demanded, he failed to appear, he was said to have "departed in despite [i.e., contempt] of the court."

Depecage.  The process whereby different issues in a single case arising out of a single set of facts are decided according to the laws of different states.  Broome v. Antlers' Hunting Club, 595 F.2d 921, 923 n. 5 (3rd Cir., 1979).

Depeculation.  In English law, a robbing of the prince or commonwealth; an embezzling of the public treasure.

Dependable, adj.  Trustworthy or reliable; evidence.

Dependency.  A territory distinct from the country in which the supreme sovereign power resides, but belonging rightfully to it, and subject to the laws and regulations which the sovereign may think proper to prescribe.  Posadas v. National City Bank of N. Y., Phil. Islands, 296 U.S. 497, 56 S.Ct. 349, 350, 80 L.Ed. 351. It differs from a colony, because it is not settled by the citizens of the sovereign or mother state; and from possession, because it is held by other title than that of mere conquest.

A relation between two persons, where one is sustained by another or looks to or relies on aid of another for support or for reasonable necessities consistent with dependent's position in life.  See Dependent.

Dependent, n.  One who derives his or her main support from another.  Means relying on, or subject to, someone else for support; not able to exist or sustain oneself, or to perform anything without the will, power, or aid of someone else.  Fox-Vliet Wholesale Drug Co. v. Chase, Otk., 286 P.2d 391, 393. Generally, for worker's compensation purposes, "dependent" is one who relies on another for support or favor and one who is sustained by another.  Industrial Indem. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 243 Cal.App.2d 700, 52 Cal.Rptr. 647, 651, 653. One who has relied upon decedent for support and who has reasonable expectation that such support will continue.  Wheat v. Red Star Exp. Lines, 156 Conn. 245, 240 A.2d 859, 862, 863. See also Lawful dependents.

Dependent, adj.  Deriving existence, support, or direction from another; conditioned, in respect to force or obligation, upon an extraneous act or fact.

Dependent conditions.  Mutual covenants which go to the whole consideration on both sides.

Dependent contract.  One which depends or is conditional upon another.  One which it is not the duty of the contractor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party.

Dependent covenant.  See Covenant.

Dependent promise.  One which it is not the duty of the promisor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party.

Dependent relative revocation.  The doctrine which regards as mutually dependent the acts of one destroying a will and thereupon substituting another instrument for distribution of estate, when both acts are result of one plan, so that, if second act, through incompleteness or other defect, fails to accomplish its intended purpose, and it thereby becomes evident that testator was misled when he destroyed his will, act of destruction is regarded as bereft of intent of revocation and way for probate of destroyed will is opened.  In re Cuneo's Estate, 60 Cal.2d 196, 32 Cal.Rptr. 409, 412, 384 P.2d 1.

Depending.  Pending or undetermined; in progress.

In patent law, a convenient means of saying that the parts of a device were so attached as to have a right-angle relationship to each other, not a gravitational hanging of one part upon another.  Alemite Mfg. Corporation v. Rogers Products Co., C.C.A.N.J., 42 F.2d 648, 651.

De perambulatione facienda /dyi parəmbyləshiyóñiy fəs(h)ıyéndä/. A writ which lay where there was a dispute as to the boundaries of two adjacent lordships or towns, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take with him twelve discreet and lawful knights of his county and make the perambulation and set the bounds and limits in certainty.

Depesas /depéyas/ *-z/. In Spanish-American law, spaces of ground in towns reserved for commons or public pasturage.
DE PLACITO

De pignore surrepto furti, actio /šikš(i)y)ow diy pignóriy sarétpow fárday/. In the civil law, an action to recover a pledge stolen.

De placito /diy plášadow/. Of a plea; of or in an action. Formal words used in declarations and other proceedings, as descriptive of the particular action brought.

De plagis et mahemio /diy pléyjas et mahíymiów/. Of wounds and mayhem. The name of a criminal appeal formerly in use in England, in cases of wounding and maiming. See Appeal.

De plano /diy pléynow/. Lat. On the ground; on a level. A term of the Roman law descriptive of the method of hearing causes, when the prætor stood on the ground with the suitors, instead of the more formal method when he occupied a bench or tribunal; hence informal, or summary.

De plegis acquietandis /diy pliyjiyas akwilyatrendas/. Writ for acquitting or releasing pledges. A writ that lay for a surety, against him for whom he had become surety for the payment of a certain sum of money at a certain day, where the latter had not paid the money at the appointed day, and the surety was compelled to pay it.

Depletable economic interest. The interest in mineral land which is subject to depletion by the removal of the minerals by operation of an oil well, mine, or the like. Spalding v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 97 F.2d 697, 700; U. S. v. Spalding, C.C.A.Cal., 97 F.2d 701, 704. See Depletion.

Deplete. To reduce or lessen, as by use, exhaustion, or waste. McKnight v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 78 F.2d 931, 933.

Depletion. An emptying, exhausting or wasting of assets. A reduction during taxable year of oil, gas or other mineral deposits or reserves (i.e. wasting assets) as result of production. The process by which the cost or other basis of a natural resource (e.g., an oil and gas interest) is recovered upon extraction and sale of the resource. The two ways to determine the depletion allowance are the cost and percentage (or statutory) methods. Under the cost method, each unit of production sold is assigned a portion of the cost or other basis of the interest. This is determined by dividing the cost or other basis by the total units expected to be recovered. Under the percentage (or statutory) method the tax law provides a special percentage factor for different types of minerals and other natural resources. This percentage is multiplied by the gross income from the interest to arrive at the depletion allowance. I.R.C. §§ 613 and 613A.

Depletion allowance. See Depletion.

Depletion deduction. See Depletion.

Depletion reserve. In accounting, a charge to income to reflect the decrease in value of a wasting asset such as an oil well.

De ponendo sigillum ad exceptionem /diy panéndow sajíln ad škéspíhiyównam/. Writ for putting a seal to an exception. A writ by which justices were formerly commanded to put their seals to exceptions taken by a party in a suit.

Deponent /dpównant/. One who deposes (that is, testifies) to the truth of certain facts; one who gives under oath testimony which is reduced to writing; one who makes oath to a written statement. One whose deposition is given. A witness; an affiant. See Depose; Deposition.

Depopulatio agrorum /diyopopáleysh(i)y)ow agrórám/. In old English law, the crime of destroying, ravaging, or laying waste a country. 4 Bl.Comm. 373.

Depopulation. In old English law, a species of waste by which the population of the kingdom was diminished. Depopulation of houses was a public offense.

Deportatio /diyortéysh(i)y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a kind of banishment, where a condemned person was sent or carried away to some foreign country, usually to an island (in insulam deportatur), and thus taken out of the number of Roman citizens.

Deportation. Banishment to a foreign country, attended with confiscation of property and deprivation of civil rights. A punishment derived from the deportatio (q.v.) of the Roman law.

The transfer of an alien, excluded or expelled, from the United States to a foreign country. Petition for Milanovic, D.C.N.Y., 162 F.Supp. 890, 892. The removal or sending back of an alien to the country from which he came because his presence is deemed inconsistent with the public welfare, and without any punishment being imposed or contemplated. The list of grounds for deportation are set forth at 8 U.S.C.A. §§ 1251, and the procedures are provided for in §§ 1252–1254. See also Banishment.

Depose. To make a deposition; to give evidence in the shape of a deposition; to make statements which are written down and sworn to; to give testimony which is reduced to writing by a duly-qualified officer and sworn to by the deponent. See Deponent; Deposition.

To deprive an individual of a public employment or office against his will. The term is usually applied to the deprivation of all authority of a sovereign.

In ancient usage, to testify as a witness; to give evidence under oath.

Deposit, v. To commit to custody, or to lay down; to place; to put; to let fall (as sediment). Jefferson County ex rel. Grauman v. Jefferson County Fiscal Court, 273 Ky. 674, 117 S.W.2d 918, 924. To lodge for safe-keeping or as a pledge to intrust to the care of another. White v. Greenlee, 330 Mo. 135, 49 S.W.2d 132, 134.

Deposit, n. A bailment of goods to be kept by the bailee without reward, and delivered according to the object or purpose of the original trust. In general, an act by which a person receives the property of another, binding himself to preserve it and return it in kind. The delivery of chattels by one person to another to keep for the use of the bailor. The giving of the possession of personal property by one person to another, with his consent, to keep for the use and benefit of the first or of a third person. Something intrusted to the care of another, either for a permanent or a temporary disposition.
Money lodged with a person as an earnest or security for the performance of some contract, to be forfeited if the depositor fails in his undertaking. It may be deemed to be part payment, and to that extent may constitute the purchaser the actual owner of the estate.

The act of placing money in the custody of a bank or banker, for safety or convenience, to be withdrawn at the will of the depositor or under rules and regulations agreed on. Also, the money so deposited, or the credit which the depositor receives for it. Deposit, according to its commonly accepted and generally understood meaning among bankers and by the public, includes not only deposits payable on demand and subject to check, but deposits not subject to check, for which certificates, whether interest-bearing or not, may be issued, payable on demand, or on certain notice, or at a fixed future time. A quantity of ore or other mineral substances occurring naturally in the earth; as, a deposit of gold, oil, etc.

See Bailment; Escrow.

General Classification

According to the classification of the civil law, deposits are of the following several sorts: (1) Necessary, made upon some sudden emergency, and from some pressing necessity; as, for instance, in case of a fire, a shipwreck, or other overwhelming calamity, when property is confided to any person whom the depositor may meet without proper opportunity for reflection or choice, and thence it is called "miserable depositum." (2) Voluntary, which arises from the mere consent and agreement of the parties. The common law has made no such division. The civilians again divide deposits into "simple deposits," made by one or more persons having a common interest, and "sequestrations," made by one or more persons, each of whom has a different and adverse interest in controversy touching it; and these last are of two sorts,—"conventional," or such as are made by the mere agreement of the parties without any judicial act; and "judicial," or such as are made by order of a court in the course of some proceeding. Thus, under Louisiana statutes, it is said that the difference between "sequestration" and "deposit" is that the former may have for its object both movable and immovable property, while the latter is confined to movables.

There is another class of deposits called "involuntary," which may be without the assent or even knowledge of the depositor; as lumber, etc., left upon another's land by the subsidence of a flood. An "involuntary" deposit is one made by the accidental leaving or placing of personal property in the possession of any person without negligence on the part of the owner. Another class of deposits is called "irregular," as when a person, having a sum of money, which he does not think safe in his own hands, confines it to another, who is to return to him, not the same money, but a like sum when he shall demand it. A regular deposit is a strict or special deposit; a deposit which must be returned in specie; i.e., the thing deposited must be returned. A quasi deposit is a kind of implied or involuntary deposit, which takes place where a party comes lawfully to the possession of another person's property, by finding it. Particularly with reference to money, deposits are also classed as general or special. A general deposit is where the money deposited is not itself to be returned, but an equivalent in money (that is, a like sum) is to be returned. It is equivalent to a loan, and the money deposited becomes the property of the depositary. A special deposit is a deposit in which the identical thing deposited is to be returned to the depositor. The particular object of this kind of deposit is safekeeping. In banking law, this kind of deposit is contrasted with a "general" deposit, as above; but in the civil law it is the antithesis of an "irregular" deposit. A gratuitous or naked deposit is a bailment of goods to be kept for the depositor without hire or reward on either side, or one for which the depositary receives no consideration beyond the mere possession of the thing deposited. Properly and originally, all deposits are of this description; for according to the Roman law, a bailment of goods for which hire or a price is to be paid, is not called "depositum" but "locatio." If the owner of the property pays for its custody or care, it is a "locatio custodiae;" if, on the other hand, the bailee pays for the use of it, it is "locatio rei." (See Locatio.) But in the modern law, a gratuitous or naked deposit is distinguished from a "deposit for hire," in which the bailee is to be paid for his services in keeping the article. There is also a specific deposit, which exists where money or property is given to a bank for some specific and particular purpose, as a note for collection, money to pay a particular note, or property for some other specific purpose.

See also Certificate of deposit; Involuntary deposit. For bank deposit, see Bank.

Demand deposit. Bank deposit which may be withdrawn at any time by the depositor, without prior notice to bank. Compare "Time deposit", infra.

Deposit box. Commonly referred to as safe deposit box in which a person may keep valuables. See Safe deposit box.

Deposit company. A company whose business is the safe-keeping of securities or other valuables deposited in boxes or safes in its building which are leased to the depositors. See Depository; Depository.

Deposit in court. Person who acknowledges liability but is in doubt as to whom the liability runs may pay into court the sum of money representing his liability and be bound by the court's determination of who is entitled to it. See e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 67. May also embrace payment into court pursuant to court order as in the case of rent pending outcome of eviction case.

Deposit insurance. Insurance coverage (e.g. Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation) for bank depositors protecting them from loss resulting from bank failure. See Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Deposit of title-deeds. A method of pledging real property as security for a loan, by placing the title-deeds of the land in the keeping of the lender as pledgee.

Deposit premium. The initial premium paid by the insured on a provisional basis pending a premium adjustment in the case of policies subject to adjustment.
Deposit ratio. Ratio of total deposits to total capital.

Deposit slip. An acknowledgment that the amount named therein has been received by the bank. It is a receipt intended to furnish evidence as between the depositor and depositary that on a given date there was deposited the sum named therein, the time of deposit, and amount deposited, being also shown.

Time deposit. Bank deposit which is to remain for specified period of time, or on which notice must be given to bank before withdrawal.

Depository. The party or institution (e.g. bank or trust company) receiving a deposit. One with whom anything is lodged in trust, as “depository” is the place where it is put. A trustee; fiduciary; one to whom goods are bailed to be held without recompense. The obligation on the part of the depositary is that he keep the thing with reasonable care, and, upon request, restore it to the depositor, or otherwise deliver it, according to the original trust. This term should not be confused with “depository” which is the physical place of deposit.

Deposit Insurance Corporation. Independent federal agency (Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation) created to insure bank deposits up to a specified amount in national and most state banks, including commercial and mutual savings banks, and to protect depositors from hazards of bank closings.

Deposition. The testimony of a witness taken upon interrogatories, not in open court, but in pursuance of a commission to take testimony issued by a court, or under a general law or court rule on the subject, and reduced to writing and duly authenticated, and intended to be used upon the trial of a civil action or criminal prosecution. A discovery device by which one party asks oral questions of the other party or of a witness for the other party. The person who is deposed is called the deponent. The deposition is conducted under oath outside of the courtroom, usually in one of the lawyer's offices. A transcript—word for word account—is made of the deposition. Testimony of witness, taken in writing, under oath or affirmation, before some judicial officer in answer to questions or interrogatories. Fed.R. Civil P. 26 et seq.; Fed.R.Crim.P. 15. See also Discovery; Interrogatories.

In ecclesiastical law, the act of depriving a clergyman, by a competent tribunal, of his clerical orders, to punish him for some offense and to prevent his acting in future in his clerical character.

Written questions. Form of discovery in which written questions are addressed to person interrogated. Fed.R. Civil Proc. 31.

Deposition de bene esse /dépózishan di biyini ésiy/. Testimony to be read at the trial, so far as relevant and competent, as though the witness were present in court. Milprint, Inc. v. Macleod Laboratories, 127 N.J.L. 333, 22 A.2d 566, 567.

Deposit /dêpósiyt/. In Spanish law, deposit; the species of bailment so called. A real contract by which one person confides to the custody of another an object on the condition that it shall be returned to him whenever he shall require it.

Depositor. One who makes a deposit. One who delivers and leaves money with a bank on his order or subject to check.

Depository. The place where a deposit (q.v.) is placed and kept; e.g. bank, trust company. Place where something is deposited or stored as for safekeeping or convenience. Perkins v. State, 61 Wis.2d 341, 212 N.W.2d 141, 146.

This term should not be confused with “depository” which is the person or institution taking responsibility for the deposit, rather than the place itself.

United States depositories are banks selected and designated to receive deposits of the public funds (e.g. taxes) of the United States.

Deposum /dêpózadm/. Lat. In the civil law, one of the forms of the contract of bailment, being a naked bailment of goods to be kept for the use of the bailor without reward. See Deposit.

One of the four real contracts specified by Justinian, and having the following characteristics: (1) The depositary or depositee is not liable for negligence, however extreme, but only for fraud, dolus; (2) the property remains in the depositor, the depositary having only the possession. Precarium and sequestre were two varieties of the depositum.

De post disseisina /diy pówst dísíyžana/. Writ of post disseisin. A writ which lay for him who, having recovered lands or tenements by praecipe quod reddit, on default, or redemption, was again disseised by the former disseisor.

Dépôt /dêpôp/. In French law, the deposition of the Roman and the deposit of the English law. It is of two kinds, being either (1) dépôt simply so called, and which may be either voluntary or necessary, and (2) sequestre, which is a deposit made either under an agreement of the parties, and to abide the event of pending litigation regarding it, or by virtue of the direction of the court or a judge, pending litigation regarding it.

De prærogativa regis /diy prærógátáyva riýjas/. The English statute 17 Edw. I, St. I, c. 9, defining the prerogatives of the crown on certain subjects, but especially directing that the king shall have ward of the lands of idiots, taking the profits without waste, and finding them necessaries.

De presenti /diy prázénta/. Of the present; in the present tense. See Per verba de presenti.

Deprave. To defame; to corrupt morally; vilify; exhibit contempt for. In England it was a criminal offense to “deprave” the Lord's Supper or the Book of Common Prayer.

Depraved mind. An inherent deficiency of moral sense and rectitude, equivalent to statutory phrase “deprav-Depreciable life. For an asset, the time period over which depreciable cost is to be allocated. For tax returns, depreciable life may be shorter than estimated service life.

Depreciation /dəpriʃəˈsiːʃən/. A fall in value; reduction of worth. The deterioration, or the loss or lessening in value, arising from age, use, and improvements, due to better methods. A decline in value of property caused by wear or obsolescence and is usually measured by a set formula which reflects these elements over a given period of useful life of property. State Highway Commission v. Tubbs, 147 Mont. 296, 411 P.2d 739, 744. Consistent, gradual process of estimating and allocating cost of capital investments over estimated useful life of asset in order to match cost against earnings. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Baltimore v. U. S., 203 Ct.Cl. 18, 487 F.2d 528, 534. The write-off for tax purposes of the cost or other basis of a tangible asset over its estimated useful life. As to intangible assets, see Amortization. As to natural resources, see Depletion. See also Accelerated Cost Recovery System; Annual Depreciation; Asset Depreciation Range; Recapture of depreciation; Useful life.

Depreciation Methods

Accelerated depreciation. Various methods of depreciation that yield larger deductions in the earlier years of the life of an asset than the straight-line method. Examples include the double declining-balance and the sum of the years' digits methods of depreciation.

Accrued depreciation. See Accrued depreciation.

Declining balance method. Under the declining balance method, the annual depreciation allowance is computed by multiplying the undepreciated cost of the asset each year by a uniform rate up to double the straight-line rate or 150 percent, as the case may be.

Double declining method. Spreading the initial cost of a capital asset over time by deducting in each period double the percentage recognized by the straight-line method and applying that double percentage to the undepreciated balance existing at the start of each period. No salvage value is used in the calculation.

Original cost method. Amortization of asset based on its cost, less salvage value.

Replacement cost method. Amortization of asset in which value is fixed in terms of replacement cost.

Sinking fund method. A process of recovering the value of an asset by setting up a sinking fund.

Straight-line method. Under the straight-line method of depreciation, the cost or other basis (e.g., fair market value in the case of donated assets) of the asset, less its estimated salvage value, if any, is determined first; then this amount is distributed in equal amounts over the period of the estimated useful life of the asset. Taking the initial cost of a capital asset, deducting the expected salvage value at the time it is expected to be discarded, and spreading the difference in equal installments per unit of time over an estimated life of the asset.

Sum-of-the-year's digits method. Under this method, the annual depreciation allowance is computed by multiplying the depreciable cost basis (cost less salvage value) by a constantly decreasing fraction. The numerator of the fraction is represented by the remaining years of useful life of the asset at the beginning of each year, and the denominator is always represented by the sum of the years' digits of useful life at the time of acquisition.

Unit method. Amortization method in which the amount of the investment is divided by the estimated total number of revocable units and this results in the unit cost which is multiplied by the number of units sold during the year and the final figure is the dollar amount of the amortization or depreciation.

Depreciation reserve. An account kept on the books, as of a public utility, to offset the depreciation of the property due to time and use. It does not represent the actual depreciation of its properties which is to be deducted from the reproduction cost new to ascertain the present value for rate purposes; but only what observation and experience suggest as likely to happen, with a margin over. In taxation, when gain is realized on disposition of depreciable property the gain must be reported as ordinary income, not capital gain, to the extent of depreciation previously taken as a deduction. I.R.C. §§ 1245, 1250.

In French law, pillage, waste, or spoliation of goods, particularly of the estate of a decedent.

Depression. A period of economic stress; usually accompanied by poor business conditions and high unemployment. McCuiston v. Haggard, 21 Tenn.App. 277, 109 S.W.2d 413. In economic parlance, a "depression" is more severe than a "recession".

A hole or hollow. Rice v. Kansas City, Mo.App., 16 S.W.2d 659, 661.

Mental syndrome manifested by sense of inadequacy, self-depreciation, melancholy, and guilt feelings.

Depressive reaction. Mental or emotional condition, precipitated by some external factor and manifested by guilt, self-depreciation, psychomotor retardation, deflection and/or sense of inadequacy; generally considered to be a neurosis.

Deprivation /dɪˈprɪvəˈʃən/. A taking away or confiscation; as the deprivation of a constitutional right or the taking of property under eminent domain without due process of law (i.e., without just compensation). See also Deprivation of property.

Deprivation of property. Due process guaranty which is abridged when government takes private property without just compensation except under extraordinary circumstances of the police power, though for deprivation of property there is not required an actual, physical taking for private or public use. See Condemnation; Eminent domain; Expropriation; Just compensation; Taking.
DEPRIVATION OF PROPERTY

Deprive permanently. To “deprive permanently” means to: (a) Take from the owner the possession, use or benefit of his property, without an intent to restore the same; or (b) Retain property without intent to restore the same or with intent to restore it to the owner only if the owner purchases or leases it back, or pays a reward or other compensation for its return; or (c) Sell, give, pledge or otherwise dispose of any interest in property or subject it to the claim of a person other than the owner.

De procedendo ad judicium /diy prô(#w)sâdêndôw âd juwdis(h)yam/. An old English writ proceeding out, of chancery and ordering the judges of any court to proceed to judgment. 3 Bl.Comm. 109.

De proprietate probanda /diy prapräyatädîy probâenda/.
Writ for proving property. An old English writ directed to the sheriff, to inquire of the property or goods distrained, where the defendant in an action of replevin claims the property. 3 Bl.Comm. 148.

Deputize. To appoint a deputy; to appoint or commission one to act as deputy to an officer. In a general sense, the term is descriptive of empowering one person to act for another in any capacity or relation, but in law it is almost always restricted to the substitution of a person appointed to act for an officer of the law.

Deputy. A substitute; a person duly authorized by an officer to exercise some or all of the functions pertaining to the office, in the place and stead of the latter. One appointed to substitute for another with power to act for him in his name or behalf. A substitute for another and is empowered to act for him in his name and behalf in all matters in which principal may act. Williams v. Ferrentino, Fla.App., 199 So.2d 504, 511.

Deputy consul. See Consul.
Deputy sheriff. One appointed to act in the place and stead of the sheriff in the official business of the latter’s office. A general deputy (sometimes called “undersheriff”) is one who, by virtue of his appointment, has authority to execute all the ordinary duties of the office of sheriff, and who executes process without any special authority from his principal. A special deputy, who is an officer pro hac vice, is one appointed for a special occasion or a special service, as, to serve a particular writ or to assist in keeping the peace when a riot or tumult is expected or in progress. He acts under a specific and not a general appointment and authority.

Deputy steward. In English law steward of a manor could depute or authorize another to hold a court; and the acts done in a court so holden were as legal as if the court had been holden by the chief steward in person. So an under steward or deputy could authorize another as subdeputy, pro hac vice, to hold a court for him; such limited authority not being inconsistent with the rule delegatus non potest delegare.

Special deputy. One appointed to exercise some special function or power of the official or person for whom he is appointed. See also Deputy sheriff, above.

De quarantina habenda /diy kwôrântàdyâna habênda/.
At common law, a writ which a widow entitled to quarantine might sue out in case the heir or other persons ejected her. It seems to have been a summary process, and required the sheriff, if no just cause were shown against it, speedily to put her into possession.

De quibus sur disseisin /diy kwîbôs sôr dâsîyân/. An ancient writ of entry.

De quo /diy kwôw/ and de quibus /diy kwîbôs/. Of which. Formal words in the simple writ of entry, from which it was called a writ of entry “in the quo,” or “in the quibus.”

De quota litis /diy kwôwôda lâydâs/. In the civil law,
A writ by which one who has a claim difficult to recover agrees with another to give a part, for the purpose of obtaining his services to recover the rest.

Deraign /dârêyn/. To prove; to vindicate; to disprove allegations.

Derangement. See Insanity.

De raptu virginum /diy râpt(y)ywôw várjânâm/. Of the ravishment of maids. The name of an appeal formerly in use in England in cases of rape.

De rationabilibus divisio /diy râshanabilôbas davayzas/.
Writ for fixing reasonable boundaries. A writ which lay to settle the boundaries between the lands of persons in different towns, where one complained of encroachment.

De rationabilis parte honorum /diy râsh(y)yanéybalôy pârdiy bônôram/. A writ which lay for the widow (and children) of a deceased person against his executors, to recover a third part of the deceased’s personality, after payment of his debts, or to recover their reasonable part or share of his goods. 2 Bl.Comm.

Derecho /derêchow/. In Spanish law, law or right.
Derecho comun, common law. The civil law is so called. A right. Derechos, rights. Also, specifically, an impost laid upon goods or provisions, or upon persons or lands, by way of tax or contribution.

De recordo et processu mittendis /diy rakôrdöw et präséyuw matêndas/. Writ to send the record and process of a cause to a superior court; a species of writ of error.

De recto /diy rêktôw/. Writ of right. See Writ of right.

De recto de advocacione /diy rêktôw diy äadvôkêy-shïyôwni/. Writ of right of advowson. An old English writ which lay for one who had an estate in an advowson to him and his heirs in fee-simple, if he were disturbed to present. Abolished by St. 3 & 4
Wm. IV, c. 27.

De recto de rationabilis parte /diy rêktôw diy râshanêybalôy pârdîy/. Writ of right, of reasonable part. An old English writ which lay between privies in blood, as between brothers in gavelkind, or between sisters or other coparceners for lands in fee-simple, where one was deprived of his or her share by another. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

De recto patens /di réktō péytēn(d)z/. Writ of right patent.

De redisseisin /di riydāisẙz̊a/. Writ of redisseisin. A writ which lay where a man recovered by assise of novel disseisin land, rent, or common, and the like, and was put in possession thereof by verdict, and afterward was disseised of the same land, rent, or common, by him by whom he was disseised before.

Derelict /dérəlik̊/. Forsaken; abandoned; deserted; cast away. Personal property abandoned or thrown away by the owner in such manner as to indicate that he intends to make no further claim thereto. "Dere­liction" or "renunciation" of property at sea as well as on land requires both the intention to abandon and external action. The No. 105, C.C.A.Fla., 97 F.2d 425, 426.

A boat or vessel found entirely deserted or aban­doned on the sea without hope or intention of recov­ery or return by the master or crew, whether result­ing from wreck, accident, necessity, or voluntary abandonment. When a vessel, without abandon­ing, is no longer under the control or direction of those on board (as where part of the crew are dead, and the remainder are physically and mentally incapable of providing for their own safety), she is said to be quasi derelict. When the crew have left their vessel temporarily, with the intention of returning to resume possession, she is not technically a derelict, but is what may be termed a "quasi derelict."

Dereliction /dérəliksh̊an/. The gaining of land from the water, in consequence of the sea shrinking back below the usual water mark; the opposite of alluvion (q.v.). Mexico Beach Corp. v. St. Joe Paper Co., 97 So.2d 708, 710. Also, land left dry by running water retreating imperceptibly from one of its shores and encroaching on the other. See Accretion; Reliction.

In the civil law, the voluntary abandonment of goods by the owner, without the hope or the purpose of returning to the possession.

De reparatione facienda /di répərəˈʃiːniə fe̱n̊(h)iyə̊nda/. A writ by which one tenant in common sought to compel another to aid in repairing the property held in common.

De rescussu /di rask̊şyuu/. Writ of rescue or resc­cous. A writ which lay where cattle distrained, or persons arrested, were rescued from those taking them.

De retorno habendo /di rətərˈnoʊ həbənd̊oʊ/. For having a return; to have a return. A term applied to the judgment for the defendant in an action of replev­in, awarding him a return of the goods repleived; and to the writ or execution issued thereon. 3 Bl.Comm. 149. Applied also to the sureties given by the plain­tiff on commencing the action.

D.E.R.I.C. An abbreviation used for De ea re ita censuere (concerning that matter have so decreed), in recording the decrees of the Roman senate.

De rien culpable /da ryn käl̊pəbal/. L. Fr. Guilty of nothing; not guilty.

Derivative. Coming from another; taken from some­thing preceding; secondary. That which has not its origin in itself, but owes its existence to something foregoing. Anything obtained or deduced from an­other.

Derivative action. A suit by a shareholder to enforce a corporate cause of action. The corporation is a nec­essary party, and the relief which is granted is a judgment against a third person in favor of the corpo­ration. Price v. Gurney, Ohio, 324 U.S. 106, 65 S.Ct. 513, 516, 89 L.Ed. 776. An action is a derivative action when the action is based upon a primary right of the corporation, but is asserted on its behalf by the stockholder because of the corporation's fail­ure, deliberate or otherwise, to act upon the primary right. Lehrman v. Godebaux Sugars, 207 Misc. 314, 138 N.Y.S.2d 163, 168. Procedure in such actions in federal courts is governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 23.1.

Derivative contraband. Items of property not other­wise illegal but subject to forfeiture according to use to which they are put. Kane v. McDaniel, D.C.Ky., 407 F.Supp. 1239, 1242.

Derivative conveyances. Conveyances which presup­pose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original convey­ance. They are releases, confirmations, surrenders, assignments, and defeasances. 2 Bl.Comm. 324.

Derivative evidence. Evidence which is derived or spawned from other illegally obtained evidence is inadmissible because of the primary taint. See Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine.

Derivative suit. See Derivative action.

Derivative tort. Tort liability may be imposed on a principal for wrong committed by agent and to this extent the principal's liability is derivative.

Derive. To receive from a specified source or origin. Crews v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C. A.10, 89 F.2d 412, 416. To proceed from property, sewer from capital, however invested or employed, and to come in, receive or draw by taxpayer for his separate use, benefit, and disposal. Staples v. United States, D.C.Pa., 21 F.Supp. 737, 739.

Derived. Received from specified source.

Derogation /dəräɡ̊əsh̊an/. The partial repeal or abol­ishing of a law, as by a subsequent act which limits its scope or impairs its utility and force. Disting­uished from abrogation, which means the entire repeal and annulment of a law.

Derogation from grant. Provision in an instrument of transfer such as a deed which diminishes or militates against the grant itself.

Derogatory clause. In a will, this is a sentence or secret character, inserted by the testator, of which he reserves the knowledge to himself, with a condition that no will he may make thereafter should be valid, unless this clause be inserted word for word. This is done as a precaution to guard against later wills.
being extorted by violence, or otherwise improperly obtained. Such a provision is anomalous.

Derogatur legi, cum pars detrahitur; abrogatur legi, cum prorsus tollitur. To derogate from a law is to take away part of it; to abrogate a law is to abolish it entirely.

Desafuero /désafs(u)weróv/. In Spanish law, an irregular action committed with violence against law, custom, or reason.

De salvo conductu /diy saľvov kändák(y)uw/. A writ of safeguard allowed to strangers seeking their rights in English courts, and apprehending violence or injury to their persons or property.

De salva guardia /diy sælvía gàrdiía/. A writ of safeguard obtained. Such a provision is anomalous.

Desamortizacion /désamortiısıssayıwn/. In Mexican law, the desamortizacion of property is to take it out of mortmain (dead hands); that is, to unloose it from the grasp, as it were, of ecclesiastical or civil corporations. The term has no equivalent in English.

De sa vie /da sæ vié/. L. Fr. Of his or her life; of his own life; as distinguished from pur autre vie, for another’s life.

De scaccario /diy skakériyow/. Of or concerning the exchequer. The title of a statute passed in the fifty-first year of Henry III.

Descend. To pass by succession; as when the estate vests by operation of law in the heirs immediately upon the death of the ancestor. The term, as used in some statutes, includes an acquisition by devise. Cordon v. Gregg, 164 Or. 306, 101 P.2d 414, 415. To pass down from generation to generation. To go or pass to; often used as a word of transfer. As used in wills, the word is often regarded as a general expression equivalent to the words “go to” or “belong to,” and as indicating a passing of title by the force of the will rather than of the statute. See Descent.

Descendent. Those persons who are in the blood stream of the ancestor. Term means those descended from another, persons who proceed from a body of another such as a child or grandchild, to the remotest degree; it is the opposite of “ascendants”. Bassett v. Merlin, Inc., Fla.App., 304 So.2d 543, 544. In the plural, the term means issue, offspring or posterity in general. Also, all those to whom an estate descends, whether it be in a direct or collateral line from the intestate. See Descent.

Lineal descendent. One who is in the line of descent from the ancestor. The term may include an adopted child.

Descender. Descent; in the descent. See Formedon.

Descendibility of future interests. Legal suitability of a future interest such as a remainder or executory interest to pass by inheritance on death of the holder.

Descendible. Capable of passing by descent, or of being inherited or transmitted by devise (spoken of estates, titles, offices, and other property).

Descent. Hereditary succession. Succession to the ownership of an estate by inheritance, or by any act of law, as distinguished from “purchase.” Title by descent is the title by which one person, upon the death of another, acquires the real estate of the latter as his heir at law. 2 Bl.Comm. 201. The title by inheritance is in all cases called descent, although by statute law the title is sometimes made to ascend. The division among those legally entitled thereto of the real property of intestates. See also Per capita; Per stirpes.

Classification

Descents are of two sorts, lineal and collateral. Lineal descent is descent in a direct or right line, as from father or grandfather to son or grandson. collateral descent is descent in a collateral or oblique line, that is, up to the common ancestor and then down from him, as from brother to brother, or between cousins. They are also distinguished into mediate and immediate descends. But these terms are used in different senses. A descent may be said to be a mediate or immediate descent of the estate or right; or it may be said to be mediate or immediate, in regard to the mediateness or immediateness of the pedigree or consanguinity. Thus, a descent from the grandfather, who dies in possession, to the grandchild, the father being then dead, or from the uncle to the nephew, the brother being dead, is, in the former sense, in law, immediate descent, although the one is collateral and the other lineal; for the heir is in the per, and not in the per and cui. On the other hand, with reference to the line of pedigree or consanguinity, a descent is often said to be immediate, when the ancestor from whom the party derives his blood is immediate, and without any intervening link or degrees; and mediate, when the kindred is derived from him mediate altero, another ancestor intervening between them. Thus a descent in lineals from father to son is in this sense immediate; but a descent from grandfather to grandson, the father being dead, or from uncle to nephew, the brother being dead, is deemed mediate; the father and the brother being, in these latter cases, the medium deferens, as it is called, of the descent or consanguinity.

Descent was denoted, in the Roman law, by the term "successio," which is also used by Bracton, from which has been derived the succession of the Scotch and French jurisprudence.

Line of Descent

The order or series of persons who have descended one from the other or all from a common ancestor, considered as placed in a line of succession in the order of their birth, the line showing the connection of all the blood-relatives.

Collateral line. A line of descent connecting persons who are not directly related to each other as ascendants or descendants, but whose relationship consists in common descent from the same ancestor.

Direct line. A line of descent traced through those persons only who are related to each other directly as ascendants or descendants.

Maternal line. A line of descent or relationship between two persons which is traced through the mother of the younger.
Paternal line. A similar line of descent traced through the father.

Descent cast. The devolving of reality upon the heir on the death of his ancestor intestate.

Another name for what was formerly called a "descent which tolls entry." When a person had acquired land by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, and died seised of the land, the descent of it to his heir was not tollable by the father.

Descriptive. To narrate, express, explain, set forth, relate, recount, narrate, depict, delineate, portray. Of land, to give the metes and bounds.

Description. A delineation or account of a particular subject by the recital of its characteristic accidents and qualities. A written enumeration of items composing an estate, or of its condition, or of titles or documents; like an inventory, but with more particularity, and without involving the idea of an appraisement.

An exact written account of an article, mechanical device, or process which is the subject of an application for a patent.

A method of pointing out a particular person by referring to his relationship to some other person or his character as an officer, trustee, executor, etc.

That part of a conveyance, advertisement of sale, etc., which identifies the land or premises intended to be affected.

A fair portrayal of the chief features of the proposed law in words of plain meaning, so that it can be understood by the persons entitled to vote. Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 103 Mont. 148, 62 P.2d 342, 348.

That part of affidavit for search warrant describing the place to be searched.

For description of criminal suspect, see Lineup. See also Identification.

Descriptio persona /daskripsh(ə)wər pəsərˈnən/ Lat. Description of the person. By this is meant a word or phrase used merely for the purpose of identifying or pointing out the person intended, and not as an intimation that the language in connection with which it occurs is to apply to him only in the official or technical character which might appear to be indicated by the word. Forrester v. Cantley, 227 Mo. App. 325, 51 S.W.2d 550, 551.

In wills, it sometimes happens that the word heir is used as a descriptio persona. A legacy "to the eldest son" of A would be a designation of the person.

Descriptive. Containing a description; serving or aiming to describe; having the quality of representing. Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 103 Mont. 148, 62 P.2d 342, 348. See also Identification.

If trademark imparts information directly, it is "descriptive"; if it stands for an idea which requires some operation of the imagination connected with the goods, it is "suggestive"; the information imparted may concern a characteristic, quality or ingredient of the product. Union Carbide Corp. v. Ever-Ready, Inc., C.A.Ill., 531 F.2d 366, 378.

De scutaglo habendo /diˈskjuːtɔɡlo hæˈbɛndəʊ/ Writ for having (or to have) escuage or scutage. A writ which anciently lay against tenants by knight-service, to compel them to serve in the king's wars or send substitutes or to pay escuage; that is a sum of money. The same writ lay for one who had already served in the king's army, or paid a fine instead, against those who held of him by knight-service, to recover his escuage or scutage.

De se bene gerendo /diˈsiː bɪni ɡərəˈdɛnəʊ/ For behaving himself well; for his good behavior.

Desecrate. To violate sanctity of, to profane, or to put to unworthy use. A person commits a misdemeanor if he purposely desecrates any public monument or structure, or place of worship or burial, or if he purposely desecrates the national flag or any other object of veneration by the public or a substantial segment thereof in any public place. Offense consists of defacing, damaging, polluting or otherwise physically mistreating in a way that the actor knows will outrage the sensibilities of persons likely to observe or discover his action. Model Penal Code, § 250.9. See also Deface; Defile.

De secta ad molendinum /diˈʃɛktə æd məˈlɛndənəm/ Of suit to a mill. An old English writ which lay to compel one to continue his custom (of grinding) at a mill. 3 Bl.Comm. 235.

Desegregartion. The judicial mandate eliminating color of a person as a basis for disqualification to attend the school of his or her choice or to work at place of employment of his or her choice. See Brown decision; Discrimination.

Desert. To leave or quit with an intention to cause a permanent separation; to forsake utterly; to abandon. It is essentially willful in nature.

Desertion. The act by which a person abandons and forsakes, without justification, or unauthorized, a station or condition of public, social, or family life, renouncing its responsibilities and evading its duties. A willful abandonment of an employment or duty in violation of a legal or moral obligation.

Criminal desertion is a husband's or wife's abandonment or willful failure without just cause to provide for the care, protection or support of a spouse who is in ill health or necessitous circumstances.

See also Abandonment; Desertion and nonsupport; Non-support.

Adoption. As used in statute providing that parental consent to adoption is not required when parent has willfully deserted child evinces settled purpose to forego, abandon, or desert all parental duties and parental rights in child. Moody v. Voorhies, 257 Or. 105, 475 P.2d 579, 581.

Constructive desertion. That arising where an existing cohabitation is put an end to by misconduct of one of the parties, provided such misconduct is itself a ground for divorce. For example, where one spouse, by his or her words, conduct, demeanor, and attitude produces an intolerable condition which forces the other spouse to withdraw from the joint habitation to a more peaceful one. West v. West, 264 Ky. 826, 95 S.W.2d 789, 790.
DESERTION

Divorce law. As a ground for divorce, an actual abandonment or breaking off of matrimonial cohabitation, by either of the parties, and a renouncing or refusal of the duties and obligations of the relation, with an intent to abandon or forsake entirely and not to return to or resume marital relations, occurring without legal justification either in the consent or the wrongful conduct of the other party. The elements of offense of "desertion" as ground for divorce are a voluntary intentional abandonment of one party by the other, without cause or justification and without consent of party abandoned. See also Constructive desertion, supra; Desertion and non-support, infra.

Maritime law. The act by which a seaman deserts and abandons a ship or vessel, in which he had engaged to perform a voyage, before the expiration of his time, and without leave. By desertion, in the maritime law, is meant, not a mere unauthorized absence from the ship without leave, but an unauthorized absence from the ship, with an intention not to return to her service, or, as it is often expressed, animo non revertendi; that is, with an intention to desert. The Cripple Creek, D.C.Pa., 52 F.Supp. 710, 712 (strike); The Youngstown, C.C.A.La., 110 F.2d 968, 970. Desertion, within statute providing for forfeiture of wages of deserting seaman, consists of seaman's unconsented abandonment of duty by quitting ship before termination of engagement specified in articles he signed, without justification and with intention of not returning. Petition of Russo, D.C. Cal., 232 F.Supp. 650, 651.

Military law. Any member of the armed forces who—(1) without authority goes or remains absent from his unit, organization, or place of duty with intent to remain away therefrom permanently; (2) quits his unit, organization, or place of duty with intent to avoid hazardous duty or to shirk important service; or (3) without being regularly separated from one of the armed forces enlists or accepts an appointment in the same or another one of the armed forces without fully disclosing the fact that he has not been regularly separated, or enters any foreign armed service except when authorized by the United States; is guilty of desertion. Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C.A. § 885.

Non-support. Desertion is frequently accompanied by non-support, which may be a crime. See also Desertion and non-support; Non-support.

Obstinate desertion. See Obstinate desertion.

Desertion and non-support. While both desertion and non-support go hand in hand in many cases, they are distinguishable because a man may be guilty of desertion and not guilty of non-support. The converse is also true because a man may be guilty of wilfully failing to support though he remains in the marital home. See also Desertion; Non-support.

Deserving. Worthy or meritorious, without regard to condition or circumstances. In no sense of the word is it limited to persons in need of assistance, or objects which come within the class of charitable uses.

Deshonora /déysonóra/ In Spanish law, dishonor; injury; slander.

Design. To form plan or scheme of, conceive and arrange in mind, originate mentally, plan out, contrive. Also, the plan or scheme conceived in mind and intended for subsequent execution; preliminary conception of idea to be carried into effect by action; contrivance in accordance with preconceived plan. A project, an idea. As a term of art, the giving of a visible form to the conceptions of the mind, or invention.

In evidence, purpose or intention, combined with plan, or implying a plan in the mind.

In patent law, the drawing or depiction of an original plan or conception for a novel pattern, model, shape, or configuration, to be used in the manufacturing or textile arts or the fine arts, and chiefly of a decorative or ornamental character. "Design patents" are contrasted with "utility patents," but equally involve the exercise of the inventive or originalative faculty. Design, in the view of the patent law, is that characteristic of a physical substance which, by means of lines, images, configuration, and the like, taken as a whole, makes an impression, through the eye, upon the mind of the observer. The essence of a design resides not in the elements individually, nor in their method of arrangement, but in the total ensemble—in that indefinable whole that awakens some sensation in the observer's mind. Impressions thus imparted may be complex or simple. But whatever the impression, there is attached in the mind of the observer, to the object observed, a sense of uniqueness and character.

Designate. To indicate, select, appoint, nominate, or set apart for a purpose or duty, as to designate an officer for a command. To mark out and make known; to point out; to name; indicate. New Haven Federation of Teachers v. New Haven Bd. of Ed., 27 Conn.Sup. 298, 237 A.2d 373, 380. See also Identification.

Designating petition. Means used to designate a candidate for a party nomination at a primary election or for election to party position.

Designatio justiciariorum est a rege; jurisdictio vero ordinaria a lege. The appointment of justices is by the king, but their ordinary jurisdiction by the law.

Designation. An addition to a name, as of title, profession, trade, or occupation, to distinguish the person from others. A description or descriptive expression by which a person or thing is denoted in a will without using the name. Also, an appointment or assignment, as to a particular office. The act of pointing out, distinguishing by marks of description, or calling by a distinctive title. See also Identification.

Designatio persona /dēzagnéshiy(i)yow parsówñiy/. The description of a person or a party to a deed or contract. See also Descriptio persona.

Designatio unius est exclusio aliorum, et expressum facit cessare tacitum /dēzagnéshiy(i)yow yuwñiñas êst akskliwurzh(i)yow oltiriyas, êd akspréxam féyysat sséryi tásadam/. The specifying of one is the exclusion of another, and that which is expressed makes that which is understood to cease. (The appointment or designation of one is the exclusion of the other; and that which is expressed prevails over that which is implied.)
Designed. Contrived or taken to be employed for a particular purpose. Fit, adapted, prepared, suitable, appropriate. Intended, adapted, or designated. The term may be employed as indicating a bad purpose with evil intent.

Designedly. Sometimes equivalent to the words "wilfully," "knowingly," "unlawfully," and "feloniously."

De simillibus ad similia eadem ratione procedendum est /díy similibas ád similiá yéyadm rėyshiówny prówsádéadm ést/. From like things to like things we are to proceed by the same rule or reason [i.e., we are allowed to argue from the analogy of cases].

De similibus idem est judicandum /díy similibas áydám ést juwéskándém/. Of [respecting] like things [in like cases], the judgment is to be the same.

Desire. To ask, to request. Ordinarily, to wish for more or less earnestly. Sometimes, to empower or authorize. According to context or circumstances, the word may import a request or even a demand.

This term, used in a will in relation to the management and distribution of property, has been interpreted by the courts with different shades of meaning, varying from the mere expression of a preference to a positive command. The word "desire" may be as effective as if the word "devise" or "bequeath" had been used. Drinkard v. Hughes, Tex.Civ.App., 32 S.W.2d 935, 936.

Desistement /díysístént/. The name of a doctrine under which the court, in construing a foreign will, applies the law of the forum on the theory that there is a hiatus.

Deslinde /déslysíndey/. A term used in the Spanish law, denoting the act by which the boundaries of an estate or portion of a country are determined.

Desmemoriados /díy smemóriyádwos/. In Spanish law, persons deprived of memory.

De son tort /da sówn tór(t)/. L. Fr. Of his own wrong. An executor de son tort is an executor of his own wrong. A person who assumes to act as executor of an estate without any lawful warrant or authority, but who, by his intermeddling, makes himself liable as an executor to a certain extent. If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor without any just authority, he is called in law an "executor of his own wrong," de son tort. 2 Bl.Comm. 507.

De son tort demesne /da sówn tór(t) dámiyén/. Of his own wrong. The word French equivalent of the Latin phrase de injuria (q.v.).

Despitus /déspitás/. Contempt. A contemptible person.

Despol /déspól/. This word involves, in its signification, violence or clandestine means by which one is deprived of that which he possesses.

Despojar /désposwár/. A possessory action of the Mexican law. It is brought to recover possession of immovable property, of which one has been despoiled (despojado) by another. See also Despoil.

Desponsation /daspónséyshán/. The act of betrothing persons to each other.

Desposorio /désposóriyów/. In Spanish law, espousals; mutual promises of future marriage.

Despot. This word, in its original and most simple acceptance, signifies master and supreme lord; it is synonymous with monarch. A ruler with absolute power and authority, but taken in bad sense, as it is usually employed, it signifies a tyrant. In some nations, despot is the title given to the sovereign, as king is given in others.

Despotism /déspadízam/. That abuse of government where the sovereign power is not divided, but united and unlimited in the hands of a single man, whatever may be his official title. It is not, properly, a form of government.

"Despotism" is not exactly synonymous with "autocracy," for the former involves the idea of tyranny or abuse of power, which is not necessarily implied by the latter. Every despotism is autocratic; but an autocracy is not necessarily despotic.

Dessaisissement /déséyslyshmón/. In French law, when a person is declared bankrupt, he is immediately deprived of the enjoyment and administration of all his property; this deprivation, which extends to all his rights, is called "dessaisissement."

De statuto mercatorio /díy statyúwdom márkatêríyów/. The writ of statute merchant.

De statuto stapule /díy statyúwdom stéypalíy/. The writ of statute staple.

Destination. The purpose to which it is intended an article or a fund shall be applied. Act of appointing or setting aside for a purpose. A testator gives a destination to a legacy when he prescribes the specific use to which it shall be put. Place to which something is sent; place set for end of journey; terminal point to which one directs his course.

Destination bill. Instead of issuing a bill of lading to the consignor at the place of shipment a carrier may at the request of the shipper procure the bill to be issued at destination or at any other place designated in the request. Upon request of anyone entitled as against the carrier to control the goods while in transit and on surrender of any outstanding bill of lading or other receipt covering such goods, the issuer may procure a substitute bill to be issued at any place designated in the request. U.C.C. § 7–305.

Destination contract. Contract between seller and buyer by which risk of loss passes to buyer upon seller's tender of goods at destination. U.C.C. § 2–509(1)(b).

Destination du père de famille /déstanasýóyn dyúw pér da famíly/. A use which owner has intentionally established on one part of his property in favor of another part, and which is equal to a title with respect to perpetual and apparent servitudes thereon.

Destitute. Not possessing necessaries of life; in condition of extreme want; bereft; lacking possessions and resources. Destitute of Bennington County by Van Santvoord v. Henry W. Putnam Memorial Hospital, 125 Vt. 289, 215 A.2d 134, 138. See also Indigent.

Destitute or necessitous circumstances. Circumstances in which one needs the necessaries of life, which cover not only primitive physical needs, things absolutely indispensable to human existence and decency, but those things, also, which are in fact necessary to the particular person left without support.

Destroy. Term is susceptible of applications in a variety of contexts, but in general, it means to ruin completely and may include a taking. State v. Robinson, 266 Minn. 166, 123 N.W.2d 812. To ruin the structure, organic existence or condition of a thing; to demolish; to injure or mutilate beyond possibility of use; to nullify. State by Clark v. Wolkoff, 250 Minn. 504, 85 N.W.2d 401, 410.

As used in policies of insurance, leases, and in maritime law, and under various statutes, this term is often applied to an act which renders the subject useless for its intended purpose, though it does not literally demolish or annihilate it.

In relation to wills, contracts, and other documents, the term “destroy” does not import the annihilation of the instrument or its resolution into other forms of matter, but a destruction of its legal efficacy, which may be by cancellation, obliterating, tearing into fragments, etc.

Destructibility. Capability of being destroyed by some action or turn of events or by operation of law.

Destructibility of contingent remainders. Doctrine dealing with future interest which may be destroyed by failure of condition. Such destructible future interest as a contingent remainder is subject to Rule Against Perpetuities unlike future interest which is destructible by act of the grantor or owner of present estate.

Destructible trust. Trust susceptible of being terminated or destroyed by happening of certain events or by operation of law.

Desuetude /dés-wé-'tud/. Disuse; cessation or discontinuance of use, especially in the phrase, “to fall into desuetude.” Applied to obsolete statutes.

De superoneratione pasture /di-'sú-per-ō-nēr-e-nē-'sō-āt/. Old English writ of surcharge of pasture. A judicial writ which lay for him who was impaled in the county court, for surcharging a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impaled for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the courts at Westminster.

De tabulis exhibendis /di-'tā-by-līz ē-gzą-bēnds/. Of showing the tablets of a will.

Detchiare /dē-chā'-ēr-i/. To seize or take into custody another's goods or person by writ of attachment or course of law.

Detail, v. To enumerate minutely, specify, particularize.

Detail, n. An individual part, an item, a particular.

One who belongs to the army, but is only detached, or set apart, for the time to some particular duty or service, and who is liable at any time to be recalled to his place in the ranks.

Detain. To retain as the possession of personality. To arrest, to check, to delay, to hinder, to hold, or keep in custody, to retard, to restrain from proceeding, to stay, to stop. People v. Smith, 17 Cal.App.2d 468, 62 P.2d 436, 438; State v. King, 303 S.W.2d 930, 934. See Confinement; Custody.

Detainer. The act (or the juridical fact) of withholding from a person lawfully entitled the possession of land or goods, or the restraint of a man’s personal liberty against his will; detention. The wrongful keeping of a person’s goods is called an “unlawful detainer,” although the original taking may have been lawful. See also Forcible detainer; Unlawful detainer.

Detainment. Act of detaining. This term is used in policies of marine insurance, in the clause relating to “arrests, restraints, and detainments.” The last two words are construed as equivalents, each meaning the effect of superior force operating directly on the vessel.

De tallagio non concedendo /di-'tāl-ē-jē-yō-nōn kon-kə-'dēn-dōn/. Of not allowing talliage. The name given to the English statutes 25 and 34 Edw. I, restricting the power of the king to grant talliage.

Detection. A discovery or laying open of that which was hidden; investigation.

Detheolonio /diy deiı̇yanlıı̇nıyıow/. A writ which lay for a person who was prevented from taking toll.

Detine /dédan(y)uw/. A form of action which lies for the recovery, in specie, of personal chattels from one who acquired possession of them lawfully, but retains it without right, together with damages for the detention. Possessory action for recovery of personal chattels unjustly detained. Durst v. Durst, 232 Md. 311, 193 A.2d 26.

The action of detinue is defined in the old books as a remedy founded upon the delivery of goods by the owner to another to keep, who afterwards refuses to redeliver them to the bailor; and it is said that, to authorize the maintenance of the action, it is necessary that the defendant should have come lawfully into the possession of the chattel, either by delivery to him or by finding it. In fact, it was once understood to be the law that detinue does not lie where the property had been tortiously taken. But it is, upon principle, very unimportant in what manner the defendant's possession commenced, since the gist of the action is the wrongful detainer, and not the original taking.

It is only incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove property in himself, and possession in the defendant. The action of detinue is proper in every case where the owner prefers recovering the specific property to damages for its conversion, and no regard is had to the manner in which the defendant acquired the possession.

Detine of goods in frank marriage /dédan(y)uw av gudz in fran[k ma]raı/. A writ formerly available to a wife after a divorce, for the recovery of the goods given with her in marriage.

Detinuit /datinyinuyat/. An action of replevin is said to be in the detinuit when the plaintiff acquires possession of the property claimed by means of the writ. The right to retain is, of course, subject in such case to the judgment of the court upon his title to the property claimed.

Detour. A temporary turning aside from usual or regular route, course or procedure or from a task or employment. See also Deviation.

A temporary road or a longer road in temporary use because of an obstruction or state of disrepair on regularly used road.

Dictores. Arbitrators.

Dictum /diktəm/. A statement, remark, or observation. Gratia dictum; a gratuitous or voluntary representation; one which a party is not bound to make. Simplicium dictum; a mere assertion; an assertion without proof.

The word is generally used as an abbreviated form of obiter dictum, "a remark by the way;" that is, an observation or remark made by a judge in pronouncing an opinion upon a cause, concerning some rule, principle, or application of law, or the solution of a question suggested by the case at bar, but not necessarily involved in the case or essential to its determination; any statement of the law enunciated by the court merely by way of illustration, argument, analogy, or suggestion. Statements and comments in an opinion concerning some rule of law or legal proposition not necessarily involved nor essential to determination of the case in hand are obiter dicta, and lack the force of an adjudication. Wheeler v. Wilkin, 98 Colo. 568, 58 P.2d 1223, 1226. Dicta are opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court, and made without argument, or full consideration of the point, are not the professed deliberate determinations of the judge himself.

In old English law, dictum meant an arbitrament, or the award of arbitrators.

In French law, the report of a judgment made by one of the judges who has given it.

Dictum de Kenilworth. The edict or declaration of Kenilworth. An edict or award between King Henry III, and all the barons and others who had been in arms against him; and so called because it was made at Kenilworth Castle in Warwickshire, in the fifty-first year of his reign, containing a composition of five years' rent for the lands and estates of those who had forfeited them in that rebellion.

Die, v. To expire; cease to live; the equivalent to the phrase "lose his life." See also Death.

Diel dictio /dəˈjɪəjə ˌdɪkʃ(ə)ˈwəʊt/. Lat. In Roman law, this name was given to a notice promulgated by a magistrate of his intention to present an impeachment against a citizen before the people, specifying the day appointed, the name of the accused, and the crime charged.

Diem clausit extremum /ˈdeɪəm kloʊzd əskˈstrɪməm/. (Lat. He has closed his last day, i.e. died.) A writ which formerly lay on the death of a tenant in capite, to ascertain the lands of which he died seised, and reclaim them into the king's hands. It was directed to the king's escheators.

A writ awarded out of the exchequer after the death of a crown debtor, the sheriff being command-ed by it to inquire by a jury when and where the crown debtor died, and what chattels, debts, and lands he had at the time of his decease, and to take and seize them into the crown's hands.

Digama, or digamy /digamiy/. Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first, as “bigamy,” in law, is having two wives at once. Originally, a man who married a widow, or married again after the death of his wife, was said to be guilty of bigamy.

Digest. A collection or compilation, embodying the chief matter of numerous books, articles, court decisions, etc. in one, disposed under proper heads or titles, and usually by an alphabetical arrangement, for facility in reference.

An index to reported cases, providing brief statements of court holdings or facts of cases, which is arranged by subject and subdivided by jurisdiction and courts. See American Digest System; Special digests, below.

As a legal term, "digest" is to be distinguished from "abridgment." The latter is a summary or epitome of the contents of a single work, in which, as a rule, the original order or sequence of parts is preserved, and in which the principal labor of the compiler is in the matter of consolidation. A digest is wider in its scope; is made up of quotations or paraphrased passages, and has its own system of classification and arrangement. An "index" merely points out the places where particular matters may be found, without purporting to give such matters in extenso. A "treatise" or "commentary" is not a compilation, but an original composition, though it may include quotations and excerpts.

A reference to the “Digest,” or “Dig.,” is often understood to designate the Digest (or Pandects) of the Justinian collection; that being the digest par eminence, and the authoritative compilation of the Roman law.

American Digest System. The American Digest System is a subject classification scheme whereby decisions that were reported chronologically in the various units of the National Reporter System are rearranged by subject, bringing together all cases on a similar point of law. The system divides the subject of law into seven main classes. Each class is then divided into sub-classes and then each sub-class into topics. There are over 400 topics, each of which corresponds to a legal concept. The system consists of a Century Digest (1658–1896), eight Decennial Digests (1897–1905, 1906–1915, 1916–1925, 1926–1935, 1936–1945, 1946–1955, 1956–1966, and 1966–1976), and the General Digest, 5th Series (1976 to date). The American Digest System is the master index to all reported case law. See also Special digests, infra.

Special digests. Decisions included in the American Digest System are as well included in special digests covering the federal courts and also in regional and state digests. The “U.S. Supreme Court Digest” covers decisions from the U.S. Supreme Court. The Federal Digest (cases decided prior to 1939), Modern Federal Practice Digest (1939–1961), and West’s Federal Practice Digest (1939 to date) cover federal court cases. State court decisions from geographical areas are also published in “Regional Digests” (Atlantic, North Western, Pacific, South Eastern, Southern Digests). Also, individual “State Digests” are published for most all states.

Digests. The ordinary name of the Pandects of Justinian, which are now usually cited by the abbreviation “Dig.” instead of “Ff.,” as formerly. Sometimes called “Digest,” in the singular. See also Digest.

Dignity. In canon law, a person holding an ecclesiastical benefice or dignity, which gave him some pre-eminence above mere priests and canons. To this class exclusively belonged all bishops, deans, arch-deacons, etc.; but it now includes all the prebendaries and canons of the church.

Dignity. In English law, an honor; a title, station, or distinction of honor. Dignities are a species of incorporeal hereditaments, in which a person may have a property or estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 37; 1 Bl.Comm. 396.

Dijudication /dɪˈdʒʌdɪkeɪʃən/. Judicial decision or determination.

Dilacion /dɪˈdɪləʃən/. In Spanish law, a space of time granted to a party to a suit in which to answer a demand or produce evidence of a disputed fact.

Dilapidation. A species of ecclesiastical waste which occurs whenever the incumbent suffers any edifices of his ecclesiastical living to go to ruin or decay. It is either voluntary, by pulling down, or permissive, by suffering the church, parsonage-houses, and other buildings thereunto belonging, to decay. And the remedy for either lies either in the spiritual court, where the canon law prevails, or in the courts of common law. It is also held to be good cause of deprivation if the bishop, parson, or other ecclesiastical person dilapidates buildings or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church, unless for necessary repairs; and that a writ of prohibition will also lie against him in the common-law courts. 3 Bl.Comm. 91.

The term is also used, in the law of landlord and tenant, to signify the neglect of necessary repairs to a building, or suffering it to fall into a state of decay, or the pulling down of the building or any part of it.

Dilataiones in lege sunt odiose /dɪˈlætəriən əˈdiəsi/. Delays in law are odious.

Dilatory /dɪˈlætəri/iy/. Tending or intended to cause delay or to gain time or to put off a decision.

Dilatory defense. In chancery practice, one the object of which is to dismiss, suspend, or obstruct the suit, without touching the merits, until the impediment or obstacle insisted on shall be removed. 3 Bl.Comm. 301, 302. See also Dilatory pleas.

Dilatory exceptions. Such as do not tend to defeat the action, but only to retard its progress.

Dilatory pleas. A class of defenses at common law, founded on some matter of fact not connected with the merits of the case, but such as might exist without impeaching the right of action itself. They were either pleas to the jurisdiction, showing that, by reason of some matter therein stated, the case was not within the jurisdiction of the court; or pleas in suspension, showing some matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the suit; or pleas in abatement, showing some matter for abatement or quashing the declaration. Davis v. Thiede, 138 Ind.App. 537, 203 N.E.2d 835.

Diligence. Vigilant activity; attentiveness; or care, of which there are infinite shades, from the slightest momentary thought to the most vigilant anxiety. Attentive and persistent in doing a thing; steadily applied; active; sedulous; laborious; unremitting; untiring. National Steel & Shipbuilding Co. v. U. S., 190 Ct.Cl. 247, 419 F.2d 863, 875.

The civil law is in perfect conformity with the common law. It lays down three degrees of diligence,—ordinary (diligentia); extraordinary (exactissima diligentia); slight (levissima diligentia).

There may be a high degree of diligence, a common degree of diligence, and a slight degree of diligence, with their corresponding degrees of negligence. Common or ordinary diligence is that degree of diligence which men in general exercise in respect to their own concerns; high or great diligence is of course extraordinary diligence, or that which very prudent persons take of their own concerns; and low or slight diligence is that which persons of less than common prudence, or indeed of any prudence at all, take of their own concerns.

See also Care.

Due diligence. Such a measure of prudence, activity, or assiduity, as is properly to be expected from, and ordinarily exercised by, a reasonable and prudent man under the particular circumstances; not measured by any absolute standard, but depending on the relative facts of the special case.

Extraordinary diligence. That extreme measure of care and caution which persons of unusual prudence and circumspection use for securing and preserving their own property or rights.

Great diligence. Such a measure of care, prudence, and assiduity as persons of unusual prudence and DILIGENCE

Discretion exercise in regard to any and all of their own affairs, or such as persons of ordinary prudence exercise in regard to very important affairs of their own.

High diligence. The same as great diligence.

Low diligence. The same as slight diligence.

Necessary diligence. That degree of diligence which a person placed in a particular situation must exercise in order to entitle him to the protection of the law in respect to rights or claims growing out of that situation, or to avoid being left without redress on account of his own culpable carelessness or negligence.

Ordinary diligence is that degree of care which men of common prudence generally exercise in their affairs, in the country and the age in which they live.

Reasonable diligence. A fair, proper and due degree of care and activity, measured with reference to the particular circumstances; such diligence, care, or attention as might be expected from a man of ordinary prudence and activity.

Special diligence. The measure of diligence and skill exercised by a good business man in his particular specialty, which must be commensurate with the duty to be performed and the individual circumstances of the case; not merely the diligence of an ordinary person or non-specialist.

Diligent. Attentive and persistent in doing a thing; steadily applied; active; sedulous; laborious; unremitting; untiring.

Diligent inquiry. Such inquiry as a diligent man, intent upon ascertaining a fact, would ordinarily make, and it is inquiry made with diligence and good faith to ascertain the truth, and must be an inquiry as full as the circumstances of the situation will permit. Liepelt v. Baird. 17 Ill.2d 428, 161 N.E.2d 854, 857.

Diligatius /daliijyeydas/. (Fr. De lege ejectus, Lat.) Outlawed.

Dillon's Rule. Rule used in construction of statutes delegating authority to local government: "... [A] municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers and no others: First, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily implied or necessarily incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those absolutely essential to the operation in a lease. 2 Bl.Comm. 317, 318.

Dimidiatas /dimadáyatás/. The moiety or half of a thing.

Diminished capacity. See Diminished responsibility doctrine.

Diminished responsibility doctrine /daminasht rasponsabitidady döktran/. Term used to refer to lack of capacity to achieve state of mind requisite for commission of crime. McGuire v. Superior Court for Los Angeles County, 274 Cal.App. 583, 79 Cal.Rptr. 155, 161. The concept of diminished responsibility, also known as partial insanity, permits the trier of fact to regard the impaired mental state of the defendant in mitigation of the punishment or degree of the offense even though the impairment does not qualify as insanity under the prevailing test. A number of courts have adopted the concept. In some jurisdictions, mental retardation and extremely low intelligence will, if proved, serve to reduce first degree murder to manslaughter. See also Insanity.

Diminium /damin(y)úshiyow/. In the civil law, diminution; a taking away; loss or deprivation. Diminutio capitis, loss of status or condition. See Capitis diminutio.

Diminution /damin(y)úshan/. Incompleteness. Act or process of diminishing, taking away, or lessening. A word signifying that the record sent up from an inferior to a superior court for review is incomplete, or not fully certified.

Diminution in value. Rule of damages which provides for difference between "before" and "after" value of property which has been damaged or taken. Big Rock Mountain Corp. v. Stearns-Roger Corp., C.A. S.D., 388 F.2d 165, 168.

Diminution of damages. See Mitigation of damages.

Dimisi /dámáysay/. In old conveyancing, I have demised. Dimisi, concessi, et ad firmam tradidi, have demised, granted, and to farm let. The usual words of operation in a lease. 2 Bl.Comm. 317, 318.

Dimisit /dámáysat/. In old conveyancing, [he] has demised. See Dimisi.

Dimissorio littere /dimásoríiy lédárz/. In the civil law, letters dimissory or dismission, commonly called "apostles" (quae vulgo apostolis dicuntur). See Apostoli, Apostles.

Dimissory letters /dimásoríiy lédárz/. Where a candidate for holy orders has a title of ordination in one diocese in England, and is to be ordained in another, the bishop of the former diocese gives letters dimissory to the bishop of the latter to enable him to ordain the candidate.

Diminich /dámärkij/. A government of two persons.

Diocesan /dayósasan/. Belonging to a diocese; a bishop, as he stands related to his own diocese.

Diocesan courts. In English law, the consistorial courts of each diocese, exercising general jurisdiction of all matters arising locally within their respective limits, with the exception of places subject to peculiar jurisdiction, and administering the other branches of the ecclesiastical law.
Diocesan mission. A mission which does missionary work in single diocese.

Diochia /dayi̇kya/ . The district over which a bishop exercised his spiritual functions.

Diploma. In the civil law, a royal charter; letters patent granted by a prince or sovereign. Instrument conferring some honor, privilege, or authority. Commonly used to denote document given by educational institution on graduation and awarding of degree.

Diplomacy. The art and practice of conducting negotiations between foreign governments for the attainment of mutually satisfactory political relations. Negotiation or intercourse between nations through their representatives. The rules, customs, and privileges of representatives at foreign courts.

Diplomatic agent. In international law, a general name for all classes of persons charged with the negotiation, transaction, or superintendence of the diplomatic business of one nation with that of another. See also Ambassador.

Diplomatic relations. Established and formal communications and acknowledgment between one country and another in which diplomatic agents are exchanged.

Diplomatics. The science of diplomas, or of ancient writings and documents. The art of judging of ancient charters, public documents, diplomas, etc., and discriminating the true from the false.

Dipsomania /dipsáméniya/ . A mental disease characterized by an uncontrollable desire for intoxicating drinks. An irresistible impulse to indulge in intoxication, either by alcohol or other drugs.

Dipsomaniac /dipsáméniya/ . A person subject to dipsomania. One who has an irresistible desire for alcoholic liquors. See Insanity.

Diptycha /diptikya/ . Diptychs; tablets of wood, metal, or other substance, used among the Romans for the purpose of writing, and folded like a book of two leaves. The diptychs of antiquity were especially employed for public registers. They were used in the Greek, and afterwards in the Roman, church, as registers of the names of those for whom supplication was to be made, and are ranked among the earliest monastic records.

Direct, v. To point to; guide; order; command; instruct. To advise; suggest; request.

Direct, adj. Immediate; proximate; by the shortest course; without circuitry; operating by an immediate connection or relation, instead of operating through a medium; the opposite of indirect. Carter v. Carter Coal Co., App.D.C., 298 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 855, 80 L.Ed. 1160.

In the usual or natural course or line; immediately upwards or downwards; as distinguished from that which is out of the line, or on the side of it. In the usual or regular course or order, as distinguished from that which diverts, interrupts, or opposes. The opposite of cross, contrary, collateral or remote.

Without any intervening medium, agency or influence; unconditional.

Direct and proximate cause. See Direct cause.

Direct attack. A direct attack on a judgment or decree is an attempt, for sufficient cause, to have it annulled, reversed, vacated, corrected, declared void, or enjoined, in a proceeding instituted for that specific purpose, such as an appeal, writ of error, bill of review, or injunction to restrain its execution; distinguished from a collateral attack, which is an attempt to impeach the validity or binding force of the judgment or decree as a side issue or in a proceeding instituted for some other purpose. Ernell v. O'Fiel, Tex.Civ.App., 441 S.W.2d 653, 655. A direct attack on a judicial proceeding is an attempt to void or correct it in some manner provided by law.

Direct cause. That which sets in motion train of events which brings about result without intervention of any force operating or working actively from new and independent source, or, as one without which the injury would not have happened. Norbeck v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co., 3 Wash.App. 582, 476 P.2d 546, 547. See Cause; Proximate cause.

Direct charge-off method. A method of accounting for bad debts whereby a deduction is permitted only when an account becomes partially or completely worthless.

Direct contempt. Those contempts committed within the presence of the court, or so near the court as to interrupt its proceedings. Ex parte Tarpley, 293 Ala. 137, 300 So.2d 409, 413. See Contempt.

Direct costs. Cost of direct material and labor, and variable overhead incurred in producing a product.

Directed verdict. In a case in which the party with the burden of proof has failed to present a prima facie case for jury consideration, the trial judge may order the entry of a verdict without allowing the jury to consider it, because, as a matter of law, there can be only one such verdict. Fed.R. Civil P. 50(a).

In a criminal case, the judge may render a judgment of acquittal in favor of defendant. Fed.R. Crim.P. 29. See also Verdict.

Direct estoppel. Form of estoppel by judgment where issue has been actually litigated and determined in action between same parties based upon same cause of action. Napper v. Anderson et al., C.A.Tex., 500 F.2d 634, 636.

Direct evidence. Evidence in form of testimony from a witness who actually saw, heard or touched the subject of interrogation. State v. Baker, 249 Or. 549, 438 P.2d 978, 980. Evidence, which if believed, proves existence of fact in issue without inference or presumption. State v. McClure, Mo.App., 504 S.W.2d
DIRECT EVIDENCE

664, 668. That means of proof which tends to show the existence of a fact in question, without the intervention of the proof of any other fact, and is distinguished from circumstantial evidence, which is often called “indirect.” Direct evidence means evidence which in the first instance applies directly to the factum probandum, or which immediately points to a question at issue, or is evidence of the precise fact in issue and on trial by witnesses who can testify that they saw the acts done or heard the words spoken which constituted the precise fact to be proved.

Evidence that directly proves a fact, without an inference or presumption, and which in itself, if true, conclusively establishes that fact. Calif.Evid.Code.

Direct examination. The first interrogation or examination of a witness, on the merits, by the party on whose behalf he is called. The first examination of a witness upon a matter that is not within the scope of a previous examination of the witness. Calif.Evid.Code.

This is to be distinguished from an examination in pais, or on the voir dire, which is merely preliminary, and is held when the competency of the witness is challenged; from the cross-examination, which is conducted by the adverse party; and from the redirect examination which follows the cross-examination, and is had by the party who first examined the witness.

Direct injury. A wrong which directly results in the violation of a legal right and which must exist to permit a court to determine the constitutionality of an act of Congress.

Direct interest. A direct interest, such as would render the interested party incompetent to testify in regard to the matter, is an interest which is certain, and not contingent or doubtful. A matter which is dependent on the successful prosecution of an execution cannot be considered as uncertain, or otherwise than direct, in this sense.

Direction. The act of governing; management; superintendence. Denton v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., Miss., 284 U.S. 305, 52 S.Ct. 141, 142, 76 L.Ed. 310. Also the body of persons (called “directors”) who are charged with the management and administration of a corporation or institution.

The charge or instruction given by the court to a jury upon a point of law arising or involved in the case, to be by them applied to the facts in evidence. See Jurys instructions.

The clause of a bill in equity containing the address of the bill to the court.

That which is imposed by directing; a guiding or authoritative instruction; order; command. Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 496.

The line or course upon which anything is moving or aimed to move.

Direct line. See Descent.

Direct loss. One resulting immediately and proximately from the occurrence and not remotely from some of the consequences or effects thereof. See Loss.

Directly. In a direct way without anything intervening; not by secondary, but by direct, means.

Director. One who, or that which directs; as one who directs or regulates, guides or orders; a manager or superintendent, or a chief administrative official. State ex inf. McKittrick v. Bode, 342 Mo. 162, 113 S.W.2d 805, 808. See Directors.

Director of the Mint. An officer having the control, management, and superintendence of the United States Mint and its branches. He is appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Directors. Persons appointed or elected according to law, authorized to manage and direct the affairs of a corporation or company. The whole of the directors collectively form the board of directors.

Board of directors. See Board of directors.

Inside director. Director who is an employee, officer or major stockholder of corporation.

Interlocking director. Person who is a director of more than one corporation having allied interests. See Interlocking directorate.

Outside director. Non-employee director with no, or only minimal, direct interest in corporation.

Directory, adj. A provision in a statute, rule of procedure, or the like, which is a mere direction or instruction of no obligatory force, and involving no invalidating consequence for its disregard, as opposed to an imperative or mandatory provision, which must be followed. The general rule is that the prescriptions of a statute relating to the performance of a public duty are so far directory that, though neglect of them may be punishable, yet it does not affect the validity of the acts done under them, as in the case of a statute requiring an officer to prepare and deliver a document to another officer on or before a certain day.

A “directory” provision in a statute is one, the observance of which is not necessary to the validity of the proceeding to which it relates; one which leaves it optional with the department or officer to which it is addressed to obey or not as he may see fit. Generally, statutory provisions which do not relate to the essence of thing to be done, and as to which compliance is matter of convenience rather than substance are “directory,” while provisions which relate to essence of thing to be done, that is, matters of substance, are “mandatory.” Rodgers v. Meredith, 274 Ala. 179, 146 So.2d 308, 310.

Under a general classification, statutes are either “mandatory” or “directory,” and, if mandatory, they prescribe, in addition to requiring the doing of the things specified, the result that will follow if they are not done, whereas, if directory, their terms are limited to what is required to be done. A statute is mandatory when the provision of the statute is the essence of the thing required to be done; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.

Directory trust. Where, by the terms of a trust, the fund is directed to be vested in a particular manner till the period arrives at which it is to be appropriated, this is called a “directory trust.” It is distinguished from a discretionary trust, in which the trustee has a discretion as to the management of the fund.
Directory, n. Book containing names, addresses, and occupations of inhabitants of city. Also any list or compilation, usually in book or pamphlet form, of persons, professional organizations, firms or corporations forming some class separate and distinct from others, e.g. telephone directory, lawyer's directory, hotel directory, etc.

Direct payment. One which is absolute and unconditional as to the time, amount, and the persons by whom and to whom it is to be made.

Direct placement. With respect to securities offerings, the negotiation by a borrower, such as an industrial or utility company, directly with the lender, such as a life insurance company or group of companies, for an entire issue of securities. No underwriter is involved and the transaction is exempt from SEC filing.

Direct selling. Selling directly to customer rather than to distributor or dealer; or to retailer rather than to wholesaler.

Direct tax. One that is imposed directly upon property, according to its value. It is generally spoken of as a property tax or an ad valorem tax. Distinguishable from an indirect tax which is levied upon some right or privilege.

Diribitores /diribatórīz/. In Roman law, officers who distributed ballots to the people, to be used in voting.

Diriment impediments /dirīment impēdamentīs/. In canon law, absolute bars to marriage, which would make it null ab initio.

Disability. The want of legal capability to perform an act. Term is generally used to indicate an incapacity for the full enjoyment of ordinary legal rights; thus, persons under age, insane persons, and convicts are said to be under disability. Sometimes the term is used in a more limited sense, as when it signifies an impediment to marriage, or the restraints placed upon clergymen by reason of their spiritual vocations, or lack of legal qualifications to hold office. As used in connection with Workers' Compensation Acts, disability is a composite of (1) actual incapacity to perform the tasks usually encountered in one's employment and the wage loss resulting therefrom, and (2) physical impairment of the body that may or may not be incapacitating. Russell v. Bankers Life Co., 46 Cal.App.3d 405, 120 Cal.Rptr. 627, 633.

Statutory definition of a "disability:" for social security benefits purposes, imposes three requirements: (1) that there be a medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or meets the duration aspect set forth; (2) that there be an inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity; and (3) that the inability be by reason of the impairment. Pierce v. Gardner, C.A.Ill., 386 F.2d 846, 847. Inability to work without some pain or discomfort does not necessarily satisfy test of disability. DeFontes v. Celebrezze, 226 F.Supp. 327, 330 (D.C.R.I.).

Absence of competent physical, intellectual, or moral powers; impairment of earning capacity; loss of physical function that reduces efficiency; inability to work. Rorabaugh v. Great Eastern Casualty Co., 117 Wash. 7, 200 P.2d 587, 590.

Under Uniform Probate Code, an incapacitated person is one who is impaired by reason of physical disability.

See also Capacity; Civil disabilities; Incapacity; Incompetency; Loss of earning capacity; Person under disability; Temporary disability.

General Classification

Disability may be either general or special; the former when it incapacitates the person for the performance of all legal acts of a general class, or giving to them their ordinary legal effect; the latter when it debars him from one specific act. Disability may also be either personal or absolute; the former where it attaches to the particular person, and arises out of his status, his previous act, or his natural or juridical incapacity; the latter where it originates with a particular person, but extends also to his descendants or successors. The term civil disability is used as equivalent to legal disability, both these expressions meaning disabilities or disqualifications created by positive law, as distinguished from physical disabilities. A physical disability is a disability or incapacity caused by physical defect or infirmity, or bodily imperfection, or mental weakness or alienation; as distinguished from civil disability, which relates to the civil status or condition of the person, and is imposed by the law.

Partial disability. Under workers' compensation law, incapacity in part from returning to work performed before accident.

Permanent disability. Incapacity forever from returning to work formerly performed before accident, though this incapacity may be either total or partial. See also Permanent disability.

Temporary disability. Temporary, as distinguished from permanent, disability is a condition that exists until the injured employee is as far restored as the permanent character of the injuries will permit.

Total disability. Total disability to follow insured's usual occupation arises where he is incapacitated from performing any substantial part of his ordinary duties, though still able to perform a few minor duties and be present at his place of business. "Total disability" within an accident policy does not mean absolute physical disability to transact any business pertaining to insured's occupation, but disability from performing substantial and material duties connected with it. The term may also apply to any impairment of mind or body rendering it impossible for insured to follow continuously a substantially gainful occupation without seriously impairing his health, the disability being permanent when of such nature as to render it reasonably certain to continue throughout the lifetime of insured. See also Permanent disability; Wholly disabled.

Disability clause. Provision in insurance policy calling for waiver of premiums during period of disability.

Disability compensation. Payments from public or private funds to one during period of disability and incapacity from work; e.g. social security or workers' compensation disability benefits.
Disability insurance. Insurance coverage purchased to protect insured during periods of incapacity from working. Often purchased by professionals.

Disability retirement. Plan of retirement which is invoked when person covered is disabled from working to normal retirement age or increased benefits when person retires because of disability.

Disable. Ordinarily, to take away the ability of, to render incapable of proper and effective action. Federal Union Life Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio v. Ritchey's Adm'tx, 256 Ky. 262, 75 S.W.2d 787, 788. See Civil death; Disability.

In the old language of pleading, to disable is to take advantage of one's own or another's disability. Thus, it was an express maxim of the common law that the party shall "not disable himself"; but "this disability to disable himself * * * is personal."

Disabled person. Person who lacks legal capacity to act sui juris or who is physically or mentally disabled from acting in his own behalf or from pursuing his normal occupation. See Civil death; Disability.

Disabling restraints. Restraints on alienation of property which are normally void as against public policy. Lohmann v. Adams, Okl., 540 P.2d 552, 556.

Disabling statutes. English acts of parliament, restraining and regulating the exercise of a right or the power of alienation; the term is specially applied to 1 Eliz., c. 19, and similar acts restraining the power of ecclesiastical corporations to make leases.

Disadvocate. To deny a thing.

Disaffirm. To repudiate; to revoke a consent once given; to recall an affirmation. To refuse one's subsequent sanction to a former act; to disclaim the intention of being bound by an antecedent transaction.

Disaffirmance. The repudiation of a former transaction. The refusal by one who has the legal power to refuse (as in the case of a voidable contract), to abide by his former acts, or accept the legal consequences of them. It may either be "express" (in words) or "implied" from acts inconsistent with a recognition of validity of former transaction.

Disafforest. To remove from the operation of the forest laws. 2 Bl.Comm. 416.

Disafforestation. To discontinue the practice of the forest laws. The term is also applied to the practice of the same laws in the domain of statal or private forests.
Bankruptcy. The release of a bankrupt from all of his debts which are provable in bankruptcy, except such as are excepted by the Bankruptcy Act. The discharge of the bankrupt is the step which regularly follows the adjudication of bankruptcy and the administration of his estate. By it the debtor is released from the obligation of all his debts which were or might be proved in the proceedings, so that they are no longer a charge upon him, and so that he may thereafter engage in business and acquire property without its being liable for the satisfaction of such former debts.

Contract. To cancel the obligation of a contract; to make an agreement or contract null and inoperative. As a noun, the word means the act or instrument by which the binding force of a contract is terminated, irrespective of whether the contract is carried out to the full extent contemplated (in which case the discharge is the result of performance) or is broken off before complete execution.

Criminal law. The act by which a person in confinement, held on an accusation of some crime or misdemeanor, is set at liberty.

Equity practice. In the process of accounting before a master in chancery, the discharge is a statement of expenses and counter-claims brought in and filed, by way of set-off, by the accounting defendant; which follows the charge in order.

Jury. To discharge a jury is to relieve them from any further consideration of a cause. This is done when the continuance of the trial is, by any cause, rendered impossible; also when the jury, after deliberation, has rendered a verdict or cannot agree on a verdict.

Military discharge. The release or dismissal of a soldier, sailor, or marine, from further military service, either at the expiration of his term of enlistment, or previous thereto on special application therefor, or as a punishment. An "honorable" discharge is one granted at the end of an enlistment and accompanied by an official certificate of good conduct during the service. A "dishonorable" discharge is a dismissal from the service for bad conduct or as a punishment imposed by sentence of a court-martial for offenses against the military law. There is also in occasional use a form of "discharge without honor," which implies censure, but is not in itself a punishment.

Mortgage. Formal document which recites that a mortgage debt has been satisfied and which is generally recorded in Registry of Deeds or in other appropriate place for recording deeds to real estate.

Dischargeable claim. In bankruptcy, a claim which is barred by bankrupt's discharge if properly scheduled.

Disciplinary proceedings. Proceedings which are brought against attorney to secure his censure, suspension or disbarment.

Discipline. Instruction, comprehending the communication of knowledge and training to observe and act in accordance with rules and orders.

Correction, chastisement, punishment, penalty. Rules and regulations.

Disclaimer. The repudiation or renunciation of a claim or power vested in a person or which he had formerly alleged to be his. The refusal, or rejection of an estate or right offered to a person. The disavowal, denial, or renunciation of an interest, right, or property imputed to a person or alleged to be his. Also the declaration, or the instrument, by which such disclaimer is published.

The rejection, refusal, or renunciation of a claim, power, or property. I.R.C. § 2518 sets forth the conditions required to avoid gift tax consequences as the result of a disclaimer.

See also Refusal; Renunciation; Repudiation.

Estates. The act by which a party refuses to accept an estate which has been conveyed to him.

Patents. When the title and specifications of a patent do not agree, or when part of that which it covers is not strictly patentable, because neither new nor useful, the patentee is empowered, with leave of the court, to enter a disclaimer of any part of either the title or the specification, and the disclaimer is then deemed to be part of the letters patent or specification, so as to render them valid for the future.

Pleading. In common law pleading, a renunciation by the defendant of all claim to the subject of the demand made by the plaintiff's bill.

Warranty. Words or conduct which tend to negate or limit warranty in sale of goods and which in certain instances must be conspicuous and refer to specific warranty to be excluded. U.C.C. § 2–316.

Disclose. To bring into view by uncovering; to expose; to make known; to lay bare; to reveal to knowledge; to free from secrecy or ignorance, or make known. See Discovery.

Disclosure. Act of disclosing. Revelation; the impartation of that which is secret or not fully understood. In patent law, the specification; the statement of the subject-matter of the invention, or the manner in which it operates.

Under Truth in Lending Act is a term of art which refers to the manner in which certain information (e.g. total cost of loan), deemed basic to an intelligent assessment of a credit transaction, shall be conveyed to the consumer. Doggett v. Ritter Finance Co. of Louisa, D.C.Va., 384 F.Supp. 150, 153.

See Compulsory disclosure; Discovery; Freedom of Information Act; Full disclosure; Subpoena.

Disclosure by parties. Term sometimes used in law of deceit or fraud as to the obligation of parties to reveal fact which is material if its revelation is necessary because of the position of the parties to each other. See also Material fact.

Discommon /diskôman/. To deprive commonable lands of their commonable quality, by inclosing and appropriating or improving them.

Discontinuance /diskantînyuwan(t)s/. Ending, causing to cease, ceasing to use, giving up, leaving off. Refers to the termination or abandonment of a project, structure, highway, or the like.

The cessation of the proceedings in an action where the plaintiff voluntarily puts an end to it, either by giving notice in writing to the defendant before any step has been taken in the action subsequent to the answer, or at any other time by order of the court of a judge. A non-suit; dismissal. Under Rules practice, "dismissal" is appropriate term for discontinuance; may be voluntary or involuntary and may effect counterclaim, cross claim or third party claim. Costs may be assessed. Fed.R. Civil P. 41.

In common law pleading, that technical interruption of the proceedings in an action which follows where a defendant does not answer the whole of the plaintiff's declaration, and the plaintiff omits to take judgment for the part unanswered.

Discontinuance of an estate. The termination or suspension of an estate-tail, in consequence of the act of the tenant in tail, in conveying a larger estate in the land than he was by law entitled to do. 2 BI.Comm. 275; 3 BI.Comm. 171. An alienation made or suffered by tenant in tail, or by any that, is seised in autre droit, whereby the issue in tail, or the heir or successor, or those in reversion or remainder, are driven to their action, and cannot enter. The cesser of a seisin under an estate, and the acquisition of a seisin under a new and necessarily a wrongful title.

Disconvenable /diskənviˈnəbəl/ L. Fr. Improper; unfit.

Discount. In a general sense, an allowance or deduction made from a gross sum on any account whatever. In a more limited and technical sense, the taking of interest in advance.

Discount means a deduction from an original price or debt, allowed for paying promptly or in cash. Benner Tea Co. v. Iowa State Tax Commission, 252 Iowa 843, 109 N.W.2d 39, 40.

A discount by a bank means a drawback or deduction made upon its advances or loans of money, upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt payable at a future day, which are transferred to the bank. Although the discounting of notes or bills, in its most comprehensive sense, may mean lending money and taking notes in payment, yet, in its more ordinary sense, the discounting of such means advancing a consideration for a bill or note, deducting or discounting the interest which will accrue for the time the note has to run. Discounting by a bank means lending money upon a note, and deducting the interest or premium in advance. That step in lending transaction where interest on loan is taken in advance by deducting amount therefor for term of loan, giving borrower face value of obligation less interest. Russell v. Lumbermen's Mortg. Co., Com.Pl., 27 Ohio Misc. 171, 273 N.E.2d 803, 804.

See also Rebate; Rediscount; Rediscount rate.

Quantity discount. Allowed manufacturers or wholesalers for purchases in large amounts. Robinson Patman Act requires that such be justified by savings of seller.

Trade discount. Price reduction to different classes of customers; e.g. discount given by lumber dealers to builders and contractors.

Discount bond. A bond sold for less than face or maturity value. No interest is paid annually, but all interest accrues to the maturity date when it is paid.

Discount broker. A bill broker; one who discounts bills of exchange and promissory notes, and advances money on securities.

Discount market. Segment of the money market in which banks and other financial institutions trade commercial paper.

Discount rate. Percentage of the face amount of commercial paper which a holder pays when he transfers such paper to a financial institution for cash or credit. Rate charged for discounting loan. See Discount; Rediscount rate.

The discount rate is the rate charged Federal Reserve System member banks for borrowing from the country's district Federal Reserve banks. The rate, which is set by the Federal Reserve Board, controls the supply of money available to banks for lending.

Discount shares. Shares of stock issued as fully paid and nonassessable for less than the full lawful consideration. Such shares might be treated as void, voidable, assessable or subject to creditor claims.

Discount stock. See Discount shares.

Discover. To uncover that which was hidden, concealed, or unknown from every one. To get first sight or knowledge of; to get knowledge of what has existed but has not theretofore been known to the discoverer.

Discoverer. Shellmar Products Co. v. Allen-Qualley Co., C.C.A. Ill., 87 F.2d 104, 108. Under U.C.C., refers to knowledge rather than reason to know. U.C.C. § 1–201(25). See also Discovery; Notice.

Discovered peril doctrine. The doctrine of discovered peril is regarded as a limitation of, or an exception to, the general rule of contributory negligence precluding a plaintiff's recovery. It is founded on considerations of public policy, deduced from humanitarian principles, which impose a moral duty upon everyone to avoid injuring another unnecessarily. The three essential elements which comprise the doctrine of discovered peril are: (1) the exposed condition brought about by the negligence of the plaintiff, (2) the actual discovery by defendant or his agents of plaintiff's perilous situation in time to have averted the injury by use of all means at their command commensurate with their own safety, and (3) failure thereafter to use such means. The party raising the issue of discovered peril must also prove that the opposing party's negligent conduct was a proximate cause of the injuries he sustained. Welch v. Ada Oil Co., Tex.Civ. App., 302 S.W.2d 175, 179.

Discover /diskəˈvər/. Not married; not subject to the disabilities of a coverture. It applies equally to a maid and a widow.

Discovery. In a general sense, the ascertainment of that which was previously unknown; the disclosure or coming to light of what was previously hidden; the acquisition of notice or knowledge of given acts or facts; as, in regard to the "discovery" of fraud affecting the running of the statute of limitations, or the granting of a new trial for newly "discovered" evidence.

International law. As the foundation for a claim of national ownership or sovereignty, discovery is the finding of a country, continent, or island previously unknown, or previously known only to its uncivilized inhabitants.

Mining claim. See Mining location.
Discovery rule. The pre-trial devices that can be used by one party to obtain facts and information about the case from the other party in order to assist the party's preparation for trial. Under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (and in states which have adopted rules patterned on such), tools of discovery include: depositions upon oral and written questions, written interrogatories, production of documents or things, permission to enter upon land or other property, physical and mental examinations and requests for admission. Rules 26–37. Term generally refers to disclosure by defendant of facts, deeds, documents or other things which are in his exclusive knowledge or possession and which are necessary to party seeking discovery as a part of a cause of action pending, or to be brought in another court, or as evidence of his rights or title in such proceeding. Hardenbergh v. Both, 247 Iowa 153, 73 N.W.2d 103, 106.

Discovery and inspection in federal criminal cases is governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

See also Deposition; Fishing trip or expedition; Good cause; Inspection; Interrogatories; Jencks Act or Rule; Perpetuating testimony; Work product rule.

Discovery, bill of. In equity pleading, a bill for the discovery of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds or writings, or other things in his custody or power; but seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery, though it may pray for a stay of proceedings at law until the discovery is made.

Discovery rule. The "discovery rule" is, generally, that cause of action for medical malpractice will not be prescribed by law and is not to give effect to the will of the judge, but to that of the law. The exercise of discretion where there are two alternative provisions of law applicable, under either of which court could proceed. A liberty or privilege to decide and act in accordance with what is fair and equitable under the peculiar circumstances of the particular case, guided by the spirit and principles of the law. Manekas v. Allied Discount Co., 6 Misc.2d 1079, 166 N.Y.S.2d 366, 369.

Discovery vein. See Vein.

Discredit. To destroy or impair the credibility of a person; to impeach; to lessen the degree of credit to be accorded to a witness or document, as by impugning the veracity of the one or the genuineness of the other; to disparage or weaken the reliance upon the testimony of a witness, or upon documentary evidence, by any means whatever. See Impeachment.

Discreetly. Prudently; judiciously; with discernment.

Discrepancy. A difference between two things which ought to be identical, as between one writing and another; a variance (q.v.). Also discord, discordance, dissonance, dissonance, unconformity, disagreement, difference.

Discretely. Separately; disjunctively.

Discretion. When applied to public functionaries, discretion means a power or right conferred upon them by law of acting officially in certain circumstances, according to the dictates of their own judgment and conscience, uncontrolled by the judgment or conscience of others. As applied to public officers means power to act in an official capacity in a manner which appears to be just and proper under the circumstances. Application of Blackburn, 206 Misc. 393, 134 N.Y.S.2d 138, 142, 144.

In criminal law and the law of torts, it means the capacity to distinguish between what is right and wrong, lawful or unlawful, wise or foolish, sufficiently to render one amenable and responsible for his acts.

Wise conduct and management; cautious discernment, especially as to matters of propriety and self-control; prudence; circumspection; wariness.

See Discretionary acts.

Judicial and legal discretion. These terms are applied to the discretionary action of a judge or court, and mean discretion bounded by the rules and principles of law, and not arbitrary, capricious, or unrestrained. It is not the indulgence of a judicial whim, but the exercise of judicial judgment, based on facts and guided by law, or the equitable decision of what is just and proper under the circumstances. It is a legal discretion to be exercised in discerning the course prescribed by law and is not to give effect to the will of the judge, but to that of the law. The exercise of discretion where there are two alternative provisions of law applicable, under either of which court could proceed. A liberty or privilege to decide and act in accordance with what is fair and equitable under the peculiar circumstances of the particular case, guided by the spirit and principles of the law. Manekas v. Allied Discount Co., 6 Misc.2d 1079, 166 N.Y.S.2d 366, 369.

Discretionary account. An account in which customer gives broker discretion, as to purchase and sales of securities or commodities, including selection, timing, and price to be paid or received. Stevens v. Abbott, Proctor and Paine, D.C.Va., 288 F.Supp. 836, 839.

Discretionary acts. Those acts wherein there is no hard and fast rule as to course of conduct that one must or must not take and, if there is clearly defined rule, such would eliminate discretion. Elder v. Anderson, 205 Cal.App.2d 326, 23 Cal.Rptr. 48, 51. Option open to judges and administrators to act or not as they deem proper or necessary and such acts or refusal to act may not be overturned without a showing of abuse of discretion, which means an act or failure to act that no conscientious person acting reasonably could perform or refuse to perform. One which requires exercise in judgment and choice and involves what is just and proper under the circumstances. Burgdorf v. Funder, 246 Cal.App.2d 443, 54 Cal.Rptr. 805.

Discretionary damages. Those which are measureable by enlightened conscience of impartial jurors.
DISCRETIONARY POWER

Discretionary power. One which is not imperative or, if imperative, the time, manner, or extent of execution of which is left to donee's discretion. The power to do or to refrain from doing a certain thing. City of San Antonio v. Zogheib, Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 333, 334.

Discretionary review. Form of appellate review which is not a matter of right but rather of discretion; e.g. appeal to U.S. Supreme Court. See Certiorari.

Discretionary trusts. Such as are not marked out on fixed lines, but allow a certain amount of discretion in their exercise. Those which cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment. Trusts where the trustee or another party has the right to accumulate (rather than pay out) the income for each year. Depending on the terms of the trust instrument, such income may be accumulated for future distributions to the income beneficiaries or added to corpus for the benefit of the remainderman.

Discrimination. In constitutional law, the effect of a statute or established practice which confers particular privileges on a class arbitrarily selected from a large number of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to the privileges granted and between whom and those not favored no reasonable distinction can be found. Unfair treatment or denial of normal privileges to persons because of their race, age, nationality or religion. A failure to treat all persons equally where no reasonable distinction can be found between those favored and those not favored. Baker v. California Land Title Co., D.C.Cal., 349 F.Supp. 235, 236, 239.

Federal statutes prohibit discrimination in employment on basis of sex, age, race, nationality or religion; e.g. Title VII of 1964 Civil Rights Act, Age Discrimination in Employment Act, Equal Pay Act, Sex Discrimination in Employment Based on Pregnancy Act. Other federal acts, as supplemented by court decisions, prohibit discrimination in voting rights, housing, extension of credit, public education, and access to public facilities.

With reference to common carriers, a breach of the carrier's duty to treat all shippers alike, and afford them equal opportunities to market their product. A carrier's failure to treat all alike under substantively similar conditions. See also Bias; Equal protection clause; Equal protection of the law; Price discrimination; Redlining; Reverse discrimination.

Discussion. In the civil law, a proceeding, at the instance of a surety, by which the creditor is obliged to exhaust the property of the principal debtor, towards the satisfaction of the debt, before having recourse to the surety; and this right of the surety is termed the "benefit of discussion."

Disease. Deviation from the healthy or normal condition of any of the functions or tissues of the body. An alteration in the state of the body or of some of its organs, interrupting or disturbing the performance of the vital functions, and causing or threatening pain and weakness. Illness; sickness; disorder; malady; bodily infirmity. An illness or an abnormal state having a definite pattern of symptoms. See also Industrial disease; Occupational disease.

Disentailing deed /disantéyliŋ diyd/. In English law, an enrolled assurance barring an entail, pursuant to 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74.

Disentailing statutes. Statutes dealing with or prohibiting the barring of the entail in a fee tail conveyance.

Disentailment. Act of barring the entail created by fee tail conveyance and consisting of a deed absolute in fee simple by the tenant in tail. In this case the grantee took the fee simple and the entail or right of the first born of the tenant in tail took nothing on the death of the tenant in tail.

Disfigurement. That which impairs or injures the beauty, symmetry, or appearance of a person or thing; that which renders unsightly, misshapen, or imperfect, or deforms in some manner. See Maim.

Disfranchise. To deprive of the rights and privileges of a free citizen; to deprive of chartered rights and immunities; to deprive of any franchise, as of the right of voting in elections, etc. In any election where the party system furnishes the means by which the citizen's right of suffrage is made effective, denial of his party's right to participate in the election accomplishes the "disfranchisement of voters" or compels them, if they vote, to vote for representatives of political parties other than that to which they belong, and the deprivation of the right of selection is a deprivation of the right of franchise. Communist Party of United States of America v. Peek, 20 Cal.2d 536, 127 P.2d 889, 894.

Disfranchisement. The act of disfranchising. The act of depriving a member of a corporation of his right as such, by expulsion. It differs from amotion (q.v.) which is applicable to the removal of an officer from office, leaving him his rights as a member.

In a more popular sense, the taking away of the elective franchise (that is, the right of voting in public elections) from any citizen or class of citizens.

Disgavel /dɪsˈgævl/. In English law, to deprive lands of that principal quality of gavelkind tenure by which they descend equally among all the sons of the tenant.

Disgrace. Ignominy; shame; dishonor.

Disgrading. In old English law, the depriving of an order or dignity.

Disguise, v. /dɪskɛɪz/. To change the guise or appearance of, especially to conceal by unusual dress; to hide by a counterfeit appearance. To obscure the existence or true state or character of a person or thing.

Disguise, n. A counterfeit habit; a dress intended to conceal the person who wears it. Anything worn upon the person with the intention of so altering the wearer's appearance that he shall not be recognized by those familiar with him, or that he shall be taken for another person.

Disherson /dɪʃəˈhɜːrən/. Disinheritance; depriving one of an inheritance. Obsolete term.

Dishertor /dɪʃəˈhɑːrtər/. One who disinherits, or puts another out of his freehold. Obsolete term.
Dishonesty. Disposition to lie, cheat or defraud; untrustworthiness; lack of integrity.

Dishonor. To refuse to accept or pay a draft or to pay a promissory note when duly presented. An instrument is dishonored when a necessary or optional presentment is duly made and due acceptance or payment is refused, or cannot be obtained within the prescribed time, or in case of bank collections, the instrument is seasonably returned by the midnight deadline; or presentment is excused and the instrument is not duly accepted or paid. U.C.C. § 3-507(1); § 4–210. See also Notice of dishonor; Protest.

As respects the flag, to deface or defile, imputing a lively sense of shaming or an equivalent acquiescent callousness. State v. Schlueter, 127 N.J.L. 496, 23 A.2d 249, 251. See Deface; Defile.

Disincarcerate /disinkárseréyt/. To set at liberty, to free from prison.

Disinfected. Made free from injurious or contagious diseases. Immunization.

Disinherit /disinhér/. In the civil law, the act of depriving a forced heir of the inheritance which the law gives him. Disinheritance is a testamentary disposition and not a mere penalty for lack of filial respect, but such a testamentary disposition is not self-operative and something more than its mere appearance in a will is required to give it effect.

Disinheritance /disinhéhrénd(a)ts/. The act by which the owner of an estate deprives a person, who would otherwise be his heir, of the right to inherit it.

Disinter /disintár/. To exhume, unbury, take out of the grave.

Disinterested. Not concerned, in respect to possible gain or loss, in the result of the pending proceedings or transactions; impartial, not biased or prejudiced.

Disinterested witness. One who has no interest in the cause or matter in issue, and who is lawfully competent to testify.

Disintermediation. When free market interest rates exceed the regulated interest ceiling for time deposits, some depositors withdraw their funds and invest them elsewhere at a higher interest rate. This process is known as "disintermediation."

Disjunct /disjukt/. Lat. In the civil law, separately; severally. The opposite of conjunctum (q.v.).

Disjunctive allegation. A statement in a pleading or indictment which expresses or charges a thing alternatively, with the conjunction "or"; for instance, an averment that defendant "murdered or caused to be murdered", etc., would be of this character.

Disjunctive term. One which is placed between two contraries, by the affirming of one of which the other is taken away; it is usually expressed by the word "or".

Dislocation. To put out of proper place.

Disloyal. Not true to; unfaithful.

Dismes /dáymz/. Tents; tithes (q.v.). The original form of "dime," the name of the American coin.

Dismiss. To send away; to discharge; to discontinue; to dispose of; to cause to be removed temporarily or permanently; to relieve from duty. To dismiss an action or suit without any further consideration or hearing.

Dismissal. An order or judgment finally disposing of an action, suit, motion, etc., without trial of the issues involved. Such may be either voluntary or involuntary. Fed.R. Civil P. 41.

A release or discharge from employment.

Involuntary dismissal. Under rules practice, may be accomplished on court's own motion for lack of prosecution or on motion of defendant for lack of prosecution or failure to introduce evidence of facts on which relief may be granted. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(b).

Voluntary dismissal. Under rules practice, may be accomplished by plaintiff without leave of court if filed before answer or by stipulation signed by all parties after answer is filed. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(a).

Dismissal and nonsuit. Termination of case because of plaintiff's failure to prosecute or plaintiff's desire to discontinue.

Dismissal compensation. The payment of a specific sum, made by employer to employee for permanently terminating employment. Also called severance or separation pay.

Dismissal for cause. See For cause.

Dismissal without prejudice. Dismissal without prejudice to the right of the complainant to sue again on the same cause of action. The effect of the words "without prejudice" is to prevent the decree of dismissal from operating as a bar to a subsequent suit.

Dismissal with prejudice. An adjudication on the merits, and final disposition, barring the right to bring or maintain an action on the same claim or cause. It is res judicata as to every matter litigated.

Dismissed for want of equity. A phrase used to indicate a decision on the merits, as distinguished from one based upon some formal defect. The dismissal may be because the averments of complainant's bill have been found untrue in fact, or because they are insufficient to entitle complainant to the relief sought. Reinman v. Little Rock, 237 U.S. 171, 35 S.Ct. 511, 513, 59 L.Ed. 900.

Dismortgage /dismórgaj/. To redeem from mortgage. See Redemption.

Disobedience. See Civil disobedience; Civil disorder.

Disobedient child. Child who may be adjudicated delinquent in some jurisdictions under law governing stubborn children. May be subject of petition as child in need of social services. Child who wilfully refuses to honor requests of parents or legal guardian or other person in whose custody he is. See also Delinquent child.

Disorder. Turbulent or riotous behavior; immoral or indecent conduct. The breach of the public decorum and morality. See also Breach of the peace; Civil disobedience; Civil disorder; Riot; Unlawful assembly.
A slight, partial, and temporary physical ailment.
Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. McCombs, 188 Ark. 52, 64 S.W.2d 333.

Disorderly. Contrary to the rules of good order and behavior; violative of the public peace or good order; turbulent, riotous, or indecent.

Disorderly conduct. A term of loose and indefinite meaning (except when defined by statutes), but signifying generally any behavior that is contrary to law, and more particularly such as tends to disturb the public peace or decorum, scandalize the community, or shock the public sense of morality. An offense against public morals, peace or safety. State v. Cherry, 185 Neb. 103, 173 N.W.2d 887, 888.

A person is guilty of disorderly conduct if, with purpose to cause public inconvenience, annoyance or alarm, or recklessly creating a risk thereof, he: (a) engages in fighting or threatening, or in violent or tumultuous behavior; or (b) makes unreasonable noise or offensively coarse utterance, gesture or display, or addresses abusive language to any person present; or (c) creates a hazardous or physically offensive condition by any act which serves no legitimate purpose of the actor. Model Penal Code, § 250.2.

See also Breach of the peace.

Disorderly house. House or place where residents or inhabitants behave in such a manner as to become a nuisance to the neighborhood. One where acts are performed which tend to corrupt morals of community or promote breaches of peace. Payne v. U. S., D.C.Mun.App., 171 A.2d 509, 511. It has a wide meaning, and includes bawdy houses, gambling houses, houses of prostitution and places of a like character. At common law, it was misdemeanor to keep such house. Burgess v. Johnson, 223 Ga. 427, 156 S.E.2d 78. Under current laws, such activity, generally, would constitute a breach of the peace or disorderly conduct. The specific acts (e.g. prostitution) might also be crimes.

Disorderly persons. Such as are dangerous or hurtful to the public peace and welfare by reason of their misconduct or vicious habits, and are therefore amenable to police regulation. The phrase is chiefly used in statutes, and the scope of the term depends on local regulations. One who violates peace and good order of society.

Disorderly picketing. See Unlawful picketing.

Disorientation. Inability to identify time, place or surroundings.

Disparage /dispäræj/. In old English law, to bring together those that are unequal (dispares conferre); to connect in an indecorous and unworthy manner; to connect in marriage those that are unequal in blood and parentage.

Disparagio /dispæragiʌηeiʌ/. In old English law, disparagement. Hereditas maritentur absque disparagemente, heirs shall be married without disparagement.

Disparagmen /dispæragmen/. L. Fr. Disparagement; the matching an heir, etc., in marriage, under his or her degree or condition, or against the rules of decency.

Disparage /dispæræj/. To connect unequally; to match unsuitably. To discredit one's person or property.

Disparagement /dispærægmen/. In old English law, an injury by union or comparison with some person or thing of inferior rank or excellence. To discredit by marriage below one's class. Marriage without disparagement was marriage to one of suitable rank and character.

Matter which is intended by its publisher to be understood or which is reasonably understood to cast doubt upon the existence or extent of another's property in land, chattels or intangible things, or upon their quality.

Disparagement of goods. A statement about a competitor's goods which is untrue or misleading and is made to influence or tends to influence the public not to buy. Aerosonic Corp. v. Tordyne Corp., 402 F.2d 223, 231.

Disparagement of title. Actionably tortious detraction from title for which person may be required to respond in damages. Injurious falsehood in which aspersions are cast on person's title to property. Publication made without privilege or justification of matter that is untrue and disparaging to another's property in land, chattels or intangible things under such circumstances as would lead reasonable man to foresee that conduct of third person as purchaser or lessee thereof might be determined thereby and results in pecuniary loss from impairment of vendability thus caused. Hill v. Allan, 259 Cal.App.2d 470, 66 Cal. Rptr. 876, 689.

Disparaging instructions. Jury charge which tends to detract or defame person or party to litigation.

Disparity. Marked difference in quantity or quality between two things or among many things.

Dispatch. A sending off, completion or settlement with speed.

In maritime law, diligence, due activity, or proper speed in the discharge of a cargo; the opposite of delay. Customary dispatch is such as accords with the rules, customs, and usages of the port where the discharge is made. Dispatch money is in the nature of a reward to charterer of ship for loading or unloading in shorter time than provided for or than stipulated as "lay days", The West Nosska, D.C.N.Y., 2 F.Supp. 547. Quick dispatch is speedy discharge of cargo without allowance for the customs or rules of the port or for delay from the crowded state of the harbor or wharf.

Dispauper /dispæpər/. When a person, by reason of his poverty, is admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, and afterwards, before the suit be ended, acquires any lands, or personal estate, or is guilty of anything whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he loses the right to sue in formâ pauperis, and is said to be dispaupered.

Dispel. To drive away by scattering, to clear away, to banish, to dissipate.

Dispensary. Place where a drug is prepared or distributed.
Dispensatio est mali prohibitii provida relaxatio, uti.

Displace.

Dispersonare

Dispense.

Dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune

Displaced person.

Disposable earnings.

Disposo /dispónw%/ Lat. To dispose of, grant, or convey. Disponent, he grants or alienates. Jus disponendi, the right of disposition, i.e., of transferring the title to property.

Disposable earnings. That portion of person's income which he is free to spend or invest as he sees fit after payment of taxes and other obligations.

Disposable portion. That portion of a man's property which he is free to dispose of by will to beneficiaries other than his wife and children. By the ancient common law, this amounted to one-third of his estate if he was survived by both wife and children. 2 Bl.Comm. 492. In the civil law (by the Lex Falcidia) it amounted to three-fourths.

Disposal. Sale, pledge, giving away, use, consumption or any other disposition of a thing. To exercise control over; to direct or assign for a use; to pass over into the control of someone else; to alienate, bestow, or part with.

Dispose of. To alienate or direct the ownership of property, as disposition by will. Used also of the determination of suits. To exercise finally, in any manner, one's power of control over; to pass into the control of someone else; to alienate, relinquish, part with, or get rid of; to put out of the way; to finish with; to bargain away. Often used in restricted sense of "sale" only, or so restricted by context.

Disposing capacity or mind. These are alternative or synonymous phrases in the law of wills for "sound mind," and "testamentary capacity" (q.v.).

Disposition. Act of disposing; transferring to the care or possession of another. The parting with, alienation of, or giving up property.

In criminal procedure, the sentencing or other final settlement of a criminal case.

With respect to a mental state, means an attitude, prevailing tendency, or inclination.

Disposition hearing. Judicial proceeding in which a criminal defendant is sentenced or otherwise disposed of.

Disposition without trial. The sentencing or other treatment of a criminal defendant who has pleaded guilty or admitted to sufficient facts for finding of guilty without a trial on the merits.

Dispositive facts. Jural facts, or those acts or events that create, modify or extinguish jural relations.

Dispossess. To oust from land by legal process; to eject, to exclude from realty.

Dispossession. Ouster; a wrong that carries with it the amotion of possession. An act whereby the wrong-doer gets the actual occupation of the land or hereditament. It includes abatement, intrusion, disseisin, discontinuance, deforcement.

Dispossess proceedings. Summary process by a landlord to oust the tenant and regain possession of the premises for nonpayment of rent or other breach of the conditions of the lease. See also Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Disprove. To refute; to prove to be false or erroneous; not necessarily by mere denial, but by affirmative evidence to the contrary.

Dispensable. In old English law, not answerable. Not punishable; e.g. "This murder is dispensable."

Disputable presumption. A species of evidence that may be accepted and acted upon when there is no other evidence to uphold contention for which it stands; and when evidence is introduced supporting such contention, evidence takes place of presumption, and there is no necessity for indulging in any presumption. A rule of law to be laid down by the court, which shifts to the party against whom it operates the burden of evidence merely. City of Montpelier v. Town of Calais, 114 Vt. 5, 39 A.2d 350, 356. See Presumption.

Disputatio fori /dispjuytewxhyow fowray/. In the civil law, discussion or argument before a court.

Dispute. A conflict or controversy; a conflict of claims or rights; an assertion of a right, claim, or demand on one side, met by contrary claims or allegations on the other. The subject of litigation; the matter for which a suit is brought and upon which issue is joined, and in relation to which jurors are called and witnesses examined. See Cause of action; Claim; Controversy; Justiciable controversy; Labor dispute.

Disqualify. To divest or deprive of qualifications; to incapacitate; to render ineligible or unfit, as, in speaking of the "disqualification" of a judge by reason of his interest in the case, of a juror by reason of his holding a fixed preconceived opinion, or of a candidate for public office by reason of non-residence, lack of statutory age, previous commission of crime, etc.

Disrate /dijreyt/. In maritime law, to deprive a seaman or petty officer of his "rating" or rank; to reduce to a lower rate or rank.

Disrationare, or dirationare /di рейшeнeри/. To justify; to clear one's self of a fault; to traverse an indictment; to disprove.

Disregard. To treat as unworthy of regard or notice; to take no notice of; to leave out of consideration; to ignore; to overlook; to fail to observe.

Disrepair. The state of being in need of repair or restoration after decay or injury.

Disrepute. Loss or want of reputation; ill character; disesteem; discredit.

Disruptive conduct. Disorderly or contemptuous conduct generally within the framework of a judicial or quasi judicial proceeding. See Contempt.

Dissection /disekshan/. The act of cutting into pieces an animal or vegetable for the purpose of ascertaining the structure and use of its parts. The anatomical examination of a dead body by cutting into pieces or excising one or more parts or organs. The process of separating tissues along their natural lines of separation from each other; the act of separating into constituent parts for the purpose of critical examination.

Disseise /daisy/. To dispossess; to deprive.

Disseisee /daisyzy/. One who is wrongfully put out of possession of his lands; one who is disseised.

Disseisin /daisyzan/. Dispossession; a deprivation of possession; a privation of seisin; a usurpation of the right of seisin and possession, and an exercise of such powers and privileges of ownership as to keep out or displace him to whom these rightfully belong. It is a wrongful putting out of him that is seised of the freehold, not, as in abatement or intrusion, a wrongful entry, where the possession was vacant, but an attack upon him who is in actual possession, and turning him out. It is an ouster from a freehold in deed, as abatement and intrusion are ousters in law.

When one man invades the possession of another, and by force or surprise turns him out of the occupation of his lands, this is termed a "disseisin," being a deprivation of that actual seisin or corporal possession of the freehold which the tenant before enjoyed. In other words, a disseisin is said to be when one enters intending to usurp the possession, and tooust another from the freehold. To constitute an entry a disseisin, there must be an ouster of the freehold, either by taking the profits or by claiming the inheritance.

Equitable disseisin is where a person is wrongfully deprived of the equitable seisin of land, e.g., of the rents and profits. Disseisin by election is where a person alleges or admits himself to be disseised when he has not really been so.

Disseisinam satiss facit, qui uti non permittit possessorem, vel minus commode, licet omnino non expellat. He makes disseisin enough who does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes his enjoyment less beneficial, although he does not expel him altogether.

Disseisitrix /daisyzytrak/. A female disseisor; a disseisessress.

Disseisitus /daisyzydas/. One who has been disseised.

Disseisress /daisyzar/. A woman who unlawfully puts another out of his land.

Dissemble /dasyembal/. To conceal by assuming some false appearance.

Disensus /dasyent/. In the civil law, the mutual agreement of the parties to a simple contract obligation that it shall be dissolved or annulled; technically, an undoing of the consensus which created the obligation.

Dissent /dasent/. Contrariety of opinion; refusal to agree with something already stated or adjudged or to an act previously performed.

The term is most commonly used to denote the explicit disagreement of one or more judges of a court with the decision passed by the majority upon a case before them. In such event, the non-concurring judge is reported as "dissenting." A dissent may or may not be accompanied by an opinion.

Ecclesiastical law. A refusal to conform to the rites and ceremonies of the established church.

Dissenter. One who dissents.

Dissentiente /daseshiyentiy/dasentiyentiy/. (Lat. dissenting.) Used with the name or names of one or more judges, it indicates a dissenting opinion in a case.

Dissignare /di³aºınıri/. In old law, to break open a seal.

Dissimulatio tollitur injuria. /daºiºima³lyeºziºuini³ to³aºa iºnuºriu/. An injury is extinguished by the forgiveness or reconcilement of the party injured.

Dissipate. To destroy or waste, as to expend funds foolishly. Also, to break up a crowd. See also Drain.

Dissolute. Loosed from restraint, unashamed, lawless, loose in morals and conduct, recklessly abandoned to sensual pleasures, profligate, wanton, lewd, debauched.

Dissolution. Act or process of dissolving; termination; winding up.

Contrasts. The dissolution of a contract is the cancellation or abrogation of it by the parties themselves, with the effect of annulling the binding force of the agreement, and restoring each party to his original rights. In this sense it is frequently used in the phrase "dissolution of a partnership." See Partnership, infra, this topic.

Corporation. The dissolution of a corporation is the termination of its existence as a body politic. This may take place in several ways: as by act of the legislature, where that is constitutional; by surrender or forfeiture of its charter; by expiration of its charter by lapse of time; by proceedings for winding it up under the law; by loss of all its members or the reduction below the statutory limit; by bankruptcy. Bruun v. Katz Drug Co., 351 Mo. 731, 173 S.W.2d 906, 909. See also Articles of dissolution; Liquidation.

Marriage. The act of terminating a marriage; divorce; but the term does not include annulment. Deihl v. Jones, 170 Tenn. 217, 94 S.W.2d 47, 48. See Divorce.

Partnership. The dissolution of a partnership is the relation of the partners caused by any partner ceasing to be associated in the carrying on as distinguished from the winding up of the business. Uniform Partnership Act, § 29.

Dissolution of parliament. The crown may dissolve parliament either in person or by proclamation; the dissolution is usually by proclamation, after a prorogation.

Dissolve. To terminate; abrogate; cancel; annul; disintegrate. To release or unloose the binding force of anything. As to "dissolve a corporation," see Dissolution.

Dissolving bond. A bond given to obtain the dissolution of a legal writ or process, particularly an attachment or an injunction, and conditioned to indemnify the opposite party or to abide the judgment to be given.

Dissuade. In criminal law, to advise and procure a person not to do an act.

To dissuade a witness from giving evidence against a person indicted is an indictable offense at common law.

Distance. A straight line along a horizontal plane from point to point and is measured from the nearest point of one place to the nearest point of another.

Distill. To subject to a process of distillation, i.e., vaporizing the more volatile parts of a substance and then condensing the vapor so formed. In law, the term is chiefly used in connection with the manufacture of intoxicating liquors.

Distilled liquor or distilled spirits. A term which includes all potable alcoholic liquors obtained by the process of distillation (such as whisky, brandy, rum, and gin).

Distiller. One who produces distilled spirits (i.e. alcoholic liquors) or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, fit for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who, by any process of evaporation, separates alcoholic spirit from any fermented substance.

Distillery. A place or building where alcoholic liquors are distilled or manufactured.

Distinct. Clear to the senses or mind; easily perceived or understood; plain; unmistakable. Evidently not identical; observably or decidedly different. Distinguished by nature or station; not the same; different in the place or the like; separate; individuated; that which is capable of being distinguished; actually divided or apart from other things. Gavin v. Webb, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 372, 379.

Distincte et aperite /daºtiºkpi³ ed sp¹riº/. In old English practice, distinctly and openly. Formal words in writs of error, referring to the return required to be made to them.

Distinctively. Characteristically, or peculiarly, but not necessarily exclusively.

Distinguish. To point out an essential difference; to prove a case cited as applicable, inapplicable.

Distinguishing mark. A birth mark, scar, or other like feature which distinguishes a person. A mark on a ballot which takes away its secrecy. Any deliberate marking of ballot by voter that is not made in attempt to indicate his choice of candidates and which is also effective as mark by which his ballot may be distinguished.

Distort. To twist out of natural or regular shape; to twist aside physically; to force or put out of true posture; to wrest, or deform.

Distracted person. A term used in the statutes of certain states to express a state of insanity.

Distractio /daºtraksh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, a separation or division into parts; also an alienation or sale. Sometimes applied to the act of a guardian in appropriating the property of his ward.

Distractio bonorum /daºtraksh(i)yow baºnorº/. The sale at retail of the property of an insolvent estate, under the management of a curator appointed in the interest of the creditors, and for the purpose of realizing as much as possible for the satisfaction of their claim.
DISTRACTION RULE

Distraction rule. If plaintiff's attention is diverted from known danger by a sufficient cause, under this rule the question of contributory negligence is for jury.

Distraction /dastraeksh(i)yov pagnórás/. The sale of a thing pledged or hypothecated, by the creditor or pledgee, to obtain satisfaction of his claim on the debtor's failure to pay or redeem.

Distrahere /dastré(h)ary/. To sell; to draw apart; to dissolve a contract; to divorce.

Distraint. To take as a pledge property of another, and keep it until he performs his obligation or until the property is repleved by the sheriff. Remedy used to secure an appearance in court, payment of rent, performance of services, etc. Also, any detention of personal property, whether lawful or unlawful, for any purpose. See Distraint; Distress.

Distraintor or distraintor. He who seizes property under a distress.

Disstrain. Seizure; the act of disturbing or making a distress. The inchoate right and interest which a landlord has in the property of a tenant located on the demised premises. Upon a tenant's default, a landlord may in some jurisdictions distrain upon the tenant's property, generally by changing the locks and giving notice, and the landlord will then have a lien upon the goods. The priority of the lien will depend on local law. See Distraint; Distress.

The taking of goods and chattels out of the possession of a wrong-doer into the custody of the party injured to procure a satisfaction for a wrong committed; for non-payment of rent. The taking of personal property by way of pledge, to enforce the performance of something due from the party distrained upon. Hall v. Marshall, 145 Or. 221, 27 P.2d 193. The taking of a defendant's goods, in order to compel an appearance in court.

Certain state statutes, insofar as they authorize distress for rents by landlords, have been held to be unconstitutional. See e.g. Van Ness Industries v. Claremont Painting, 129 N.J.Super. 507, 324 A.2d 102.

The seizure of personal property to enforce payment of taxes, to be followed by its public sale if the taxes are not voluntarily paid; also the thing taken by distraint, i.e. that which is seized to procure satisfaction.

See Landlord's warrant.

Distress infinite. At common law, one that had no bounds with regard to its quantity, and could be repeated from time to time, until the stubbornness of the party was conquered. Such were distresses for realty or suit of court, and for compelling jurors to attend. 3 Bl.Com. 231.

Distress warrant. A writ authorizing an officer to make a distraint; particularly, a writ authorizing the levy of a distress on the chattels of a tenant for non-payment of rent.

A power of attorney by which landlord delegates exercise of his right to his duly authorized agent. In re Koizim, D.C.N.J., 52 F.Supp. 357, 358.

Grand distress, writ of. A writ formerly issued in England in the real action of quare impedit, when no appearance had been entered after the attachment; it commanded the sheriff to distrain the defendant's lands and chattels in order to compel appearance. It is no longer used, 23 & 24 Vict., c. 126, § 26, having abolished the action of quare impedit, and substituted for it the procedure in an ordinary action.

Second distress. A supplementary distress for rent in arrear, allowed by law in some cases, where the goods seized under the first distress are not of sufficient value to satisfy the claim.

Distress and danger. The "distress" and "danger" to which a ship needs to be exposed to entitle its rescuer to salvage need not be actual or immediate, or the danger imminent and absolute. It is sufficient if at the time the assistance is rendered, the ship has encountered any damage or misfortune which might possibly expose her to destruction if the services were not rendered, or if a vessel is in a situation of actual apprehension though not of actual danger.

Distressed goods. Goods sold at a distressed sale.

Distressed property. Property that must be sold because of mortgage foreclosure or on probate of insolvent estate.

Distressed sale. Form of liquidation sale (e.g. "going out of business" sale) in which the seller receives less for his goods than he would under normal selling conditions.

Distributable net income (DNI). The measure that limits the amount of the distributions from estates and trusts that the beneficiaries thereof will have to include in income. Also, DNI limits the amount that estates and trusts can claim as a deduction for such distributions. I.R.C. § 643(a).

Distribute. To deal or divide out in proportion or in shares. See Distribution.

Distributee /distrēbyuwtiy/. An heir; a person entitled to share in the distribution of an estate. This term is used to denote one of the persons who is entitled, under the statute of distributions, to the personal estate of one who is dead intestate. See also Beneficiary.

Distribution. The giving out or division among a number, sharing or parceling out, allotting, dispensing, apportioning.

Probate. The apportionment and division, under authority of a court, of the remainder of the estate of an intestate, after payment of the debts and charges, among those who are legally entitled to share in the same. See Distributive share.

Securities offering. A public offering of securities of an issuer, whether by an underwriter, statutory underwriter or by the issuer itself. Such offering may be controlled, i.e. an offering to the public of securities by selling stockholders or an issuer through a broker-dealer acting as an underwriter for such persons pursuant to a formal underwriting arrangement; or uncontrolled, i.e. an offering to the public of securities by selling stockholders on a random basis through any number of brokers who are willing to assist such persons; or an offering to the public by such persons without the use of a broker.

Statutes of distribution. State laws prescribing the manner of the distribution of the estate of an intestate among his heirs or relatives.

Distribution in kind. A transfer of property "as is." If, for example, a corporation distributes land to its shareholders, a distribution in kind has taken place. A sale of land followed by a distribution of the cash proceeds would not be a distribution in kind of the land. See also Like-kind exchange.

Distribution in liquidation. Distribution of assets upon dissolution of corporation. Liquidating dividend is amount distributed in complete or partial liquidation of corporation and such amount is treated as in full payment for the stock of the corporation. I.R.C. § 331(a).

Distributive. That which exercises or accomplishes distribution; that which apportions, divides, and assigns in separate items or shares.

Distributive clause. That provision in trust which governs distribution of income and ultimate distributions or gifts over.

Distributive deviation. Distribution of principal to income beneficiaries for whom income is inadequate, without the consent of the remaindermen who are entitled to receive the entire principal at a later time under the terms of the trust.

Distributive finding of the issue. The jury are bound to give their verdict for that party who, upon the evidence, appears to them to have succeeded in establishing his side of the issue. But there are cases in which, an issue may be found distributively, i.e., in part for plaintiff, and in part for defendant. Thus, in an action for goods sold and work done, if the defendant pleaded that he never was indebted, on which issue was joined, a verdict might be found for the plaintiff as to the goods, and for the defendant as to the work. See also Comparative negligence.

Distributive justice. See Justice.

Distributive share. The share or portion which a given heir receives on the legal distribution of an estate; or from a dissolved partnership. Helvering v. Enright's Estate, 312 U.S. 636, 61 S.Ct. 777, 781, 85 L.Ed. 1093. Sometimes, by an extension of meaning, the share or portion assigned to a given person on the distribution of any estate or fund, as, under an assignment for creditors or under insolvency proceedings.

Distributor. Any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal relationship which stands between the manufacturer and the retail seller in purchases, consignments, or contracts for sale of consumer goods. A wholesaler.

District. One of the territorial areas into which an entire state or country, county, municipality or other political subdivision is divided for judicial, political, electoral, or administrative purposes. State ex rel. Schur v. Payne, 57 Nev. 286, 63 P.2d 921, 925.

The circuit or territory within which a person may be compelled to appear. Circuit of authority; province.

As to Fire; Judicial; Land; Levee; Metropolitan; Mineral; Mining; Road; School; and Tax (T axing district), see those titles.

Congressional district. Geographical district of state which may send (vote) a representative to U.S. Congress.

District attorney. Under the state governments, the prosecuting officer who represents the state in each of its judicial districts. Also, the prosecuting officer of the United States government in each of the federal judicial districts. In some states, where the territory is divided, for judicial purposes, into sections called by some other name than "districts," the same officer is denominated "prosecuting attorney"; "county attorney" or "state's attorney." See also United States Attorney.

District clerk. The clerk of a district court of either a state or the United States.

District courts. Each state is comprised of one or more federal judicial districts, and in each district there is a district court. 28 U.S.C.A. § 81 et seq. The United States district courts are the trial courts with general Federal jurisdiction. Each State has at least one district court, though many have several judicial districts (e.g., northern, southern, middle districts) or divisions. There is also a United States district court in the District of Columbia. In addition, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico has a United States district court with jurisdiction corresponding to that of district courts in the various States. Only one judge is usually required to hear and decide a case in a district court, but in some kinds of cases it is required that three judges be called together to comprise the court (28 U.S.C.A. §§ 2281, 2284). In districts with more than one judge, the judge senior in commission who has not reached his seventieth birthday acts as the chief judge.

Also, name for inferior state courts of record having general jurisdiction.

District judge. The judge of a United States district court; also, in some states, the judge of a district court of the state.

District parishes. Ecclesiastical divisions of parishes in England, for all purposes of worship, and for the celebration of marriages, christenings, churchings, and burials, formed at the instance of the queen's commissioners for building new churches.

Legislative district. Geographical district which may send (vote) a representative to the state legislature.

Districtio /distriksheu/. Lat. A distress; a distraint.

District of Columbia. A territory situated on the Potomac river, and being the seat of government of the United States. It was originally ten miles square, and was composed of portions of Maryland and Virginia ceded by those states to the United States; but in
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

1846 the tract coming from Virginia was retroceded. Legally it is neither a state nor a territory, but is made subject, by the Constitution, to the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress.

Distringas /dəstrɪŋəs/ In English practice, a writ formerly directed to the sheriff of the county in which a defendant resided or had any goods or chattels, commanding him to distrain upon the goods and chattels of the defendant for forty shillings, in order to compel his appearance. This writ issued in cases where it was found impracticable to get at the defendant personally, so as to serve a summons upon him.

A distringas was also used in equity, as the first process to compel the appearance of a corporation aggregate.

A form of execution in the actions of detinue and assise of nuisance.

Distringas juratores /dəstrɪŋəs ʒʊrətɔˈriːz/ In old English law, a writ commanding the sheriff to have the bodies of the jurors, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. It issued at the same time with the venire, though in theory afterwards, founded on the supposed neglect of the juror to attend.

Distringas nuper vice comitem /dəstrɪŋəs nəˈpɜr vɪsᵻ kəˈmɪtəm/ In old English law, a writ to distrain the goods of one who lately filled the office of sheriff, to compel him to do some act which he ought to have done before leaving the office; as to bring in the body of a defendant, or to sell goods attached under a fi. fa.

Distringas vice comitem /dəstrɪŋəs vɪsᵻ kəˈmɪtəm/ In old English law, a writ of distringas, directed to the coroner, issued against a sheriff if he neglected to execute a writ of venditioni exponas.

Distringere /dɪstrɪŋˈdʒɪriː/ In feudal and old English law, to distrain; to coerce or compel.

Disturb. To throw into disorder; to move from a state of rest or regular order; to interrupt a settled state of; to throw out of course or order.

Disturbance. Any act causing annoyance, disquiet, agitation, or derangement to another, or interrupting his peace, or interfering with him in the pursuit of a lawful and appropriate occupation or contrary to the usages of a sort of meeting and class of persons assembled that interferes with its due progress or irritates the assembly in whole or in part. See Disturbance of peace; Riot.

At common law, a wrong done to an incorporeal hereditament by hindering or disquieting the owner in the enjoyment of it. Blackstone enumerated five types of such disturbances: Disturbances of franchises, common, tenure, ways, and patronage. 3 Bl. Comm. 235.

Disturbance of common. At common law, the doing any act by which the right of another to his common is incommode or diminished; as where one who has no right of common puts his cattle into the land, or where one who has a right of common puts in cattle which are not comminable, or surcharges the common; or where the owner of the land, or other person, incloses or otherwise obstructs it.

Disturbance of franchise. The disturbing or incommodeing a man in the lawful exercise of his franchise, whereby the profits arising from it are diminished. 3 Bl.Comm. 236.

Disturbance of patronage. The hindrance or obstruction of a patron from presenting his clerk to a benefice. 3 Bl.Comm. 242.

Disturbance of peace. Interruption of the peace, quiet, and good order of a neighborhood or community, particularly by unnecessary and distracting noises. Conduct which tends to annoy all good citizens and which does in fact annoy anyone present not favoring it. Com. v. Orlando, Mass., 359 N.E.2d 810. In some jurisdictions (e.g. Calif.) term includes an affray. See also Breach of the peace; Disorderly conduct; Riot.

Disturbance of public meetings. It was a misdemeanor at common law to be guilty of conduct which tended to disturb a public assembly, though the prosecution, in most instances, was required to prove that the disturbance was caused wantonly or wilfully. In most jurisdictions there is statutory crime for such conduct and the disturbance need not be so turbulent as to constitute a riot.

Disturbance of public or religious worship. Any acts or conduct which interfere with the peace and good order of an assembly of persons lawfully met together for religious exercises.

Disturbance of tenure. In the law of tenure, disturbance was where a stranger, by menaces, force, persuasion, or otherwise, caused a tenant to leave his tenancy; this disturbance of tenure was an injury to the lord for which an action could lie.

Disturbance of ways. This happened where a person who had a right of way over another's ground by grant or prescription was obstructed by inclosures or other obstacles, or by plowing across it by which means he could not enjoy his right of way, or at least in so commodious a manner as he might have done. 3 Bl.Comm. 241.

Ditching, diging, or tilling. Every kind of work necessary to convert parts of arid lands, particularly sagebrush lands, into farms and orchards,—the word “diking” as applied to arid regions implying a leveling of the land, and the term “clearing land” as applied to arid regions covered with sagebrush meaning not only the removal or the destruction of the brush but the plowing or breaking up of the roots as well.

Divers /dəˈvɜərzs/ Various, several, sundry; a collective term grouping a number of unspecified persons, objects, or acts.

Division. A turning aside or altering the natural course or route of a thing. The term is chiefly applied to the unauthorized change or alteration of a water course to the prejudice of a lower riparian, or to the unauthorized use of funds.

Division program. A disposition of a criminal defendant either before or after adjudication of guilt in which the court directs the defendant to participate in a work or educational program as part of a probation.
Diversité des courts /divérstäté dēy kūr(t)s/. A treatise on courts and their jurisdiction, written in French in the reign of Edward III as is supposed, and by some attributed to Fitzherbert. It was first printed in 1525, and again in 1534.

Diversity /dəvərsədi/. In criminal pleading at common law, a plea by the prisoner in bar of execution, alleging that he was not the same who was attainted, upon which a jury was immediately impaneled to try the collateral issue thus raised, viz., the identity of the person, and not whether he was guilty or innocent, for that had been already decided. 4 Bl.Comm. 396.

Diversity jurisdiction. See Diversity of citizenship.

Diversity of citizenship. A phrase used with reference to the jurisdiction of the federal courts, which, under U.S.Const. Art. III, § 2, extends to cases between citizens of different states, designating the condition existing when the party on one side of a lawsuit is a citizen of one state, and the party on the other side is a citizen of another state, or between a citizen of a state and an alien. The requisite jurisdictional amount must, in addition, be met. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1332. See Outcome test.

Divert /dəvərt/. To turn aside; to turn out of the way; to alter the course of things. Usually applied to water-courses or to the unauthorized use of funds. See Diversion.

Dives /dəvəvi/. In the practice of the English chancery division, "dives costs" are costs on the ordinary scale, as opposed to the costs formerly allowed to a successful pauper suing or defending in forma pauperis, which consisted only of his costs out of pocket.

Divest /dəvəst/. Equivalent to devest (q.v.).

Divestitive fact /dəvəstədvət ˈfɛkt/. Any act or event that extinguishes or modifies a jural relation.

Divestiture /dəvəstəʃər/. In anti-trust law, the order of court to a defendant (e.g. corporation) to divest itself of property, securities or other assets. U. S. v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Co., 366 U.S. 316, 81 S.Ct. 1243, 6 L.Ed.2d 318.

Divestment. In property law, the cutting short of an interest prior to its normal termination. Restatement of Property, § 16(b).

Divide. To cut into parts, disunite, separate, keep apart. The term is synonymous with distribute.

Divide and pay over rule. Substance of such rule is that when the only words of gift are found in direction to divide or pay at a future time, use of such words imports a condition of survival, but if postponement of payment is for purpose of letting in an intermediate estate, then interest shall be deemed vested at death of testator and class of legatee is to be determined as of that date for futurity is not annexed to substance of the gift. In re Bogart's Will, 62 Misc.2d 114, 308 N.Y.S.2d 594, 602.

Divided court. Appellate court whose opinion or decision is not unanimous in a particular case. See also Division of opinion.

Dividend. The payment designated by the board of directors of a corporation to be distributed pro rata among the shares outstanding. On preferred shares, it is generally a fixed amount. On common shares, the dividend varies with the fortunes of the company and the amount of cash on hand, and may be omitted if business is poor or the directors determine to withhold earnings to invest in plant and equipment. Sometimes a company will pay a dividend out of past earnings even if it is not currently operating at a profit. See also Allocation of dividends.

Accumulated dividend. A cumulative dividend which has not been paid when due.

Asset dividend. Dividend paid in the form of an asset of the company; normally a product. See Property dividend, infra.

Bond dividend. Type of dividend distribution which is rare but one in which the shareholder receives bonds instead of scrip, property or money.

Cash dividend. See that title.

Consent dividend. For purposes of avoiding or reducing the penalty tax on the unreasonable accumulation of earnings or the personal holding company tax, a corporation may declare a consent dividend.

In a consent dividend no cash or property is distributable to the shareholders although the corporation obtains a dividends paid deduction. The consent dividend is taxed to the shareholders and increases the basis in their stock investment.

Constructive dividend. A taxable benefit derived by a shareholder from his or her corporation although such benefit was not designated as a dividend. Examples include unreasonable compensation, excessive rent payments, bargain purchases of corporate property, and shareholder use of corporate property. The pass-through of undistributed taxable income (i.e., UTI) to the shareholders of a Subchapter S corporation sometimes is referred to as a constructive dividend. Constructive dividends generally are a problem limited to closely-held corporations.

Cumulative dividend. A dividend that if not paid annually (or periodically as provided in the stock certificate) will ultimately have to be paid before any common stock dividend can be paid. The arrearage is said to accumulate.

Deferred dividend. One declared, but due to be paid at some future date.

Deficiency dividend. Once the IRS has established a corporation's liability for the personal holding company tax in a prior year, the tax may be reduced or avoided by the issuance of a deficiency dividend under I.R.C. § 547. The deficiency dividend procedure is not available in cases where the deficiency was due to fraud with intent to evade tax or to a willful failure to file the appropriate tax return (§ 547(g)). Nor does the deficiency dividend procedure avoid the usual penalties and interest applicable for failure to file a return or pay a tax.

Dividend addition. Something added to the policy in the form of paid-up insurance, and does not mean unapportioned assets or surplus. The term does not refer to dividends added directly to the loan value. Anderson v. Liberty Life Ins. Co. of Topeka, 149 Kan. 447, 87 P.2d 499, 502.
Dividend

Ex-dividend. Term used by stock brokers, meaning that a sale of corporate stock does not carry with it the seller's right to receive his proportionate share of a dividend already declared and shortly payable. See Ex-dividend.

Extra dividend. One paid in addition to regular dividends; normally because of exceptional profits of corporation during dividend period.

Extraordinary dividend. See that title.

Liquidation dividend. See that title.

Noncumulative dividends. See that title.

Passed dividend. Dividend not paid when due by company which has history of paying regular dividends.

Preferred dividend. One paid on the preferred stock of a corporation. A dividend paid to one class of shareholders in priority to that paid to another.

Property dividend. Consists of a portion of corporate property paid to shareholders instead of cash or corporate stock. See Asset dividend, supra.

Stock dividend. One paid in stock, that is, not in money, but in a proportional number of shares of the capital stock of the company, which is ordinarily increased for this purpose to a corresponding extent. A stock dividend is not in the ordinary sense a dividend, which is a cash distribution to stockholders of profits on their investments, but rather it is an increase in the number of shares declared out of profits, the increased number representing exactly the same property as was represented by the smaller number of shares.

Year-end dividend. Type of extra dividend paid at end of fiscal year with amount dependent on profits. See also Extra dividend, supra.

Dividenda /dividenda/. An indenter; one counterpart of an indenter.

Dividend income. Species of gross income derived from dividend distribution and subject to tax. I.R.C. §§ 61(a)(7), 301(c).

Dividends received deduction. A deduction allowed a corporate shareholder for dividends received from a domestic corporation. The deduction usually is 85 percent of the dividends received but could be 100 percent if an affiliated group is involved. I.R.C. §§ 243-246.

Dividend yield. The current annual dividend divided by the market price per share.

Divinare /divinare/. Lat. To divine; to conjecture or guess; to foretell. Divinatio, a conjecturing or guessing.

Divine laws. Those ascribed to God. See Natural law.

Divine right of kings. The right of a king to rule as postulated by the patriarchal theory of government, especially under the doctrine that no misconduct and no dispossession can forfeit the right of a monarch or his heirs to the throne, and to the obedience of the people. This theory was in its origin directed, not against popular liberty, but against papal and ecclesiastical claims to supremacy in temporal as well as spiritual affairs.

Divine service. Divine service was the name of a feudal tenure, by which the tenants were obliged to do some special divine services in certain; as to sing so many masses, to distribute such a sum in alms, and the like. It differed from tenure in frankalmoign, in this: that, in case of the tenure by divine service, the lord of whom the lands were helden might distrain for its nonperformance, whereas, in case of frankalmoign, the lord has no remedy by distress for neglect of the service, but merely a right of complaint to the visitor to correct it.

Divisa /divázy/. In old English law, a device, a word, or decree; also a devise; also bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm, etc. Also a court held on the boundary, in order to settle disputes of the tenants.

Divisible. That which is susceptible of being divided.

Divisible contract. One which is in its nature and purposes susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent on each other nor intended by the parties so to be.

Divisible divorce. Decree of divorce may be divided as between provisions for support and alimony and provisions dissolving the marriage. Doctrine applied in cases under full faith and credit clause in connection with effect of foreign divorce on support provisions. Rymanowski v. Rymanowski, 105 R.I. 89, 249 A.2d 407.

Divisible obligation. See Obligation.

Divisible offense. One that includes one or more offenses of lower grade, e.g., murder includes assault, battery, assault with intent to kill, and other offenses.

Divisim /daváyzim/. In old English law, severally; separately.

Division. Act of distributing among a number. Portion of territorial area marked off for a particular purpose. Operating or administrative unit of government, court, business, or school system. Condition of being divided in opinion. Major military unit. Separation of members of a legislative body to take a vote. See also Range.

Division, action for. Action to compel obligee to divide his claim against debtors and collect as if each debtor were liable only for his portion. Central Bank v. Winn Farmers Co-op., La.App., 299 So.2d 442, 445.

Divisional courts. Courts in England, consisting of two or (in special cases) more judges sitting to transact certain kinds of business which cannot be disposed of by one judge. There exist divisional courts of the Queen's Bench Division, Chancery Division, and Family Division.

Divisional securities. Special type of securities issued to finance particular projects.

Division of opinion. In the practice of appellate courts, this term denotes such a disagreement among the judges that there is not a majority in favor of any one view, and hence no decision can be rendered on the case. But it also commonly denotes a division into two classes, one of which may comprise a majority of the judges; as when we speak of a decision having proceeded from a "divided court." See also Divided court.

Division of powers. See Separation of powers.

Divisum imperium /dáváyzam impíriyam/. Lat. A divided jurisdiction. Applied, e.g., to the jurisdiction of courts of common law and equity over the same subject.

Divorce. The legal separation of man and wife, effectuated by the judgment or decree of a court, and either totally dissolving the marriage relation, or suspending its effects so far as concerns the cohabitation of the parties.

See also Alimony; Equitable distribution; Ex parte divorce; Legislative divorce; Living separate and apart; Mail order divorce; Mexican divorce; Matrimonial divorce; Rabbinical divorce.

_Divorce a mensa et thoro_ /dávorph ý ménsa ét thórown/. A divorce from table and bed, or from bed and board. A partial or qualified divorce, by which the parties are separated and forbidden to live or cohabit together, without affecting the marriage itself.

_Divorce a vinculo matrimonii_ /dávorph ý víŋkýalow mattrátmónniyay/. A divorce from the bond of marriage. A total divorce of husband and wife, dissolving the marriage tie, and releasing the parties wholly from their matrimonial obligations.

_Divorce by consent._ Type of no-fault divorce in which parties are not required to prove fault or grounds for divorce beyond a showing of irretrievable breakdown of marriage or irreconcilable differences. The majority of states have no-fault divorce in one form or another.

_Divorce from bed and board._ See Divorce a mensa et thoro, supra.

Foreign divorce. A divorce obtained out of the state or country where the marriage was solemnized.

Limited divorce. A divorce from bed and board; or a judicial separation of husband and wife not dissolving the marriage tie. See also Separation of spouses.

No-fault divorce. See Divorce by consent, supra.

Parliamentary divorce. A divorce decreed by the British Parliament or by a legislative act in contrast to a divorce granted by a court. See Lady's friend.

Divorce proctors. Person, generally an attorney, appointed to protect children or the interests of the state in a divorce action. Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, § 310.
Dock warrant. In England, a warrant given by the court to the owner of merchandise imported and warehoused on the dock, upon the faith of the bills of lading, as a recognition of his title to the goods. It is a negotiable instrument, and, like a bill of lading, it passes by indorsement and delivery, and transfers the absolute right to the goods described in it. See also Document (Document of title); Ware house receipt.

Doctor. v. To prescribe or treat medically or to treat as a doctor or physician.

Doctor, n. A learned man; one qualified to give in struction of the higher order in a science or art, particularly, one who has received the highest aca demic degree in his art or faculty, as, a doctor of laws, medicine, or theology. In colloquial language, however, the term is practically restricted to practi tioners of medicine; i.e., physicians, surgeons.

Doctor-patient privilege. In law of evidence, right of patient to exclude from evidence communications made by him to his physician; not recognized in all jurisdictions and limited in others; e.g., to communi cations to psychotherapist.

Doctrinal interpretation. See Interpretation.

Doctrine. A rule, principle, theory, or tenet of the law;
as, the doctrine of merger, the doctrine of relation, etc.

Document. An instrument on which is recorded, by means of letters, figures, or marks, the original, offi cial, or legal form of something, which may be evi dently used. In this sense the term "document" ap plies to writings; to words printed, lithographed, or photographed; to maps or plans; to seals, plates, or even stones on which inscriptions are cut or en graved. In the plural, the deeds, agreements, title-pa pers, letters, receipts, and other written instruments used to prove a fact. As used as a verb, to support with documentary evidence or authorities.

Within meaning of the best evidence rule, docu ment is any physical embodiment of information or ideas; e.g., a letter, a contract, a receipt, a book of account, a blueprint, or an X-ray plate. Strico v.
Cotto, 67 Misc.2d 636, 324 N.Y.S.2d 483, 486.

See also Instrument.

Ancient documents. Deeds, wills, and other writings more than thirty years (twenty years under Fed.
Evid.R. 803(16)) old are so called; they are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody.

Commercial law. Under U.C.C., any paper including document of title, security, invoice, certificate, notice of default and the like. U.C.C. § 5–103.

Conflicts of law. (1) Whether a right is embodied in a document is determined by the law which governs the right. (2) As between persons who are not both parties to the conveyance, (a) the effect of a convey ance of a right embodied in a document depends upon the effect of the conveyance of the document; and (b)
the effect of a conveyance of an interest in a docu ment in which a right is embodied is determined by the law that would be applied by the courts of the state where the document was at the time of the con veyance. These courts would usually apply their own local law in determining such questions. Re statement, Second, Conflicts, § 249.

Document of title. Includes bill of lading, dock war rant, dock receipt, warehouse receipt or order for the delivery of goods, and also any other document which in the regular course of business or financing is treat ed as adequately evidencing that the person in pos session of it is entitled to receive, hold and dispose of the document and the goods it covers. To be a document of title a document must purport to be issued by or addressed to a bailee and purport to cover goods in the bailee's possession which are ei ther identified or are fungible portions of an identified mass. U.C.C. § 1–201(15). See also Negotiable docu ment of title.

Foreign document. One which was prepared or exe cuted in, or which comes from, a foreign state or Judicial documents. Proceedings relating to litiga tion. They are divided into (1) judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, examinations, and in quisitions taken in the course of a legal process; (3) writs, warrants, pleadings, etc., which are incident to any judicial proceedings.

Public document. A state paper, or other instrument of public importance or interest, issued or published by authority of congress or a state legislature. Also any document or record, evidencing or connected with the public business or the administration of public affairs, preserved in or issued by any depart ment of the government. One of the publications printed by order of congress or either house thereof.

Broadly any document open to public inspection.

Documentary credit. Credit which is extended on doc ments of title or other legal documents.

Documentary draft. A "documentary draft" or a "doc umentary demand for payment" is one the honor of which is conditioned upon the presentation of a docu ment or documents. "Document" means any paper including document of title, security, invoice, certifi cate, notice of default and the like. U.C.C. § 5– 103(b).

Documentary draft means any negotiable or non negotiable draft with accompanying documents, secu rities or other papers to be delivered against honor of the draft. U.C.C. § 4–104(f).

Check with accompanying documents which are to be delivered when payment is made is "documentary draft." Wiley v. Peoples Bank & Trust Co., C.A.
Miss., 438 F.2d 513, 516.
Documentary evidence. Evidence derived from conventional symbols (such as letters) by which ideas are represented on material substances. Such evidence as is furnished by written instruments, inscriptions, documents of all kinds, and also any inanimate objects admissible for the purpose, as distinguished from “oral” evidence, or that delivered by human beings viva voce. People v. Purcell, 22 Cal.App.2d 126, 70 P.2d 706, 709.

Documentary instructions. Term for written agreement between importer and exporter covering disposition of the various documents relating to the shipment, and disposition of the goods.

Documentary originals rule. See Best evidence.

Documentary stamp. Stamp required by federal (prior to 1968) and state law to be affixed to deeds and other documents of transfer before they may be recorded, the cost of which is generally governed by the consideration recited in the document. Federal Revenue Stamps were abolished in 1968.

Documentation. See Authorities.

DOD. Department of Defense.

Do, dico, addico /dów, dikow, ədikow/. Lat. I give, I say, I adjudge. Three words used in the Roman law, to express the extent of the civil jurisdiction of the prætor. Do denoted that he gave or granted actions, exceptions, and judicis; dico, that he pronounced judgment; addico, that he adjudged the controverted property, or the goods of the debtor, etc., to the plaintiff.

DOE. Department of Energy.

Doed-bana /dédbéyna/. In Saxon law, the actual perpetrator of a homicide.

Doe, John. The name of the fictitious plaintiff in certain types of actions; e.g. ejectment action. See also John Doe.

Dog-draw. In old English forest law, the manifest apprehension of an offender against venison in a forest, when he was found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand; or where a person had wounded a deer or wild beast, by shooting at him, or otherwise, and was caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the same.

Dogma. Definite authoritative opinions or tenets. Formally stated and proclaimed doctrines on faith or morals. In the civil law, a word occasionally used as descriptive of an ordinance of the senate.

DOHSA. Death on High Seas Act.

Doing. The formal word by which services were reserved and expressed in old conveyances; as “rendering” (reddendo) was expressive of rent.

Doing business. Within statutes on service of process on foreign corporations, means equivalent to carrying on, conducting or managing business. A foreign corporation is “doing business”, making it amenable to process within state, if it does business therein in such a manner as to warrant the inference that it is present there. Or that it has subjected itself to the jurisdiction and laws in which the service is made. The doing of business is the exercise in the state of some of the ordinary functions for which the corporation was organized. What constitutes “doing business” depends on the facts in each particular case. The general rule is that the business need only have certain “minimum contacts” with the state to make it amenable to process in that state. International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. And, such contacts may be as minimal as selling a single insurance contract. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220, 78 S.Ct. 199, 2 L.Ed.2d 223; Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283. See also Minimal contacts.

The determination as to what constitutes “doing business” may differ as to whether the term is being used with reference to amenability to service of process or to taxation, and also may vary in definition from state to state.

Doitkin, or doit /dóyt(kan)/. A base coin of small value prohibited by Henry the Fifth. We still retain the phrase, in the common saying, when we would undervalue a man, that he is not worth a doit.

Do, lego. Lat. I give, I bequeath; or I give and bequeath. The formal words of making a bequest or legacy, in the Roman law. The expression is literally retained in modern wills.

Dolg-bote /dólgbót/. A recompense for a scar or wound.

Doll. Lat. See Dolus.

Doli capax /dówlay kéypæk/. Capable of malice or criminal intention; having sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong, and so to become amenable to the criminal laws.

Doli incapax /dówlay inkéypæk/. Incapable of criminal intention or malice; not of the age of discretion; not possessed of sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong to the extent of being criminally responsible for his actions.

Dollar. The money unit employed in the United States of the value of one hundred cents, or of any combination of coins totalling 100 cents.

Dollar averaging. Investment term for practice of purchasing a fixed dollar amount of a given security at regular intervals.

Dolo /dówlow/. In Spanish law, bad or mischievous design.

Dolo facit qui petit quod redditurus est /dówlow fέysát kwáy pádét kwód rédáturas ést/. He acts with guile who demands that which he will have to return.

Dolo malo pactumse non servatum /dówlow mákhow pëktëmsiỳ nón sáravat(y)úram/. An agreement induced by fraud cannot stand.

Dolosus versatur in generalibus /dalówsəs vərsəˈdär/ in jénarəˈləbəs/. A person intending to deceive deals in general terms.
Dolum ex indicus perspicuis probari convenit. Fraud should be proved by clear tokens.

Dolus. In the civil law, guile; deceitfulness; malicious fraud. A fraudulent address or trick used to deceive some one; a fraud. Any subtle contrivance by words or acts with a design to circumvent. Such acts or omissions as operate as a deception upon the other party, or violate the just confidence reposed by him, whether there be a deceitful intent (malus animus) or not.

Fraud, willfulness, or intentionality. In that use it is opposed to culpa, which is negligence merely, in greater or less degree. The policy of the law may sometimes treat extreme culpa as if it were dolus, upon the maxim culpa dolo comparatur. A person is always liable for culpa producing damage, but not always for culpa producing damage, even though extreme.

Dolus auctoris non nocet successori. The fraud of a predecessor prejudices not his successor.

Dolus bonus, dolus malus. In a wide sense, the Roman law distinguishes between "good," or rather "permissible" dolus and "bad" or fraudulent dolus. The former is justifiable or allowable deceit; it is that which a man may employ in self-defense against an unlawful attack, or for another permissible purpose, as when one dissembles the truth to prevent a lunatic from injuring himself or others. The latter exists where one intentionally misleads another or takes advantage of another's error wrongfully, by any form of deception, fraud, or cheating.

Dolus dans locum contractui. Fraud (or deceit) giving rise to the contract; that is, a fraudulent misrepresentation made by one of the parties to the contract, and relied upon by the other, and which was actually instrumental in inducing the latter to enter into the contract.

Dolus est machinatio, cum aliud dissimulat aliud agit. Deceit is an artifice, since it pretends and "must mean" what it is not. Fraud is not purged by circuity.

Dolus in generalibus. Fraud lurks in generalities.

Dolus versatur in generalibus. Fraud deals in generalities.

Dolus latet in generalibus. Deceit and fraud shall excuse or benefit no man.

Dolus ex domicilio patrocinatur. Fraud shall not excuse or benefit any.

Dolus versatur in generalibus. Fraud deals in generalities.

Dolus in generalibus. Deceit and fraud shall excuse or benefit no man.

Dolus variant in generalibus. Fraud deals in generalities.

Domain. The complete and absolute ownership of land; a paramount and individual right of property in land. Also the real estate so owned. The inherent sovereign power claimed by the legislature of a state, of controlling private property for public uses, is termed the "right of eminent domain." See Condemnation; Eminent domain.

Domesday-book. An ancient record made in the time of William the Conqueror, and later remaining in the English exchequer, consisting of two volumes of unequal size, containing minute and accurate surveys of the lands in England. 2 Bl.Commons 49, 50. The work was begun by five justices in each county in 1081, and finished in 1086.

Domesmen. In old English law, an inferior kind of judge. Men appointed to doom (judge) in matters in controversy. Suits in a court of a manor in ancient demesne, who were judges there.

Domestic, n. A household servant.

Domestic, adj. Pertaining, belonging, or relating to a home, a domicile, or to the place of birth, origin, creation, or transaction.

As to domestic Administrators; Attachment; Commerce; Corporation; Creditor; Factor; Fixture; Judgment; and Manufacture, see those titles.

Domestic animals. Such as are habituated to live in or about the habitats of men, or such as contribute to the support of a family. Tamed animals; e.g. horses, sheep, dogs.

Domesticated. Made domestic or converted to domestic use; e.g. taming of wild horse.
Domestic authority. The right of parents and, by extension, the right of teachers, to discipline and compel obedience to their lawful commands from their children; formerly extended to authority of husbands over their wives.

Domestic bill. Draft which is payable in the state in which it is drawn, as contrasted with a foreign bill which is payable in another state.

Domestic corporation. When a corporation is organized and chartered in a particular state, it is considered a domestic corporation of that state. Term is used in contrast to foreign corporation which has been incorporated in another state, territory or country. For tax purposes, a corporation created or organized in the U.S. or under the law of the U.S. or any state or territory. I.R.C. §§ 4920(a)(5), 7701(a)(4).

Domestic courts. Those existing and having jurisdiction at the place of the party's residence or domicile.

Domestic exports. Goods originally grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States, in contrast to goods originally imported and then re-exported.

Domestic International Sales Corporation (DISC). A U.S. corporation, usually a subsidiary, whose income is primarily attributable to exports. Income tax on 50 percent of a DISC's income is usually deferred for overall corporate tax for the parent than would otherwise be incurred.

Domestic jurisdiction. Power of court over a person or action within its district or state.

Domestic relations. That branch or discipline of the law which deals with matters of the household or family, including divorce, separation, custody, support and adoption.

Domestic servant. A person hired or employed primarily for the performance of household duties and chores, the maintenance of the home, and the care, comfort and convenience of members of the household. Hardware Dealers Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. King, Tex.Civ.App., 408 S.W.2d, 790, 791. See also Domestic.

Domesticus /dóméståkos/. In old European law, a seneschal, steward, or major domo; a judge's assistant; an assessor (q.v.).

Domicellus /dóméstås/. In old English law, a better sort of servant in monasteries; also an appellation of a king's bastard.

Domicile. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. Smith v. Smith, 206 Pa.Super. 310, 213 A.2d 94. The permanent residence of a person or the place to which he intends to return even though he may actually reside elsewhere. A person may have more than one residence but only one domicile. The legal domicile of a person is important since it, rather than the actual residence, often controls the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities and determines where a person may exercise the privilege of voting and other legal rights and privileges. The established, fixed, permanent, or ordinary dwellingplace or place of residence of a person, as distinguished from his temporary and transient, though actual, place of residence. It is his legal residence, as distinguished from his temporary place of abode; or his home, as distinguished from a place to which business or pleasure may temporarily call him. See also Residence.

"Citizenship," "habitancy," and "residence" are several words which in particular cases may mean precisely the same as "domicile," while in other uses may have different meanings.

"Residence" signifies living in particular locality while "domicile" means living in that locality with intent to make it a fixed and permanent home. Schreiner v. Schreiner, Tex.Civ.App., 502 S.W.2d 840, 843.

For purpose of federal diversity jurisdiction, "citizenship" and "domicile" are synonymous. Hendry v. Masonite Corp., C.A.Miss., 455 F.2d 955. See also Abode.

Commercial domicile. A domicile acquired by the maintenance of a commercial establishment.

Corporate domicile. Place considered by law as center of corporate affairs and place where its functions are discharged.

Domicile of choice. The essentials of "domicile" of choice are the fact of physical presence at a dwelling place and the intention to make that place home. New York Trust Co. v. Riley, 24 Del.Ch. 354, 16 A.2d 772, 776, 783, 785.

Domicile of origin. The home of the parents. That which arises from a man's birth and connections. The domicile of the parents at the time of birth, or what is termed the "domicile of origin," constitutes the domicile of an infant, and continues until abandoned, or until the acquisition of a new domicile in a different place. Struble v. Struble, Tex.Civ.App., 177 S.W.2d 279, 283.

Domicile of succession. As distinguished from a commercial, political, or forensic domicile, the actual residence of a person within some jurisdiction, of such a character as shall, according to the well-established principles of public law, give direction to the succession of his personal estate.

Domicile of trustee. Jurisdiction which appoints trustee is domicile of trustee.

Elected domicile. The domicile of parties fixed in a contract between them for the purposes of such contract.

Foreign domicile. A domicile established by a citizen or subject of one sovereignty within the territory of another.

Matrimonial domicile. The place where a husband and wife have established a home, in which they reside in the relation of husband and wife, and where the matrimonial contract is being performed.

Municipal domicile. One which as distinguished from "national domicile" and "quasi national domicile" (see those titles, infra), has reference to residence in a county, township, or municipality.

National domicile. The domicile of a person, considered as being within the territory of a particular nation, and not with reference to a particular locality or subdivision of a nation.

Natural domicile. The same as domicile of origin or domicile by birth.

Necessary domicile. That kind of domicile which exists by operation of law, as distinguished from voluntary domicile or domicile of choice.

Quasi national domicile. One involving residence in a state. See also National domicile, supra.

Domiciled /dəˈmɑːsəld/ - Established in a given domicile; belonging to a given state or jurisdiction by right of domicile.

Domiciliary /dəˈmɑːsəliːərɪ/ - Pertaining to domicile; relating to one’s domicile. Existing or created at, or connected with, the domicile of a suitor or of a decedent.

Domiciliary administration. Administration in state where person was domiciled at time of death. It is deemed principal or primary administration and is ordinarily termed “domiciliary administration.” First Nat. Bank v. Blessing, 231 Mo.App. 288, 98 S.W.2d 149, 151.

Domiciliate /dəˈmɑːsəliːɛt/ - To establish one’s domicile; to take up one’s fixed residence in a given place. To establish the domicile of another person whose legal residence follows one’s own.

Domiciliation /dəˈmɑːsəliːˈɛʃən/ - In Spanish law, the acquisition of domiciliary rights and status, nearly equivalent to naturalization, which may be accomplished by being born in the kingdom, by conversion to the Catholic faith there, by taking up a permanent residence in some settlement and marrying a native woman, and by attaching oneself to the soil, purchasing or acquiring real property and possessions.

Domicilium /dəˈmɑːsɪliːəm/ - Lat. Domicile (q.v.).

Domigerium /dəˈmɑːsədʒəriəm/ - In old English law, power over another; also danger.

Domina (dame) /dəˈmɑːnə/ - A title given to honorable women, who anciently, in their own right of inheritance, held a barony.

Dominant estate or tenement /dəˈmɑːnənt ˈstɛət/ - That to which a servitude or easement is due, or for the benefit of which it exists. A term used in the civil and Scotch law, and later in ours, relating to servitudes, meaning the tenement or subject in favor of which the service is constituted; as the servient over which the servitude extends is called the “servient tenement.” That particular parcel of land that is benefited as a result of an easement on a servient estate.

Dominant theme. Within meaning of requirement that before any material can be found to be obscene the dominant theme of material taken as a whole must appeal to prurient interest in sex means prevailing, governing, influencing or controlling idea. State ex rel. Dowd v. "Pay the Baby Sitter", Com.P1., 31 Ohio Misc. 208, 287 N.E.2d 650, 654.

Dominante /dəˈmɑːnəniɛt/ - To master, to rule, or to control. Humble Oil & Refining Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, C.C.A.5, 113 F.2d 85, 88, 90.

Dominatio /dəˈmɑːnətiəʊ/ - In old English law, lordship.

Dominical. That which denotes the Lord’s day, or Sunday.

Dominicide /dəˈmɑːnɪsəd/ - The act of killing one’s lord or master.

Dominicum /dəˈmɑːnɪkəm/ - Lat. Domain; demain; desmesne. A lordship. That of which one has the lordship or ownership. That which remains under the lord’s immediate charge and control. In Domesday Book it meant the home farm as distinguished from the holdings of the tenants.

Property; domain; anything pertaining to a lord. In ecclesiastical law, a church, or any other building consecrated to God.

Dominicum antiquum /dəˈmɑːnɪkəm æntəˈɛkwəm/ - In old English law, ancient desmesne.

Dominiio /dəˈmɑːniəʊ/ - Sp. In Spanish law, a term corresponding to the most complete right of ownership. It is derived from the Latin dominium (q.v.).

Dominio alto, eminent domain; dominio directo, immediate ownership; dominio util, beneficial ownership.

Dominion. Generally accepted definition of “dominion” is perfect control in right of ownership. The word implies both title and possession and appears to require a complete retention of control over disposition. Eastex Aviation, Inc. v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., C.A.Tex., 522 F.2d 1299, 1307. Title to an article of property which arises from the power of disposition and the right of claiming it.

Sovereignty; as the dominion of the seas or over a territory.

In the civil law, with reference to the title to property which is transferred by a sale of it, dominion is said to be either “proximate” or “remote,” the former being the kind of title vesting in the purchaser when he has acquired both the ownership and the possession of the article, the latter describing the nature of his title when he has legitimately acquired the ownership of the property but there has been no delivery.

See also Ownership; Title.

Dominium /dəˈmɑːniəm/ - In the civil and old English law, ownership; property in the largest sense, including both the right of property and the right of possession or use.

The mere right of property, as distinguished from the possession or usufruct. The right which a lord had in the fee of his tenant.

Sovereignty or dominion. Dominium maris, the sovereignty of the sea.

Dominium directum /dəˈmɑːniəm ˈdɛrəktəm/ - In the civil law, strict ownership; that which was founded on strict law, as distinguished from equity. In later law, property without use; the right of a landlord. In feudal law, right or proper ownership; the right of a superior or lord, as distinguished from that of his vassal or tenant. The title or property which the sovereign in England is considered as possessing in all the lands of the kingdom, they being held either immediately or mediatly of him as lord paramount.

Dominium directum et utile /dəˈmɑːniəm ˈdɛrəktəm ɛt yʊˈwɛldɛɪ/ - The complete and absolute dominion in property; the union of the title and the exclusive use.
Dominium eminens /dəməˈniːjəm ˈeɪmənən(d)z/ Eminent domain.

Dominium non potestesse in pendent /dəməˈniːjəm nɒn ˈpɒwdɛst ɛsiŋ iŋ ˈpɛndənt/ Lordship cannot be in suspense, i.e., property cannot remain in abeyance.

Dominium plenum /dəməˈniːjəm ˈplɪənəm/ Full ownership; the union of the dominium directum with the dominium utile.

Dominium utile /dəməˈniːjəm ˈjuːwɛldəli/ In the civil law, equitable or praeatorian ownership; that which was founded on equity. In later law, use without property; the right of a tenant. In feudal law, useful or beneficial ownership; the usufruct, or right to the use and profits of the soil, as distinguished from the dominium directum (q.v.) or ownership of the soil itself; the right of a vassal or tenant.

Domino volente /dəməˈnoʊ ˈvɔləntii/ Lat. The owner being willing; with the consent of the owner.

Dominus /dɔˈmənəs/. In feudal and ecclesiastical law, a lord, or feudal superior. Dominus rex, the lord the king; the king's title as lord paramount. Dominus capitalis, a chief lord. Dominus medius, a mesne or intermediate lord. Dominus ligius, liege lord or sovereign.

—Lord or sir; a title of distinction. It usually denoted a knight or clergyman; and was sometimes given to a gentleman of quality, though not a knight, especially if he were lord of a manor.

The owner or proprietor of a thing, as distinguished from him who uses it merely. A master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney.

In the civil law, a husband; a family.

Dominus capitalis loco hereditis habetur, quoties per delectum vel delictum extinguitur sanguis sui tenentis /dɔˈmənəs kæpəˈteɪləs ləʊkwɔr bəˈriːdʒəs həˈbɪədər, kəˈdəwʃiˈjɪjəz pər dəˈfæktəm vəl dəˈlɪktəm ɪkˈstɪŋkwədər sæŋwəz s(ə)ˈjuːwətəntəs/. The supreme lord takes the place of the heir, as often as the blood of the tenant is extinct through deficiency or crime.

Dominus litis /dɔˈmənəs ləˈdəs/. Lat. The master of the suit; i.e., the person who was really and directly interested in the suit as a party, as distinguished from his attorney or advocate. But the term is also applied to one who, though not originally a party, has made himself such, by intervention or otherwise, and has assumed entire control and responsibility for one side, and is treated by the court as liable for costs.

Dominus navis /dɔˈmənəs ˈnɛvəs/. In the civil law, the owner of a vessel.

Dominus non maritabit pupillum nisi semel /dɔˈmənəs nɒn ˈmɑrətəbɪt puˈpɪljʊm nɪ sɛmɛl/. A lord cannot give a ward in marriage but once.

Dominus rex nullum habere potest parem, multo minus superiorem /dɔˈmənəs ˈrɛks nuləm həˈbɪrə pəˈrɛm, məˈtəw məˈkən səˈpɛrtiəˌrɛm/. A lord cannot give an equal, much less a superior.

Domite /dəməˈdiː/ Lat. Tame; domesticated; not wild. Applied to domestic animals, in which a man may have an absolute property. 2 Bl.Comm. 391.

Dommages intérêts. In French law, damages.

Domo reparanda /dɔˈməʊm rəˈpærəndə/ A writ that lay for one against his neighbor, by the anticipated fall of whose house he feared a damage and injury to his own.

Dom. Proc. An abbreviation of Domus Procerum or Domus Procerum; the house of lords in England. Sometimes expressed by the letters D. P.

Domus /dɔˈməʊz/ Lat. In the civil and old English law, a house or dwelling; a habitation. Shreveport Long Leaf Lumber Co. v. Wilson, D.C.La., 38 F. Supp. 629, 631. See Domicile.

Domus conversorum /dɔˈməʊz kənˈvɜːrsərərm/. An ancient house built or appointed by King Henry III for such Jews as were converted to the Christian faith; but King Edward III, who expelled the Jews from the kingdom, deputed the place for the custody of the rolls and records of the chancery.

Domus dei /dɔˈməʊs dəi/. The house of God; a name applied to many hospitals and religious houses.

Domus procerum /dɔˈməʊs prəˈkɜːrərm/. The house of lords, abbreviated into Dom. Proc., or D. P.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium /dɔˈməʊs s(ə)ˈjuːwəˈwʌkɨˈwɪjɨ miːt tjuːˈtɪsɪməm rɛfʊɡiʊm/. To every man his own house is his safest refuge. The house of every one is to him as his castle and fortress, as well for his defense against injury and violence as for his reposite. A man’s dwellinghouse is his castle, not for his own personal protection merely, but also for the protection of his family and his property therein.

Domus tutissimum cuique refugium atque receptaculum /dɔˈməʊs tʊˈtɪsɪməm kjuˈki kəˈrɛftəˈkʌlum æt ˈkwɛtəˈkʌləm /. The supreme house of safety and asylum for each one. A maxim of the Roman law.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa /dəˈnɔn kəˌlænˈdiːnəs sən tɛn pər səˈspɪsɪsəsə/. Clandestine gifts are always suspicious.

Donari videtur, quod nullo jure cogente conceditur /dɔˈnəri vɪˈdətʊr, kuːd nəˈluː ˈjuːrə kəˈdɛnʃəˈtʊr/. A thing is said to be given which is granted when no law compels). See Donee.

Donarius /dɔˈnətəˈriːəs/. A donee; one to whom something is given. See Donee.

Donated stock. Securities given to a corporation by its own stockholders commonly for resale.

Donated surplus. Contribution of assets to a corporation generally in the form of stock from its stockholders.

Donatio /dɔˈnətəˈʃiəʊ/ Lat. A gift. A transfer of the title to property to one who receives it without paying for it. The act by which the owner of a thing voluntarily transfers the title and possession of the same from himself to another person, without any consideration.
By the civil law (adopted into the English and American law) donations are either inter vivos (between living persons) or mortis causa (in anticipation of death). As to these forms, see infra. A donatio or gift as between living persons is called donatio mera or pura when it is a simple gift without compulsion or consideration, that is, resting solely on the generosity of the donor, as in the case of most charitable gifts. It is called donatio remuneratoria when given as a reward for past services, but still not under any legal compulsion, as in the case of pensions and lands-grants. It is called donatio sub modo (or modalis) when given for the attainment of some special object or on condition that the donee shall do something not specially for the benefit of the donor, as in the case of the endowment of hospitals, colleges, etc., coupled with the condition that they shall be established and maintained. The following terms are also used: Donatio conditionalis, a conditional gift; donatio relata, a gift made with reference to some service already done, donatio stricta et coarctura, a restricted gift, as an estate tail.

Donatio inofficiosa /dōnāˈʃeɪʃəs/ (in anticipation) /aɪnˈfɪʃəs/ (uncompulsory). An inofficious (undutiful) gift; a gift of so great a compulsion, as in the case of pensions and land-maintained. The following terms are also used: Donatio inter vivos /dōnāˈʃeɪʃəs ɪn ˈtɜrə ˈvɪvəs/ (between living persons) or donatio in officiis /dōnāˈʃeɪʃəs ɪn əˈfɪʃəs/ (by one person to another). A term derived from the civil law. A donation inter vivos (between living persons) is an act by which the donor divests himself and "remunerative donations", the first being based particularly, in early Pennsylvania history, lands thus granted to soldiers of the revolutionary war. A gift is not presumed.

Donationum alia perfecta, alia incepta et non perfecta, ut si donatio lecta fuit et concessa, ac traditio nondum fuerit subsecuta /dōnˈʃeɪʃəm əˈlɪə ˈpɜrˈfɪktə, əˈlɪə ˈɪnˈsɛptə ət ˈnɒn ˈpɜrˈfɪktə, ət ˈseɪ ðoʊnˈʃeɪʃəm ˈlɔdʒə fɪt ət ˈkɛnsəsə, ək ˈtrədɪʃəm ˈlɔdʒə ˈnɒdəm ˈfjʊərɪt ˈsʌbˌsɛktə/ /ˌsʌbˈsɛktə/ . Some gifts are perfect, others incipient and not perfect as if a gift were read and agreed to, but delivery had not then followed. A gift is perfected [made complete] by the possession of the receiver. A gift is incomplete until possession is delivered.

Donatio principis intelligitur sine praesidio tertii, /dōnˈʃeɪʃəm ˈprɪnʃɪpɪs ɪnˈtɪlɪɡɪtʊr ˈsaɪn ˈprɛsɪdɪo ˈtɜrˈtii/ /ˈprɪnʃɪpɪs/ . A gift is not presumed.

Donatio propter nuptias /dōnˈʃeɪʃəm ˈprəʊptər ˈnʌptɪəs/ (marriage). A gift on account of marriage. In Roman law, the bridgroom's gift to the bride in anticipation of marriage and to secure her dos was called "donatio ante nuptias"; but by an ordinance of Justinian such gift might be made after as well as before marriage, and in that case it was called "donatio propter nuptias." A gift in view of death. Donatio ante nuptias is one which is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver. A donation mortis causa (in prospect of death) is an act to take effect when the donor shall no longer exist, by which he disposes of the whole or a part of his property, and which is revocable. See Contemplation of death.

Donatio inter vivos /dōnˈʃeɪʃəm ɪnˈtɜr ˈvɪvəs/ . A gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his death, delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another the possession of any personal goods, to keep as his own in case of the donor's decease. The civil law defines it to be a gift under apprehension of death; as when anything is given upon condition that, if the donor dies, the donee shall possess it absolutely, or return it if the donor should survive or should repent of having made the gift, or if the donee should die before the donor. A gift in view of death is one which is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver. A donation mortis causa (in prospect of death) is an act to take effect when the donor shall no longer exist, by which he disposes of the whole or a part of his property, and which is revocable. See Contemplation of death.

Donation. A gift (q.v.). See Donatio.

In ecclesiastical law, a mode of acquiring a benefice by deed of gift alone, without presentation, institution, or induction.

Donation lands. Lands granted from the public domain to an individual as a bounty, gift, or donation; particu-Donee. One to whom a gift is made or a bequest given. One who is invested with a power of appointment; the party executing a power, otherwise called the "appointer." He to whom lands or tenements are given in tail. In old English law, he to whom lands were given; the party to whom a donatio was made.

Donee beneficiary. In a third party contract, the person who takes the benefit of the contract though there is no privity between him and the contracting parties.

Donee of power. The person to whom the settlor or donor of a power of appointment gives such power to be exercised. In the case of a special power, in favor of a limited class such as members of a family, or, in the case of a general power, in favor of any one including the donee himself.

Donor. The party conferring a power. One who makes a gift. One who creates a trust. He who gives lands or tenements to another in tail. In old English law, he by whom lands were given to another; the party making a donatio.

Donum /döwnam/. Lat. In the civil law, a gift; a free gift. The difference between donum and munus is said to be that donum is more general, while munus is specific.

Dormant. Literally, sleeping; hence, inactive; in abeyance; unknown; concealed; silent.

Dormant claim. One which is in abeyance.

Dormant corporation. An inactive but legal corporation which is capable of being activated, but is presently not operating.

Dormant execution. One which a creditor delivers to the sheriff with directions to levy only, and not to sell, until further orders, or until a junior execution is received.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied, nor extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment, or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute. See Judgment; Revival.

Dormant partner. See Partner.
DOTAL PROPERTY

Dotal property /dódal própárdiý/. In the civil law, in Louisiana, property which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. Extratotal property, otherwise called "paraphernal property," is that which forms no part of the dowry. Fletas v. Richardson, 147 U.S. 550, 13 S.Ct. 495, 37 L.Ed. 276. See also Community.

Dotation /dówt'éýshان/. The act of giving a dowry or portion; endowment in general, including the endowment of a hospital or other charitable institution.

Dote /dówtей/, n. In Spanish law, the marriage portion of a wife. The property which the wife gives to the husband on account of marriage, or for the purpose of supporting the matrimonial expenses.

Dote, v. To be besotted, delirious, silly, or insane.

Dote assignanda /dótédiy əsəgnimənda/. A writ which lay for a widow, when it was judicially ascertained that a tenant to the king was seised of tenements in fee or fee-tail at the day of his death, and that he held of the king in chief. In such case the widow might come into chancery, and then make oath that she would not marry without the king's leave, and then she might have this writ. These widows were called the "king's widows."

Dote unde nil habet /dótédiy əndiə lay(h)əl héybat/. "Dower from whence she has nothing." An English writ which lay for a widow to whom no dower had been assigned.

Doti lex favet; prémium pudoris est; ideo parcatur /dótédiy léks féyvat, priimiyəm pədərəs əst, ədiyəw parkéydar/. The law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity; therefore let it be preserved.

Dotis administratio /dótédsən ədəstrəı̇sh(i)yəw/. Admeasurement of dower, where the widow holds more than her share, etc.

Dotissa /dōtitsə/. A dowager.

Double. Twofold; acting in two capacities or having two aspects; multiplied by two. This term has ordinarily the same meaning in law as in popular speech. The principal compound terms into which it enters are noted below.

Double adultery. Adultery committed by two persons each of whom is married to another as distinguished from "single" adultery, where one of the participants is unmarried.

Double assessment. The imposition of same tax, by same taxing power, upon same subject matter. Aragon v. Empire Gold Mining & Milling Co., 47 N.M. 299, 142 P.2d 539, 541.

Double costs. See Costs.

Double creditor. One who has a lien on two funds.

Double damages. See Damages.

Double eagle. A gold coin of the United States of the value of twenty dollars.

Double entry. A system of bookkeeping, in which the entries are posted twice into the ledger, once as a credit and once as a debit.

Double house. A building having accommodations for two families, divided vertically instead of horizontally. Also called "duplex".

Double indemnity. Payment of twice the basic benefit in event of loss resulting from specified causes or under specified circumstances. Provision in life insurance contract requiring payment of twice the face amount of the policy by the insurer in the event of death by accidental means.

Double jeopardy. Common-law and constitutional (Fifth Amendment) prohibition against a second prosecution after a first trial for the same offense. People v. Wheeler, 271 Cal.App. 205, 79 Cal.Rptr. 842, 845, 271 C.A.2d 205. The evil sought to be avoided is double trial and double conviction, not necessarily double punishment. Breed et al. v. Jones, 421 U.S. 519, 95 S.Ct. 1779, 44 L.Ed.2d 346. See also Jeopardy; Same evidence test.

Double patenting. The test respecting "double patenting" is whether the claims of both patents, when properly construed in the light of the descriptions given, define essentially the same things. Occurs only when claims of two patents issued to one applicant are the same.

Double plea, double pleading. See Duplicity; Plea; Pleadings.

Double proof. Species of evidence required for conviction of certain crimes in which the government must offer corroboration.

Double recovery. Recovery which represents more than the total maximum loss which all parties have sustained.

Double rent. In English law, rent payable by a tenant who continues in possession after the time for which he has given notice to quit, until the time of his quitting possession.

Doubles. Letters-patent.

Double standard. Set of principles which permit greater opportunity for one class of people than another and commonly based on differences such as sex, race or color and hence invidious standards which may offend equal protection of law to the discriminated minority. See Discrimination.

Double taxation. The taxing of the same item or piece of property twice to the same person, or taxing it as the property of one person and again as the property of another, but this does not include the imposition of different taxes concurrently on the same property or income (e.g. federal and state income taxes), nor the taxation of the same piece of property to different persons when they hold different interests in it or when it represents different values in their hands, as when both the mortgagor and mortgagee of property are taxed in respect to their interests in it, or when a tax is laid upon the profits of a corporation and also upon the dividends paid to its shareholders. "Double taxation" means taxing twice for the same purpose in the same year some of the property in the territory in which the tax is laid without taxing all of it. Diefendorf v. Gallet, 51 Idaho 619, 10 P.2d 307, 315; Amarillo-Pecos Valley Truck Lines v. Gallegos, 44 N.M. 120, 99 P.2d 447, 451. To constitute "double taxation," two taxes must be imposed on same property by same governing body during same taxing period and for same taxing purpose. Second St. Properties, Inc. v. Fiscal Court of Jefferson County, Ky., 445 S.W.2d 709, 715.

Double tax rule. Collections made in taxable year on sales made in prior years, and which had already been taxed in prior years. Hoover-Bond Co. v. Denman, C.C.A.Ohio, 59 F.2d 909, 910.

Double use. In patent law, an application of a principle or process, previously known and applied, to some new use, but which does not lead to a new result or the production of a new article.

Double value. In old English law, a penalty on a tenant holding over after his landlord's notice to quit. By 4 Geo. II, c. 28, § 1, it is enacted that if any tenant for life or years hold over any lands, etc., after the determination of his estate, after demand made, and notice in writing given, for delivering the possession thereof, by the landlord, or the person having the reversion or remainder therein, or his agent thereunto lawfully authorized, such tenant so holding over shall pay to the person so kept out of possession at the rate of double the yearly value of the lands, etc., so detained, for so long a time as the same are detained.

Double voucher. In old English law, this was when a common recovery was had, and an estate of freehold was first conveyed to any indifferent person against whom the praecipe was brought, and then he vouched the tenant in tail, who vouched over the common vouchee. For, if a recovery were had already against a tenant in tail, it barred only the estate in the premises of which he was then actually seised, whereas, if the recovery were had against another person, and the tenant in tail were vouchee, it barred every latent right and interest which he might have in the lands recovered. 2 Bl.Comm. 359.

Double waste. When a tenant bound to repair suffers a house to be wasted, and then unlawfully fells timber to repair it, he is said to commit double waste.

Double will. A will in which two persons join, each leaving his property and estate to the other, so that the survivor takes the whole. See Reciprocal wills.

 Doubt, v. To question or hold questionable.

 Doubt, n. Uncertainty of mind; the absence of a settled opinion or conviction; the attitude of mind towards the acceptance of or belief in a proposition, theory, or statement, in which the judgment is not at rest but inclines alternately to either side.

Reasonable doubt. This is a term often used, probably pretty well understood, but not easily defined. It does not mean a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. If upon proof there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal; for it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary, but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty, i.e. a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. This is proof beyond reasonable doubt; because if the law, which mostly depends upon considerations of a moral nature, should go further than this, and require absolute certainty, it would exclude circumstantial evidence altogether.

Proof "beyond a reasonable doubt" is not beyond all possible or imaginary doubt, but such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support. It is proof "to a moral certainty"; such proof as satisfies the judgment and consciences of the jury, as reasonable men, and applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible.
Doubt. The provision which the law makes for a widow out of the lands or tenements of her husband, for her support and the nurture of her children. 2 Bl.Comm. 130; In re Miller's Estate, 44 N.M. 214, 100 P.2d 908, 911. A species of life-estate which a woman is, by law, entitled to claim on the death of her husband, in the lands and tenements of which he was seised in fee during the marriage, and which her issue, if any, might by possibility have inherited. The life estate to which every married woman is entitled on death of her husband, intestate, or, in case she dissents from his will, one-third in value of all lands of which husband was beneficially seized in law or in fact, at any time during coverture.

Dower has been abolished in the majority of the states and materially altered in most of the others.

See also Inchoate dower.

Dower ad ostium ecclesie /dāwār ad ʿostiyām ʾiklīziyī/. Dower at the church door or porch. An ancient kind of dower in England, where a man (being tenant in fee-simple, of full age), openly at the church door, where all marriages were formerly celebrated, after affinity made and trouble plighted between them, endowed his wife with the whole of his lands, or such quantity as he pleased, at the same time specifying and ascertaining the same. 2 Bl.Comm. 133.

Dower by common law. The ordinary kind of dower in English and American law, consisting of a life interest in one-third of the lands of which the husband was seised in fee at any time during the coverture. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower by custom. A kind of dower in England, regulated by custom, where the quantity allowed the wife different from the proportion of the common law; as that the wife should have half the husband's lands; or, in some places, the whole; and, in some, only a quarter. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower de la plus belle (de la plus beale) /dāwār dā ʿla plywā bēl/. L. Fr. Dower of the fairest part. A kind of dower in England, regulated by custom, where the quantity allowed the wife different from the proportion of the common law; as that the wife should have half the husband's lands; or, in some places, the whole; and, in some, only a quarter. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower ex assensu patris /dāwār ēks ʿassēns(h)(y)ūw pāṭrās/. Dower by the father's assent. A species of ancient English dower, incident to the old tenures, where there was a guardian in chivalry, and the wife occupied lands of the heir as guardian in socage. If the wife brought a writ of dower against such guardian in chivalry, he might show this matter, and pray that the wife might be endowed de la plus belle of the tenement in socage. This kind of dower was abolished with the military tenures. 2 Bl.Comm. 132.

Dower unde nihil habet /dāwār ʿāndīy nāḥ(h)al ʿāḥēbāt/. A writ of right which lay for a widow to whom no dower had been assigned.

Dow Jones Average. A stock market performance indicator that consists of the price movements in the top 30 industrial companies in the United States.

Dowlé stones. Stones dividing lands, etc.
Dowry. In old English law, endowment; dower.

Down payment. The portion of purchase price which is generally required to be paid at time purchase and sale agreement is signed and is generally paid in cash or its equivalent. An amount of money paid to the seller at the time of sale, which represents only a part of the total cost. See also Earnest money.

Dowress /dəwəs/. A woman entitled to dower; a tenant in dower.

Dowry. The property which a woman brings to her husband in marriage; also sometimes called a “portion.” See Dos.

Dozen peers /daːzn pɜːrəz/. Twelve peers assembled at the instance of the barons, in the reign of Henry III, to be privy counselors, or rather conservators of the kingdom.

D. P. An abbreviation for Domus Procerum, the house of lords.

Dr. An abbreviation for “doctor”. Also, in commercial usage, for “debtor,” indicating the items or particulars in a bill or in an account-book chargeable against the person to whom the bill is rendered or in whose name the account stands, as opposed to “Cr.” (“Credit” or “creditor”), which indicates the items for which he is given credit.

Drachma /dɾaːkəma/. A term employed in old pleadings and records, to denote a groat. An Athenian silver coin, of the value of about fifteen cents.

Draconian laws /dɹəkəniən ɫɑːz/. A code of laws prepared by Draco, the celebrated lawgiver of Athens. These laws were exceedingly severe, and the term is now sometimes applied to any laws of unusual harshness.

Draft. Waste matter, sweepings, refuse, lees, or drags. In weighing commodities the term signifies dust and dirt, and not what is generally meant by “draught” or “draft” (q.v.).

Draft. A written order by the first party, called the drawer, instructing a second party, called the drawee (such as a bank), to pay a third party, called the payee. An order to pay a sum certain in money, signed by a drawer, payable on demand or at a definite time, and to order or bearer. People v. Norwood, 26 Cal.App.3d 148, 103 Cal.Rptr. 7, 11. An unconditional order drawn by drawer on drawee to the order of the payee; same as a bill of exchange. U.C.C. § 3-104. See also Check; Documentary draft; Redraft; Sight draft; Trade acceptance.

A tentative, provisional, or preparatory writing out of any document (as a will, contract, lease, etc.) for purposes of discussion and correction, which is afterwards to be copied out in its final shape.

Also, a small arbitrary deduction or allowance made to a merchant or importer, in the case of goods sold by weight or taxable by weight, to cover possible loss of weight in handling or from differences in scales.

Bank draft. One drawn by one bank on another. Clean draft. One which has no shipping documents attached.

Documentary draft. One to which various shipping documents are attached.

Overdraft. Writing a check for more money than is in account.

Sight draft. One which is payable on presentation or demand.

Time draft. One payable a certain number of days after sight or after presentation for acceptance. The number of days must be specified.

Draft board. Federal agency that registers, classifies and selects men for compulsory military service.

Draftsman. Any one who draws or frames a legal document, e.g., a will, conveyance, pleading, etc. One who draws plans and specifications for machinery, structures, etc.

Dragnet clause. Provision in a mortgage in which mortgagor gives security for past and future advances as well as present indebtedness.

Drago doctrine. The principle asserted by Luis Drago, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic, in a letter to the Argentine Minister at Washington, December 29, 1902, that the forcible intervention of states to secure the payment of public debts due to their citizens from foreign states is unjustifiable and dangerous to the security and peace of the nations of South America. The subject was brought before the Conference by the United States and a Convention was adopted in which the contracting powers agreed, with some restrictive conditions, not to have recourse to armed force for the recovery of contract debts claimed by their nationals against a foreign state. See Calvo doctrine.

Drain, v. To conduct water from one place to another, for the purpose of drying the former. To make dry; to draw off water; to rid land of its superfluous moisture by adapting or improving natural water courses and supplementing them, when necessary, by artificial ditches. To “drain,” in its larger sense, includes not only the supplying of outlets and channels to relieve the land from water, but also the provision of ditches, drains, and embankments to prevent water from accumulating.

To totally consume or exhaust.

Drain, n. A trench or ditch to convey water from wet land; a channel through which water may flow off. The word has no technical legal meaning. Any hollow space in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected and passes off, is a ditch or drain.

Also, sometimes, the easement or servitude (acquired by grant or prescription) which consists in the right to drain water through another’s land. See Drainage rights.

Public drainage way. The land reserved or dedicated for the installation of storm water sewers or drainage ditches, or required along a natural stream or watercourse for preserving the channel and providing for the flow of water to safeguard the public against flood damage, sedimentation, and erosion.

Drainage district. A political subdivision of the state, created for the purpose of draining and reclaiming wet and overflowed land, as well as to preserve the public health and convenience.
DRAINAGE RIGHTS

Drainage rights. A landowner may not obstruct or divert the natural flow of a watercourse or natural drainage course to the injury of another. In urban areas, "natural drainage course" is narrowly interpreted to include only streams with well-defined channels and banks. In rural areas, the term is more broadly construed, apparently including the flow and direction of diffused surface waters. Chamberlin v. Claffoni, 373 Pa. 430, 436, 437, 96 A.2d 140, 143. See also Water (Water rights).

Dram. A drink of some substance containing alcohol; something which can produce intoxication. An apothecary system measurement of fluid, roughly equivalent to 4 or 5 cc, or one teaspoonful.

Dram Shop Acts. Many states have Dram Shop or Civil Liability Acts which impose liability on the seller of intoxicating liquors (which may or may not include beer), when a third party is injured as a result of the intoxication of the buyer where the sale has caused or contributed to such intoxication. Some acts apply to gifts as well as sales. Such acts protect the third party not only against injuries resulting directly from affirmative acts of the intoxicated man, such as resulting from negligent operation of vehicle or assault and battery, but also against the loss of family support due to injuries to the man himself.

Dram-shop. A drinking establishment where liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises; a bar or saloon.

Dram, v. To draw a firearm or deadly weapon is to point it intentionally. To draw a bead on; to bring into line with the bead or fore sight of a rifle and the hind sight; to aim at.

To draw a bill of exchange, check, or draft, is to write (or cause it to be written) and sign it; to make, as a note.

To compose and write out in due form, as, a deed, complaint, petition, memorial, etc.

To draw a jury is to select the persons who are to compose it, either by taking their names successively, but at hazard, from the jury box, or by summoning them individually to attend the court.

In old criminal practice, to drag (on a hurdle) to the place of execution. Anciently no hurdle was allowed, but the criminal was actually dragged along the road to the place of execution. A part of the ancient punishment of traitors was to be thus drawn. 4 Bl.Comm. 92, 377.

To withdraw money; i.e., to take out money from a bank, treasury, or other depository in the exercise of a lawful right and in a lawful manner. To periodically advance money on a construction loan agreement. See also Drawing account.
Drifts of the forest. In old English law, a view or examination of what cattle were in a forest, chase, etc., that it could be known whether such be charged or not; and whose the beasts were, and whether they were commonable. These drifts were made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest, when all cattle were driven into some pound or place inclosed, for the before-mentioned purposes, and also to discover whether any cattle of strangers be there, which ought not to common.

Drift-stuff. This term signifies, not goods which are the subject of salvage, but matters floating at random, without any known or discoverable ownership, which, if cast ashore, will probably never be reclaimed, but will, as a matter of course, accrue to the riparian proprietor.

Drinking-shop. A place where intoxicating liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises; a bar or saloon.

Drip. A species of easement or servitude obligating one man to permit the water falling from another man’s house to fall upon his own land.

Drive-it-yourself cars. A term used to describe automobiles which their owners, as a regular business, rent out for hire without furnishing drivers. More commonly termed “rental” or “leased” cars.

Driver. A person actually doing driving, whether employed by owner to drive or driving his own vehicle.

Driver’s license. The certificate or license issued by a state which authorizes a person to operate a motor vehicle. Generally, a written and driving examination is required for obtaining such.

Driving. To urge forward under guidance, compel to go in a particular direction, urge onward, and direct the course of.

Driving while intoxicated (DWI). An offense committed by one who operates a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or drugs. A showing of complete intoxication is not required. State statutes specify levels of blood alcohol content at which a person is presumed to be under the influence of intoxicating liquor. See Consent (Implied consent); Drunk-o-meter.

Drofland /dròflænd/. In old English law, a quit rent, or yearly payment, formerly made by some tenants to the king, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets.

Droit Fr. /dr(w)ó/, Engl. /dróyt/. In French law, right, justice, equity, law, the whole body of law; also a right. This term exhibits the same ambiguity which is discoverable in the German equivalent, “recht” and the English word “right.” On the one hand, these terms answer to the Roman “jus,” and thus indicate law in the abstract, considered as the foundation of all rights, or the complex of underlying moral principles which impart the character of justice to all positive law, or give it an ethical content. Taken in this abstract sense, the terms may be adjectives, in which case they are equivalent to “just,” or nouns, in which case they may be paraphrased by the expressions “justice,” “morality,” or “equity.” On the other hand, they serve to point out a right; that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand, inherent in one person, and incident upon another. In the latter signification, droit (or recht or right) is the correlative of “duty” or “obligation.” In the former sense, it may be considered as opposed to wrong, injustice, or the absence of law. Droit has the further ambiguity that it is sometimes used to denote the existing body of law considered as one whole, or the sum total of a number of individual laws taken together. See Jus; Recht; Right.

A person was said to have droit droit, plural juris, and plurimum possessionis, when he had the freehold, the fee, and the property in him.

In old English law, law; right; a writ of right. Autre droit. The right of another.

Droit-close /dròyt klówəs/. An ancient writ, directed to the lord of ancient demesne on behalf of those of his tenants who held their lands and tenements by charter in fee-simple, in fee-tail, for life, or in dower.

Droit common /dróyt kóman/. The common law.

Droit coutumier /dròwó kútwywūmyēy/. Common law.

Droit d’accession /dròwó daksésyôwn/. That property which is acquired by making a new species out of the material of another. It is equivalent to the Roman “specificatio.”

Droit d’accroissement /dròwó dakra(o)wásmón/. The right which an heir or legatee has of combining with his own interest in a succession the interest of a coheir or colegatee who either refuses to or cannot accept his interest.

Droit d’aubaine /dròwó dówb(y)n/. A rule by which all the property of a deceased foreigner, whether movable or immovable, was confiscated to the use of the state, to the exclusion of his heirs, whether claiming ab intestato or under a will of the deceased. Finally abolished in 1819.

Droit de bris /dròwó dabrìy/. A right formerly claimed by the lords of the coasts of certain parts of France, to shipwrecks, by which not only the property, but the persons of those who were cast away, were confiscated for the prince who was lord of the coast. Otherwise called “droit de bris sur le naufrage.” This right prevailed chiefly in Bretagne, and was solemnly abrogated by Henry III as duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Guienne, in a charter granted A.D. 1226, preserved among the rolls at Bordeaux.

Droit de détraction /dròwó dà déytrakšyôwn/. A tax upon the removal from one state or country to another of property acquired by succession or testamentary disposition; it does not cover a tax upon the succession to or transfer of property. Cf. Duties of detraction.

Droit de garde /dròwó dà gârd/. In French feudal law, right of ward. The guardianship of the estate and person of a noble was vassal, to which the king, during his minority, was entitled.

Droit de gite /dròwó dà zhiyê/. In French feudal law, the duty incumbent on a roturier, holding lands within the royal domain, of supplying board and lodging to the king and to his suite while on a royal progress.
Droit de greffe /drôw dɔ grɛf/. In old French law, the right of selling various offices connected with the custody of judicial records or notarial acts. A privilege of the French kings.

Droit de maîtrise /drôw d(ɔ) meytrîz/. In old French law, a charge payable to the crown by any one who, after having served his apprenticeship in any commercial guild or brotherhood, sought to become a master workman in it on his own account.

Droit de naufrage /drôw d(ɔ) nowfrâzh/. The right of a seigneur, who owns the seashore, or the king, when a vessel is wrecked, to take possession of the wreckage and to kill the crew or sell them as slaves.

Droit de prise /drôw d(ɔ) priyz/. In French feudal law, the duty (incumbent on a roturier) of supplying to the king on credit, during a certain period, such articles of domestic consumption as might be required for the royal household.

Droit de quint /drôw d kàn(t)/. In French feudal law, a relief payable by a noble vassal to the king as his seigneur, on every change in the ownership of his fief.

Droit de suite /drôw dœ swîy/. The right of a creditor to pursue the debtor's property into the hands of third persons for the enforcement of his claim.

Droit d'exécution /drôw dëksyekyûwsyöynn/. The right of a stockbroker to sell the securities bought by him for account of a client, if the latter does not accept delivery thereof. The same expression is also applied to the sale by a stockbroker of securities deposited with him by his client, in order to guaranty the payment of operations for which the latter has given instructions.

Droit-droit. A double right; that is, the right of possession and the right of property. These two rights were, by the theory of our ancient law, distinct; and the above phrase was used to indicate the concurrence of both in one person, which concurrence was necessary to constitute a complete title to land.

Droit écrit /drôw ekyri/. In French law, the written law. The Roman civil law, or Corpus Juris Civils.

Droit international /drôw ënternûsəwnn/. International law.

Droit maritime /drôw marïtyîm/. Maritime law.

Droit moral. Non-pecuniary right based upon the dual relationship between society and its artists, and the artist and his work.

Droit naturel /drôw natyurã/. The law of nature.

Droit ne done plus que soit demande /drôw nɔ dɔn pwî j ksw dëymôndã/. The law gives not more than is demanded.

Droit ne poet pas mourir /drôw nɔ pyûw pà mouri/. Right cannot die.

Droits civils /drôw sivil/. This phrase in French law denotes private rights, the exercise of which is independent of the status (qualité) of citizen. Foreigners enjoy them; and the extent of that enjoyment is determined by the principle of reciprocity. Conversely, foreigners may be sued on contracts made by them in France.

Droits of admiralty /drolûts av ëdmûralti/. Rights or perquisites of the admiralty. A term applied to goods found derelict at sea. Applied also to property captured in time of war by non-commissioned vessels of a belligerent nation. In England, it has been usual in maritime wars for the government to seize and condemn, as droits of admiralty, the property of an enemy found in her ports at the breaking out of hostilities. The power to exercise such a right has not been delegated to, nor has it ever been claimed by, the United States government.

Droitual /drôytcharã/. What belongs of right; relating to right; as real actions are either droitual or possessory,—droitual when the plaintiff seeks to recover the property.

Dromones, dromos, dromunda /dramôwniyz, ðrówmw, dramänd/. These were at first high ships of great burden, but afterwards those which we now call "men-of-war."

Drop. In English practice, when the members of a court are equally divided on the argument showing cause against a rule nisi, no order is made, i.e., the rule is neither discharged nor made absolute, and the rule is said to drop. In practice, there being a right to appeal, it has been usual to make an order in one way, the junior judge withdrawing his judgment.

Drop-letter. A letter addressed for delivery in the same city or district in which it is posted.

Drop shipment delivery. Shipment of goods directly from manufacturer to dealer or consumer rather than first to wholesaler, though wholesaler still earns profit because he took order for such.

Drop shipper. Type of wholesaler described above.

Drove. A number of animals collected and driven together in a body; a flock or herd of cattle in process of being driven, indefinite as to number, but including at least several.

Drover's pass. A free pass given by a railroad company, accepting a drove of cattle for transportation, to the drover who accompanies and cares for the cattle on the train.

Drug. An article intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in man or other animals and any article other than food intended to affect the structure or any function of the body of man or other animals. 21 U.S.C.A. § 321(g)(1). The general name of substances used in medicine; any substance, vegetable, animal, or mineral, used in the composition or preparation of medicines; any substance used as a medicine. See Controlled Substance Acts.

Drug abuse. State of chronic or periodic intoxication detrimental to the individual and to society, produced by the repeated consumption of a drug, natural or synthetic. See also Drug dependence.

The voluntary, habitual, and excessive use of drugs is a ground for divorce in many states.

Drug addict. A person subject to drug abuse. See Drug abuse; Drug dependence.

Drug dependence. Habituation to, abuse of, and/or addiction to a chemical substance.
Drugless healer. Any person who practises or holds himself out in any way as practising the treatment of any ailment, disease, defect, or disability of the human body by manipulation, adjustment, manual or electrotherapy, or by any similar method. State v. Houch, 32 Wash.2d 681, 203 P.2d 693, 699. See Chiropractor.

Drum. A term applied to commercial agents who travel for wholesale merchants and supply the retail trade with goods or take orders for goods to be shipped to the retail dealer. Term most commonly refers to traveling salesmen. See also Commercial traveler.

Drungarius /drʌŋɡəriəs/. In old European law, the commander of a drungus, or band of soldiers. Applied also to a naval commander.

Drungus /drʌŋɡəs/. In old European law, a band of soldiers (globus militum).

Dry. Intoxicated. A person is "drunk" when he is so far under the influence of liquor that his passions are visibly excited or his judgment impaired, or when his brain is so far affected by liquor that his intelligence, sense-perceptions, judgment, continuity of thought or of ideas, speech, and coordination of volition with muscular action (or some of these faculties or processes) are impaired or not under normal control.

Dry, adj. In the vernacular, this term means desiccated or free from moisture; but, in legal use, it signifies formal or nominal, without imposing any duty or responsibility, or unfruitful, without bringing any profit or advantage; e.g. dry trust.

Dry, n. Term used to designate a person who is opposed to allowing the sale of intoxicating liquors; a prohibitionist, in contradistinction to a "wet," or anti-prohibitionist.

Dry-craft. Witchcraft; magic.

Dry exchange. In English law, a term formerly in use, said to have been invented for the purpose of disguising and covering usury; something being pretended to pass on both sides, whereas, in truth, nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called "dry."

Dry house clause. Provision in gas or oil well lease dealing with payment of rent in event of drilling a dry hole. Sunac Petroleum Corp. v. Parkes, Tex., 416 S.W.2d 798.

Dry mortgage. One which creates a lien on land for the payment of money, but does not impose any personal liability upon the mortgagor, collateral to or over and above the value of the premises.

Dry receivership. Receivership wherein there is no equity to be administered for general creditors, even if action is in statutory form.

Dry rent. Rent seek; a rent reserved without a clause of distress.

Dry state. State wherein sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited.

Dry trust. A passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee beyond turning over money or property to the cestui que trust.

Dual business. Such business must show units of substantial separateness and completeness, such as might be maintained as an independent business and capable of producing profit in and of themselves.

Dual citizenship. Status of citizens of United States who reside within a state; i.e., persons who are born or naturalized in the U.S. are citizens of the U.S. and the state wherein they reside.

Dual court system. Term descriptive of Federal and State court systems of United States.

Dual purpose doctrine. The dual purpose doctrine is that if the work of an employee creates a necessity for travel, he is in the course of his employment while doing that work even though at the same time he is serving some purpose of his own. Snowden v. Orschein Bros. Truck Lines, Inc., Mo.App., 446 S.W.2d 494, 496. Doctrine is that injury during trip which serves both business and personal purpose is within course of employment if trip involves performance of service for employer which would have caused trip to be taken by someone even if it had not coincided with personal journey. Stoskin v. Board of Ed. of Montgomery County, 11 Md.App. 355, 274 A.2d 397, 400.

Duarchy /djuəˈwɑːrkiə/. A form of government where two reign jointly.
DUBITANTE

Duas uxor/es eodem tempore habere non licet /d(y)uwas aksörizy iyöwdam témpariy habiri nôn láysat/. It is not lawful to have two wives at the same time. 1 Bl.Comm. 436.

Dubitante /d(y)uwb世界各地/. Doubting. Term is affixed to the name of a judge, in the reports, to signify that he doubted the decision rendered.

Dubitatur /d(y)uwbteydar/. It is doubted. A word frequently used in the reports to indicate that a point is considered doubtful.

Dubitavit /d(y)uwbteyvat/. Doubtful.

Ducat /däkst/. A foreign coin, varying in value in different countries.

Ducatus /däkstidas/. In feudal and old English law, a duchy, the dignity or territory of a duke.

Duces tecum /d(y)uwsiyz tiykm/. (Lat. Bring with you.) The name of certain species of writs, of which the subpoena duces tecum is the most usual, requiring a party who is summoned to appear in court to bring with him some document, piece of evidence, or other thing to be used or inspected by the court. See Subpoena.

Duces tecum licet languidus /d(y)uwsiyz tiykm láysat længwadas/. (Bring with you, although sick.) In practice, this ancient writ, now obsolete, directed to the sheriff, upon a return that he could not bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus (so sick); whereupon the court granted a habeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum licet languidus.

Duchy Court of Lancaster. A tribunal of special jurisdiction, held before the chancellor of the duchy, or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands holden of the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster; which is a thing very distinct from the county palatine (which has also its separate chancery, for sealing of writs, and the like), and comprises much territory which lies at a vast distance from it; as particularly a very large district surrounded by the city of Westminster. The proceedings in this court are the same as were those on the equity side of the court of chancery, held before the chancellor of the duchy, or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands holden of the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster, and includes not only the county, but also much territory at a distance from it, especially the Savoy in London and some land near Westminster. 3 Bl.Comm. 78.

Ducking-stool. See Castigatory.

Ducroire /dyuwkrwöhr/. In French law, guaranty; equivalent to del credere (which see).

Due. Just; proper; regular; lawful; sufficient; reasonable, as in the phrases “due care,” “due process of law,” “due notice.” Owing; payable; justly owed. That which one contracts to pay or perform to another; that which law or justice requires to be paid or done.

owed, or owing, as distinguished from payable. A debt is often said to be due from a person where he is the party owing it, or primarily bound to pay, whether the time for payment has or has not arrived. The same thing is true of the phrase “due and owing.” Payable. A bill or note is commonly said to be due when the time for payment of it has arrived.

The word “due” always imports a fixed and settled obligation or liability, but with reference to the time for its payment there is considerable ambiguity in the use of the term, the precise signification being determined in each case from the context. It may mean that the debt or claim in question is now (presently or immediately) matured and enforceable, or that it matured at some time in the past and yet remains unsatisfied, or that it is fixed and certain but the day appointed for its payment has not yet arrived. But commonly, and in the absence of any qualifying expressions, the word “due” is restricted to the first of these meanings, the second being expressed by the term “duevert,” and the third by the word “payable.”

Due and proper care. That degree of care which is required of one for prevention of the accident. See Due care.

Due and reasonable care. Care which reasonably prudent man would exercise under same or similar circumstances. See Due care.

Due bill. Written acknowledgment of a debt, or promise to pay. See I.O.U.

Due care. Just, proper, and sufficient care, so far as the circumstances demand it; the absence of negligence. That care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under the same or similar circumstances. Strickland v. Hughes, 2 N.C.App. 395, 163 S.E.2d 24, 26. “Due care” is care proportioned to any given situation, its surroundings, peculiarities, and hazards. It may and often does require extraordinary care. “Due care,” “reasonable care,” and “ordinary care” are often used as convertible terms.

Due consideration. To give such weight or significance to a particular factor as under the circumstances it seems to merit, and this involves discretion. United States ex rel. Maine Potato Growers & Shippers Ass’n v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 66 App. D.C. 398, 88 F.2d 780, 783. As regards sufficient consideration in contract law, see Consideration.

Due course holder. See Holder in due course.
Due course of law. This phrase is synonymous with "due process of law," or "the law of the land," and the general definition thereof is "law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice". See Due process of law.

Due date. In general, the particular day on or before which something must be done to comply with law or contractual obligation.

Due diligence. See Diligence.

Due influence. Influence obtained by persuasion and argument or by appeals to the affections. In re Chamberlain's Estate, Cal.App., 109 P.2d 449, 452. See also Coercion; Duress.

Duel. A duel is any combat with deadly weapons fought between two or more persons, by previous agreement or upon a previous quarrel.

Dueling. The fighting of two persons, one against the other, at an appointed time and place, upon a precedent quarrel. If death results, the crime is murder. It differs from an affray in that the latter occurs on a sudden quarrel, while the former is always the result of design.

Duellum /du-ylwm/. The trial by battel or judicial combat. See Battel.

Due notice. Sufficient, legally prescribed notice. Notice reasonably intended, and with the likelihood of, reaching the particular person or public. No fixed rule can be established as to what shall constitute "due notice." "Due" is a relative term, and must be applied to each case in the exercise of the discretion of the court in view of the particular circumstances. See Notice.

Due-on-sale clause. Provision in mortgage instrument allowing lender to call in a home loan when a house is sold, preventing its new buyer from paying off the balance of the old loan at a lower interest rate than what the buyer would pay on a newly issued mortgage. The validity of such provisions has been upheld by the Supreme Court.

Due posting. Stamping and placing letter in United States mail.

Due process clause. Two such clauses are found in the U.S. Constitution, one in the 5th Amendment pertaining to the federal government, the other in the 14th Amendment which protects persons from state actions. There are two aspects: procedural, in which a person is guaranteed fair procedures and substantive which protects a person's property from unfair governmental interference or taking. Similar clauses are in most state constitutions. See Due process of law.

Due process of law. Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice. Due process of law in each particular case means such an exercise of the powers of the government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs. A course of legal proceedings according to those rules and principles which have been established in our systems of jurisprudence for the enforcement and protection of private rights. To give such proceedings any validity, there must be a tribunal competent by its constitution—that is, by the law of its creation—to pass upon the subject-matter of the suit; and, if that involves merely a determination of the personal liability of the defendant, he must be brought within its jurisdiction by service of process within the state, or his voluntary appearance. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 733, 24 L.Ed. 565. Due process of law implies the right of the person affected thereby to be present before the tribunal which pronounces judgment upon the question of life, liberty, or property, in its most comprehensive sense; to be heard, by testimony or otherwise, and to have the right of controverting, by proof, every material fact which bears on the question of right in the matter involved. If any question of fact or liability be conclusively presumed against him, this is not due process of law.

An orderly proceeding wherein a person is served with notice, actual or constructive, and has an opportunity to be heard and to enforce and protect his rights before a court having power to hear and determine the case. Kazubowski v. Kazubowski, 45 Ill.2d 405, 259 N.E.2d 282, 290. Phrase means that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, property or of any right granted him by statute, unless matter involved first shall have been adjudicated against him upon trial conducted according to established rules regulating judicial proceedings, and it forbids condemnation without a hearing. Pettit v. Penn, La. App., 180 So.2d 66, 69. The concept of "due process of law" as it is embodied in Fifth Amendment demands that a law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious and that the means selected shall have a reasonable and substantial relation to the object being sought. U. S. v. Smith, D.C. Iowa, 249 F.Supp. 515, 516. Fundamental requisite of "due process" is the opportunity to be heard, to be aware that a matter is pending, to make an informed choice whether to acquiesce or contest, and to assert before the appropriate decision-making body the reasons for such choice. Trinity Episcopal Corp. v. Romney, D.C.N.Y., 387 F.Supp. 1044, 1084. Aside from all else, "due process" means fundamental fairness. Pinkerton v. Farr, W.Va., 220 S.E.2d 682, 687.

The essential elements of due process of law are notice and opportunity to be heard and to defend in orderly proceeding adapted to nature of case, and the guarantee of due process requires that every man have protection of day in court and benefit of general law. Di Maio v. Reid, 132 N.J.L. 17, 37 A.2d 829, 830. Daniel Webster defined this phrase to mean a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds on inquiry and renders judgment only after trial. Wichi­ta Council No. 120 of Security Ben. Ass'n v. Security Ben. Ass'n., 138 Kan. 841, 26 P.2d 976, 980; J. B. Barnes Drilling Co. v. Phillips, 166 Okl. 154, 26 P.2d 766. This constitutional guaranty demands only that law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious, and that means selected shall have real and substantial relation to object. Nebbia v. People of State of New York, N. Y., 291 U.S. 502, 54 S.Ct. 505, 78 L.Ed. 940; North American Co. v. Securities & Exchange Commission, C.C.A.2, 133 F.2d 148, 154. See also Procedural due process; Substantive due process.

Due process rights. All rights which are of such fundamental importance as to require compliance with due process standards of fairness and justice.

Due proof. Within insurance policy requirements, term means such a statement of facts, reasonably verified, as, if established in court, would prima facie require payment of the claim, and does not mean some par-
Due to. Person who has been ordained in accordance with the ceremonial, or discipline of a recognized church, religious sect, or religious organization, to teach and preach its doctrines and to administer its rites and ceremonies and public worship, and who customarily performs those duties.

Duly ordained minister of religion. Person who has been ordained in accordance with the ceremonial, ritual, or discipline of a recognized church, religious sect, or religious organization, to teach and preach its doctrines and to administer its rites and ceremonies and public worship, and who customarily performs those duties.

Duly qualified. Being "duly qualified" to fill an office, in the constitutional sense and in the ordinary acception of the words, means that the officer shall possess every qualification; that he shall in all respects comply with every requisite before entering on duties of the office; and that he shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution, and to perform the duties of the office with fidelity.

Dum /dám/. Lat. While; as long as; until; upon condition that; provided that.

Dumb-bidding. In sales at auction, when the minimum amount which the owner will take for the article is written on a piece of paper, and placed by the owner under an object, and it is agreed that no bidding shall avail unless equal to that, this is called "dumb-bidding."

Dumb bene se gesserit /dám biyíniy siy jésárát/. While he shall conduct himself well; during good behavior. Expressive of a tenure of office not dependent upon the pleasure of the appointing power, nor for a limited period, but terminable only upon the death or misconduct of the incumbent.

Due regard. Consideration in a degree appropriate to demands of the particular case.

Dues. Certain payments; rates or taxes. As applied to clubs and other membership organizations, refers to sums paid toward support and maintenance of same and as a requisite to retain membership.

Due to. Expressions "sustained by," "caused by," "due to," "resulting from," "sustained by means of," "sustained in consequence of," and "sustained through" have been held to be synonymous.

Duke. In English law, is a title of nobility, ranking immediately next to the Prince of Wales. It is only a title of dignity. Conferring it does not give any domain, territory, or jurisdiction over the place whence the title is taken. Duchess, the consort of a duke.

Duke of Exeter's Daughter. The name of a rack in the Tower, so called after a minister of Henry VI, who sought to introduce it into England.

Dulocracy /d(y)yüvlókrásiy/. A government where servants and slaves have so much license and privilege that they dominate.

Duly. In due or proper form or manner; according to legal requirements. Regularly; properly; suitable; upon a proper foundation, as distinguished from mere form; according to law in both form and substance. See Due process of law.

Duly ordained minister of religion. Person who has been ordained in accordance with the ceremonial, ritual, or discipline of a recognized church, religious sect, or religious organization, to teach and preach its doctrines and to administer its rites and ceremonies and public worship, and who customarily performs those duties.

Duly qualified. Being "duly qualified" to fill an office, in the constitutional sense and in the ordinary acception of the words, means that the officer shall possess every qualification; that he shall in all respects comply with every requisite before entering on duties of the office; and that he shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution, and to perform the duties of the office with fidelity.

Dump /düm/. To put or throw down with more or less of violence; to unload. To drop down; to deposit something in a heap or unshaped mass. To sell abroad at less than price sold at home. See Dumping Act.

Dumping Act. A law passed in 1974 to regulate the practice of dumping, or the export of goods at a price below their cost of production, with the intention of driving foreign competitors out of the market. The act allows the government to impose tariffs or other restrictions on goods dumped in the United States.
Dumping. The act of selling in quantity at a very low price or practically regardless of the price; also, selling goods abroad at less than the market price at home. See Dumping Act.

The act of forcing a product such as cotton on the market during the short gathering season.

Dumping Act. Federal law which provides that the Secretary of Treasury is required to notify U.S. Tariff Commission whenever he determines that foreign merchandise is being or is likely to be sold in U.S. or elsewhere at less than its fair value and Tariff Commission shall determine the injury to U.S. industry. If such imports are determined to be injurious to domestic sales of like products, such imports may be ordered stopped. 19 U.S.C.A. § 160.

Dum recens fuit maleficium dum sola fuerit, while the offense was fresh. A term employed in the old law of appeal of rape.

Dum sola /dɜːm səʊlə/ While sole, or single. Dum sola et casta viseret, while she lives single and chaste. Words of limitation in old conveyances. Also applied generally to an unmarried woman in connection with something that was or might be done during that condition.

Duopoly /dʒʊˈpəʊli/. A condition in the market in which there are only two producers or sellers of a given product.

Duorum in solidum dominium vel possessio esse non potest /dʌˈruər ɪn ˈsɒldəm ˈdəʊminjuːm vɛl pəˈzɛʃ(ə)ˈwɔrəm iŋ ˈsɒlədəm ˈdəʊminjuːm ˈvɛl pəˈzɛʃ(ə)ˈwɔrəm/. Ownership or possession in entirety cannot be in two persons of the same thing.

Duosony /dʒʊˈsuːni/. A condition of the market in which there are only two buyers of a given product.

Duo sunt instrumenta ad omnes res aut confirmandas aut impugnardas, ratio et authoritas /djuəˈsuːnt ɪnˈstərmentə əd ˈɔmɨnəs ˈriːs əʊt kəmˈfɜːrnəndəs əʊt ɪmˈpʌgnəndəs, ˈreɪʃ(ə)ˈwɔrət ət əˈʊthərətəs/. There are two instruments for confirming or impugning all things.—reason and authority.

Dupla /dʒʊˈpla/. In the civil law, double the price of a thing.

Duplex house. A dwelling which has accommodations for two families, without regard to whether such accommodations are identical or not. The units may be either adjacent to each other or on separate floors.

Duplex querela /dʒʊˈpleks ˈkwərələ/. A double complaint. An ecclesiastical proceeding, which is in the nature of an appeal. See Double complaint.

Duplex valor maritigil /dʒʊˈpleks ˈvɔrəl ˈmærətɪdʒɪl/. In old English law, double the value of the marriage. While an infant was in ward, the guardian had the power of tendering him or her a suitable match, without disparagement, which if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage to their guardian, that is, so much as a jury would assess or any one would give to the guardian for such an alliance; and, if the infants married themselves without the guardian's consent, they forfeited double the value of the marriage. 2 Bl.Comm. 70.

Duplicate, v. To double, repeat, copy, make, or add a thing exactly like a preceding one; reproduce exactly.

Duplicate, n. A “duplicate” is a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography, including enlargements and miniatures, or by mechanical or electronic re-recording, or by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduces the original. Fed.R.Evid. 1001.

That which exactly resembles or corresponds to something else; another, correspondent to the first; hence, a copy; transcript; counterpart; an original instrument repeated; a document the same as another in essential particulars. The term is also frequently used to signify a new original, made to take the place of an instrument that has been lost or destroyed, and to have the same force and effect. See also Copy.

In England, the ticket given by a pawnbroker to the pawn of a chattel.

Duplicate taxation. See Double taxation.

Duplicate will. A term used where a testator executes two copies of his will, one to keep himself, and the other to be deposited with another person. Upon application for probate of a duplicate will, both copies must be deposited in the registry of the court of probate. The execution of duplicate wills is undesirable because if the testator desires to revoke his will, he must be careful to comply with the laws of revocation as to both wills. See also Reciprocal wills.

Duplicatio /d(y)úwplá̱kéysh(í)yow/. In the civil law, the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication; corresponding to the rejoinder of the common law.

Duplicationem possibilitatis lex non patitur /d(y)úwplá̱kéyshiónómn pósósbáli̱tédás léḵs nón tó̱̱lsár/. The law does not allow the doubling of a possibility.

Duplicatum jus /d(y)úwplá̱kéyshám jás/. Double right.

Duplicitous /d(y)úwpli̱sásás/. A pleading which joins in one and the same count different grounds of action of different nature, or of the same nature, to enforce a single right to recovery, or which is based on different theories of the defendant's liability. Such duplicity was not permitted in common law pleading, but is allowed under Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e). In an information, the joinder of separate and distinct offenses in one and the same count. State v. Seward, 163 Kan. 136, 181 P.2d 478, 480. See Duplicity.

Duplicitous appeal. Appeal from two separate judgments or from judgment and order or from two independent orders, both of which are appealable. City of Duncan v. Abrams, 171 Okl. 619, 43 P.2d 720, 723.

Duplicity. The technical fault in common law pleading of uniting two or more causes of action in one count in a writ, or two or more grounds of defense in one plea, or two or more breaches in a replication, or two or more offenses in the same count of an indictment, or two or more incongruous subjects in one legislative act, or two or more controverted ultimate issues submitted in a single special issue. Such duplicity of pleading in civil actions is permitted under Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e).

Rule of "duplicity" prohibits the simultaneous charging of several distinct, unrelated crimes in one indictment. Mechling v. Stayton, D.C.Va., 361 F.Supp. 770, 772.

Deliberate deception or double dealing.

Durable leases. Leases reserving a rent payable annually, with right of re-entry for nonpayment of the same, and for the term "as long as grass grows or water runs," or equivalent terms.

Dura mater /d(y)úра má̱yédár/. The tough, membranous, outer covering of the brain and spinal cord.

Durante /d(y)ará̱ntiy/. Lat. During. A word of limitation in old conveyances.

Durante absenitia /d(y)ará̱ntiy abé̱nsh(y)ía/. During absence. In some jurisdictions, administration of a decedent’s estate is said to be granted durante absenitia in cases where the absence of the proper proponents of the will, or of an executor, delays or imperils the settlement of the estate.

Duress. Duress consists in any illegal imprisonment, or legal imprisonment used for an illegal purpose, or threats of bodily or other harm, or other means amounting to or tending to coerce the will of another, and actually inducing him to do an act contrary to his free will. Heider v. Unicume, 142 Or. 410, 20 P.2d 384, 385. Duress may also include the same injuries, threats, or restraint exercised upon the man's wife, child, or parent. Distinguishable from undue influence because in the latter, the wrongdoer is generally in a fiduciary capacity or in a position of trust and confidence with respect to the victim of the undue influence.

A condition where one is induced by wrongful act or threat of another to make contract under circumstances which deprive him of exercise of his free will. Hyde v. Lewis, 25 Ill.App.3d 495, 323 N.E.2d 533, 537. Includes any conduct which overpowers will and coerces or constrains performance of an act which otherwise would not have been performed. Williams v. Rentz Banking Co., 112 Ga.App. 384, 145 S.E.2d 256, 258.

As a defense to a civil action, it must be pleaded affirmatively. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c).

One who, under the pressure of an unlawful threat from another human being to harm him (or to harm a third person), commits what would otherwise be a crime may, under some circumstances, be justified in doing what he did and thus not be guilty of the crime in question.

See also Coercion; Extortion; Undue influence.

Duress of goods. Where the act consists of a tortious seizure or detention of property from the person entitled to it, and requires some act as a condition for its surrender, the act is "duress of goods". Sistrum v. Anderson, 51 Cal.App.2d 213, 124 P.2d 372, 376.

Duress of imprisonment. The wrongful imprisonment of a person, or the illegal restraint of his liberty, in order to compel him to do some act. 1 Bl.Comm. 130, 131, 136, 137.
Duressor /d(y)arəsər/. One who subjects another to duress; one who compels another to do a thing, as by menace.

Duress per minas /d(y)ərəs pər máynəs/. Duress by threats. The use of threats and menace to compel a person, by the fear of death, or grievous bodily harm, as mayhem or loss of limb, to do some lawful act, or to commit a misdemeanor. 1 Bl.Comm. 130; 4 Bl. Comm. 30. See Metus.

Durham /dəhərm/. A county palatine in England, the jurisdiction of which was vested in the Bishop of Durham until the statute 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 19 vested it as a separate franchise and royalty in the crown. The jurisdiction of the Durham Court of Pleas was transferred to the Supreme Court of Judicature by the Judicature Act of 1873.

Durham rule. The irresistible impulse test of criminal responsibility. The rule states that when there is some evidence that the accused suffered from a diseased or defective mental condition at the time the unlawful act was committed the accused is not criminally responsible if it is found beyond a reasonable doubt that the act was the product of such mental abnormality. Durham v. United States, C.A.D.C., 214 F.2d 862, 875.

Under the Durham Rule, to find a defendant not guilty by reason of insanity or mental irresponsibility, the jury must find (1) that he was suffering from a diseased or defective mental condition at the time of the commission of the act charged and (2) that there was a causal relation between such disease or defective condition and the act. State v. Jones, 84 Wash.2d 823, 529 P.2d 1040, 1044. See also Insanity.

During. Throughout the course of; throughout the continuance of; in the time of; after the commencement and before the expiration of. Continental Bank & Trust Co. of N. Y. v. Chemical Bank & Trust Co., 51 N.Y.S.2d 903, 909.

During good behavior. While defendant, whose sentence had been suspended, was obedient to the state law.

During the hours of service. Working-hours plus reasonable periods for ingress and egress. See also Course of employment.

During the trial. Period beginning with swearing of jury and ending with rendition of verdict. Period commencing with presentation of indictment by grand jury to court and terminating with final judgment.

Dustuck /dʌstək/. A term used in Hindostan for a passport, permit, or order from the English East Indian Company. It generally meant a permit under their seal exempting goods from the payment of duties.

DUTY OF TONNAGE

Duties. In its most usual significations this word is the synonym of imposts or customs; i.e. tax on imports; but it is sometimes used in a broader sense, as including all manner of taxes, charges, or governmental impositions. See also Customs; Most favored nation clause; Tariff; Toll; Tonnage duty.

Duties on imports /d(y)əwdiyəz ən ɪmˈpɔːrts/. This term signifies not merely a duty on the act of importation, but a duty on the thing imported. It is not confined to a duty levied while the article is entering the country, but extends to a duty levied after it has entered the country.

Duty. A human action which is exactly conformable to the laws which require us to obey them. Legal or moral obligation. Obligatory conduct or service. Mandatory obligation to perform. Huey v. King, 220 Tenn. 189, 415 S.W.2d 136. See also Obligation.

A thing due; that which is due from a person; that which a person owes to another. An obligation to do a thing. A word of more extensive signification than "debt," although both are expressed by the same Latin word "debitum." Sometimes, however, the term is used synonymously with debt.

Those obligations of performance, care, or observance which rest upon a person in an official or fiduciary capacity; as the duty of an executor, trustee, manager, etc.

In negligence cases term may be defined as obligation, to which law will give recognition and effect, to conform to particular standard of conduct toward another. Rasmussen v. Prudential Ins. Co., 277 Minn. 266, 152 N.W.2d 359, 362. The word "duty" is used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that the actor is required to conduct himself in a particular manner at the risk that if he does not do so he becomes subject to liability to another to whom the duty is owed for any injury sustained by such other, of which that actor's conduct is a legal cause. Restatement, Second, Torts § 4. See also Care; Due care.

In its use in jurisprudence, this word is the correlative of right. Thus, wherever there exists a right in any person, there also rests a corresponding duty upon some other person or upon all persons generally.

It also denotes a tax or impost due to the government upon the importation or exportation of goods. See also Customs; Tariff; Toll; Tonnage duty.

See also Legal duty; Obligation.

Judicial duty. See Judicial.

Duty of tonnage. A charge upon a vessel as an instrument of commerce for entering, lying in or leaving a port, and includes all taxes and duties, regardless of name or form. Marine Lighterage Corporation v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., 139 Misc. 612, 248 N.Y.S. 71, 72.
DUTY OF WATER

Duty of water. Such a quantity of water necessary when economically conducted and applied to land without unnecessary loss as will result in the successful growing of crops.

Duty to act. Obligation to take some action to prevent harm to another and for failure of which there may or may not be liability in tort depending upon the circumstances and the relationship of the parties to each other. See Emergency doctrine; Humanitarian doctrine.

Duumviri /dyuwəmˈvɪrə/ (From duo, two, and viri, men.) A general appellation among the ancient Romans, given to any magistrates elected in pairs to fill any office, or perform any function.

Duumviri municipales were two annual magistrates in the towns and colonies, having judicial powers.

Duumviri navales were officers appointed to man, equip, and refit the navy.

Dux /dʊks/. A military governor of a province. A military officer having charge of the borders or frontiers of the empire, called "dux limitis." At this period, the word began to be used as a title of honor or dignity.

In Roman law, a leader or military commander. The commander of an army.

In feudal and old European law, duke; a title of honor, or order of nobility. 1 Bl.Comm. 397.

Dwell. To have an abode; to reside; to inhabit; to live in a place. More than mere physical presence is sometimes required. It must be in conformity with law.

Kaplan v. Tod, 267 U.S. 228, 45 S.Ct. 257, 69 L.Ed. 585. To delay, to pause or linger. To abide as a permanent residence or for a time. Term is synonymous with inhabit, live, sojourn, reside, stay, rest. See also Domicile; Residence.

Dwelling. The house or other structure in which a person or persons live; a residence; abode; habitation; the apartment or building, or group of buildings, occupied by a family as a place of residence. Structure used as place of habitation.

In conveyancing, includes all buildings attached to or connected with the house. In criminal law (e.g. burglary), means a building or portion thereof, a tent, a vehicle or other enclosed space which is used or intended for use as a human habitation, home or residence.

Dwelling defense. In most jurisdictions, a person in his dwelling is permitted to use even deadly force to protect himself, his household and the house itself from attack on the principle that a person's house is his castle. State v. Couch, 52 N.M. 127, 193 P.2d 405.

D.W.I. In genealogical tables, a common abbreviation for "died without issue." Also, abbreviation for offense of "driving while intoxicated (q.v.)."

Dyer Act. National Motor Vehicle Theft Act (1919) which makes it a criminal offense to transport a stolen motor vehicle in interstate or foreign commerce knowing it to be stolen or to receive or conceal such a motor vehicle in interstate or foreign commerce knowing it to be stolen, though knowledge of its interstate transportation is not essential to guilt. Odom v. U. S., C.A.Fla., 377 F.2d 853. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2312.

Dying declaration. See Declaration.

Dying without issue. Dying without a child either before or after the decedent's death. At common law this phrase imports an indefinite failure of issue, and not a dying without issue surviving at the time of the death of the first taker. But this rule has been changed in many decisions, with many states having held that the expression "dying without issue," and like expressions, have reference to the time of the death of the party, and not to an indefinite failure of issue. See also Failure of issue.

Dying without children imports not a failure of issue at any indefinite future period, but a leaving no children at the death of the legatee. The law favors vesting of estates, and limitation such as "dying without issue," refers to a definite period, fixed in will, rather than to an indefinite failure of issue. Where context is such as to show clearly that testator intended the phrase "die without issue" to mean that, if first taker die without issue during life of testator, the second taker shall stand in his place and prevent a lapse, the words "die without issue" are taken to mean death during life of testator. Martin v. Raff, 114 Ind.App. 507, 52 N.E.2d 839, 845.

Dynamite instruction. Further instruction given by the trial judge to jury when the jury have reported their inability to agree on a verdict in a criminal case. In the further instructions, the judge advises them of their obligation to consider the opinions of their fellow jurors and to yield their own views where possible.

Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492, 17 S.Ct. 154, 41 L.Ed. 528. This type of jury instruction (also called "Allen charge") is prohibited in certain states; e.g. California, People v. Gainer, 19 Cal.3d 835, 566 P.2d 997, 139 Cal.Rptr. 861. See also Allen charge.

Dynasty /dəˈnæstɪ/; /dɪˈnæstɪ/. A succession of rules in the same line or family. Powerful and influential group or family which continues in existence for a considerable time.

Dysnomia /diːˈnɒmɪə/; /ˈdɪnəmɪə/. Bad legislation; the enactment of bad laws.

Dyspareunia /ˌdɪspəˈrjuːniə/. Incapacity of a woman to sustain the act of sexual intercourse except with great difficulty and pain; anaphrodisia.
E.

As an abbreviation, this letter may stand for “Exchequer,” “English,” “Edward,” “Equity,” “East,” “Eastern,” “Easter,” or “Ecclesiastical.” A Latin preposition, meaning from, out of, after, or according. It occurs in many Latin phrases; but (in this form) only before a consonant.

Ea.

Sax. The water or river; also the mouth of a river on the shore between high and low water-mark.

Each.

A distributive adjective pronoun, which denotes or refers to every one of the persons or things mentioned; every one of two or more persons or things, composing the whole, separately considered. The effect of this word, used in the covenants of a bond, is to create a several obligation. The word “any” is equivalent to “each.” Conerty v. Richtsteig, 308 Ill. App. 321, 31 N.E.2d 351.

Eadem causa diversis rationibus coram judicibus ecclesiasticis et secularibus ventilatur.

The same cause is argued upon different principles before ecclesiastical and secular judges.

Eadem est ratio, eadem est lex.

The same reason, the same law.

Eadem mens presumitur regis que est juris et que esse debet, presertim in dubilis.

The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be coincident with that of the law, and with that which it ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters.

Ea est accipienda interpretatio, que vitio caret.

That interpretation is to be received [or adopted] which is free from fault [or wrong]. The law will not intend a wrong.

Eagle.

A gold coin of the United States of the value of ten dollars.

Ea intentione.

With that intent. Held not to make a condition, but a confidence and trust.

Ealdorman /ˈɛldərˌmæn/, or ealdorman /ˈəldərˌmæn/. The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman; analogous to earl among the Danes, and senator among the Romans. See Alderman.

Ealdor-bishop /ˈɛldərbɪʃəp/. An archbishop.

Ealdorburg /ˈɛldərbɜːrg/. Sax. The metropolis; the chief city. Obsolete.

Ea que, commendandi causa, in venditionibus dicuntur, si palam apparent, venditorem non obligant.

Those things which are said on sales, in the way of commendation, if [the qualities of the thing sold] appear openly, do not bind the seller.

Ea que dari impossibilia sunt, vel que in rerum natura non sunt, pro non adjectis habentur.

Those things which are impossible to be given, or which are not in the nature of things, are regarded as not added [as no part of an agreement].

Ea quod in curia nostra rite acta sunt debent executioni demandari debent.

Those things which are properly transacted in our court ought to be committed to a due execution.

Ea quod raro accidunt non temere in agendis negotiis computantur.

Those things which rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business without sufficient reason.

Earl.

A title of nobility, formerly the highest in England, now the third, ranking between a marquis and a viscount, and corresponding with the French “comte” and the German “Graf.” The title originated with the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage. William the Conqueror first made this title hereditary, giving it in fee to his nobles; and allotting them for the support of their state the third penny out of all pleas of the shire, whence they had their ancient title “shiremen.” At present the title is accompanied by no territory, private or judicial rights, but merely confers nobility and an hereditary seat in the house of lords.

Earldom. The dignity or jurisdiction of an earl. The dignity only remains now, as the jurisdiction has been given over to the sheriff. 1 Bl.Comm. 339.

Earles-penny, or earl’s penny. Money given in part payment. See Earnest.

Earlier maturity rule. The rule under which bonds first maturing are entitled to priority when sale of security is not sufficient to satisfy all obligations. Scherk v. Newton, C.C.A.Colo., 152 F.2d 747, 749.

Earl Marshal of England. A great officer of state who had anciently several courts under his jurisdiction, as the court of chivalry and the court of honor. Under him is the herald’s office, or college of arms. He was also a judge of the Marshalsea court, now abolished. This office is of great antiquity, and has been for several ages hereditary in the family of the Howards. 3 Bl.Comm. 68, 103.

Ear-mark. A mark put upon a thing to distinguish it from another. Originally and literally, a mark upon the ear; a mode of marking sheep and other animals.

Property is said to be ear-marked when it can be identified or distinguished from other property of the same nature.

To set apart from others.

Money has no ear-mark, but it is an ordinary term for a privy mark made by any one on a coin.

Ear-mark rule. Rule that through the process of commingling money or deposit with the funds of a bank it loses its identity, with the resultant effect of defeating the right of preference over general creditors.

Earn. To acquire by labor, service or performance. Hartford Electric Light Co. v. McLaughlin, 131 Conn. 1, 37 A.2d 361, 363. To merit or deserve.

Earned income. Income (e.g. wages, salaries, or fees) derived from labor, professional service, or entrepreneurship as opposed to income derived from invested capital (e.g. rents, dividends, interest). The distinction, however, for tax purposes has lost much of its original importance. See also Earnings; Income.

Earned income credit. A refundable tax credit on earned income up to a certain amount for low income workers who maintain a household for dependent children. The amount of credit is reduced on a dollar for dollar basis if earned income (or adjusted gross income) is greater than such amount.

Earned premium. In insurance, that portion of the premium properly allocable to policy period which has expired. An “earned premium” is difference between premium paid by insured and portion returnable to him by insurance company on cancellation of policy during its term. Price v. Guaranty Nat. Ins. Co., Okl., 456 P.2d 108, 111.

Earned surplus. That species of surplus which has been generated from profits as contrasted with paid-in surplus. Term relates to net accumulation of profits; it is a part of surplus that represents net earnings, gains or profits, after deduction of all losses, but has not been distributed as dividends, or transferred to stated capital or capital surplus, or applied to other purposes permitted by law. Conine v. Leikam, Okl., 570 P.2d 1156, 1160.

Earn. One whose personal efforts produce income (e.g. wage earner) or who owns property which produces it, or combination of both. Wells v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Min., 63 F.2d 425, 430.

Earnest. The payment of a part of the price of goods sold, or the delivery of part of such goods, for the purpose of binding the contract. A token or pledge passing between the parties, by way of evidence, or ratification of the sale. See Earnest money.

Earnest money. A sum of money paid by a buyer at the time of entering a contract to indicate the intention and ability of the buyer to carry out the contract. Normally such earnest money is applied against the purchase price. Often the contract provides for forfeiture of this sum if the buyer defaults. A deposit of part payment of purchase price on sale to be consummated in future. McGuire v. Andre, 259 Ala. 109, 65 So.2d 185, 190. Import of term “earnest money” in real estate contract is that when comparatively small sum is paid down, it is an assurance that party is in earnest and good faith and that if his being in earnest and good faith fails, it will be forfeited. Mortenson v. Financial Growth, Inc., 23 Utah 2d 54, 456 P.2d 181, 184.

Earning capacity. Term refers to capability of worker to sell his labor or services in any market reasonably accessible to him, taking into consideration his general physical functional impairment resulting from his accident, any previous disability, his occupation, age at time of injury, nature of injury and his wages prior to and after the injury. Sims v. Industrial Commision, 10 Ariz.App. 574, 460 P.2d 1003, 1006. Term does not necessarily mean the actual earnings that one who suffers an injury was making at the time the injuries were sustained, but refers to that which, by virtue of the training, the experience, and the business acumen possessed, an individual is capable of earning.

Fitness, readiness and willingness to work, considered in connection with opportunity to work.

Earning power. See Earning capacity.

Earnings. Income. That which is earned; i.e. money earned from performance of labor, services, sale of goods, etc. The price of services performed; the reward from labor or the price received for personal services, whether in money or chattels. The fruit or reward of labor; the fruits of the proper skill, experience, and industry; the gains of a person derived from his services or labor without the aid of capital; money or property gained or merited by labor, service, or the performance of something. Term is broader in meaning than “wages.” See also Commisions; Compensation; Dividend; Gross earnings; Income; Premium; Retained earnings; Salary; Wages.

Gross earnings. Total income before deducting expenditures. Receipts from employment of capital, without deduction for expenses incurred. See also Income.
Net earnings. Net earnings (income) are the excess of the gross earnings over the expenditures incurred in producing them. Such may be determined before or after deduction of income taxes. See also Income.

Surplus earnings. See Surplus.

Earnings and profits. A tax concept peculiar to corporate taxpayers which measures economic capacity to make a distribution to shareholders that is not a return of capital. Such a distribution will result in dividend income to the shareholders to the extent of the corporation’s current and accumulated earnings and profits.

Earnings per share. One common measure of the value of common stock. The figure is computed by dividing the net earnings (after interest and prior dividends) by the number of shares of common stock.

Earth. Soil of all kinds, including gravel, clay, loam, and the like, in distinction from the firm rock.

Ear-witness. In the law of evidence, one who attests or can attest anything as heard by himself. See also Voiceprint.

Ease. Comfort, consolation, contentment, enjoyment, happiness, pleasure, satisfaction.

Easement. A right of use over the property of another. Traditionally the permitted kinds of uses were limited, the most important being rights of way and rights concerning flowing waters. The easement was normally for the benefit of adjoining lands, no matter who the owner was (an easement appurtenant), rather than for the benefit of a specific individual (easement in gross). The land having the right of use as an appurtenance is known as the dominant tenement and the land which is subject to the easement is known as the servient tenement.

A right in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such ownership, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with a general property in the owner.

An interest which one person has in the land of another. A primary characteristic of an easement is that its burden falls upon the possessor of the land from which it issued and that characteristic is expressed in the statement that the land constitutes a servient tenement and the easement a dominant tenement. Potter v. Northern Natural Gas Co., 201 Kan. 528, 441 P.2d 802, 805. An interest in land in and over which it is to be enjoyed, and is distinguishable from a “license” which merely confers personal privilege to do some act on the land. Logan v. McGee, Miss., 320 So.2d 792, 793.

See also Affirmative easement; Non-continuous easement; Prescriptive easement.

Access easement. See Access.

Affirmative easement. One where the servient estate must permit something to be done thereon, as to pass over it, or to discharge water on it.

Apparent easement. One the existence of which appears from the construction or condition of one of the tenements, so as to be capable of being seen or known on inspection.

Appendent easement. See Appurtenant easement, infra.

Appurtenant easement. An incorporeal right which is attached to a superior right and inhere in land to which it is attached and is in the nature of a covenant running with the land. Fort Dodge, D. M. & S. Ry. v. American Community Stores Corp., 256 Iowa 1344, 131 N.W.2d 515, 521. There must be a dominant estate and servient estate. An easement interest which attaches to the land and passes with it. First Nat. Bank of Amarillo v. Amarillo Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ. App., 531 S.W.2d 905, 907. An “incorporeal right” which is attached to and belongs with some greater and superior right or something annexed to another thing more worthy and which passes as incident to it and is incapable of existence separate and apart from the particular land to which it is annexed.

Discontinuing easement. Discontinuous, non-continuous, or non-apparent easements are those the enjoyment of which can be had only by the interference of man, as, a right of way or a right to draw water.

Easement by estoppel. Easement which is created when landlord voluntarily imposes apparent servitude on his property and another person, acting reasonably, believes that servitude is permanent and in reliance upon that belief does something that he would not have done otherwise or refrains from doing something that he would have done otherwise. U. S. v. Thompson, D.C.Ark., 272 F.Supp. 774, 784.

Easement by necessity. Such arises by operation of law when land conveyed is completely shut off from access to any road by land retained by grantor or by land of grantor and that of a stranger. Tarr v. Watkins, 180 Cal.App. 362, 4 Cal.Rptr. 293, 296.

Easement by prescription. A mode of acquiring title to property by immemorial or long-continued enjoyment, and refers to personal usage restricted to claimant and his ancestors or grantors.

Easement in gross. An easement in gross is not appurtenant to any estate in land or does not belong to any person by virtue of ownership of estate in other land but is mere personal interest in or right to use land of another; it is purely personal and usually ends with death of grantee. Shingleton v. State, 260 N.C. 451, 133 S.E.2d 183, 185.

Easement of access. Right of ingress and egress to and from the premises of a lot owner to a street appurtenant to the land of the lot owner.

Easement of convenience. One which increases the facility, comfort, or convenience of the enjoyment of the dominant estate, or of some right connected with it.

Easement of natural support. Easement which creates right of lateral support to land in its natural condition entitling the holder thereof to have his land held in place from the sides by neighboring land.

Easement of necessity. One in which the easement is indispensable to the enjoyment of the dominant estate.

Equitable easements. The special easements created by derivation of ownership of adjacent proprietors from a common source, with specific intentions as to buildings for certain purposes, or with implied privileges in regard to certain uses, are sometimes so called. A name frequently applied to building restrictions in a deed.

Implied easement. One which the law imposes by inferring the parties to a transaction intended that result, although they did not express it. Schwob v. Green, Iowa, 215 N.W.2d 240, 242. An easement resting upon the principle that, where the owner of two or more adjacent lots sells a part thereof, he grants by implication to the grantee all those apparent and visible easements which are necessary for the reasonable use of the property granted, which at the time of the grant are used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of the part granted. One not expressed by parties in writing but arises out of existence of certain facts implied from the transaction. Wagner v. Fairlamb, 151 Colo. 481, 379 P.2d 165, 167.

Intermittent easement. One which is usable or used only at times, and not continuously.

Negative easement. Those where the owner of the servient estate is prohibited from doing something otherwise lawful upon his estate, because it will affect the dominant estate (as interrupting the light and air from the latter by building on the former). As to "Reciprocal negative easement," see that title, infra.

Private or public easements. A private easement is one in which the enjoyment is restricted to one or a few individuals, while a public easement is one the right to the enjoyment of which is vested in the public generally or in an entire community; such as an easement of passage on the public streets and highways or of navigation on a stream.

Quasi easement. An "easement," in the proper sense of the word, can only exist in respect of two adjoining pieces of land occupied by different persons, and can only impose a negative duty on the owner of the servient tenement. Hence an obligation on the owner of land to repair the fence between his and his neighbor's land is not a true easement, but is sometimes called a "quasi easement."

Reciprocal negative easement. If the owner of two or more lots, so situated as to bear the relation, sells one with restrictions of benefit to the land retained, the servitude becomes mutual, and, during the period of restraint, the owner of the lot or lots retained can do nothing forbidden to the owner of the lot sold; this being known as the doctrine of "reciprocal negative easement."

Secondary easement. One which is appurtenant to the primary or actual easement. Every easement includes such "secondary easements," that is, the right to do such things as are necessary for the full enjoyment of the easement itself.

East. In the absence of other words qualifying its meaning, the word "east" describing boundaries means due east. Livingston Oil & Gas Co. v. Shasta Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 378, 381. The general direction of sunrise. Point directly opposite to west. See also Easterly.

Easter. A feast of the Christian church held in memory of the Saviour's resurrection. The Greeks and Latins call it "pascha" (passover), to which Jewish feast our Easter answers. This feast has been annually celebrated since the time of the apostles, and is one of the most important festivals in the Christian calendar, being that which regulates and determines the times of all the other movable feasts.

Easterling. A coin struck by Richard II which is supposed by some to have given rise to the name of "sterling," as applied to English money.

Easterly. This word, when used alone, will be construed to mean "due east." But that is a rule of necessity growing out of the indefiniteness of the term, and has no application where other words are used for the purpose of qualifying its meaning. Where such is the case, it means precisely what the qualifying word makes it mean. See also East.

Easter-offerings, or Easter-dues. In English law, small sums of money paid to the parochial clergy by the parishioners at Easter as a compensation for personal tithes, or the tithe for personal labor; recoverable under 7 & 8 Wm. III, c. 6, before justices of the peace.

Easter term. In English law, formerly one of the four movable terms of the courts, but afterwards a fixed term, beginning on the 15th of April and ending on the 8th of May in every year, though sometimes prolonged so late as the 13th of May, under St. 11 Geo. IV, and 1 Wm. IV, c. 70. From November 2, 1875, the division of the legal year into terms was abolished so far as concerns the administration of justice.

East Greenwich. The name of a royal manor in the county of Kent, England; mentioned in royal grants or patents, as descriptive of the tenure of free socage.

East India Company. Originally established for prosecuting the trade between England and India, which they acquired a right to carry on exclusively. The company's political affairs became of more importance than their commerce. In 1858, by 21 & 22 Vict., c. 106, the government of the territories of the company was transferred to the crown. The company was finally dissolved in 1874.

Eastinus. An easterly coast or country.

Eastman formula. In determining fixed charges under railroad reorganization plan, the "Eastman Formula" is that such charges should not exceed 80 per cent. of the net available for interest in the three worst years of the last ten. In re Denver & R. G. W. R. Co., D.C.Colo., 38 F.Supp. 106, 110.

Eat inde sine die /iyad indiy säyniy día(y)/. Words used on the acquittal of a defendant, or when a prisoner is to be discharged, that he may go thence without a day, i.e., be dismissed without any further continuance or adjournment.

Eaves-drip. The drip or dropping of water from the eaves of a house on the land of an adjacent owner; the easement of having the water so drip, or the servitude of submitting to such drip; the same as the stillicidium of the Roman law. See Stillicidium.

Eavesdropping. Eavesdropping is knowingly and without lawful authority: (a) Entering into a private place with intent to listen surreptitiously to private conver-
Ecclesiastical courts. In England, a body corporate, erected by St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 77, empowered to suggest measures conducive to the efficiency of the established church, to be ratified by orders in council. As a body, Ecclesiastical Commissioners have been dissolved and their functions, rights, property, etc. vested in Church Commissioners.

Ecclesiastical corporation. See Corporation.

Ecclesiastical council. In New England, formerly a church court or tribunal, having functions partly judicial and partly advisory, appointed to determine questions relating to church discipline, orthodoxy, stand-
Ecclesiastical Council

Ecclesiastical courts. A generic name for certain courts having cognizance mainly of spiritual matters. A system of courts in England, held by authority of the sovereign, and having jurisdiction over matters pertaining to the religion and ritual of the established church, and the rights, duties, and discipline of ecclesiastical persons as such. They are as follows: The Archdeacon’s Court (now practically obsolete), Consistory Court, Provincial Courts (i.e. Court of Arches of Canterbury and Chancery Court of York), Court of Faculties, and Court of Final Appeal (Judicial Committee of the Privy Council).

Ecclesiastical division of England. This is a division into provinces, dioceses, archdeaconries, rural deaneries, and parishes.

Ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over ecclesiastical cases and controversies; such as appertains to the ecclesiastical courts.

Ecclesiastical law. The body of jurisprudence administered by the ecclesiastical courts of England; derived, in large measure, from the canon and civil law. As now restricted, it applies mainly to the affairs, and the doctrine, discipline, and worship, of the established church.

Ecclesiastical matter. One that concerns doctrine, creed, or form of worship of the church, or the adoption and enforcement within a religious association of needful laws and regulations for the government of the membership, and the power of excluding from such associations those deemed unworthy of membership. Olear v. Haniak, 235 Mo.App. 249, 131 S.W.2d 375, 380.

Ecclesiastical things. This term, as used in the canon law, includes church buildings, church property, cemeteries, and property given to the church for the support of the poor or for any other pious use.

Ecdicus /éktaːkəs/. The attorney, proctor, or advocate of a corporation.

Échantillon /éʃɑ̃tywã/. In French law, one of the two parts or pieces of a wooden tally. That in possession of the debtor is properly called the “tally,” the other “échantillon.”

Echevin. In French law, a municipal officer corresponding with alderman or burgess, and having in some instances a civil jurisdiction in certain causes of trifling importance.

Echioalilla /ékwɔliːliːa/ “lāliya/ . The constant and senseless repetition of particular words or phrases, recognized as a sign or symptom of insanity or of aphasia.

Echouement /éʃuwmɔ̃/. In French marine law, stranding.

Ecology. In general, the study or science of the relationships between organisms and their environments; study of the environment. See Ecosystems.

Economic discrimination. Any form of discrimination within the field of commerce such as a boycott of a particular product or price fixing. See Boycott; Price discrimination; Price-fixing.

Economic obsolescence. Loss of desirability and useful life of property due to economic developments (e.g., deterioration of neighborhood or zoning change) rather than deterioration (functional obsolescence). Term as used with respect to valuation of property for taxation is a loss of value brought about by conditions that environ a structure such as a declining location or down-grading of a neighborhood resulting in reduced business volume. Piazza v. Town Assessor of Town of Porter, 16 A.D.2d 863, 228 N.Y.S.2d 397, 398. See also Obsolescence.

Economic strike. Refusal to work because of dispute over wages, hours or working conditions or other conditions of employment. N. L. R. B. v. Transport Co. of Tex., C.A.Tex., 438 F.2d 258. An economic strike is one neither prohibited by law nor by collective bargaining agreement nor caused by employer unfair labor practices, but is typically for purpose of enforcing employer compliance with union collective bargaining demands, and economic strikers possess more limited reinstatement rights than unfair labor practice strikers. N. L. R. B. v. Transport Co. of Tex., C.A.Tex., 438 F.2d 258, 262.

Economic waste. An overproduction or excessive drilling of oil or gas.

Economy. Frugality; prudent expenditure of money or use of resources. Not synonymous with “parsimony.” Includes that which pertains to the satisfaction of man’s needs. D’Arcy v. Snell, 162 Or. 351, 91 P.2d 537, 540. Economic structure of country.

E contra /ɪˈkɒntra/. From the opposite; on the contrary.

E converso /ɪˌkənˈvɜːsəʊ/. Conversely. On the other hand; on the contrary. Equivalent to e contra.

Ecosystems. The totality of cycles and processes which constitute the ecology system.

Ecumenical /ɛkˈjuːmənɪkəl/ /ɪˈkjuːmənɪskəl/. General; universal; as an ecumenical council.

Edderbreche /ˈɛdərbrɪʃ/. In Saxon law, the offense of oil or gas.

Edict. A formal decree, command, or proclamation. A positive law promulgated by the sovereign of a country, and having reference either to the whole land or some of its divisions, but usually relating to affairs of state. It differs from a “public proclamation,” in that it enacts a new statute, and carries with it the authority of law, whereas the latter is, at most, a declaration of a law before enacted. In Roman law, sometimes, a citation to appear before a judge. A “special edict” was a judgment in a case; a “general edict” was in effect a statute. See Decree; Edictum; Mandate.

Edicts of Justinian /ˈjʊdɪks ˈɪv ˈdʒʌstɪniən/. Thirteen constitutions or laws of this prince, found in most... editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, after the Novels. Being confined to matters of police in the provinces of the empire, they have long since been of little use.

Edictum /adiktam/. In the Roman law, an edict; a mandate, or ordinance. An ordinance, or law, enacted by the emperor without the senate; belonging to the class of constitutio principis. An edict was a mere voluntary constitution of the emperor; differing from a rescript, in not being returned in the way of answer; and from a decree, in not being given in judgment; and from both, in not being founded upon solicitation.

A general order published by the prætor, on entering upon his office, containing the system of rules by which he would administer justice during the year of his office.

Edictum annuum /adiktam ânyuwam/. The annual edict or system of rules promulgated by a Roman prætor immediately upon assuming his office, setting forth the principles by which he would be guided in determining causes during his term of office.

Edictum perpetuum /adiktam parpechuwam/. The perpetual edict. A compilation or system of law in fifty books, digested by Julian, from the prætor's edicts and other parts of the Jus Honorarium. All the remains of it which have come down to us are the extracts of it in the Digests.

Edictum provinciale /adiktam pravinshiyâyi/. An edict or system of rules for the administration of justice, similar to the edict of the prætor, put forth by the proconsuls and prætors in the provinces of the Roman Empire.

Edictum Theodoricí /adiktam âyadarâysay/. This is the first collection of law that was made after the downfall of the Roman power in Italy. It was promulgated by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, at Rome in A.D. 500. It consists of 154 chapters, in which we recognize parts taken from the Code and Novellae of Theodosius, from the Codices Gregorianus and Hermogenianus, and the Sententiae of Paulus. The edict was doubtless drawn up by Roman writers, but the original sources are more disfigured and altered than in any other compilation. This collection of law was intended to apply both to the Goths and the Romans, so far as its provisions went; but, when it made no alteration in the Gothic law, that law was still to be in force.

Edictum tralatitium /adiktam trâlâtish(iy)âm/. Where a Roman prætor, upon assuming office, did not publish a wholly new edict, but retained the whole or a principal part of the edict of his predecessor (as was usually the case) only adding to it such rules as appeared to be necessary to adapt it to changing social conditions or juristic ideas, it was called "edictum tralatitium."

Edition. The total number of copies of a publication printed from a single typesetting or at one specified time. May also refer to the form which a publication takes such as a hardbound or paperback edition. Also, the means of identifying the various versions of a given publication; e.g. first, second, etc. edition. One of the several issues of a newspaper for a single day.

Editor. One who directs or supervises the policies, content and contributions of a newspaper, magazine, book, work of reference, or the like. The term is held to include not only the person who writes, edits or selects the articles for publication, but he who publishes a paper and puts it in circulation. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 721, 24 L.Ed. 565.

Editus /édudos/. In old English law, put forth or promulgated, when speaking of the passage of a statute; and brought forth, or born, when speaking of the birth of a child.

Edmunds Act. An act of Congress of March 22, 1882, punishing polygamy.

Educate. To give proper moral, as well as intellectual and physical, instruction. To prepare and fit oneself for any calling or business, or for activity and usefulness in life.

Education. Comprehends not merely the instruction received at school or college, but the whole course of training; moral, religious, vocational, intellectual, and physical. Education may be particularly directed to either the mental, moral, or physical powers and faculties, but in its broadest and best sense it relates to them all. Acquisition of all knowledge tending to train and develop the individual. See also Board of education.

Educational expenses. Employees may deduct educational expenses if such items are incurred either (1) to maintain or improve existing job related skills or (2) to meet the express requirements of the employer or the requirements imposed by law to retain employment status. Such expenses are not deductible if the education is (1) required to meet the minimum educational requirements for the taxpayer's job or (2) the education qualifies the individual for a new trade or business. Ronald F. Weizsamm v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 443 F.2d 29.

Educational institution. A school, seminary, college, university, or other educational establishment, not necessarily a chartered institution. As used in a zoning ordinance, the term may include not only buildings, but also all grounds necessary for the accomplishment of the full scope of educational instruction, including those things essential to mental, moral, and physical development. Commissioners of District of Columbia v. Shannon & Luchs Const. Co., 57 App.D.C. 67, 17 F.2d 219, 220.

Educational purposes. Term as used in constitutional and statutory provisions exempting property so used from taxation, includes systematic instruction in any and all branches of learning from which a substantial public benefit is derived, and is not limited to such school properties as would relieve some substantial educational burden from the state. McKee v. Evans, Alaska, 490 P.2d 1226, 1230.

Effect, v. To do; to produce; to make; to bring to pass; to execute; enforce; accomplish.

Effect, n. That which is produced by an agent or cause; result; outcome; consequence. State by Clark v. Wolkoff, 250 Minn. 504, 85 N.W. 2d 401, 410. The result which an instrument between parties will produce in their relative rights, or which a statute will produce upon the existing law, as discovered from the language used, the forms employed, or other materials for construing it. The operation of a law, of an agreement, or an act. The phrases "take effect," "be in force," "go into operation," etc., are used interchangeably.

With effect. With success; as, to prosecute an action with effect.

Effecting loan. To bring about a loan. To accomplish, fulfill, produce or make a loan. It means the result or consequence of bringing into operation a loan; while "renewal" is not a loan, but an extension of the time of payment.

Effective assistance of counsel. Conscientious, meaningful representation wherein accused is advised of his rights and honest, learned and able counsel is given a reasonable opportunity to perform task assigned to him. State v. Williams, Iowa, 207 N.W.2d 98, 104. See Counsel, right to.

Effective possession. See Constructive possession.

* Effective procuring cause. The "effective procuring cause" of sale of realty is ordinarily the broker who first secures the serious attention of the customer and is instrumental in bringing the parties together. See Cause; Efficient cause; Proximate cause.

Effects. Personal estate or property; though the term may include both real and personal property. See Personal effects.

Effectus sequitur causam /aféktas sítýkwâdâr kâzâm/. The effect follows the cause.

Effet. In France an "effet" is a bill of exchange; "effets" means goods, movables, chattels. In re Steimes' Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

Effets mobiliers /aféts mòwbâlîrž/. Funds or stocks. In re Steimes' Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

Efficient. Causing an effect; particularly the result or consequences contemplated. Adequate in performance or producing properly a desired effect. Spotts v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., C.C.A.Ind., 102 F.2d 160, 162.

Efficient cause. The working cause; that cause which produces effects or results. An intervening cause, which produces results which would not have come to pass except for its interposition, and for which, therefore, the person who set in motion the original chain of causes is not responsible. Southland-Greyhound Lines v. Cotten, Tex.Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 1066, 1069. The cause which originates and sets in motion the dominating agency that necessarily proceeds through other causes as mere instruments or vehicles in a natural line of causation to the result. That cause of an injury to which legal liability attaches. The "proximate cause." Hillis v. Home Owners' Loan Corporation, 348 Mo. 601, 154 S.W.2d 761, 764. The phrase is practically synonymous with "procuring cause." Buhmester v. Independent Plumbing & Heating Supply Co., Mo.App., 151 S.W.2d 509, 513. The immediate agent in the production of an effect. ArmiJo v. World Ins. Co., 78 N.M. 204, 429 P.2d 904, 906.

Ego /éjog/. The figure or corporeal representation of a person.

Effigy /éfíjí/. The running, as of a prescribed period of time to its end; expiration by lapse of time. Particularly applied to the termination of a lease by the expiration of the term for which it was made.

Effluxion of time /sflíksahm ă tám/. When this phrase is used in leases, conveyances, and other like deeds, or in agreements expressed in simple writing, it indicates the conclusion or expiration of an agreed term of years specified in the deed or writing, such conclusion or expiration arising in the natural course of events, in contradistinction to the determination of the term by the acts of the parties or by some unexpected or unusual incident or other sudden event.

Efframaliter /afórs(h)iýéyéyâdâr/. Forcibly; applied to military force.

Effort. An attempt; an endeavor; a struggle directed to the accomplishment of an object.

Effraction /afrákshân/. A breach made by the use of force.

Effractor /afráktár/. One who breaks through; one who commits a burglary.

Effusio sanguinis /afýúwz(h)(l)yow sàmgwànâs/. In old English law, the shedding of blood; the mulct, fine, wite, or penalty imposed for the shedding of blood, which the king granted to many lords of manors. See Bloodwit.

E.g. An abbreviation of exempli gratia. For the sake of an example.

Ego /éjog/. I; myself. This term is used in forming genealogical tables, to represent the person who is the object of inquiry.

The part of the conscious personality which has the task of balancing the demands of the real world and maintaining harmony between the id (instinctual drives) and the superego (morality of the conscience); that portion of the total personality noticeable to others which maintains contact with the environment of the outer world.

See also Alter ego.

Ego, tails /ėgyow, tėylas/. I, such a one. Words used in describing the forms of old deeds.

Egrediens et exeuns /ēgrīdiyēn(d)z ēd ēkisīyān(d)z/. In old pleading, going forth and issuing out of (land).

Egress /ēgrērs/. The path by which a person goes out; exit. The means or act of going out. Often used interchangeably with the word "access." C. Hacker Co. v. City of Joliet, 199 Ill.App. 415, 423.

Egyptians. Derivative name in old England for "gypsies"; a wandering, nomadic people without permanent abode, living in tents or other shelters, pretending to tell fortunes of others.

El, or Ey. An island.

Eighteenth Amendment. The amendment to the U.S. Constitution added in 1919 which prohibited the manufacture, sale, transportation and exportation of intoxicating liquors in all the States and Territories of the United States and which was repealed in 1933 by the Twenty-first Amendment.

Eight hour laws. Statutes (e.g. Adamson Act; Fair Labor Standards Act) which established eight hours as the length of a day's work, prohibited work beyond this period, and required payment of overtime for work in excess of this period. See Wage and Hour Laws.

Eigne /ēyn/. L. Fr. Eldest; eldest-born. The term is of common occurrence in the old books. Thus, bastard eigne means an illegitimate son whose parents afterwards marry and have a second son for lawful issue, the latter being called mulier puisne (after-born). Eigne is probably a corrupt form of the French "ainlé." 2 Bl.Comm. 248.

Eignesse /ēynēs/. See Esnecy.

El incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat; cum per rerum naturam factum negantis probatio nulla sit /i'yay įnkīmāt prāḇēysh(i)yōw kwāy dīst, nōn kwāy nēgat; kâm pār rīrām nā(y)ūrām nākēntas prāḇēysh(i)yōw nāsā sit/. The proof lies upon him who affirms, not upon him who denies; since, by the nature of things, he who denies a fact cannot produce any proof.

Einecla /niyisya/. Eldership. See Esnecy.

Einetus /niyis(y)as/. In English law, the oldest; the first-born.

El nihil turpe, cui nihil satiis /i'yay nāy(h)al târpīy, k(y)ūw'ay nāy(h)al sādās/. To him to whom nothing is enough, nothing is base.

Eire, or eye re /ēr/. In old English law, a journey, route, or circuit. Justices in eire were judges who were sent by commission, every seven years, into various counties to hold the assizes and hear pleas of the crown. 3 Bl.Comm. 58.

Eire, or eire /ēr/. In old English law, a journey, route, or circuit. Justices in eire were judges who were sent by commission, every seven years, into various counties to hold the assizes and hear pleas of the crown. 3 Bl.Comm. 58.

Elrenarcha /āyärnākā/. A name formerly given to a justice of the peace. In the Digests, the word is written "irenarcha."

Elsdem modis dissolvitur obligatio qua nasceitur ex contractu, vel quasi, quibus contrahitur /i'yāyśdām mōwīs āzōlāvādār oblāyēsh(i)yōw kwīy nēsādār ēkā kāntrēkē(y)ūw, vēl kwīyśay, kwēbās kāntrēkē(y)kāvād/. An obligation which arises from contract, or quasi contract, is dissolved in the same ways in which it is contracted.

Elsne /ēyn/. The senior; the oldest son. Spelled also, "eign," "einsne," "aisne," "eign."

Elsnetia, einetia /ēz(a)niyaysh(i)yā/. The share of the oldest son. The portion acquired by primogeniture.

Eeither. Each of two; the one and the other; one or the other of two alternatives; one of two. Often used, however, with reference to more than two, in which case it may mean "each" or "any."

Eject. To cast, or throw out; to oust, or dispossess; to put or turn out of possession. To expel or thrust forcibly, as disorderly patrons.

Ejecta /ējēktās/. In old English law, a woman ravished or deflowered, or cast forth from the virtuous.

Ejection. A turning out of possession.

Ejectione custodie /ējēkshīyōnwīν kastōwīdīyī/. In old English law, ejectment of ward. This phrase, which is the Latin equivalent for the French "ejectment de garde," was the title of a writ which lay for a guardian when turned out of any land of his ward during the minority of the latter. It lay to recover the land or person of his ward, or both.

Ejectione firme /ējēkshīyōnwīν färmi/. Ejection, or ejectment of farm. The name of a writ or action of trespass, which lay at common law where lands or tenements were let for a term of years, and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainder-man, or any stranger ejected or ousted the lessee of his term, farm, or farm (ipsum a firma eject). In this case the latter might have his writ of ejection, by which he recovered at first damages for the trespass only, but it was afterwards made a remedy to recover back the term itself, or the remainder of it, with damages. 3 Bl.Comm. 199. It is the foundation of the modern action of ejectment.

Ejection. At common law, this was the name of a mixed action (springing from the earlier personal action of ejectione firmæ) which lay for the recovery of the possession of land, and for damages for the unlawful detention of its possession. The action was highly fictitious, being in theory only for the recovery of a term for years, and brought by a purely fictitious person, as lessee in a supposed lease from the real party in interest. The latter's title, however, had to be established in order to warrant a recovery, and the establishment of such title, though nominally a mere incident, was in reality the object of the action. Hence this convenient form of suit came to be adopted as the usual method of trying titles to land. 3 Bl.Comm. 199; French v. Robb, 67 N.J.Law 260, 51 A. 509. In England, since the Judicature Act of 1852, ejectment has given place to a new action for the recovery of land.
The common law action for ejectment has been materially modified by statute in most states and may come under the title of action to recover possession of land, action for summary process, action for eviction, or forcible entry and detainer action.

Ejectment is an action to restore possession of property to the person entitled to it. Not only must the plaintiff establish a right to possession in himself, but he must also show that the defendant is in wrongful possession. If the defendant has only trespassed on the land, the action is for trespass (i.e. damages).

See also Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Ejectment bill. A bill in equity brought merely for the recovery of real property, together with an account of the rents and profits, without setting out any distinct ground of equity jurisdiction; hence demurrable.

Equitable ejectment. A proceeding brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and for some other purposes, which is in form an action of ejectment, but is in reality a substitute for a bill in equity.

Justice ejectment. A statutory proceeding for the eviction of a tenant holding over after termination of the lease or breach of its conditions.

Ejector. One who ejects, puts out, or disposesses another.

Casual ejector. The nominal defendant in an action of ejectment; so called because, by a fiction of law peculiar to that action, he is supposed to come casually or by accident upon the premises and to eject the lawful possessor. 3 Bl.Comm. 203.

Ejectum /ेजक्टम. That which is thrown up by the sea. Also jetsam, wreck, etc.

Ejectus /ेजक्टस. In old English law, a whore-monger.

Ejectoritia /ेह्येरीश्टोरिया. In Spanish law, the name of an action lying against a ship's owner, upon the contracts or obligations made by the master for repairs or supplies. It corresponds to the actio exercitatoria of the Roman law.

Ejdos /ेह्योद्स. In Spanish law, commons; lands used in common by the inhabitants of a city, pueblo, or town, for pasture, wood, threshing-ground, etc.

EJuration /ेजरेरयशन. Renouncing or resigning one's place.

Ejusdem generis /ेजुजस्दम जेनरास. Of the same kind, class, or nature. In the construction of laws, wills, and other instruments, the "ejusdem generis rule" is, that where general words follow an enumeration of persons or things, by words of a particular and specific meaning, such general words are not to be construed in their widest extent, but are to be held as applying only to persons or things of the same general kind or class as those specifically mentioned. U. S. v. LaBrecque, D.C.N.J., 419 F.Supp. 430, 432; Aleksich v. Industrial Accident Fund, 116 Mont. 127, 151 P.2d 1016, 1021. The rule, however, does not necessarily require that the general provision be limited in its scope to the identical things specifically named. Nor does it apply when the context manifests a contrary intention.

Under "ejusdem generis" canon of statutory construction, where general words follow the enumeration of particular classes of things, the general words will be construed as applying only to things of the same general class as those enumerated. Campbell v. Board of Dental Examiners, 53 Ca1.App.3d 283, 125 Cal.Rptr. 694, 696.

Ejus est interpretari cujus est condere /ेजुजस्त इन्तरप्रेटेडरय क्युज़स्त इंटनेमरीय. It is his to interpret whose it is to enact.

Ejus est nolle, qui potest velle /ेजुजस्त नेल्लेक्सी बिलेल्लेक्सी वेलेल्लेक्सी. He who can will [exercise volition], has a right to refuse to will [to withhold consent]. This maxim is sometimes written, Ejus est non nolle qui potest velle, and is translated, "He may consent tacitly who may consent expressly."

Ejus est periculum cujus est dominium aut commodum /ेजुजस्त परिक्ल्लमूल़ क्यु�़स्त डोमिनियम अउट कमोडोम़म. He who has the dominion or advantage has the risk.

Ejus nulla culpa est, cui parere ncesses sit /ेजुजस्त नल्लाकल्प्स इस्ट, क्युिव्याज परारी नेसेस सिट्टेल्लेल्लेक्सी. No guilt attaches to him who is compelled to obey. Obedience to existing laws is a sufficient extenuation of guilt before a civil tribunal.

Elaborare /ेलॉबरेटेरीय़। In old European law, to gain, acquire, or purchase, as by labor and industry.

Elaboratus /ेलॉबरेटेड्सेज। Property which is the acquisition of labor.

Elder brethren. A distinguished body of men, elected as masters of Trinity House, an institution incorporated in the reign of Henry VIII, charged with numerous important duties relating to the marine, such as the superintendence of light-houses. The full title of the corporation is Elder Brethren of the Holy and Undivided Trinity.

Elder title. A title of earlier date, but coming simultaneously into operation with a title of younger origin, is called the "elder title," and prevails.

Eldest. Oldest; first born; one with greatest seniority.

Electa una via, non datur recursus ad alteram /ेलेक्टा यस्तेन बिया, नॉन डेय्डर रकर्सस ऐड ऐल्टराम। He who has chosen one way cannot have recourse to another.

Elector. The act of choosing or selecting one or more from a greater number of persons, things, courses, or rights. The choice of an alternative. The internal, free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will. The selection of one person from a specified class to discharge certain duties in a state, corporation, or society. With respect to the choice of persons to fill public office or the decision of a particular public question or public policy the term means in ordinary usage the expression by vote of the will of the people or of a somewhat numerous body of electors. "Election" ordinarily has reference to a choice or selection by electors, while "appointment" refers to a choice or selection by an individual.

The choice which is open to a debtor who is bound in an alternative obligation to select either one of the alternatives.

The choice, by the prosecution, upon which of several counts in an indictment (charging distinct offenses of the same degree, but not parts of a continuous series of acts) it will proceed.

See also Certificate of election; Equitable election; Free and clear.

Election at large. Election in which a public official is selected from a major election district rather than a minor subdivision within the larger unit.

Election of defenses. The selection of a particular defense on which to rest in contesting a claim or in defending a criminal charge.

Election of remedies. The liberty of choosing (or the act of choosing) one out of several means afforded by law for the redress of an injury, or one out of several available forms of action. An "election of remedies" arises when one having two coexistent but inconsistent remedies chooses to exercise one, in which event he loses the right to thereafter exercise the other. Doctrine provides that if two or more remedies exist which are repugnant and inconsistent with one another, a party will be bound if he has chosen one of them. Melby v. Hawkins Pontiac, Inc., 13 Wash.App. 745, 537 P.2d 807, 810. See also Equitable election.

General election. One for a definite purpose, regularly reoccurring at fixed intervals without any requirements other than the lapse of time. Bolin v. Superior Court In and For Maricopa County, 85 Ariz. 131, 333 P.2d 956. One at which the officers to be elected are such as belong to the general government; that is, the general and central political organization of the whole state, as distinguished from an election of officers for a particular locality only.

Also, one held for the selection of an officer after the expiration of the full term of the former officer; thus distinguished from a special election, which is one held to supply a vacancy in office occurring before the expiration of the full term for which the incumbent was elected.

One that regularly recurs in each election precinct of the state on a day designated by law for the selection of officers, or is held in such entire territory pursuant to an enactment specifying a single day for the ratification or rejection of one or more measures submitted to the people by the Legislature, and not for the election of any officer. One that is held throughout the entire state or territory. An election for the choice of a national, state, judicial, district, municipal, county or township official, required by law to be held regularly at a designated time, to fill a new office or a vacancy in an office at the expiration of the full term thereof.

In statutes, the term may include a primary election.

See also Regular election, infra.

Law of wills. A widow’s election is her choice of whether she will take under the will or under the statute; that is, whether she will accept the provision made for her in the will, and acquiesce in her husband’s disposition of his property, or disregard it and claim what the law allows her. Logan v. Logan, Tex.Civ.App., 112 S.W.2d 515, 518. An “election under the will” means that a legatee or devisee under a will is put to the choice of accepting the beneficial interest offered by the donor in lieu of some estate which he is entitled to, but which is taken from him by the terms of the will. See also Election by spouse; Equitable election.

Off-year election. Election conducted at a time other than the presidential election year.

Presidential election. See U.S.Const. Amends. XII, XX, XXII–XXVI.

Primary election. An election by the voters of a ward, precinct, or other small district, belonging to a particular party, of representatives or delegates to a convention which is to meet and nominate the candidates of their party to stand at an approaching municipal or general election. Also, an election to select candidates for office by a political organization, the voters being restricted to the members or supporters of such organization. An election, preliminary in nature, the purpose being to narrow in number the candidates that will appear on the final, official ballot.

Recall election. Election where voters have opportunity to remove public official from elected office.

Regular election. One recurring at stated times fixed by law. A general, usual, or stated election. When applied to elections, the terms “regular” and “general” are used interchangeably and synonymously. The word “regular” is used in reference to a general election occurring throughout the state. See also General election, supra.

Special election. An election for a particular emergency or need, conducted in the interval between regularly scheduled elections in order to fill a vacancy arising by death of the incumbent of the office, decide a question submitted on an initiative referendum, or recall petition, etc. In determining whether an election is special or general, regard must be had to the subject-matter as well as date of the election, and, if an election occurs throughout state uniformly by direct operation of law, it is a “general election,” but, if it depends on employment of special preliminary proceeding peculiar to process which may or may not occur, and the election is applicable only to a restricted area less than whole state, it is a “special election.”

Election board. A board of inspectors or commissioners appointed in each election precinct by government (e.g. county or city) authorities responsible for determining whether individual voters are qualified, supervising the polling, and often ascertaining and reporting the results. Local, city or town agency which is charged with the conduct of elections.
Election by spouse. Statutory provision that a surviving spouse may choose as between taking that which is provided for her in her husband's will, claiming dower or taking her statutorily prescribed share. Such election may be presented if the will leaves the spouse less than she would otherwise receive by statute. This election may also be taken if the spouse seeks to set aside a will which contains a provision to the effect that an attempt to contest the will defeats the rights of one to take under the will. See also Election (Law of wills); Equitable election.

Election contest. A contest in behalf of one who has failed of success in election against right of one who has been declared or determined by proper authority to have been successful. Election contest involves matter of going behind election returns and inquiring into qualifications of electors, counting of ballots, and other matters affecting validity of ballots. Vance v. Johnson, 238 Ark. 1008, 386 S.W.2d 240, 242.

Election district. A subdivision of territory, whether of state, county, or city, the boundaries of which are fixed by law, for convenience in local or general elections.

Election, doctrine of. When a third person has contracted with an agent without knowing of the agency, and thereafter the third person discovers the agency and the identity of the principal, the third person may enforce the contract against the agent or against the principal at his election, but not against both. This is known as the doctrine of election.

Election dower. A name sometimes given to the provision which a law or statute makes for a widow in case she "elects" to reject the provision made for her in the will and take what the statute accords. Stanton v. Leonard, 344 Mo. 998, 130 S.W.2d 487, 489. See Election (Law of wills); Election by spouse.

Electiones fiant rite et libere sine interrup-tione alliqua /ælksh(i)yōwniyz ˈfʌɪnt rʌdiəli ˈɛt lɪˈbərə səˈmiŋ ɪntərˈrʌpʃəˈwʌni ˈælʃkwɔ/. Elections should be made in due form, and freely, without any interruption.

Election, estoppel by. An estoppel which arises by a choice between inconsistent remedies. See Election (Election of remedies).

An estoppel predicated on a voluntary and intelligent action or choice of one of several things which is inconsistent with another, the effect of the estoppel being to prevent the party so choosing from afterwards reversing his election or disputing the state of affairs or rights of others resulting from his original choice.

The doctrine of "estoppel by election" against beneficiary who has elected to take favorable provisions of will from objecting to other provisions of will applies only where will undertakes to bestow a gift and also deprive donee of a prior existing right, thus confronting devisee with alternative of accepting devise and renouncing prior right or of retaining latter and renouncing devisee. Mason & Mason v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 182 S.W.2d 729, 733.

Election judges. In English law, judges of the high court selected in pursuance of Parliamentary Elections Act of 1868, and Judicature Act of 1925, for the trial of election petitions. See Election board.

Election of remedies. See Election.

Election petitions. In England, petitions for inquiry into the validity of elections of members of parliament when it is alleged that the return of a member is invalid for bribery or any other reason.

Election returns. The report made to the board of canvassers or election board of the number of votes cast for each candidate or proposition voted upon by those charged by law with the duty of counting or tallying the votes for or against the respective candidates or propositions.

Electio semel facta, et placi tum testatum non patitur regressum /əˈleɪkʃ(ə)riˈsɛmil ˈfæktə et pliːsədɒm testɪdɔm ˈnɒn pæədæd ræɡrɛsəm/. Election once made, and plea witnessed (or intent shown), suffers not a recall.

Elective. Dependent upon choice; bestowed or passing by election. Also pertaining or relating to elections; conferring the right or power to vote at elections.

Elective franchise. The right of voting at public elections. The privilege of qualified voters to cast their ballots for the candidates they favor at elections authorized by law as guaranteed by Fifteenth and Nineteenth Amendments to Constitution, and by federal voting rights acts.

Elective office. One which is to be filled by popular election. One filled by the direct exercise of the voters' franchise in contrast to an appointive office.

Elective share. See Election (Law of wills); Election by spouse.

Elector. A duly qualified voter; one who has a vote in the choice of any officer; a constituent. One who elects or has the right of choice, or who has the right to vote for any functionary, or for the adoption of any measure. In a narrower sense, one who has the general right to vote, and the right to vote for public officers. One authorized to exercise the elective franchise.

One of the persons chosen to comprise the "electoral college" (q.v.). Also, the title of certain German princes who had a voice in the election of the Holy Roman Emperors. The office of elector in some instances became hereditary and was connected with territorial possessions.

Sometimes, one who exercises the right of election in equity.

Registered qualified elector. One possessing the constitutional qualifications, and registered under the registration statute.

Electoral. Pertaining to electors or elections; composed or consisting of electors. See Electoral college.

Electoral college. The college or body of electors of a state chosen to elect the president and vice-president; also, the whole body of such electors, composed of the electoral colleges of the several states. See U.S. Const. Amend. XII.

Electoral process. Generic term for methods by which persons are elected to public office; voting.

Electronic surveillance. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.
Eleemosyna /ɪ'ləməʊsəniə/ Possessions belonging to the church.

Eleemosyna regis, and eleemosyna aratri, or carucarum /ɪ'ləməʊsənə riːˈjɪs/ˈærətrɪ/ˈkærəkərəm/ A penny which King Ethelred ordered to be paid for every plow in England towards the support of the poor.

Eleemosynaria /ɪləməʊsnərɪəriə/ The place in a religious house where the common alms were deposited, and thence by the almoner distributed to the poor. In old English law, the aumerie, aumbry, or ambyr; words still used in common speech in the north of England, to denote a pantry or cupboard. The office of almoner.

Eleemosynarius /ɪləməʊsnəriəriəs/ In old English law, an almoner, or chief officer, who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses.

Eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses.

Eleemosynary /ɪləməʊsnəriəriə/ Relating or devoted to charity; given in charity; having the nature of alms. United Community Services v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 162 Neb. 786, 77 N.W.2d 578, 582. See Charity; Charitable.

Eleemosynary corporation. A private corporation created for charitable and benevolent purposes. Charitable corporation. See also Charitable organizations.

Eleemosynary defense. Term used to describe defense available in some jurisdictions for charitable corporations and institutions when they are sued in tort; though such tort immunity has been abrogated or greatly restricted in many states.

Eleganter /ɪləɡəntər/ In the civil law, accurately; with discrimination.

Elegit /əˈliːdʒɪt/. (Lat. He has chosen.) This was the name, in English practice, of a writ of execution first given by the statute of Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I, c. 18) either upon a judgment for a debt or damages or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king's court. It was so called because it was in the choice or election of the plaintiff whether he would sue out this writ or a fi. fa. By it the defendant's goods and chattels were appraised and all of them (except oxen and beasts of the plow) were delivered to the plaintiff; at such reasonable appraisement and price, in part satisfaction of his debt. If the goods were not sufficient, then the moiety of his freehold lands, which he had at the time of the judgment given, were also to be delivered to the plaintiff, to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof the debt be levied, or till the defendant's interest be expired. During this period the plaintiff was called "tenant by elegit," and his estate, an "estate by elegit." Such writ was abolished by Administration of Justice Act of 1956.

Element. Material; substance; ingredient; factor.

Also, one of the simple substances or principles of which, according to early natural philosophers, the physical universe is composed, the four elements pointed out by Empedocles being fire, air, water, earth. See Elements.

Elements. The forces of nature. Violent or severe weather. The ultimate undecomposable parts which unite to form anything. Popularly, fire, air, earth, and water, anciently supposed to be the four simple bodies of which the world was composed. Often applied in a particular sense to wind and water, as "the fury of the elements." Fire and water as elements included in the expression "damages by the elements" means the same thing as "damages by the act of God."

Elements of crime. Those constituent parts of a crime which must be proved by the prosecution to sustain a conviction.

Eleventh Amendment. The Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, added in 1798, which provides that the judicial power of the U.S. shall not extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state.

Eligible. Fit and proper to be chosen; qualified to be elected. Capable of serving, legally qualified to serve. Capable of being chosen, as a candidate for office. Also, qualified and capable of holding office. See also Capacity.

Elimination. In old English law, the act of banishing or turning out of doors; rejection.

Elinguation /ɪˈlɪŋɡwəˈʃən/. The punishment of cutting out the tongue.

Elisors /əˈlɪzərəz/. Electors or choosers. Persons appointed by the court to execute writs of venire, in cases where both the sheriff and coroner are disqualified from acting, and whose duty is to choose—that is, name and return—the jury. 3 Bl.Comm. 355.

Persons appointed to execute any writ, in default of the sheriff and coroner, are also called "elisors." An elisor may be appointed to take charge of a jury retiring to deliberate upon a verdict, when both sheriff and coroner are disqualified or unable to act.

Elkins Act. Federal Act (1903) which strengthened the Interstate Commerce Act by prohibiting rebates and other forms of preferential treatment to large shippers.

Ell. A measure of length answering to the modern yard. 1 Bl.Comm. 275. See also Meter.

Ellenborough's Act /ɛlənˈbrəʊz ˈækt/. An English statute (43 Geo. III, c. 58) punishing offenses against the person.

Ellipsis /əˈlɪpsəs/. Omission of words or clauses necessary to complete the construction, but not necessary to convey the meaning.

Elogium /əˈlɔʊdʒiəm/. In the civil law, a will or testament.

Eloigne /əˈlɔɪn/. (Fr. éloigner, to remove to a distance; to remove afar off.) A return to a writ of replevin, when the chattels have been removed out of the way of the sheriff.

Eloignment /əˈlɔɪnmənt/. The getting a thing or person out of the way; or removing it to a distance, so as to be out of reach.
Emancipation. The act by which one who was unfree, or under the power and control of another, is rendered free, or set at liberty and made his own master. The term is principally used with reference to the emancipation of a minor child by its parents, which involves an entire surrender of the right to the care, custody, and earnings of such child as well as a renunciation of parental duties. Glover v. Glover, 44 Tenn.App. 712, 319 S.W.2d 238, 241. The emancipation may be express, as by voluntary agreement of parent and child, or implied from such acts and conduct as import consent, and it may be conditional or absolute, complete or partial. Complete emancipation is entire surrender of care, custody, and earnings of child, as well as renunciation of parental duties. And a “partial emancipation” frees a child for only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent’s rights, or for some purposes, and not for others.

There is no fixed age when a child becomes emancipated (though it is usually upon reaching majority); it does not automatically occur on reaching majority. Turner v. McCune, Mass.App., 357 N.E.2d 942.

In Roman law, the enfranchisement of a son by his father, which was ancienly done by the formality of an imaginary sale. This was abolished by Justinian, who substituted the simpler proceeding of a manumission before a magistrate.

Emancipation proclamation. An executive proclamation, issued January 1, 1863, by Abraham Lincoln, declaring that all persons held in slavery in certain designated states and districts were and should remain free.

Embargo. A proclamation or order of government, usually issued in time of war or threatened hostilities, prohibiting the departure of ships or goods from some or all ports until further order. Government order prohibiting commercial trade with individuals or businesses of other nations. Legal prohibition on commerce.

The temporary or permanent sequestration of the property of individuals for the purposes of a government, e.g., to obtain vessels for the transport of troops, the owners being reimbursed for this forced service.

Embassador. See Ambassador.

Ember Days. In ecclesiastical law, those days which the ancient fathers called “quatuor tempora jejunii” are of great antiquity in the church. They are observed on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday next after Quadragesima Sunday, or the first Sunday in Lent, after Whitsuntide, Holyrood Day, in September, and St. Lucy’s Day, about the middle of December. Our almanacs call the weeks in which they fall the “Ember Weeks,” and they are now chiefly noticed on account of the ordination of priests and deacons; because the canon appoints the Sundays next after the Ember weeks for the solemn times of ordination, though the bishops, if they please, may ordain on any Sunday or holiday.

Embezzlement. To "embezzle" means willfully to take, or convert to one's own use, another's money or property, of which the wrongdoing acquired possession lawfully, by reason of some office or employment or position of trust. The elements of "embezzlement" are that there must be relationship such as that of employment or agency between the owner of the money and the defendant, the money alleged to have been embezzled must have come into the possession of defendant by virtue of that relationship and there must be an intentional and fraudulent appropriation or conversion of the money. State v.
Thyfault, 121 N.J.Super. 487, 297 A.2d 873, 879. The fraudulent conversion of the property of another by one who has lawful possession of the property and whose fraudulent conversion has been made punishable by statute. See also Conversion.

Emblemata tribonianii /émblémâts trabówniyéynây/. In the Roman law, alterations, modifications, and additions to the writings of the older jurists, selected to make up the body of the Pandects, introduced by Tribonian and his associates who constituted the commission appointed for that purpose, with a view to harmonize contradictions, exscind obsolete matter, and make the whole conform to the law as understood in Justinian's time, were called by this name.

Emblements /émblamants/. Crops annually produced by labor of tenant. Corn, wheat, rye, potatoes, garden vegetables, and other crops which are produced annually, not spontaneously, but by labor and industry. Finley v. McClure, 222 Kan. 637, 567 P.2d 851, 853. The doctrine of emblements denotes the right of a tenant to take and carry away, after his tenancy has ended, such annual products of the land as have resulted from his own care and labor. See Fructus industriales.

Emblers de gentz /émbrârz da jénts/. L. Fr. A stealing from the people. The phrase occurs in the old English rolls of parliament: "Whereas divers murders, embliers de gentz, and robberies are committed," etc.

Embolsme /ëmbálizam/. The mechanical obstruction of an artery or capillary by some body traveling in the blood current, as, a blood-clot (embolus), a globule of fat or an air bubble.

Embols /ëmboz/. In case of wounds is a product of coagulation of the blood or blood clot. A plug which floats along until it becomes lodged so as to obstruct the passage of the blood. It consists usually of a clot or fibrin, a shred from a morbid growth, a globule of fat, air bubbles, or a microorganism. An embolus or floating particle by attaching itself or becoming wedged may form a thrombosis or occlusion.

Embraceor /ëmbréyars/. A person guilty of the offense of embracery (q.v.).

Embracery /ëmbréyarsi/. The crime of attempting to influence a jury corruptly to one side or the other, by promises, persuasions, entreaties, entertainments, douceurs, and the like. The person guilty of it is called an "embraceor." This is both a state and federal (18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1503, 1504) crime.

Emenda /áménda/. Amends; something given in reparation for a trespass; or, in old Saxon times, in compensation for an injury or crime.

Emendare /iymandéry/. In Saxon law, to make amends or satisfaction for any crime or trespass committed; to pay a fine; to be fined. Emendare se, to redeem, or ransom one's life, by payment of a wergild.

Emendatio /ëmandéysh(y)ow/. In old English law, amendment, or correction. The power of amending and correcting abuses, according to certain rules and measures.

In Saxon law, a pecuniary satisfaction for an injury; the same as emenda (q.v.).

Emendatio panis et cerevisiae /ëmandéysh(y)ow pênas êt sarâviz(h)iyiy/. In old English law, the power of supervising and correcting the weights and measures of bread and ale (assisting bread and beer).

E mera gratia /ëy méra gréysh(y)iy/. Out of mere grace or favor.

Emerge /ëmérj/. To arise; to come to light.

Emergency. A sudden unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence or condition; perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances; a sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity. Emergency is an unforeseen combination of circumstances that calls for immediate action. State v. Perry, 29 Ohio App.2d 33, 278 N.E.2d 50, 53. See also Emergency doctrine; Sudden emergency doctrine.

Emergency Court of Appeals. Court created during World War II to review orders of the Price Control Administrator. It was abolished in 1953. This court was established again in 1970 under Section 211 of the Economic Stabilization Act to handle primarily wage and price control matters.

Emergency doctrine. Under the doctrine variously referred to as the "emergency," "imminent peril," or "sudden peril" doctrine, when one is confronted with a sudden peril requiring instinctive action, he is not, in determining his course of action, held to the exercise of the same degree of care as when he has time for reflection, and in the event that a driver of a motor vehicle suddenly meets with an emergency which naturally would overpower the judgment of a reasonably prudent and careful driver, so that momentarily he is thereby rendered incapable of deliberate and intelligent action, and as a result injures a third person, he is not negligent, provided he has used due care to avoid meeting such an emergency and, after it arises, he exercises such care as a reasonably prudent and capable driver would use under the unusual circumstances. Sandberg v. Spoelstra, 46 Wash.2d 776, 285 P.2d 564, 568.

In an emergency situation when medical service is required for an adult who by virtue of his physical condition is incapable of giving consent, or with respect to a child, whose parent or other guardian is absent, and thus incapable of giving consent, the law implies the consent required to administer emergency medical services. This is a good defense to an action of tort for an alleged battery.

Emergency employment doctrine. A regularly employed servant possesses implied authority to engage an assistant to aid in performing a task, within scope of servant's duties in case of emergency rendering it absolutely necessary to obtain such assistance, and without which emergency conditions could not be overcome by servant or any of his coemployees in regular service of their common master. Hall v. O. C. Whitaker Co., 143 Tex. 397, 185 S.W.2d 720, 722, 723.

Emergent year. The epoch or date whence any people begin to compute their time.

Emigrant /ëmigrant/. One who leaves his country for any reason, with intention to not return, with design to reside elsewhere. See also Immigrant.

Emigrant agent. One engaged in the business of hiring laborers for work outside the country or state.
Emigration. The act of removing from one country to another, with intention to not return. It is to be distinguished from "expatriation" which means the abandonment of one's country and renunciation of one's citizenship in it, while emigration denotes merely the removal of person and property to another country. The former is usually the consequence of the latter. Emigration is also sometimes used in reference to the removal from one section to another of the same country. See also Deportation; Immigration.

Emigré. Person forced to emigrate for political reasons. See also Deportation.

Eminence /éman(t)s/ An honorary title given to cardinals. They were called "illustriissimi" and "reverendissimi" until the pontificate of Urban VIII.

Eminent domain. The power to take private property for public use by the state, municipalities, and private persons or corporations authorized to exercise functions of public character. Housing Authority of Cherokee National of Oklahoma v. Langley, Okl., 555 P.2d 1025, 1026. Fifth Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

In the United States, the power of eminent domain is founded in both the federal (Fifth Amend.) and state constitutions. However, the Constitution limits the power to taking for a public purpose and prohibits the exercise of the power of eminent domain without just compensation to the owners of the property which is taken. The process of exercising the power of eminent domain is commonly referred to as "condemnation", or "expropriation".

The right of eminent domain is the right of the state, through its regular organization, to reassert, either temporarily or permanently, its dominion over any portion of the soil of the state on account of public exigency and for the public good. Thus, in time of war or insurrection, the proper authorities may possess and hold any part of the territory of the state for the common safety; and in time of peace the legislature may authorize the appropriation of the same to public purposes, such as the opening of roads, construction of defenses, or providing channels for trade or travel. Eminent domain is the highest and most exact idea of property remaining in the government, or in the aggregate body of the people in their sovereign capacity. It gives a right to resume the possession of the property in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of the state, whenever the public interest requires it.

See also Adequate compensation; Condemnation; Constructive taking; Damages; Expropriation; Fair market value; Just compensation; Larger parcel; Public use; Take.

Expropriation. The term "expropriation" (used e.g. in Louisiana) is practically synonymous with the term "eminent domain". Tennessee Gas Transmission Co. v. Violet Trapping Co., La.App., 200 So.2d 428, 433.

Partial taking. The taking of part of an owner's property under the laws of eminent domain. Compensation must be based on damages or benefits to the remaining property, as well as the part taken. See Condemnation.

Emissary. A person sent upon a mission as the agent of another; also a secret agent sent to ascertain the sentiments and designs of others, and to propagate opinions favorable to his employer. See Ambassador; Diplomatic agent.

Emission. The discharge, ejection or throwing out; e.g. a pollutant from a factory or any secretion or other matter from the body.

Emigré. Person forced to emigrate for political reasons. See also Deportation.

Emphasisizing facts. A jury instruction is said to emphasize facts which may contain sufficient facts to authorize a verdict, but nevertheless some fact or facts are selected from the evidence and mentioned in such a way as to indicate to the jury that they have especial importance when that is not justified. Robinson v. Ross, Mo., 47 S.W.2d 122, 125.

Emphyteutsus /emfâst¡w macht/. In the Roman and civil law, a contract by which a landed estate was leased to a tenant, either in perpetuity or for a long term of years, upon the reservation of an annual rent or a canon, and upon the condition that the lessee should improve the property, by building, cultivating, or otherwise, and with a right in the lessee to alien the estate at pleasure or pass it to his heirs by descent, and free from any revocation, re-entry, or claim of forfeiture on the part of the grantor, except for non-payment of the rent. 3 BL.Comm. 232.

The right granted by such a contract (jus emphyteuticum, or emphyteuticarium). The real right by which a person is entitled to enjoy another's estate as if it were his own, and to dispose of its substance, as far as can be done without deteriorating it.

Emphyteuta /emfâst¡w des/. In the civil law, the person to whom an emphyteusis is granted; the lessee or tenant under a contract of emphyteusis.

Emphyteuticus /emfâst¡w daskas/. In the civil law, founded on, growing out of, or having the character of, an emphyteusis; held under an emphyteusis. 3 BL.Comm. 232.

Empire.
The dominion or jurisdiction of an emperor; the region over which the dominion of an emperor extends; imperial power; supreme dominion; sovereign command.

Empiric /empiírk/. A practitioner in medicine or surgery, who proceeds on experience only, without science or legal qualification; a quack.

Empirical.

That which is based on experience, experiment, or observation.

Emplazamiento /emplasîmyéntow/. In Spanish law, a summons or citation, issued by authority of a judge, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to appear before the tribunal at a designated day and hour.

Emplead.

To indict; to prefer a charge against; to accuse.

Emploï /emplwá/. In French law, equitable conversion. When property covered by the régime dotal is sold, the proceeds of the sale must be reinvested for the benefit of the wife. It is the duty of the purchaser to see that the price is so reinvested.

Employ.

To engage in one's service; to hire; to use as an agent or substitute in transacting business; to commission and intrust with the performance of certain acts or functions or with the management of one's affairs; and, when used in respect to a servant or hired laborer, the term is equivalent to hiring, which implies a request and a contract for a compensation. Tennessee Coal Iron & R. Co. v. Muscoda Local No. 123, Ala., 321 U.S. 590, 64 S.Ct. 698, 703, 705, 88 L.Ed. 949. To make use of, to keep at work, to entrust with some duty. See also Employment.

Employed.

Term signifies both the act of doing a thing and the being under contract or orders to do it. To give employment to; to have employment.

Employee.

A person in the service of another under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, where the employer has the power or right to control and direct the employee in the material details of how the work is to be performed. Riverbend Country Club v. Patterson, Tex.Civ.App., 399 S.W.2d 382, 383. One who works for an employer; a person working for salary or wages.

Generally, when person for whom services are performed has right to control and direct individual who performs services not only as to result to be accomplished by work but also as to details and means by which result is accomplished, individual subject to direction is an "employee".

"Servant" is synonymous with "employee". Gibson v. Gillette Motor Transport, Tex.Civ.App., 138 S.W.2d 293, 294; Tennessee Valley Appliances v. Rowden, 24 Tenn.App. 487, 146 S.W.2d 845, 848. However, "employee" must be distinguished from "independent contractor," "officer," "vice-principal," "agent," etc.

The term is often specially defined by statutes (e.g. workers' compensation acts; Fair Labor Standards Act), and whether one is an employee or not will be determined inside or outside a particular statute will depend upon facts and circumstances.

For "Executive employees," see that title. See also Borrowed employee; Servant.

Employer.

One who employs the services of others; one for whom employees work and who pays their wages or salaries. The correlative of "employee."

Employers' liability acts. Statutes (e.g. Federal Employers' Liability Act; Workers' Compensation Acts) defining or limiting the occasions and the extent to which employers shall be liable in damages for injuries to their employees occurring in the course of the employment, and particularly abolishing the common-law rule that the employer is not liable if the injury is caused by the fault or negligence of a fellow servant.

Employment.

Act of employing or state of being employed; that which engages or occupies; that which consumes time or attention; also an occupation, profession, trade, post or business. Hinton v. Columbia River Packers' Ass'n, C.C.A. Or., 117 F.2d 310. Includes the doing of the work and a reasonable margin of time and space required in passing to and from the place where the work is to be done. California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, 21 Cal.2d 751, 135 P.2d 158, 161; Park Utah Consol. Mines Co. v. Industrial Commission, 103 Utah 64, 133 P.2d 314, 317. Activity in which person engages or is employed; normally, on a day-to-day basis. See also Casual employment; Course of employment; Seasonal employment.

Employment agency.

Business operated by a person, firm or corporation engaged in procuring, for a fee, employment for others and employees for employers. The fee may be paid by either the employer or the employee, depending upon the terms of the agreement. See also Finder.
EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT

Employment contract. An agreement or contract between employer and employee in which the terms and conditions of one's employment are provided.

Emporium /ˈempəriəm/. A place for wholesale trade in commodities carried by sea. The name is sometimes applied to a seaport town, but it properly signifies only a particular place in such a town.

Empresarios /emprɛsɑːriəwəs/. In Mexican law, undertakers or promoters of extensive enterprises, aided by concessions or monopolistic grants from government; particularly, persons receiving extensive land grants in consideration of their bringing emigrants into the country and settling them on the lands, with a view of increasing the population and developing the resources of the country. U. S. v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co., 121 U.S. 325, 7 S.Ct. 1015, 30 L.Ed. 949.

Emprestido /empres(add)stɪdʊ/. In Spanish law, a loan. Something lent to the borrower at his request.

Emptio /ˈɛmptʃiə/. In the Roman and civil law, the act of buying; a purchase.

Emptio bonorum /ˈɛmptʃiə bɒnərərm/. A species of forced assignment for the benefit of creditors; being a public sale of an insolvent debtor’s estate whereby the purchaser succeeded to all his property, debts, and claims, and became responsible for his debts and liabilities to the extent of a quota fixed before the transfer.

Emptio et venditio /ˈɛmptʃiə ɛt vəndiʃiə/. Purchase and sale; sometimes translated “emption and vendition.” The name of the contract of sale in the Roman law. Sometimes made a compound word, emptio-venditio.

Emptio rei sperata /ˈɛmptʃiə ɛri spɛrətætə/. A purchase in the hope of an uncertain future profit; the purchase of a thing not yet in existence or not yet in the possession of the seller, as, the cast of a net or a crop to be grown, and the price of which is to depend on the actual gain. On the other hand, if the price is fixed and not subject to fluctuation, but is to be paid whether the gain be greater or less, it is called emptio spei.

Emptor /ˈɛmptər/. Lat. A buyer or purchaser. Used in the maxim “caveat emptor,” let the buyer beware; i.e., the buyer of an article must be on his guard and take the risks of his purchase. See Caveat emptor.

Emptor emit quam minimò potest, venditor vendit quam maximo potest /ˈɛmptər ɛmɪt kwəm mɪnɪməʊ pəʊdst, vɛndɪtor ə vəndɪt kwəm mæksəməʊ pəʊdst/. The buyer purchases for the lowest price he can; the seller sells for the highest price he can.

Emtio /ˈɛmptʃiəʊ/. In the civil law, purchase. This form of the word is used in the Digests and Code. See Emptio.

Emtor /ˈɛmptər/. In the civil law, a buyer or purchaser; the buyer.

Emtrix /ˈɛmtrax/. In the civil law, a female purchaser; the purchaser.

Enable. To give power to do something; to make able. In the case of a person under disability as to dealing with another, “enable” has the primary meaning of removing that disability; not of conferring a compulsory power as against that other.

Enabling Act. See Enabling statute.

Enabling clause. That portion of a statute or constitution which gives to governmental officials the right to put it into effect and to enforce such. See Enforcement powers.

Enabling power. When the donor of a power, who is the owner of the estate, confers upon persons not seized of the fee the right of creating interests to take effect out of it, which could not be done by the donee of the power unless by such authority, this is called an “enabling power.” See also Power of appointment.

Enabling statute. Term applied to any statute enabling persons or corporations to do what before they could not. It is applied to statutes which confer new powers. See also Enabling clause.

The English Act of 32 Henry VIII, c. 28, by which tenants in tail, husbands seised in right of their wives, and others were empowered to make leases for their lives or for twenty-one years, which they could not do before. 2 Bl.Comm. 319.

Enach. In Saxon law, the satisfaction for a crime; the recompense for a fault.

Enact. To establish by law; to perform or effect; to decree. The common introductory formula in making statutory laws is, “Be it enacted.” See Enacting clause.

Enacting clause. A clause at the beginning of a statute which states the authority by which it is made. That part of a statute which declares its enactment and serves to identify it as an act of legislation proceeding from the proper legislative authority. Various formulas are used for this clause, such as “Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois represented in general assembly,” “Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled,” “The general assembly do enact,” etc.

Enactment. The method or process by which a bill in the Legislature becomes a law.

Enajenacion /eɪnəhoʊniˈeɪʃən/. In Spanish and Mexican law, alienation; transfer of property. The act by which the property in a thing, by lucrative title, is transferred, as a donation; or by onerous title, as by sale or barter. In a more extended sense, the term comprises also the contracts of emphyteusis, pledge, and mortgage, and even the creation of a servitude upon an estate.

En arère /ˈɛn aɾər/. L. Fr. In time past.

En autre droit /ən ˈdruːz drɔt/ˌən ˈdruːz drɔ(ˌ)wɔt/. In the right of another. See Autre droit.

En banc /ˈbæŋk/ˌən ˈbɔŋk/. L. Fr. In the bench. Full bench. Refers to a session where the entire membership of the court will participate in the decision rather than the regular quorum. In other countries, it is common for a court to have more members than are usually necessary to hear an appeal. In the United States, the Circuit Courts of Appeal usually sit in panels of judges but for important cases may expand the bench to a larger number, when they are said to be sitting en banc. See Fed.R.App.P. 35. An appellate court in which all the judges who are necessary for a quorum are sitting as contrasted with a session of such court presided over by a single justice or panel of justices.

En bloc /ông blók/. As a unit; as a whole.

Enbrever /anbriyvar/. L. Fr. To write down in short; to abbreviate, or, in old language, imbréviate; to put into a schedule.

En brevet /ông brav’é/. In French law, an acte is said to be en brevet when a copy of it has not been recorded by the notary who drew it.

Encinte /ónsént/. Pregnant. See Pregnancy.

Encheson /ançhíyzen/. The occasion, cause, or reason for which anything is done.

Enclose. See Inclose.

Enclosure /ónkloivzhår/. See Inclosure.

Encomienda /énkówmyéná/. In Spanish law, a grant from the crown to a private person of a certain portion of territory in the Spanish colonies, together with the concession of a certain number of the native inhabitants, on the feudal principle of commendam. Also a royal grant of privileges to the military orders of Spain.

Encourage. In criminal law, to instigate; to incite to action; to give courage to; to inspire; to embolden; to raise confidence; to make confident; to help; to forward; to advise. See Aid and abet.

Encroach. To enter by gradual steps or stealth into the possessions or rights of another; to trespass or intrude. To gain or intrude unlawfully upon the lands, property, or authority of another.

Encroachment. An illegal intrusion in a highway or navigable river, with or without obstruction. Hartford Elec. Light Co. v. Water Resources Commission, 162 Conn. 89, 291 A.2d 721, 730. An encroachment upon a street or highway is a fixture, such as a wall or fence, which illegally intrudes into or invades the highway or incloses a portion of it, diminishing its width or area, but without closing it to public travel.

In the law of easements, where the owner of an easement alters the dominant tenement, so as to impose an additional restriction or burden on the servient tenement, he is said to commit an encroachment.

Encumbrance. Any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in another to diminution of its value, but consistent with the passing of the fee. Knudson v. Weeks, D.C. Okl., 394 F.Supp. 963, 976. A claim, lien, charge, or liability attached to and binding real property; e.g. a mortgage; judgment lien; mechanics' lien; lease; security interest; easement or right of way; accrued and unpaid taxes.

End. Object; intent; result; goal; termination point. Things are construed according to the end.

Endavor. To exert physical and intellectual strength toward the attainment of an object. A systematic or continuous effort. Thompson v. Corbin, Tex. Civ. App., 137 S.W.2d 157, 159.

En déclaration de simulation /ón déklærasyowm da sim(y)laýowm/. A form of action used in Louisiana. Its object is to have a contract declared judicially a simulation and a nullity, to remove a cloud from the title, and to bring back, for any legal purpose, the thing sold to the estate of the true owner.

En demeure /ón dámyur/. In default. Used in Louisiana of a debtor who fails to pay on demand according to the terms of his obligation.

Endenzie, or endenizen /ándénizan/. To make free; to enfranchise.

End lines. In mining law, the end lines of a claim, as platted or laid down on the ground, are those which mark its boundaries on the shorter dimension, where it crosses the vein, while the "side lines" are those which mark its longer dimension, where it follows the course of the vein. But with reference to extra-lateral rights, if the claim as a whole crosses the vein, instead of following its course, the end lines will become side lines and vice versa.

Endocarditis /édowkárdaíydás/. An inflammation of the living membrane of the heart.

End of will. Point in will at which dispositive provisions terminate. In re Coyne's Estate, 349 Pa. 331, 37 A.2d 509, 510. Such is normally followed by attestation clauses.

Endorsement. See Indorsement.

Endorse. See Indorse.

Endorser. See Indorser.

Endow. To give a dower; to bestow upon; to make pecuniary provision for.

Endowment. Transfer, generally as a gift, of money or property to an institution for a particular purpose such as a gift to a hospital for medical research. The act of settling a fund, or permanent pecuniary provision, for the maintenance of a public institution, charity, college, etc. The assignment of dower; the setting off a woman's dower. 2 BL.Comm. 135.

Endowment insurance. See Insurance.

Endowment policy. Insurance policy under which insurer agrees to pay insured a stated sum at end of definite period, or, if insured dies before end of such period, to pay amount to person designated as beneficiary. Speliacy v. American Life Ins. Ass'n, 144 Conn. 346, 131 A.2d 834, 838.

Endurance. State or capability of lasting; continuance; or act or instance of bearing or suffering. A continuing or the power of continuing under pain, hardship, or distress without being overcome. Sufferance; as beyond endurance. State ex rel. Adams v. Crowder, 46 N.M. 20, 120 P.2d 428, 431.
Enemy. Adversary; e.g. military adversary.

Enemy alien. An alien residing or traveling in a country which is at war with the country of which he is a national. Enemy aliens may be interned or restricted.

Enemy belligerent. Citizens who associate themselves with the military arm of an enemy government and enter the United States bent on hostile acts. Ex parte Quirin, App.D.C., 317 U.S. 1, 63 S.Ct. 2, 15, 87 L.Ed. 3.

Enemy's property. In international law, and particularly in the usage of prize courts, this term designates any property which is engaged or used in illegal intercourse with the public enemy, whether belonging to an ally or a citizen, as the illegal traffic stamps it with the hostile character and attaches to it all the penal consequences.

Public enemy. A nation at war with the United States; also every citizen or subject of such nation. Term however does not generally include robbers, thieves, private depredators, or riotous mobs. The term has acquired, in the vocabulary of journalism and civic indignation, a more extended meaning, denoting a particularly notorious offender against the criminal laws, especially one who seems more or less immune from successful prosecution, or a social, health or economic condition or problem affecting the public at large, which is difficult to abate or control.

Energy, Department of. The Department of Energy (DOE) provides the framework for a comprehensive and balanced national energy plan through the coordination and administration of the energy functions of the Federal Government. The Department is responsible for the research, development, and demonstration of energy technology; the marketing of Federal power; energy conservation; the nuclear weapons program; regulation of energy production and use; pricing and allocation; and a central energy data collection and analysis program.

En exchange il covent que les estates soient egales. In an exchange it is desirable that the estates be equal.

En fait /ön fé/. Fr. In fact; in deed; actually.

Enfeoff /enfiif/ /enfɛfl/. To invest with an estate by feoffment. To make a gift of any corporeal hereditaments to another. See Feoffment.

Enfeoffment /enfiifment/. The act of investing with any dignity or possession; also the instrument or deed by which a person is invested with possessions.

Enforce. To put into execution; to cause to take effect; to make effective; as, to enforce a particular law, a writ, a judgment, or the collection of a debt or fine; to compel obedience to. See e.g. Attachment; Execution; Garnishment.

Enforcement. The act of putting something such as a law into effect; the execution of a law; the carrying out of a mandate or command. See also Enforcement powers.

Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act. One of the uniform laws adopted by several states which gives the holder of a foreign judgment essentially the same rights to levy and execution on his judgment as the holder of a domestic judgment. The Act defines a "foreign judgment" as any judgment, decree, or order of a court of the United States or of any other court which is entitled to full faith and credit in the state. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Enforcement powers. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 23rd, 24th, and 26th Amendments to U.S.Const. each contain clauses granting to Congress the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of such Amendments.

Enfranchisement. The act of making free (as from slavery); giving a franchise or freedom to; investiture with privileges or capacities of freedom, or municipal or political liberty. Conferring the privilege of voting upon classes of persons who have not previously possessed such. See also Franchise.

Enfranchisement of copyholds. In English law, the conversion of copyhold into freehold tenure, by a conveyance of the fee-simple of the property from the lord of the manor to the copyholder, or by a release from the lord of all seigniorial rights, etc., which destroys the customary descent, and also all rights and privileges annexed to the copyholder's estate.

Engage. To employ or involve one's self; to take part in; to embark on.

Engaged in commerce. To be "engaged in commerce" for purposes of Fair Labor Standards Act and Federal Employers' Liability Act, an employee must be actually engaged in the movement of commerce or the services he performs must be so closely related thereto as to be for all practical purposes an essential part thereof, rather than an isolated local activity. McLoud v. Threlkeld, Tex., 319 U.S. 491, 63 S.Ct. 1248, 1251, 1252, 87 L.Ed. 1538; Boutell v. Walling, C.C.A.Mich., 148 F.2d 329, 331. See also Commerce.

Engage in employment. To be rendering service for employer under terms of employment, and is more than being merely hired to commence work. Walling v. Consumers Co., C.C.A.Ill., 149 F.2d 626, 632.

Engagement. A contract or agreement characterized by exchange of mutual promises; e.g. engagement to marry.

Engagement to marry. A promise or undertaking by a man to marry a woman, for breach of which, formerly, there was a cause of action in many jurisdictions. These actions today have lost favor and are not available in most states. Such actions were called heart balm suits. See Heart balm statutes.

Engender. To cause, to bring about, to excite, to occasion, to call forth.

Engineering. The art and science by which mechanical properties of matter are made useful to man in structures and machines. Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation v. Accident & Casualty Ins. Co. of Winterthur, Switzerland, C.C.A.Ohio, 134 F.2d 566, 569.

Engleshire /ɪŋɡleˈʃɪər/. A law was made by Canute, for the preservation of his Danes, that, when a man was killed, the hundred or town should be liable to be amerced, unless it could be proved that the person killed was an Englishman. This proof was called "Engleshier."

En gross /ɒn grɒs/ /ɒŋ/. Fr. In gross; total; by wholesale.

Engrossment. To copy in final draft. Drafting of resolution or bill just prior to final vote upon same in legislature. Buying up or securing enough of a commodity to obtain a monopoly, so as to resell at higher price; i.e. to corner market in such commodity. Preparing deed for execution.

Enhanced. Made greater; e.g. in value or attractiveness. This word, taken in an unqualified sense, is synonymous with "increased," and comprehends any increase of value, however caused or arising.

Enheritance. L. Fr. Inheritance.

Enitia pars /ʌnɪʃ(ɪ)ə párz/. The share of the eldest. A term of the English law descriptive of the lot or share chosen by the eldest of coparceners when they make a voluntary partition. The first choice (primer election) belongs to the eldest.

Enitia pars semper preferenda est propter privilegium etatis /ʌnɪʃ(ɪ)ə párz sɛmpər prɛʃərəndə ëst prɔprə prɔlˈvɪləjɪəm ɛtətɪs/. The part of the elder sister is always to be preferred on account of the privilege of age.

Enjoin. To require; command; positively direct. To require a person, by writ of injunction, to perform, or to abstain or desist from, some act. See Injunction; Restraining order.

Enjoy. To have, possess, and use with satisfaction; to occupy or have benefit of.

Enjoyment. The exercise of a right; the possession and fruition of a right, privilege or incorporeal hereditament. Comfort, consolation, contentment, ease, happiness, pleasure and satisfaction.

Adverse enjoyment. The possession or exercise of an easement under a claim of right against the owner of the land out of which such easement is derived.

Quiet enjoyment. Covenant for. See Covenant.

En juicio /en ˈhwiwɪs(ɪ)ˈɔw/. Span. Judicially; in a court of law; in a suit at law.

Enlarge. To make larger; to increase; to extend a time limit; to grant further time. Also to set at liberty one who has been imprisoned or in custody.

Enlarger l'estate /ənˈlɪər ˈlər ˈlestɛt/. A species of redemption which inures by way of enlarging an estate, and consists of a conveyance of the ulterior interest to the particular tenant; as if there be tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee, and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee.

Enlarging. Extending, expanding, or making more comprehensive.

Enlistment. Voluntary entry into one of the armed services other than as a commissioned officer.

En masse /ɒn mæs/ /ˈmæs/. Fr. In a mass; in a lump; in bulk; at wholesale.

En mort mayne /ɑn ˈmort meɪn/. L. Fr. In a dead hand; in mortmain.

Enoc Arden doctrine. The legal principles involved when a person leaves his spouse under such circumstances and for such a period of time as to make the other spouse believe that he is dead with the result that the remaining spouse marries another only to discover later the return of her first husband. Generally, in most states, it is safer for the remaining spouse to secure a divorce before marrying again.

Enormia /ɑnˈɔrmiə/. In old practice and pleading, unlawful or wrongful acts; wrongs. Et alia enormia, and other wrongs. This phrase constantly occurs in the old writs and declarations of trespass.

Enormous. Aggravated; excessively large. Written "enormious," in some of the old books. Enormious is where a thing is made without a rule or against law.

En owel main /ən ˈəwl ˈmeɪn/. L. Fr. In equal hand. The word "owel" occurs also in the phrase "owelety of partition."

Enpleet /ənˈplɪt/. Ancient for implead.

Enquête, or enquête /əŋˈkɛt/ /əŋkwɛst/. In canon law, an examination of witnesses, taken down in writing, by or before an authorized judge, for the purpose of gathering testimony to be used on a trial.

En recouvrement /ən rəkˈwɜːrmɔ̃/. Fr. In French law, an expression employed to denote that an endorsement made in favor of a person does not transfer to him the property in the bill of exchange, but merely constitutes an authority to such person to recover the amount of the bill.

Enrégistrement /ənʁeʒistʁəmɔ̃/. In French law, registration. A formality which consists in inscribing on a register, specially kept for the purpose by the government, a summary analysis of certain deeds and documents. At the same time that such analysis is inscribed upon the register, the clerk places upon the deed a memorandum indicating the date upon which it was registered, and at the side of such memorandum an impression is made with a stamp.

Enroll. To register; to record; to enter on the rolls of a court; to transcribe.

Enrolled. Registered; recorded. Generally speaking, terms "registered" and "enrolled" are used to distinguish certificates granted to two classes of vessels; registry is for purpose of declaring nationality of vessel engaged in foreign trade, and enrollment evidences national character of a vessel engaged in coasting trade or home traffic. R. C. Craig Ltd. v. Ships of the Sea Inc., D.C.Ga., 1056.

Enrolled bill. The final copy of a bill or joint resolution which has passed both houses of a legislature and is ready for signature. In legislative practice, a bill which has been duly introduced, finally passed by both houses, signed by the proper officers of each, approved by the governor (or President) and filed by the secretary of state.

Enrolled bill rule. Under "enrolled bill rule" it is conclusively presumed that statute, as authenticated and deposited in Secretary of State's office, is precisely same as enacted by Legislature and courts will not go behind enrolled bill. Nueces County v. King, Tex.Civ.App., 350 S.W.2d 385, 387. Under this rule, once an election which is had on question of adoption of statute is sanctioned by law and is held, it is then too late to question the steps or legal procedure by which the measure got on the ballot.

Enrollment. Act of recording, enrolling, or registering.

Enrollment of vessels. The recording and certification of vessels employed in coastwise or inland navigation; as distinguished from the "registration" of vessels employed in foreign commerce.

En route /ən rúwt/. Fr. On the way; in the course of a voyage or journey; in course of transportation.

Enschedule /ənskéjal/. To insert in a list, account, or writing.

Enseal /ənsiyl/. To seal. Ensealing is still used as a formal word in conveyancing.

Enserved /ɛnˈsɜrvərd/. L. Fr. To make subject to a service or servitude.

Ens legis /ɛn dʒiːˈlɪjəs/. L. Lat. A creature of the law; an artificial being, as contrasted with a natural person. Applied to corporations, considered as deriving their existence entirely from the law.

Ensie /ənsiːw/. To follow after; to follow in order or train of events.

Entail, v. To settle or limit the succession to real property; to create an estate tail.

Entail, n. A fee abridged or limited to the issue, or certain classes of issue, instead of descending to all the heirs.

Break or bar an entail. To free an estate from the limitations imposed by an entail and permit its free disposition, anciently by means of a fine or common recovery, but later by deed in which the tenant and next heir join.

Quasi entail. An estate pur autre vie may be granted, not only to a man and his heirs, but to a man and the heirs of his body, which is termed a "quasi entail;" the interest so granted not being properly an estate-tail (for the statute De Donis applies only where the subject of the entail is an estate of inheritance), but yet so far in the nature of an estate-tail that it will go to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the cestui que vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend, if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body.

Entailed. Settled or limited to specified heirs, or in tail.

Entailed money. Money directed to be invested in reality to be entailed.

Entailment. An interference with and curtailment of the ordinary rules pertaining to devolution by inheritance; a limitation and direction by which property is to descend different from the course which it would take if the creator of the entailment, grantor or testator, had been content that the estate should devolve in regular and general succession to heirs at law in the statutory order of precedence and sequence.

Entencion /əntɛnʃən/. In old English law, the plaintiff's count or declaration.

Entendment. The old form of intendment (q.v.) derived directly from the French, and used to denote the true meaning or signification of a word or sentence; that is, the understanding or construction of law.

Enter. To form a constituent part; to become a part or partner; to impenetrate; share or mix with, as, to "enter" into the composition of pewter. Bedford v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Corporation, 102 Colo. 538, 81 P.2d 752, 755. To go or come into a place or condition; to make or effect an entrance; to cause to go into or be received into. Hancock v. State, Tex.Cr. App., 363 S.W.2d 273, 275.

In the law of real property, to go upon land for the purpose of taking possession of it. In strict usage, the entering is preliminary to the taking possession but in common parlance the entry is now merged in the taking possession. See Entry.

To place anything before a court, or upon or among the records, in a formal and regular manner, and usually in writing; as to "enter an appearance," to "enter a judgment." In this sense the word is nearly equivalent to setting down formally in writing, in either a full or abridged form. See Appearance; Docket; Entering judgments; Entry.

Enterceur /ɛntəˈsɜr(ə)ər/. L. Fr. A party challenging (claiming) goods; he who has placed them in the hands of a third person.

Entering judgments; En. The formal entry of the judgment on the rolls or records (e.g. civil docket) of the court, which is necessary before bringing an appeal or an action on the judgment. The entering of judgment is a ministerial act performed by the clerk of court by means of which permanent evidence of judicial act in rendering judgment is made a record of the court. Knox v. Long, 152 Tex. 291, 257 S.W.2d 289, 291. Under some statutes or court rules, the entering consists merely in the filing of a judgment with the clerk, while under others the entry of a judgment consists in the recording of it in the judgment book or civil docket. Fed.R.Civ. P. 55, 58, 79.

Entry of judgment differs from rendition of judgment. "Rendition" of a judgment is the judicial act of the court in pronouncing the sentence of the law upon the facts in controversy. The "entry" is a ministerial act, which consists in entering upon the record a statement of the final conclusion reached by the court in the matter, thus furnishing external and incontestable evidence of the sentence given, and designed to stand as a perpetual memorial of its action.

Entire loss of sight. In respect of one eye, or both, means substantial blindness, not necessarily absolute. See Blindness.

 Entirely without understanding. Inability to comprehend nature and effect of transaction involved, not necessarily absolute imbecility, idiocy or mental incapacity.

 Entire output contract. Promise to deliver one's entire output (i.e. production) to the other. If no other detriment can be located, it will be found in the promisor's having surrendered his privilege of selling elsewhere. Such agreements are governed by U.C.C. § 2–306.

Entire tenancy. A sole possession by one person, called "severalty," which is contrary to several tenancy, where a joint or common possession is in one or more.

Entirety. The whole, in contradistinction to a moiety or part only. When land is conveyed to husband and wife, they do not take by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety. Parcers, on the other hand, have not an entirety of interest, but each is properly entitled to the whole of a distinct moiety. 2 Bl.Comm. 188. See Estate by the entirety.

Entire use, benefit, etc. These words in the habendum of a trust-deed for the benefit of a married woman are equivalent to the words "sole use," or "sole and separate use," and consequently her husband takes nothing under such deed.

Entitle. To qualify for; to furnish with proper grounds for seeking or claiming. In ecclesiastical law, to entitle is to give a title or ordination as a minister.

Entertainment expenses. Such expenses are deductible only if they are directly related or associated with business. Various restrictions and documentation requirements have been imposed by the Internal Revenue Code and Regulations upon the deductibility of entertainment expenses to prevent abuses.

Entire. Whole; without division, separation, or diminution; unmingle; complete in all its parts; not participated in by others.

Entire contract. See Contract.

Entire day. This phrase signifies an undivided day, not parts of two days. An entire day must have a legal, fixed, precise time to begin, and a fixed, precise time to end. A day, in contemplation of law, comprises all the twenty-four hours, beginning and ending at twelve o'clock at night; e.g., in a statute requiring the closing of all liquor establishments during "the entire day of any election," etc., this phrase means the natural day of twenty-four hours, commencing and terminating at midnight. See also Day.

Entire interest. The whole interest or right, without division, separation, or diminution. See Fee simple.

Entire balance of my estate. The residue.

Entire blood. Relations of the "entire blood" are those derived not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. In re Skidmore's Estate, 148 Misc. 569, 266 N.Y.S. 312.

Entire contract. See Contract.

Entire. Whole; without division, separation, or diminution; unmingle; complete in all its parts; not participated in by others.

Entire act. The words "entire act" as used in the rule of statutory construction that it is the duty of the court to examine the entire act means the caption, the body of the act, and the emergency clause. Anderson v. Penix, 138 Tex. 596, 161 S.W.2d 455, 459.

Entire tenancy. A sole possession by one person, called "severalty," which is contrary to several tenancy, where a joint or common possession is in one or more.

Entirety. The whole, in contradistinction to a moiety or part only. When land is conveyed to husband and wife, they do not take by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety. Parcers, on the other hand, have not an entirety of interest, but each is properly entitled to the whole of a distinct moiety. 2 Bl.Comm. 188. See Estate by the entirety.

Entire use, benefit, etc. These words in the habendum of a trust-deed for the benefit of a married woman are equivalent to the words "sole use," or "sole and separate use," and consequently her husband takes nothing under such deed.

Entitle. In its usual sense, to entitle is to give a right or legal title to. Schmidt v. Gibbons, 101 Ariz. 222, 418 P.2d 378, 380. To qualify for; to furnish with proper grounds for seeking or claiming. In ecclesiastical law, to entitle is to give a title or ordination as a minister.

Entitlement. Right to benefits, income or property which may not be abridged without due process.

Entity. A real being; existence. An organization or being that possesses separate existence for tax purposes. Examples would be corporations, partnerships, estates and trusts. The accounting entity for which accounting statements are prepared may not be the same as the entity defined by law.

An existence apart, such as a corporation in relation to its stockholders.

Entity includes person, estate, trust, governmental unit. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(14).

See also Legal entity.

Entrance. Door, opening or passage for entering.

Entrap. To catch, to entrap, to ensnare; hence, to catch by artifice. To involve in difficulties or distresses; to catch or involve in contradictions.

Entrapment. The act of officers or agents of the government in inducing a person to commit a crime not contemplated by him, for the purpose of instituting a criminal prosecution against him. According to the generally accepted view, a law enforcement official, or an undercover agent acting in cooperation with such an official, perpetrates an entrapment when, for the purpose of obtaining evidence of a crime, he originates the idea of the crime and then induces another person to engage in conduct constituting such a crime when the other person is not otherwise disposed to do so. Sorrells v. U. S., 287 U.S. 435, 53 S.Ct. 210, 77 L.Ed. 413; Sherman v. U. S., 356 U.S. 369, 78 S.Ct. 819, 2 L.Ed.2d 948.
A public law enforcement official or a person acting in cooperation with such an official perpetrates an entrapment if for the purpose of obtaining evidence of the commission of an offense, he induces or encourages another person to engage in conduct constituting such offense by either: (a) making knowingly false representations designed to induce the belief that such conduct is not prohibited; or (b) employing methods of persuasion or inducement which create a substantial risk that such an offense will be committed by persons other than those who are ready to commit it. Model Penal Code, § 2.13.

Entreaty. Beseeching, or suppliant, or prayerful in nature. In re Sloan's Estate, 7 Cal.App.2d 319, 46 P.2d 1007, 1018.

Entreaty. An intruder or interloper.

Entrepôt. A warehouse or magazine for the deposit of goods. In France, a building or place where goods from abroad may be deposited, and from whence they may be withdrawn for exportation to another country, without paying a duty.

Entrepreneur. One who, on his own, initiates and assumes the financial risks of a new enterprise and who undertakes its management.

Entrust. To give over to another something after a relation of confidence has been established. To deliver to another something in trust or to commit something to another with a certain confidence regarding his care, use or disposal of it. Humphries v. Going, D.C.N.C., 59 F.R.D. 583, 587.

Entrusting. The transfer of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that type and who may in turn transfer such goods and all rights therein to a purchaser in the ordinary course of business. U.C.C. § 2-403(2)(3).

Entry. The act of making or entering a record; a setting down in writing of particulars; or that which is entered; an item. Generally synonymous with "recording." In re Labb, D.C.N.Y., 42 F.Supp. 542, 544. See also Enroll.

Enter, in practice, means to place anything before court, or upon or among records, and is nearly equivalent to setting down formally in writing, either in full or abridged form but it may be used as meaning simply to file or duly deposit. Neiman v. City of Chicago, 37 Ill.App.2d 309, 185 N.E.2d 358, 365.

Passage leading into a house or other building or to a room; a vestibule.

The act of a merchant, trader, or other businessman in recording in his account-books the facts and circumstances of a sale, loan, or other transaction. The books in which such memoranda are first (or originally) inscribed are called "books of original entry," and are prima facie evidence for certain purposes.

In copyright law, depositing with the register of copyrights the printed title of a book, pamphlet, etc., for the purpose of securing copyright on the same. Copyright Act, § 408.

In criminal law, entry is the unlawful making one's way into a dwelling or other house, for the purpose of committing a crime therein. In cases of burglary, the least entry with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, is sufficient to complete the offense. See also Breaking.

In customs law, the entry of imported goods at the customs house consists in submitting them to the inspection of the revenue officers, together with a statement or description of such goods, and the original invoices of the same, for the purpose of estimating the duties to be paid thereon.

False entry; Forcible entry; Illegal entry; Journal entry.

Entry of judgment. See Entering judgments.

Open entry. An entry upon real estate, for the purpose of taking possession, which is not clandestine nor effected by secret artifice or stratagem, and (in some states by statute) one which is accomplished in the presence of two witnesses.

Re-entry. The resumption of the possession of leased premises by the landlord on the tenant's failure to pay the stipulated rent or otherwise to keep the conditions of the lease. See Ejectment.

Right of entry. See Right of entry.

Entry ad communem legem /entriy ad kamuywnam liyjam/. An entry at common law. The name of a writ of entry which lay for a reversioner after the alienation and death of the particular tenant for life, against him who was in possession of the land.

Entry ad terminum qui preteritit /entriy ad tármanam kwáy prathriyat/. The writ of entry ad terminum qui preteritit lies where a tenant for life or by another's life, and he for whose life the lands are leased dies, and the lessee holds over, then the lessor shall have this writ.

Entry for marriage in speech. A writ of entry causa matrimoni praeloqui existed in old English law where lands or tenements were given to a man upon condition that he would take the donor to be his wife within a certain time, and he did not espouse her within the said term, or espoused another woman, or made himself priest.

Entry in casu consimilli /entriy in kéyzy(y)uw kansimaly/. In old English law, a writ of entry in casu consimilli existed where a tenant for life or by the curtesy alienated in fee.

Entry in regular course of business. A record setting forth a fact or transaction made by one in the ordinary and usual course of one's business, employment, office or profession, which it was the duty of the enterer in such manner to make, or which was commonly and regularly made, or which it was convenient to make, in the conduct of the business to which such entry pertains.

Entry of cause for trial. In old English practice, the proceeding by a plaintiff in an action who had given notice of trial, depositing with the proper officer of the court the nisi prius record, with the panel of Entry of judgment. See Entering judgments.

Entry on the roll. In old English practice, the parties to an action, personally or by their counsel, used to appear in open court and make their mutual statements vivâ voce, instead of as at the present day delivering their mutual pleadings, until they arrived at the issue or precise point in dispute between them. During the progress of this oral statement, a minute of the various proceedings was made on parchment by an officer of the court appointed for that purpose. The parchment then became the record; in other words, the official history of the suit. Long after the practice of oral pleading had fallen into disuse, it continued necessary to enter the proceedings in like manner upon the parchment roll, and this was called "entry on the roll," or making up the "issue roll." But by a rule of H.T. 4 Wm. IV, the practice of making up the issue roll was abolished; and it was only necessary to make up the issue in the form prescribed for the purpose by a rule of H.T. 1853, and to deliver the same to the court and to the opposite party. The issue which was delivered to the court was called the "nisi prius record;" and that was regarded as the official history of the suit, in like manner as the issue roll formerly was. Under later practice, the issue roll or nisi prius record consisted of the papers delivered to the court, to facilitate the trial of the action, these papers consisting of the pleadings simply, with the notice of trial.

A future interest created in a transferor who conveys an estate on condition subsequent.

Entry, writ of. In old English practice, this was a writ made use of in a form of real action brought to recover the possession of lands from one who wrongfully withheld the same from the demandant. Its object was to regain the possession of lands of which the demandant, or his ancestors, had been unjustly deprived by the tenant of the freehold, or those under whom he claimed, and hence it belonged to the possessory division of real actions. It decided nothing with respect to the right of property, but only restored the demandant to that situation in which he was (or by law ought to have been) before the dispossession committed. 3 Bl.Comm. 180. It was usual to specify in such writs the degree or degrees within which the writ was brought, and it was said to be "in the per" or "in the per and cui," according as there had been one or two descents or alienations from the original wrongdoer. If more than two such transfers had intervened, the writ was said to be "in the post." 3 Bl.Comm. 181. See Writ of entry.

Enumerated. This term is often used in law as equivalent to "mentioned specifically," "designated," or "expressly named or granted;" as in speaking of "enumerated" governmental powers, items of property, or articles in a tariff schedule.

Enumerated powers. The powers specifically delegated by the Constitution to some branch or authority of the national government, and which are not denied to that government or reserved to the States or to the people. The powers specifically given to Congress are enumerated in Article I of U.S. Constitution. See also Powers (Constitutional powers).

Enumeratio Infirmat regulam in casibus non enumeratis /an(y)ȗwmaréysh(y)yow anfármat régyalam an kéýzabas nón an(y)ȗwmaréydas/. Enumeration disaffirms the rule in cases not enumerated.

Enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius /an(y)ȗwmaréysh(y)yow yanýyas ét akakluwzh(y)yow ôltírias/. The specification of one thing is the exclusion of a different thing. A maxim more generally expressed in the form "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" (q.v.).

Enumerators /an(y)ȗmaréydarz/. Persons appointed to collect census papers or schedules.

Enure. To operate or take effect. To serve to the use, benefit, or advantage of a person. A release to the tenant for life enures to him in reversion; that is, it has the same effect for him as for the tenant for life. Often written "inure."

En ventre sa mere /ôn vóntrá sá mér/. L. Fr. In its mother's womb. A term descriptive of an unborn child. For some purposes the law regards an infant en ventre as in being. It may take a legacy; have a guardian; an estate may be limited to its use, etc. 1 Bl.Comm. 130. LaBlue v. Specker, 358 Mich. 558, 100 N.W.2d 445, 447.

En vie /ôn víy/. L. Fr. In life; alive.

Environment. The totality of physical, economic, cultural, aesthetic, and social circumstances and factors which surround and affect the desirability and value of property and which also affect the quality of peoples' lives. The surrounding conditions, influences or forces which influence or modify. U. S. v. Amadio, C.A.Ind., 215 F.2d 605, 611.

Environmental impact statements. Documents which are required by federal and state laws to accompany proposals for major projects and programs that will likely have an impact on the surrounding environment. See 42 U.S.C.A. § 4332.

Environmental Protection Agency. The federal Environmental Protection Agency was created in 1970 to permit coordinated and effective governmental action on behalf of the environment. EPA endeavors to abate and control pollution systematically, by proper integration of a variety of research, monitoring, standard setting, and enforcement activities. As a complement to its other activities, EPA coordinates and supports research and antipollution activities by State and local governments, private and public groups, individuals, and educational institutions. EPA also reinforces efforts among other Federal agencies with respect to the impact of their operations on the environment, and it is specifically charged with making public its written comments on environmental impact statements and with publishing its determinations when those hold that a proposal is unsatisfactory from the standpoint of public health or welfare or environmental quality. See also National Environmental Policy Act.

Envoy. A diplomat of the rank of minister or ambassador sent by a country to the government of a foreign country to execute a special mission or to serve as a permanent diplomatic representative.
Eodem ligamine quo ligatum est dissolvitur /iyówdam lágyΛmániy kwó kwá lágyédwam ést dázdówád/. A bond is released by the same formalities with which it is contracted.

Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, dissolvitur /iyówdam móódów kwó kwid kónstátyú wád, dázdówád/. In the manner in which [by the same means by which] a thing is constituted, it is dissolved.

Eo die /iyów dáyi/. Lat. On that day; on the same day.

Eo instante /iyów anstántay/. Lat. At that instant; at the very same instant; immediately. 1 Bl.Comm. 196, 249; 2 Bl.Comm. 168. Also written eo instante.

Eo intuitu /iyów an(y)iwaduw/. Lat. With or in that view; with that intent or object.

Eo loci /iyów lýówáy/. Lat. In the civil law, in that state or condition; in that place (eo loco).

E.O.M. End of month. Payment terms in sale contract.

Eo nomine /iyów nómaníy/. Lat. Under that name; by that appellation. Perinde ac si eo nomine tibi tradita fuissest, just as if it had been delivered to you by that name.

Eoth. In Saxon law, an oath.

EPA. Environmental Protection Agency.

Epidemic. This term, in its ordinary and popular meaning, applies to any disease which is widely spread or generally prevailing at a given place and time. Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 21 Cal.2d 742, 135 P.2d 153, 157; Martin v. Springfield City Water Co., Mo.App., 128 S.W.2d 674, 679.

Epilepsy /éplépsiy/. Epilepsy, a disruption of the normal rhythm of the brain, is an occasional, periodic, excessive and disorderly discharge of nerve cells in the brain. The discharge is chemical-electrical in nature. While the discharge itself is hidden, it manifests itself in various forms of visible activity, called seizures. The type of seizures will vary according to the location of the discharge in the brain, and the spread of the charge from cell to cell. In many cases, seizures are so mild (a brief twitch, a momentary attention loss) that they are not recognized. Even when they are, they have a minimal effect. A major convulsion which the public tends immediately to associate with epilepsy is only one of a number of seizure types.

Epistóla /épístolá/. A letter; a charter; an instrument or pertaining to episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called "bishop of the boys;" and in them pretend to exercise episcopal powers. epistóla tenet placitum, In curia christianitatis, de regis tenetur.

Epiphany /épifániy/. A Christian festival, otherwise called the "Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles," observed on the 6th of January, in honor of the appearance of the star to the three magi, or wise men, who came to adore the Messiah, and bring him presents. It is commonly called "Twelfth Day."

Epiphysial separation /épafásiyal sepéreýšän/. Not a bone fracture in true sense, but a separation of the fibers and cartilaginous tissues which attach the epiphysis to the femur.

Epiphysitis /épifíziyáyds/. Inflammation of an epiphysis—a process of bone attached for a time to another bone by cartilage.

Epiphysis /épiʃás/. Part or process of a bone which ossifies separately and subsequently becomes ankylosed (to grow together into one) into the main part of the bone.

Epiqueya /épiýkéya/. In Spanish law, a term synonymous with "equity" in one of its senses, and defined as "the benignant and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person."

Episcopacy /épsikpáisy/. The office of overlooking or overseeing: the office of a bishop, who is to overlook and oversee the concerns of the church. A form of church government by diocesan bishops.

Episcopalia /épsikpáyliy/. In ecclesiastical law, synods, pentecostals, and other customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, formerly collected by the rural deans.

Episcopalian /épsikpáliyán/. Or of pertaining to episcopacy, or to the Episcopal Church.

Episcopate /épsikpát/. A bishopric. The dignity or office of a bishop.

Episcoporum ecclésias /épsikpórom ékdskas/. Bishop's proctors; church lawyers.

Episcopus alterius mandato quam tenetur obtemperare /épsikpórom oltiriyó sundaedydow kwám ríjías non táñydyd obtémpóreýí/. A bishop needs not obey any mandate save the king's.

Episcopus puereorum /épsikpórom puýwárom/. It was an old custom that upon certain feasts some lay person should plait his hair, and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them pretend to exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called "bishop of the boys;" and this custom obtained in England long after several constitutional laws were made to abolish it.

Episcopus teneat placitum, in curia christianitatis, de lis que mere sunt spiritualia /épsikpórom ténítay pláódád in kuýríriya krisüýántéydás, diý íyás kwá kwí myrá sánt spírýshúwyliy(í)yás/. A bishop may hold plea in a Court Christian of things merely spiritual.

Epistóla /épístolá/. A letter; a charter; an instrument in writing for conveyance of lands or assurance of contracts.

Epistóle /épístolé/. In the civil law, rescripts; opinions given by the emperors in cases submitted to them for decision. Answers of the emperors to petitions. The answers of counsellors (juris-consulti), as Ulpian and others, to questions of law proposed to them, were also called "epistole."

Opinions written out. The term originally signified the same as literae.

E pluribus unum /iy p(ly)ûrâbas yûwnam/. One out of many. The motto of the United States of America.

Epoch /épak/iypôk/. The time at which a new computation is begun; the time whence dates are numbered.

E.P.S. Earnings per share.

Equal. Alike; uniform; on the same plane or level with respect to efficiency, worth, value, amount, or rights. Word "equal" as used in law implies not identity but duality and the use of one thing as the measure of another. Poindexter v. Willis, 23 Ohio Misc. 199, 256 N.E.2d 254, 260.

Equal and uniform taxation. Taxes are said to be "equal and uniform" when no person or class of persons in the taxing district, whether it be a state, county, or city, is taxed at a different rate than are other persons in the same district upon the same value or the same thing, and where the objects of taxation are the same, by whomsoever owned or whatsoever they may be. Weatherly Independent School Dist. v. Hughes, Tex.Civ.App., 41 S.W.2d 445, 447.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act. Federal Act prohibiting a creditor from discriminating against any applicant on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, age, sex or marital status with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1691 et seq.

Equal degree. Persons are said to be related to a decedent "in equal degree" when they are all removed by an equal number of steps or degrees from the common ancestor.

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) was created by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 241; 42 U.S.C.A. § 2000a), and became operational July 2, 1965. The purposes of the Commission are to end discrimination based on race, color, religion, age, sex, or national origin in hiring, promotion, firing, wages, testing, training, apprenticeship, and all other conditions of employment; and to promote voluntary action programs by employers, unions, and community organizations to put equal employment opportunity into actual operation.

Equality. The condition of possessing substantially the same rights, privileges, and immunities, and being liable to substantially the same duties. "Equality" guaranteed under equal protection clause is equality under the same conditions and among persons similarly situated; classifications must not be arbitrary and must be based upon some difference in classes having substantial relation to legitimate objects to be accomplished. Boyne v. State ex rel. Dickerson, 80 Nev. 160, 390 P.2d 225, 227. See Equal protection clause; Equal protection of the law.

Equalization. The act or process of making equal or bringing about conformity to a common standard.

The process of equalizing assessments or taxes, as performed by "boards of equalization" in various states, consists in comparing the assessments made by the local officers of the various counties or other taxing districts within the jurisdiction of the board and reducing them to a common and uniform basis, increasing or diminishing by such percentage as may be necessary, so as to bring about, within the entire territory affected, a uniform and equal ratio between the assessed value and the actual cash value of property. The term is also applied to a similar process of leveling or adjusting the assessments of individual taxpayers, so that the property of one shall not be assessed at a higher (or lower) percentage of its market value than the property of another. Adjusting the value of property assessed to conform to its real value. County of Sacramento v. Assessment Appeals Board Number 2 of Sacramento County, 32 Cal.App.3d 654, 108 Cal.Rptr. 434, 441. See also Equal protection of the law.

Equalization board. Local governmental agency whose function is to supervise the equalization of taxes as among various properties and as among various districts to bring about an equitable distribution of tax burdens.

Equalization of taxes. See Equalization.

Equalize. To make equal, to cause to correspond, or be like in amount or degree, as compared with something. Los Angeles County v. Ranshoff, 24 Cal.App.2d 238, 74 P.2d 828, 830; De Mille v. Los Angeles County, 25 Cal.App. 506, 77 P.2d 905, 906.

Equally divided. Provision in will that property shall be "equally divided," or divided "share and share alike" means that the property shall be divided per capita and not per stirpes. However, these phrases may be so modified by other parts of the will as to require distribution per stirpes.

Equal Pay Act. Federal law which mandates same pay for all persons who do same work without regard to sex, age, etc.

Equal protection clause. That provision in 14th Amendment to U.S. Constitution which prohibits a State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. "Equal protection" clause of Federal Constitution requires that persons under like circumstances be given equal protection in the enjoyment of personal rights and the prevention and redress of wrongs. In re Adoption of Richardson, 251 C.A.2d 222, 59 Cal.Rptr. 323, 334. See also Equal protection of the law.

Equal protection of the law. The constitutional guarantee of "equal protection of the laws" means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in like circumstances in their lives, liberty, property, and in their pursuit of happiness. People v. Jacobs, 27 Cal.App.3d 246, 103 Cal. Rptr. 536, 543; 14th Amend., U.S. Const.

The equal protection of the laws of a state is extended to persons within its jurisdiction, within the meaning of the constitutional requirement, when its courts are open to them on the same conditions as to others, with like rules of evidence and modes of procedure, for the security of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; when they are subjected to no restrictions in the acquisition of property, the enjoyment of personal liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which do not generally affect others; when they are liable to no other or greater burdens and charges than such as are laid upon others; and when no different or greater punishment is enforced against them for a violation of the laws.

"Equal protection," with respect to classification for taxation purposes, does not require identity of treatment, but only (1) that classification rests on real and not feigned differences, (2) that the distinction have some relevance to purpose for which classification is made, and (3) that the different treatments be not so disparate, relative to difference in classification, as to be wholly arbitrary. Walters v. City of St. Louis, Mo., 347 U.S. 231, 74 S.Ct. 505, 509, 98 L.Ed. 660.

Equal Rights Amendment. Proposed amendment to U.S. Constitution which provides that: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex."

Equal Time Act. If licensee of broadcasting facility permits a legally qualified candidate for public office to use facility for broadcasting, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office. 47 U.S.C.A. § 315.

Eques [â'ykwâlîs]/. Lat. In Roman and old English law, a knight.

Equilocus [â'kwâlôwkwâs]/. An equal.

Equinoxes [â'ykwânôksaz/â'kwâs]/. The two periods of the year (vernal equinox about March 21st, and autumnal equinox about September 22d) when the time from the rising of the sun to its setting is equal to the time from its setting to its rising.

Equip. To furnish for service or against a need or exigency; to fit out; to supply with whatever is necessary to efficient action in any way. Synonymous with furnish.

Equipment. Furnishings, or outfit for the required purposes. Whatever is needed in equipping; the articles comprised in an outfit; equippage. Department of Treasury, Gross Income Tax Division v. Ranger-Cook, Inc., 114 Ind.App. 107, 49 N.E.2d 548, 550; Farm & Home Saving & Loan Ass'n of Missouri v. Empire Furniture Co., Tex.Civ.App., 87 S.W.2d 1111, 1112.

Under U.C.C., goods include "equipment" if they are used or bought for use primarily in business (including farming or a profession) or by a debtor who is a non-profit organization or a governmental subdivision or agency or if the goods are not included in the definitions of inventory, farm products or consumer goods. U.C.C. § 9–109(2).

Equipment trust. Financing device commonly used by railroads by which equipment is purchased from the manufacturer by a trustee who provides a substantial portion of the purchase price, the railroad providing the balance. The trustee then leases the equipment to the railroad which pays a rental fee consisting of interest, amortization for serial retirement and trustee's fee.

Equipment trust certificate. A type of security, generally issued by a railroad, to pay for new equipment. Title to the equipment, such as a locomotive, is held by a trustee until the notes are paid off. An equipment trust certificate is usually secured by a first claim on the equipment.

Equitable. Just; conformable to the principles of justice and right. Existing in equity; available or sustainable in equity, or upon the rules and principles of equity.

As to equitable Assets; Construction; Conversion; Easement; Ejectment; Estate; Garnishment; Levy; Mortgage; Title, and Waste, see those titles.

Equitable abstention doctrine. A court may refrain from exercising jurisdiction which it possesses in the interest of comity between courts and between states as in the case of actions involving the affairs of a foreign corporation or foreign land. Doctrine also applies to case of Federal court's refraining from interfering with decision of state administrative agency's decision on a local matter. Allegheny Airlines, Inc. v. Penn. Public Utility Comm., D.C.Pa., 319 F.Supp. 407.

Equitable action. One seeking an equitable remedy or relief, though in the federal and most state courts, with the procedural merger of law and equity, there is now procedurally only one type of action—a "civil action." Fed.R. Civ. P. 2.

Equitable adjustment theory. In settlement of federal contract disputes, contracting officer should make fair adjustment within a reasonable time before contractor is required to settle with his subcontractors, suppliers and other creditors. Roberts v. U. S., 174 Ct.Cl. 940, 357 F.2d 938.

Equitable adoption. "Equitable adoption" refers to situation involving oral contract to adopt child, fully performed except that there was no statutory adoption, and in which rule is applied for benefit of child in determination of heirship upon death of person contracting to adopt. Barlow v. Barlow, 170 Colo. 465, 463 P.2d 305, 308. In certain jurisdictions, a child has rights of inheritance from person who has contracted to adopt him but has not done so. Dunn v. Richardson, D.C.Ark., 336 F.Supp. 649, 654.

Equitable assignment. An assignment which, though invalid at law, will be recognized and enforced in equity; e.g., an assignment of a chose in action, or of future acquisitions of the assignor. Stewart v. Kane, Mo.App., 111 S.W.2d 971, 974. In order to work an "equitable assignment", there must be an absolute appropriation by the assignor of the debt or fund sought to be assigned. Sneesby v. Livingston, 182 Wash. 228, 46 P.2d 733, 735.

Equitable conversion. A doctrine commonly applied when death intervenes between the signing of an agreement to sell real estate and the date of transfer of title resulting in treating land as personality and personality as land under certain circumstances. It takes place when a contract for sale of realty be-Equitable distribution. No-fault divorce statutes in certain states (e.g. New Jersey) grant courts the power to distribute equitably upon divorce all property legally and beneficially acquired during marriage by husband and wife, or either of them, whether legal title lies in their joint or individual names.

Equitable doctrine of approximation. This doctrine differs from "Cy pres doctrine" in purpose and application. The last mentioned doctrine applies where an apparent charitable intention has failed, whether by an incomplete disposition at the outset or by subsequent inadequacy of the original object, and its purpose is to give a cy pres or proximate application to testator’s intention, whereas the “equitable doctrine of approximation” merely authorizes a court to vary the details of administration, in order to preserve the trust, and carry out the general purpose of the donor.

Equitable election. Under this doctrine, a person cannot accept benefits accruing to him by a will and at the same time refuse to recognize validity of will in other respects, but doctrine may not be applied to prejudice of third parties. Luttrell v. Luttrell, 4 Ohio App.2d 305, 212 N.E.2d 641, 642. The choice to be made by a person who may, under a will or other instrument, have either one of two alternative rights or benefits, but not both. Peters v. Bain, 133 U.S. 670, 10 S.Ct. 354, 33 L.Ed. 696. The obligation imposed upon a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is clear intention of the person from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both. Dakan v. Dakan, 125 Tex. 305, 83 S.W.2d 620, 624. A choice shown by an overt act between two inconsistent rights or claims of which may be asserted at the will of the chooser alone. Pierce v. Hutchins, 205 U.S. 346, 27 S.Ct. 524, 51 L.Ed. 828. See also Election (Law of wills).

Equitable estoppel. The doctrine by which a person may be precluded by his act or conduct, or silence when it is his duty to speak, from asserting a right which he otherwise would have had. Mitchell v. McIntee, 15 Or.App. 85, 514 P.2d 1357, 1359. The effect of voluntary conduct of a party whereby he is precluded from asserting rights against another who has justifiably relied upon such conduct and changed his position so that he will suffer injury if the former is allowed to repudiate the conduct. American Bank & Trust Co. v. Trinity Universal Ins. Co., 251 La. 445, 205 So.2d 35, 40.

Elements or essentials of such estoppel include change of position for the worse by party asserting estoppel, Malone v. Republic Nat. Bank & Trust Co., Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 809, 812; conduct by party estopped such that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience for him to allege and prove the truth, Rody v. Doyle, 181 Md. 195, 29 A.2d 290, 293; false representation or concealment of facts, Clark v. National Aid Life Ass’n, 177 Okt. 137, 57 P.2d 832, 833; Antrim Lumber Co. v. Wagner, 175 Okt. 564, 54 P.2d 173, 176; ignorance of party asserting estoppel of facts and absence of opportunity to ascertain them, Ripp v. Stidham, 174 Okt. 473, 50 P.2d 680, 684; injury from declarations, acts, or omissions of party were he permitted to gainsay their truth, Fleischbein v. Western Auto Supply Agency, 19 Cal.App.2d 424, 65 P.2d 928; Roberts v. Friedell, 218 Minn. 88, 15 N.W.2d 496, 500; intention that representation should be acted on, Consolidated Cut Stone Co. v. Seidenbach, 181 Okt. 578, 75 P.2d 442, 452; knowledge, actual or constructive, of facts by party estopped, Antrim Lumber Co. v. Wagner, 175 Okt. 564, 54 P.2d 173, 176; Lillywhite v. Coleman, 46 Ariz. 523, 52 P.2d 1157, 1160; misleading person to his prejudice. United States, for Use and Benefit of Noland Co. v. Wood, C.C.A.Va., 99 F.2d 80, 82; omission, misconduct or misrepresentation misleading another; reliance upon representation or conduct of person sought to be estopped, Wilkinson v. Lieberman, 327 Mo. 420, 37 S.W.2d 533, 536; George W. Armbruster, Jr., Inc. v. City of Wildwood, D.C.N.J., 41 F.2d 823, 829.

Equitable interest. The interest of a beneficiary under a trust is considered equitable as contrasted with the interest of the trustee which is a legal interest because the trustee has legal as contrasted with equitable title. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 2f. See also Equitable ownership.

Equitable lien. A right, not existing at law, to have specific property applied in whole or in part to payment of a particular debt or class of debts. Morrison Flying Service v. Deming Nat. Bank, C.A.N.M., 404 F.2d 856, 861. An equitable lien arises either from a written contract which shows an intention to charge some particular property with a debt or obligation or is implied and declared by a court of equity out of general considerations of right and justice as applied to relations of the parties and circumstances of their dealings. Owensboro Banking Co. v. Lewis, 269 Ky. 277, 106 S.W.2d 1000, 1004; Clark v. Armstrong & Murphy, 180 Okt. 514, 72 P.2d 362, 365, 366.

Equitable life estate. An interest in real or personal property which lasts for the life of the holder of the estate and which is equitable as contrasted with legal in its creation as in the case of a beneficiary of a trust who has a life estate under the trust.

Equitable mortgage. Any agreement to post certain property as security before the security agreement is formalized. If a person transfers property by deed absolute to his creditor as security for a debt with the mutual understanding that such property will be reconveyed by the creditor on the repayment of the debt, a court of equity will consider such a deed a mortgage, though an innocent purchaser for value from the creditor can cut off the equitable rights of the debtor. See also Mortgage.

Equitable ownership. The ownership interest of one who has equitable as contrasted with legal ownership of property as in the case of a trust beneficiary.
Ownership rights which are protected in equity. See also Equitable distribution.

Equitable recoupment. Rule of the law which diminishes the right of a party invoking legal process to recover a debt, to the extent that he holds money or property of his debtor, to which he has no moral right, and it is ordinarily a defensive remedy going only to mitigation of damages. Doctrine of "equitable recoupment" provides that, at least in some cases, a claim for a refund of taxes barred by a statute of limitations may nevertheless be recouped against a tax claim of the government. May Dept. Stores Co. v. City of Pittsburgh, Pa.Cmvth., 376 A.2d 309, 313.

Equitable redemption. The act or process by which a mortgagor redeems his property after payment of the mortgage debt. The purchase of the equity of redemption after foreclosure has commenced. See Equity of redemption.

Equitable relief. That species of relief sought in a court with equity powers as, for example, in the case of one seeking an injunction or specific performance instead of money damages.

Equitable rescission. Rescission decreed by court of equity, as distinguished from "legal rescission" which is effected by restoration or offer to restore.

Equitable right. Right cognizable within court of equity as contrasted with legal right enforced in court of law; though under rules practice in most states and in the federal courts there has been a merger procedurally between actions at law and equity. Fed.R.Civ.P. 2.

Equitable servitudes. A restriction on the use of land enforceable in court of equity. It is broader than a covenant running with the land because it is an interest in land.

Equitable title. See Equitable ownership.

Equitable waste. Injury to the corpus of property inconsistent with good management or husbandry and recognized by a court of equity but not by a court of law.

Equitas sequitur legem /iýkwatès sēkwədər liýjəm/. Equity follows the law.

Equity. Justice administered according to fairness as contrasted with the strictly formulated rules of common law. It is based on a system of rules and principles which originated in England as an alternative to the harsh rules of common law and which were based on what was fair in a particular situation. One sought relief under this system in courts of equity rather than in courts of law. The term "equi"ty" denotes the spirit and habit of fairness, justness, and right dealing which would regulate the intercourse of men with men. Gilles v. Department of Human Resources Development, 11 Cal.3d 313, 113 Cal.Rptr. 374, 380, 521 P.2d 110. Equity is a body of jurisprudence, or field of jurisdiction, differing in its origin, theory, and methods from the common law; though procedurally, in the federal courts and most state courts, equitable and legal rights and remedies are administered in the same court.

A system of jurisprudence collateral to, and in some respects independent of, "law"; the object of which is to render the administration of justice more complete, by affording relief where the courts of law are incompetent to give it, or to give it with effect, or by exercising certain branches of jurisdiction independently of them.

See Equity, courts of.

Countervailing equity. A contrary and balancing equity; an equity or right opposed to that which is sought to be enforced or recognized, and which ought not to be sacrificed or subordinated to the latter, because it is of equal strength and justice, and equally deserving of consideration.

Latent or secret equity. An equitable claim or right, the knowledge of which has been confined to the parties for and against whom it exists, or which has been concealed from one or several persons interested in the subject-matter.

Natural equity. A term sometimes employed in works on jurisprudence, possessing no very precise meaning, but used as equivalent to justice, honesty, or morality in business relations, or man's innate sense of right dealing and fair play. Inasmuch as equity, as now administered, is a complex system of rules, doctrines, and precedents, and possesses, within the range of its own fixed principles, but little more elasticity than the law, the term "natural equity" may be understood to denote, in a general way, that which strikes the ordinary conscience and sense of justice as being fair, right, and equitable, in advance of the question whether the technical jurisprudence of the chancery courts would so regard it.

Perfect equity. An equitable title or right which lacks nothing to its completeness as a legal title or right except the formal conveyance or other investiture which would make it cognizable at law; particularly, the equity or interest of a purchaser of real estate who has paid the purchase price in full and fulfilled all conditions resting on him, but has not yet received a deed or patent.

Real estate. The remaining interest belonging to one who has pledged or mortgaged his property, or the surplus of value which may remain after the property has been disposed of for the satisfaction of liens. The amount or value of a property above the total liens or charges. The difference of the fair market value and debt in property; thus, an equity of $5,000 may come about by having fair market value property of $20,000 with debt of $15,000. The term came from the development in English courts of equity of the right of an owner of property to redeem his property even after a foreclosure, which right came to be known as the equity of redemption. The existence of the right was predicated on the property being of far greater value than the debt owed to the party that foreclosed.

Equity acts in personam. A basic principle of law of equity to the effect that equity grants relief in the form of personal decrees as contrasted with law which awards money damages. A necessary corollary of this principle is that equity requires personal jurisdiction to grant its relief.

Equity, bill in. The name given to the original pleading in an equity case. However, under current rules practice in most states, the “bill” has been replaced by a complaint with the procedural merger of law and equity. Fed.R. Civil P. 2.

Equity, courts of. Courts which administer justice according to the system of equity, and according to a peculiar course of procedure or practice. Frequently termed “courts of chancery.” With the procedural merger of law and equity in the federal and most state courts, equity courts have been abolished.

Equity financing. Raising of capital by corporation by issuing (selling) stock. This is contrasted with “debt financing” which is the raising of capital by issuing bonds or borrowing money.

Equity follows the law. Equity adopts and follows the rules of law in all cases to which those rules may, in terms, be applicable. Equity, in dealing with cases of an equitable nature, adopts and follows the analogies furnished by the rules of law. A leading maxim of equity jurisprudence, which, however, is not of universal application, but liable to many exceptions.

Equity jurisdiction. In a general sense, the jurisdiction belonging to a court of equity, but more particularly the aggregate of those cases, controversies, and occasions which form proper subjects for the exercise of the powers of a chancery court.

In the federal and most state courts there has been a merger procedurally between law and equity actions (i.e., the same court has jurisdiction over both legal and equitable matters) and, hence, a person seeking equitable relief brings the same complaint as in a law action and simply demands equitable relief instead of (or in addition to) money damages. Fed.R. Civil P. 2.

“Equity jurisdiction,” in its ordinary acceptance, as distinguished on the one side from the general power to decide matters at all, and on the other from the jurisdiction “at law” or “common-law jurisdiction,” is the power to hear certain kinds and classes of civil causes according to the principles of the method and procedure adopted by the court of chancery, and to decide them in accordance with the doctrines and rules of equity jurisprudence, which decision may involve either the determination of the equitable rights, estates, and interests of the parties to such causes, or the granting of equitable remedies. In order that a cause may come within the scope of the equity jurisdiction, one of two alternatives is essential; either the primary right, estate, or interest to be maintained, or the violation of which furnishes the cause of action, must be equitable rather than legal; or the remedy granted must be in its nature purely equitable, or if it be a remedy which may also be given by a court of law, it must be one which, under the facts and circumstances of the case, can only be made complete and adequate through the equitable modes of procedure. Norback v. Board of Directors of Church Extension Soc., 84 Utah 506, 37 P.2d 339.

Equity jurisprudence. That portion of remedial justice which is exclusively administered by courts of equity as distinguished from courts of common law. More generally speaking, the science which treats of the rules, principles, and maxims which govern the decisions of a court of equity, the cases and controversies which are considered proper subjects for its cognizance, and the nature and form of the remedies which it grants.

Equity looks upon that as done which ought to have been done. Equity will treat the subject-matter, as to collateral consequences and incidents, in the same manner as if the final acts contemplated by the parties had been executed exactly as they ought to have been; not as the parties might have executed them.

Equity of a statute. By this phrase is intended the rule of statutory construction which admits within the operation of a statute a class of cases which are neither expressly named nor excluded, but which, from their analogy to the cases that are named, are clearly and justly within the spirit and general meaning of the law; such cases are said to be “within the equity of the statute.”

Equity of partners. A term used to designate the right of each of them to have the firm's property applied to the payment of the firm's debts.

Equity of redemption. The right of the mortgagor of an estate to redeem the same after it has been forfeited, at law, by a breach of the condition of the mortgage, upon paying the amount of debt, interest and costs. Brown v. United States, C.C.A. Pa., 95 F.2d 487, 489. A right a mortgagor is given to redeem his property from default; period from the time of default until foreclosure proceedings are begun.

Equity ratio. Stockholders' equity divided by total assets.

Equity security. As defined in Bankruptcy Act, § 101(15), term includes: (A) share in a corporation, whether or not transferable or denominated “stock”, or similar security; (B) interest of a limited partner in a limited partnership, or (C) warrant or right, other than a right to convert, to purchase, sell, or subscribe to a share, security, or interest of a kind specified in subparagraph (A) or (B).

Equity shares. Shares of any class of stock, whether or not preferred as to dividends or assets, having unlimited dividend rights.

Equity suffers not a right without a remedy. Graselli Chemical Company v. Etma Explosives Co., 164 C.C.A. 380, 252 F. 456.

Equity term. An equity term of court is one devoted exclusively to equity business, that is, in which no criminal cases are tried nor any cases requiring the impanelling of a jury. See Equity, courts of.

Equity to a settlement. The equitable right of a wife, when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have the whole or a portion of such estate settled upon herself and her children. Also a similar right recognized by the equity courts as directly to be asserted against the husband. Also sometimes called the "wife's equity."

Equivalent, adj. Equal in value, force, measure, volume, power, and effect or having equal or corresponding import, meaning or significance; alike, identical. Salt Lake County v. Utah Copper Co., C.C.A.Utah, 93 F.2d 127, 132; Nahas v. Nahas, 59 Nev. 220, 90 P.2d 223, 224.

Equivalents doctrine. In patent law, doctrine of "equivalents" means that if two devices do the same work in substantially the same way and accomplish substantially the same result, they are the same, even though they differ in name, form or shape. Fife Mfg. Co. v. Stanford Engineering Co., D.C.Ill., 193 F.Supp. 226, 232. Principle of law evolved to protect patentee from devices which differ merely in name, form or shape and thereby to prevent an unauthorized person from reaping benefits of another's inventive genius. Fraser v. Continental Realty Corp., D.C.W. Va., 356 F.Supp. 704, 705. Patentee may invoke doctrine of "equivacency" to proceed against producer of device, if it performs substantially same function in substantially the same way to obtain the same result. Ceramic Tilers Supply, Inc. v. Tile Council of America, Inc., C.A.Cal., 378 F.2d 283, 286.

Equivocal. Having a double or several meanings or senses. Synonymous with "ambiguous". See Ambiguity.

Equuleus /akwúliyas/. A kind of rack for extorting confessions.

Erastians /aræstyan(d)z/. The followers of Erastus. The sect obtained much influence in England, particularly among common lawyers in the time of Selden. They held that offenses against religion and morality should be punished by the civil power, and not by the censures of the church or by excommunication.

Erasure. The obliteration of words or marks from a written instrument by rubbing, scraping, or scratching them out. Also the place in a document where a word or words have been so removed. The term is sometimes used for the removal of parts of a writing by any means whatever, as by cancellation; but this is not an accurate use.

Erasure of record. Procedure by which a person's criminal record may be sealed or destroyed if certain conditions are met. This is commonly provided for by statute for juvenile records. Within statute providing that all police and court records shall be erased upon acquittal of the accused, word "erased" means at the very least nondisclosure. Lechner v. Holmberg, 165 Conn. 152, 328 A.2d 701, 707. See also Expungement of record.

Erciscundus /æraskándas/. In the civil law, to be divided. Judicium familiaris erciscundus, a suit for the partition of an inheritance. An ancient phrase derived from the Twelve Tables.

Erect. In England, one of the formal words of incorporation in royal charters. "We do, incorporate, erect, ordain, name, constitute, and establish." "Construct" is synonymous with "erect".

Erection. Raising up; building; a completed building; to build; construct; set up. There is a distinction between "erection" and maintenance. Turturro v. Calder, 307 Mass. 159, 29 N.E.2d 744, 746.

Ergo /ərgow/. Lat. Therefore; hence; because.

Ergolabli /əgowlébyay/. In the civil law, undertakers of work; contractors.

Erie v. Tompkins. The landmark case holding that in an action in the Federal court, except as to matters governed by the U.S. Constitution and Acts of Congress, the law to be applied in any case is the law of the State in which the Federal Court is situated. 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188. This case overruled Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. 1, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L.Ed. 865, which held that there was a body of federal general common law to be applied in such cases.

Erigimus /ərijaməs/. We erect. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England by the king's charter. 1 Bl.Comm. 473.

Ermine /ərman/. By metonymy, this term is used to describe the office or functions of a judge, whose state robe, lined with ermine, is emblematical of purity and honor without stain.

Erosion. To wear away by the action of water, wind, or other elements. The gradual eating away of the soil by the operation of currents or tides. Distinguished from submergence, which is the disappearance of the soil under the water and the formation of a navigable body over it.

Erotomania /əroʊˈmæniə/. See Insanity.

Errant. Wandering; itinerant; applied to justices on circuit, and bailiffs at large, etc.

Erratum /ærətəm/ /ærɛdəm/. Lat. Error. Used in the Latin formula for assigning errors, and in the reply thereto, "in nullo est erratum," i.e., there was no error, no error was committed.

Erroneous. Involving error; deviating from the law. This term is not generally used as designating a corrupt or evil act. See Error.

Erroneous assessment. Refers to an assessment that deviates from the law and is therefore invalid, and is a defect that is jurisdictional in its nature, and does not refer to the judgment of the assessing officer in fixing the amount of valuation of the property. In re Blatt, 41 N.M. 269, 67 P.2d 293, 301.

Erroneous judgment. One rendered according to course and practice of court, but contrary to law, upon mistaken view of law, or upon erroneous application of legal principles.

Erroneous or illegal tax. One levied without statutory authority, or upon property not subject to taxation, or by some officer having no authority to levy the tax, or one which in some other similar respect is illegal.
Error. A mistaken judgment or incorrect belief as to the existence or effect of matters of fact, or a false or mistaken conception or application of the law. Such a mistaken or false conception or application of the law to the facts of a case as will furnish ground for a review of the proceedings upon a writ of error. A mistake of law, or false or irregular application of it, such as vitiates the proceedings and warrants the reversal of the judgment.

Error is also used as an elliptical expression for "writ of error"; as in saying that error lies; that a judgment may be reversed on error. See Writ of error.

See also Ignorance; Mistake; Plain error rule.

Assignment of errors. A specification of the errors upon which the appellant will rely in seeking to have the judgment of the lower court reversed, vacated, modified, or a new trial ordered. See e.g. Fed.R.App. P. 28.

Clerical error. See Clerical error.

Error apparent of record. Plain, fundamental error that goes to the foundation of the action irrespective of the evidence; an obvious misapprehension of the applicable law. Parks v. Parks, 68 App.D.C. 363, 98 F.2d 235, 236.

Fundamental error. In appellate practice, error which goes to the merits of the plaintiff's cause of action, and which will be considered on review, whether assigned as error or not, where the justice of the case seems to require it. Error of such character as to render judgment void. Error in law apparent on the face of the record; e.g. court lacked jurisdiction. See Reversible error, infra. See also Plain error rule.

Harmful error. Error which more probably than improbably affected the verdict or judgment prejudicially to the party complaining. See Fundamental error; Reversible error, this topic. See also Plain error rule.

Harmless error. In appellate practice, an error committed in the progress of the trial below, but which was not prejudicial to the rights of the party assigning it, and for which, therefore, the court will not reverse the judgment, as, where the error was neutralized or corrected by subsequent proceedings in the case, or where, notwithstanding the error, the particular issue was found in that party's favor, or where, even if the error had not been committed, he could not have been legally entitled to prevail. Error which is not sufficient in nature or effect to warrant reversal, modification, or retrial. Fed.R.Crim.P. 52 provides: "Any error, defect, irregularity or variance which does not affect substantial rights shall be disregarded."

Invited error. In appellate practice, the principle of "invited error" is that if, during the progress of a cause, a party requests or moves the court to make a ruling which is actually erroneous, and the court does so, that party cannot take advantage of the error on appeal or review.

Reversible error. In appellate practice, such an error as warrants the appellate court in reversing the judgment before it; substantial error, that which reason-ably might have prejudiced the party complaining. See Fundamental error, supra. See also Plain error rule.

Error coram nobis /éhrar kóram nówbæs/. Error committed in the proceedings "before us"; i.e., error assigned as a ground for reviewing, modifying, or vacating a judgment in the same court in which it was rendered. A writ to bring before the court the pronounced judgment errors in matters of fact which had not been put in issue or passed on and were material to validity and regularity of legal proceeding itself. Hiawassee Lumber Co. v. United States, C.C. A.N.C., 64 F.2d 417, 418. See Coram nobis.

Error coram vobis /éhrar kóram wówbæs/. Error in the proceedings "before you"; words used in a writ of error directed by an appellate court to the court which tried the cause. See Coram vobis.

Errores ad sua principia referre, est refellere /aróriyz ak s(y)úwá pransip(i)y söffayiy, ést rafélfaríy/. To refer errors to their sources is to refute them. To bring errors to their beginning is to see their last.

Errores scribentis nocere non debent /aróriyz skré­bentis nóôsári nôôn dèbènt/. The mistakes of the writer ought not to harm.

Error fucatus nuda veritate in multis, est probabilior; et sepenumero rationibus vincit veritatatem error /éhrar fyakéydaz nyûwdu véhrstéydíy in máltas êst pôrbabalíyará; êt s(y)úwmarow râshiyónwána bínvat véhrstéydám éhrar/. Error artfully disguised [or colored] is, in many instances, more probable than naked truth; and frequently error overwhelms truth by [its show of] reasons.

Error in exercise of jurisdiction. Error in determination of questions of law or fact on which the court's jurisdiction in particular case depends. Burgess v. Nail, C.C.A.Okl., 103 F.2d 37, 43.

Error in fact. Error in fact occurs when, by reason of some fact which is unknown to the court and not apparent on the record (e.g., infancy, or death of one of the parties), it renders a judgment void or voidable. Such occurs when some fact which really exists is unknown, or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not. Schwartz v. Kominski, 25 Ill.App.3d 789, 324 N.E.2d 91, 93.

Error in law. An error of the court in applying the law to the case on trial, e.g., in ruling on the admission of evidence, or in charging the jury. See also Error.

Error in vacuo /éhrar i nákívyaʊw/. Error in adverse ruling without adverse effect is "error in vacuo" which may subject the erring judge to criticism but not the case to re-trial. See Error (Harmless error).

Error juris nocet /éhrar júras nôôsáti/. Error of law injures. A mistake of the law has an injurious effect; that is, the party committing it must suffer the consequences.

Error nominis /éhrar nóômánas/. Error of name. A mistake of detail in the name of a person; used in contradistinction to error de personá, a mistake as to identity.
Error nominis nunquam nocet, si de identitate rei constat /éhrar nómañs nákwmñ nósat, sáy diy ñéññantéydiy riay kónstat/. A mistake in the name of a thing is never prejudicial, if it be clear as to the identity of the thing itself [where the thing intended is certainly known]. This maxim is applicable only where the means of correcting the mistake are apparent on the face of the instrument to be construed.

Error of fact. See Error in fact.

Error of law. See Error in law.

Erubesct lex filios castigare parentes /ésbésat léks filiowys kástagéry paréntiyiz/. The law blushes where children correct their parents.

Escalation clause. See Escalator clause.

Escalator clause. In union contracts, a provision that wages will rise or fall depending on some standard like the cost of living index. In lease, provision that rent may be increased to reflect increase in real estate taxes, operating costs, and even increases in Consumer Price Index. In construction contract, clause authorizing contractor to increase contract price should costs of labor or materials increase.

Clause in leases or contracts executed subject to price control regulations. Under this clause, in the case of a lease, the landlord is authorized to collect the maximum rent permissible under rent regulations in force at time of execution of the lease. The escalator clause of the lease consists in the provision that in the event that the rent regulations are modified during the term of the lease, the tenant will pay the increased rental following the allowance thereof. See also Cost-of-living clause.

Escambio /éskésmbiyow/. In old English law, a writ of exchange. A license in the shape of a writ, formerly granted to an English merchant to draw a bill of exchange on another in foreign parts.

Escambium /éskésmbiyam/. An old English law term, signifying exchange.

Escape. The departure or deliverance out of custody of a person who was lawfully imprisoned before he is entitled to his liberty by the process of law. The voluntarily or negligently allowing any person lawfully in confinement to leave. To flee from; to avoid; to get away, as to flee to avoid arrest. The voluntary departure from lawful custody by a prisoner with the intent to evade the due course of justice. People v. Rivera, Colo.App., 542 P.2d 90, 92. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 751 et seq.

Escape clause. Provision in a contract or other document permitting party or parties to avoid liability or performance under certain conditions. For example, international tariff containing clause that tariff will be changed if imports covered by such case harm to domestic industries producing like goods. An "escape clause" is one that provides for avoidance of liability when there is other valid insurance. Chamberlin v. Smith, 72 C.A.3d 835, 140 Cal.Rptr. 493, 500.

Escape period. Term generally applied to provision in union contracts in connection with maintenance of membership clauses permitting workers to withdraw from the union during a certain period near the end of the contract period and before the start of the next contract period.

Escape warrant. In English practice, this was a warrant granted to retake a prisoner committed to the custody of the king's prison who had escaped therefrom. It was obtained on affidavit from the judge of the court in which the action had been brought, and was directed to all the sheriffs throughout England, commanding them to retake the prisoner and commit him to gaol when and where taken, there to remain until the debt was satisfied.

Escapio quietus /éskésyipoy kwiyiydQs/. In old English law, delivered from that punishment which by the laws of the forest lay upon those whose beasts were found upon forbidden land.

Escapium /éskésyipiyam/. That which comes by chance or accident.

Escheata derivatur a verbo gallico eschoir, quod est accedere, quia accidit domino ex eventu et ex insperato /éksidQriy kwaYQ zkSQdQt dOffiQnow eks kwOd est ñéksidariy kwáya áksQdQt dómanów eks avén(y)uw eð éks inéspérydow/. Escheat is derived from the French word "eschoir," which signifies to happen, because it falls to the lord from an event and from an unforeseen circumstance.

Escheat vulgo dicuntur que decidentibus ilis que de rege tenent, cum non existit ratione sanguinis hares, ad fiscum relabantur /éskasdédýyí váwog dákkantykwá désdédántabal yás kwíy diy ríyiy ténant kám nón agzisQt rësheyQwniy sëngwánsá híriyáz ëð fískam rëlebonárt/. Those things are commonly called "escheats" which revert to the exchequer from a failure of issue in those who hold of the king, when there does not exist any heir by consanguinity.

Escheat /éskes(h)chiyt/. A reversion of property to the state in consequence of a want of any individual competent to inherit.

Escheat at feudal law was the right of the lord of a fee to re-enter upon the same when it became vacant by the extinction of the blood of the tenant. This extinction might either be per defectum sanguinis or else per delictum tenentis, where the course of descent was broken by the corruption of the blood of the tenant. As a fee might be holden either of the crown or from some inferior lord, the escheat was not always to the crown. The word "escheat", in this country, merely indicates the preferable right of the state to an estate left vacant, and without there being any one in existence able to make claim thereto.

Escheator /éskes(h)chiydQr/. In English law, the name of an officer who was appointed in every county to look after the escheats which fell due to the king in that particular county, and to certify the same into the exchequer. An escheator could continue in office for one year only, and was not re-eligible until three years. There does not appear to exist any such officer at the present day.

Escheat, writ of. A writ which anciently lay for a lord, to recover possession of lands that had escheated to him.

Escheccum /es(h)éčkäm/. In old English law, a jury or inquisition.

Escobedo Rule /éskabídow ruwll/. Where police investigation begins to focus on a particular suspect, the suspect is in custody, the suspect requests and is denied counsel, and the police have not warned him of his right to remain silent, the accused has been denied assistance of counsel and no statement elicited during such interrogation may be used in a criminal trial. Escobedo v. State of Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 490, 491, 84 S.Ct. 1758, 12 L.Ed.2d 977. See also Miranda Rule.

Escot /eskót/. In England, a tax formerly paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called "scot and lot.”

Escrribano /éskyri-bánow/. In Spanish law, an officer, resembling a notary in French law, who has authority to set down in writing, and verify by his attestation, transactions and contracts between private persons, and also judicial acts and proceedings.

Escritura /éskyri-túrá/. In Spanish law, a written instrument. Every deed that is made by the hand of a public escribano, or notary of a corporation or council (concejo), or sealed with the seal of the king or other authorized persons.

Escoquiere /e(s)krówkerfi/. Fr. Fraud, swindling, cheating. Escrow. A writing, deed, money, stock, or other property delivered by the grantor, promisor or obligor into the hands of a third person, to be held by the latter until the happening of a contingency or performance of a condition, and then by him delivered to the grantee, promisee or obligee. A system of document transfer in which a deed, bond, or funds is delivered to a third person to hold until all conditions in a contract are fulfilled; e.g. delivery of deed to escrow agent under installment land sale contract until full payment for land is made.

Escrow account. A bank account generally held in the name of the depositor and an escrow agent which is returnable to depositor or paid to third person on the fulfillment of escrow condition; e.g. funds for payment of real estate taxes are commonly paid into escrow account of bank-mortgagor by mortgagee.

Escrow deposit. See Escrow account.

Escrowl /eskrówl/. In old English law, an escrow; a scroll. "And deliver the deed to a stranger, as an escrowl.”

Escuate /éskyúwaj/. In feudal law, service of the shield. One of the varieties of tenure in knight's service, the duty imposed being that of accompanying the king to the wars for forty days, at the tenant's own charge, or sending a substitute. In later times, this service was commuted for a certain payment in money, which was then called "escuate certain." 2 Bl.Comm. 74, 75.

Esketores /é-skátor(í)yzz/. Robbers, or destroyers of other men's lands and fortunes.

Eskipper, eskippare /é-skápar(í)y/. To ship.

Eskippeson /e(s)kip(s)an/. Shippage, or passage by sea. Spelled, also, "skipeson.”

Esisors /aláyzárz/. See Eillsors.

Esse /ézi(n)y/. In old English law, a hiring of servile condition.

Esnecey /é(s)násiy/. Seniority; the condition or right of the eldest; the privilege of the eldest-born. Particularly used of the privilege of the eldest among coparceners to make a first choice of purparts upon a voluntary partition.

E.S.O.P. Employee Stock Ownership Plan.

Espedient /éspé-di(ý)ent/. In Spanish law, a junction of actions, or case; an espousal; also a proceeding and which remains in the office at the close of it.

Espera /éspa/. A period of time fixed by law or by a court within which certain acts are to be performed, e.g., the production of papers, payment of debts, etc.

Espionage. Espionage, or spying, has reference to the crime of “gathering, transmitting or losing” information respecting the national defense with intent or reason to believe that the information is to be used to the injury of the United States, or to the advantage of any foreign nation. 18 U.S.C.A. § 793; Rosenberg v. United States, 346 U.S. 273, 73 S.Ct. 1152, 97 L.Ed. 1609. See Internal security acts.

Espionage Act. Federal law which punishes espionage, spying, and related crimes. 18 U.S.C.A. § 793 et seq.

Esples /esplitz/. An old term for the products which the ground or land yields; as the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn of arable fields, rent and services, etc. The word has been anciently applied to the land itself.

Espousals /espáwzalz/. A mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other at some other time. It differs from a marriage, because then the contract is completed.

Espurio /espúriyow/. In Spanish law, a spurious child; one begotten on a woman who has promiscuous intercourse with many men.

Esq. Abbreviation for Esquire.

Esquire /éskway(a)r/askway(a)r/. In English law, a title of dignity next above gentleman, and below knight. Also a title of office given to sheriffs, sergeants, and barristers at law, justices of the peace, and others.

In United States, title commonly appended after name of attorney; e.g. John J. Jones, Esquire.
ESSENCE

Essence. That which is indispensable. The gist or substance of any act; the vital constituent of a thing; that without which a thing cannot be itself. Norman v. Department of Labor and Industries, 10 Wash.2d 180, 116 P.2d 360, 362.

Essence of the contract. Any condition or stipulation in a contract which is mutually understood and agreed by the parties to be of such vital importance that a sufficient performance of the contract cannot be had without exact compliance with it is said to be “of the essence of the contract.” See also Basis of bargain.

Essendi quietum de tolonio /asénday kwı̂yı̂ydam diy tölönı̂yow/ A writ to be quit of toll; it lies for a contract which is mutually understood and agreed by the parties to be of such vital importance that a sufficient performance of the contract cannot be had without exact compliance with it is said to be “of the essence of the contract.” See also Basis of bargain.

Essential. Indispensably necessary; important in the highest degree; requisite. That which is required for the continued existence of a thing.

Essoin, v. /asöyn/. In old English practice, to present or offer an excuse for not appearing in court on an appointed day in obedience to a summons; to cast an essoin. This was anciently done by a person whom the party sent for that purpose, called an “essoiner.”

Essoin, n. /asöyn/. In old English law, an excuse for not appearing in court at the return of the process. Presentation of such excuse. Essoin was not now allowed at all in personal actions. 3 Bl.Comm. 278, note.

Essoin day /asöyn dėy/. In England, formerly the first general return-day of the term, on which the courts sat to receive essoins, i.e., excuses for parties who did not appear in court, according to the summons of writs. 3 Bl.Comm. 278. By St. 11 Geo. IV, and 1 Wm. IV, c. 70, § 6, these days were done away with, as a part of the term.

Essoin de malo ville /asöyn di̊̂y mālō vil̊̂y/. When the defendant is in court the first day; but gone without pleading, and being afterwards surprised by sickness, etc., cannot attend, but sends two essoiners, who openly protest in court that he is detained by sickness in such a village, that he cannot come pro lucrari and pro perdere; and this will be admitted, for it falls on the plaintiff to prove whether the essoin is true or not.

Essoinator /asöyniyéyə̂/ A person who made an essoin.

Essoin roll /asöyn röwl/. In England, a roll upon which essoins were formerly entered, together with the day to which they were adjourned.

Establish. This word occurs frequently in the Constitution of the United States, and it is there used in different meanings: (1) To settle firmly, to fix unalterably; as to establish justice, which is the avowed object of the Constitution. (2) To make or form; as to establish uniform laws governing naturalization or bankruptcy. (3) To found, to create, to regulate; as: “Congress shall have power to establish post-offices.” (4) To found, recognize, confirm, or admit; as: “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.” See Establishment clause. (5) To create, to ratify, or confirm, as: “We, the people . . . do ordain and establish this Constitution.” Ware v. U. S., 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 617, 18 L.Ed. 389.

To settle, make or fix firmly; place on a permanent footing; found; create; put beyond doubt or dispute; prove; convince. Wells Lamont Corp. v. Bowles, Em.App., 149 F.2d 364, 366. To enact permanently. To bring about or into existence.

Establishment. Place of business. Public or private institution. State of being established.

Establishment clause. That provision of the First Amendment to U.S. Constitution which provides that “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof . . . “. Such language prohibits a state or the federal government from setting up a church, or passing laws which aid one, or all, religions, or giving preference to one religion, or forcing belief or disbelief in any religion. Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711; McCollum v. Bd. of Education, 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 92 L.Ed. 649.

Estadal /êstaďal/. In Spanish America, a measure of land of sixteen square varas, or yards.

Estadia (or Sobrestadia) /êstådia (sōubrestådia)/. In Spanish law, delay in a voyage, or in the delivery of cargo, caused by the charterer or consignee, for which demurrage is payable. The time for which the party who has chartered a vessel, or is bound to receive the cargo, has to pay demurrage on account of his delay in the execution of the contract.

Est aliquid quod non oportet etiam si licet; quæcught vero non licet certe non oportet /êst alákid kwó̱d nôn spórđat éshı̂yam sâ̂y lı̂sá̂t; kwı̂k̊wı̂d vírō̱ nôn lı̂s̊t sır̊diy nôn spórđat/. There is that which is not proper, even though permitted; but whatever is not permitted is certainly not proper.

Estandard /ástándard/. L. Fr. A standard (of weights and measures). So called because it stands constant and immovable, and hath all other measures coming towards it for their conformity.

Est ascavoir /ê̊y asavwón/. It is to be understood or known; “it is to-wit.”

Estate. The degree, quantity, nature, and extent of interest which a person has in real and personal property. An estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments signifies such interest as the tenant has therein. 2 Bl.Comm. 103. The condition or circumstance in which the owner stands with regard to his property. Boyd v. Sibold, 7 Wash.2d 279, 109 P.2d 535, 539. In this sense, “estate” is commonly used in conveyances in connection with the words “right,” “title,” and “interest,” and is, in a great degree, synonymous with all of them.
The total property of whatever kind that is owned by a decedent prior to the distribution of that property in accordance with the terms of a will, or, when there is no will, by the laws of inheritance in the state of domicile of the decedent. It means, ordinarily, the whole of the property owned by anyone, the realty as well as the personality. As used in connection with the administration of decedents' estates, term includes property of a decedent, trust or other person as such property exists from time to time during the administration, and hence may include probate assets as well as property passing by intestacy. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(11).

In its broadest sense, the social, civic, or political condition or standing of a person; or a class of persons considered as grouped for social, civic, or political purposes.

Common Law Classifications

Estates may be either absolute or conditional. An absolute estate is a full and complete estate, or an estate in lands not subject to be defeated upon any condition. In this phrase the word “absolute” is not used legally to distinguish a fee from a life-estate, but as such property exists from time to time during the administration, and as such property is the estate upon which the easement is imposed or against which it is enjoyed; an estate subject to a burden or servitude for the benefit of another estate. A settled estate, in English law, is one created or limited under a settlement; that is, one in which the powers of alienation, devising, and transmission according to the ordinary rules of descent are restrained by the limitations of the settlement.

A vested estate is one in which there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment; an estate as to which there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession upon the ceasing of some intermediate or precedent estate. An original estate is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrasted with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent.

“Estate” and “heirs” are not equivalent terms, Martin v. Hale, 167 Tenn. 438, 71 S.W.2d 211, 214; Abraham v. Abraham, 245 App.Div. 302, 280 N.Y.S. 825.

As to Homestead; Movable; Real; Residuary; Separate, and Trust (Trust estate), see those titles. See also Augmented estate; Beneficial estate; Gross estate; Joint estate; Life estate; Net estate; Residuary estate; Vested estate.

For the names and definitions of the various kinds of estates in land, see the different titles below.

Landed estate or property. See Landed estate or property.

Qualified estate. Interests in real property which are not absolute and unconditional including fee tail, estates on condition, estates on limitation, and estates on conditional limitation. Carpenter v. City of New Brunswick, 135 N.J.Eq. 397, 39 A.2d 40, 43.

Small estate. In some jurisdictions, there is an informal procedure for administration of small estates of decedents less structured than ordinary probate and administration. Normally, the services of an attorney are not required. Uniform Probate Code, § 3–1201 et seq.

Estate ad remanuens (ad remanuens) /əˈstɛdʒ ad rɛməˈnɛnʃ(ɪ)əm/. An estate in fee-simple.

Estate at sufferance. The interest of a tenant who has come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner, and continues to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission. 2 Bl.Comm. 150. This type of estate does not arise where one comes into possession of land by lawful title, but keeps it afterwards without any title at all, and the original entry need not have been under lease or as a tenant of the dispossessing landlord.

Estate at will. A species of estate less than freehold, where lands and tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold at the will of the lessor;
Estate by elegit. See Elegit.

Estate by entirety. See Estate by the entirety.

Estate by purchase. One acquired in any other method than descent. See also Purchase.

Estate by statute merchant. In England, an estate whereby the creditor, under the custom of London, retained the possession of all his debtor’s lands until his debts were paid. See Statute (Statute merchant).

Estate by statute staple. See Staple (Statute staple).

Estate by the curtesy. See Curtesy.

Estate by the entirety. Called also estate in entirety, or estate by the entitrees. An estate in joint tenancy, plus the unity of the marital relation. A form of co-ownership of realty or personality held by husband and wife in which there is unity of estate, unity of possession and unity of control of entire property, and on death of one, survivor takes estate under original conveyance. In re Gallagher’s Estate, 352 Pa. 476, 43 A.2d 132, 133. A common-law estate, based on the doctrine that husband and wife are one, and that a conveyance of real property to husband and wife creates but one estate. An estate held by husband and wife together so long as both live, and, after the death of either, by the survivor. It is an estate held by husband and wife by virtue of a title acquired by them jointly after marriage. A creature of the common law created by legal fiction based wholly on the common-law doctrine that husband and wife are one, and hence a conveyance to husband and wife created only one estate, and each was owner of the whole estate, and neither could dispose of it without the consent of the other, and on the death of one survivor was the owner in fee simple. Alexander v. Alexander, 154 Or. 317, 58 P.2d 1265, 1270, 1271.

Type of joint estate which may be held only by two persons who are married to each other at the time that the estate is created and which does not admit of partition, though, on divorce, it automatically becomes an estate in common unless the parties provide otherwise.

An “estate by entitrees” resembles a “joint tenancy” in that there is a right of survivorship in both, but such an estate is distinguishable from a joint tenancy in that the latter may be invested in any number of natural persons each of whom is seized of an undivided moiety of the whole, whereas a “tenancy by entirety” is vested in two persons only, who in law are regarded as only one, and each of whom becomes seized of the estate as a whole. Heffner v. White, 113 Ind.App. 296, 45 N.E.2d 342, 346.

See also Community property; Entitree; Tenancy (Joint tenancy).

Estate duty. A duty formerly imposed in England (act of 1894) upon the principal value of all property which passed on death. Such duty was replaced in 1975 by a capital transfer tax.

Estate for life. See Life estate.

Estate for years. A species of estate less than freehold, where a man has an interest in lands and tenements, and a possession thereof, by virtue of such interest, for some fixed and determinate period of time; as in the case where lands are leased for the term of a certain number of years, agreed upon between the lessor and the lessee. Blackstone calls this estate a “contract” for the possession of lands or tenements for some determinate period. 2 Bl.Com. 140. Estates for years embrace all terms limited to endure for a definite and ascertained period, however short or long the period may be; they embrace terms for a fixed number of weeks or months or for a single year, as well as for any definite number of years, however great. Also called “tenancy for a term”.

Estate from period to period. An estate continuing for successive periods of a year, or successive periods of a fraction of a year, unless it is terminated. Pitney-Bowes Postage Meter Co. v. United States, D.C. Conn., 57 F.Sup. 365, 366. Also called “tenancy from period to period”; or “periodic estate”.

Estate from year to year. An example of an “estate for years” (q.v.). It exists in cases where the parties stipulate for it, and also where the parties by their conduct have placed themselves in the relation of landlord and tenant without adopting any other term. If a tenant has been allowed to hold over after the expiration of his term in such a way as to preclude the possibility of his becoming a tenant on sufferance, it is a tenancy from year to year. It was originally a development of a tenancy at will, by which the tenancy was terminable only at the time of the year at which it began, and on notice.

Estate in common. An estate in lands held by two or more persons, with interests accruing under different titles; or accruing under the same title, but at different periods; or conferred by words of limitation importing that the grantees are to take in distinct shares. See also Tenancy (Tenancy in common).

Estate in coparcenary /stéstíd an kowpárá(r)anarí/. See Coparcenary.

Estate in dower. See Dower.

Estate in expectancy. One which is not yet in possession, but the enjoyment of which is to begin at a future time. An estate giving a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment. One in which the right to permancy of the profits is postponed to some future period. Such are estates in remainder and reversion.

Estate in fee simple. See Fee simple.

Estate in fee-tall. See Tall, estate in.

Estate in joint tenancy. See Tenancy.

Estate in lands. Property one has in lands, tenements or hereditaments, or conditions or circumstances in which tenant stands as to his property. Tallman v.
Estate in remainder. See Remainder.

Estate in reversion. See Reversion.

Estate in severalty /astéy an sévraltiy/. An estate held by a person in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest, during his estate. This is the most common and usual way of holding an estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 179.

Estate less than freehold. An estate for years, estate at will, or estate at sufferance.

Estate of freehold. See Freehold.

Estate of inheritance. An estate which may descend to heirs. Administration & Trust Co. v. Catron, 171 Tenn. 268, 102 S.W.2d 59, 60. A species of freehold estate in lands, otherwise called a "fee," where the tenant is not only entitled to enjoy the land for his own life, but where, after his death, it is passed by the law upon the persons who successively represent him in perpetuum, according to a certain established order of descent.

Estate on condition. See Estate upon condition.

Estate on conditional limitation. An estate conveyed to one person so that, upon occurrence or failure of occurrence of some contingent event, whether conditional or limitative, the estate shall depart from original grantee and pass to another. Carpender v. City of New Brunswick, 135 N.J.Eq. 397, 39 A.2d 40, 43.

Estate on limitation /astéy ön limatéyshın/. An estate originated by the use of words denoting duration of time, such as while, during, so long as, and the like and when designated limitative event happens, such estate ends naturally without any re-entry and property reverts to grantor. Carpender v. City of New Brunswick, 135 N.J.Eq. 397, 39 A.2d 40, 43. Sometimes referred to as "base fee", "qualified fee", "determinable fee", or "fee simple defeasible". Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Chapman, 35 N.J. 177, 171 A.2d 653, 657.

Estate planning. That branch of the law which, in arranging a person's property and estate, takes into account the laws of wills, taxes, insurance, property, and trusts so as to gain maximum benefit of all laws while carrying out the person's own wishes for the disposition of his property upon his death.

Éstate pur autre vie /astéy par ówtra váy/. See Pur autre vie.

Estates of the realm. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. 1 Bl.Comm. 153. Sometimes called the "three estates." Inasmuch as the lords spiritual had no separate assembly or negative in their political capacity, some authorities reduce the estates in Great Britain to two, the lords and commons. Generally in feudal Europe there were three estates: the clergy, nobles, and commons. In England (until about the 14th century) the three estates of the realm were the clergy, barons, and knights. In legal practice the lords spiritual and lords temporal are usually collectively designated under the one name lords.

Estate subject to a conditional limitation. The distinction between an estate upon condition subsequent and an "estate subject to a conditional limitation" is that in former words creating condition do not originally limit term, but merely permit its termination upon happening of contingency, while in latter words creating it limit continuation of estate to time preceding happening of contingency. Johnson v. Lane, 199 Ark. 740, 135 S.W.2d 853, 866.

Estate tail. See Tail, estate in.

Estate tail, quasi. When a tenant for life grants his estate to a man and his heirs, as these words, though apt and proper to create an estate tail, cannot do so, because the grantor, being only tenant for life, cannot grant in perpetuum, therefore they are said to create an estate tail quasi, or improper.

Estate tax. A tax imposed on the right to transfer property by death. Thus, an estate tax is levied on the decedent's estate and not on the heir receiving the property. A tax levied on right to transmit property, while "inheritance tax" is levied on right to receive property. Allen v. Flournoy, 26 Cal.App.3d 774, 103 Cal.Rptr. 275, 277. The tax is based on value of the whole estate less certain deductions. I.R.C. § 2001 et seq. See also Inheritance tax; Unified transfer tax.

Many states have adopted the "Uniform Interstate Compromise of Death Taxes Act" or the "Uniform Interstate Arbitration of Death Taxes Act."

Estate upon condition. An estate in lands, the existence of which depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. 2 Bl.Comm. 151. An estate having a qualification annexed to it, by which it may, upon the happening of a particular event, be created, or enlarged, or destroyed. United States v. 1,010.8 Acres, More or Less. Situated in Sussex County, Del., D.C.Del., 56 F.Supp. 120, 127.

Estate upon condition expressed. An estate granted, either in fee-simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged, or be defeated upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition. 2 Bl.Comm. 154. An estate which is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail.

Estate upon condition implied. An estate having a condition annexed to it inseparably from its essence and constitution, although no condition be expressed in words. 2 Bl.Comm. 152.

Est autem jus publicum et privatum, quod ex naturalibus praecipit aut gentium, aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellation, id in legem anglicam rectum esse dictur /ést óðam jás píblíkam ét pravéydam, kwð óks nátyrérélíbas práséptas ót jénsb(iy)am ót sávélíbas ét káléktam; ét kwð in júrý skríptwó jás ápoléfýd, id in liýjí ánglíyí réktam óst dissador/. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural precepts, on the one hand of nations, on the other of citizens; and that which in the civil law is called "jus," that, in the law of England, is said to be right.

Est autem vis legem simulans /ēst ǒdām vis liyjam simyslian(d)z/. Violence may also put on the mask of law.

Estendard, estendart, or standard /(o)stēndard/. An ensign for horsemen in war.

Ester in judgment. L. Fr. To appear before a tribunal either as plaintiff or defendant.

Estimate. A valuing or rating by the mind, without actually measuring, weighing, or the like. A rough or approximate calculation only. United States v. Foster, C.C.A.Iowa, 131 F.2d 3, 7. Act of appraising or valuing. Determination of approximate cost or return.

This word is used to express the mind or judgment of the speaker or writer on the particular subject under consideration. It implies a calculation or computation, as to estimate the gain or loss of an enterprise.

Estimated tax. Tax computed in the first instance without fully accurate and complete information but which is filed only as a preliminary matter to be followed by a final tax return. Tax payments are made in instalments based on the estimate and then credited to taxpayer when he files his final return.

Federal law dictates when declarations of estimated tax must be filed (e.g. quarterly). I.R.C. § 6015(a). Declarations and payment of estimated taxes are normally made by non-wage earners since, unlike wage earners, their taxes are not withheld from each paycheck by the employer. See also Declaration of estimated tax.

Estimated useful life. The period over which an asset will be used by a particular taxpayer. Although such period cannot be longer than the estimated physical life of an asset, it could be shorter if the taxpayer does not intend to keep the asset until it wears out. Assets such as goodwill do not have an estimated useful life. The estimated useful life of an asset is essential to measuring the annual tax deduction for depreciation and amortization and in determining the amount of any investment tax credit allowable.

Estin doctrine. The principle of law enunciated in Estin v. Estin, 334 U.S. 541, 68 S.Ct. 1213, 92 L.Ed. 1561 to the effect that a divorce decree is divisible and, while full faith and credit must be given to a decree as to the termination of the marriage, no full faith and credit is required as to that portion of the decree ordering support for the wife unless the court entering the order had personal jurisdiction of the husband.

Est ipsorum legislatorum tanquam viva vox /ēst ĭspŏrăm ĝēslištōrăm tākxwam vāyya vŏks/. The voice of the legislators themselves is like the living voice; that is, the language of a statute is to be understood and interpreted like ordinary spoken language.

Estop. To stop, bar, or impede; to prevent; to preclude. See Embargo; Estoppel; Injunction.

Estoppel /ēstŏpĕl/. "Estoppel" means that party is prevented by his own acts from claiming a right to detriment of other party who was entitled to rely on such conduct and has acted accordingly. Graham v. Askewby, 112 Ariz. 184, 540 P.2d 656, 658. An estoppel arises when one is concluded and forbidden by law to speak against his own act or deed. Gural v. Engle, 128 N.J.L. 252, 25 A.2d 257, 261. An inconsistent position, attitude or course of conduct may not be adopted to loss or injury of another. Brand v. Farmers Mut. Protective Ass'n of Texas, Tex.Civ. App., 95 S.W.2d 994, 997. See Restatement, Agency, Second § 8B.

Estoppel is a bar or impediment which precludes allegation or denial of a certain fact or state of facts, in consequence of previous allegation or denial or conduct or admission, or in consequence of a final adjudication of the matter in a court of law. It operates to put party entitled to its benefits in same position as if thing represented were true. May v. City of Kearney, 145 Neb. 475, 17 N.W.2d 448, 458. Under law of "estoppel" where one of two innocent persons must suffer, he whose act occasioned loss must bear it. Buxbaum v. Assicurazioni Generali, 175 Misc. 785, 25 N.Y.S.2d 357, 360; Sackenreuther v. Winston, Tex.Civ.App., 137 S.W.2d 93, 96. Elements or essentials of estoppel include change of position of parties so that party against whom estoppel is invoked has received a profit or benefit or party invoking estoppel has changed his position to his detriment.

Estoppel is or may be based on acceptance of benefits, Rhodus v. Geatley, 347 Mo. 397, 147 S.W.2d 631, 637, 638, 639; Harjo v. Johnston, 187 Okl. 561, 104 P.2d 985, 992, 998; actual or constructive fraudulent conduct, Peterson v. Hudson Ins. Co., 41 Ariz. 31, 15 P.2d 249, 252; admissions or denial by which another is induced to act to his injury, Wabash Drilling Co. v. Ellis, 230 Ky. 769, 20 S.W.2d 1002, 1004; agreement on and settlement of facts by force of law to speak against his own act or deed. Gural v. Engle, 128 N.J.L. 252, 25 A.2d 257, 261. An inconsistent position, attitude or course of conduct may not be adopted to loss or injury of another. Brand v. Farmers Mut. Protective Ass'n of Texas, Tex.Civ. App., 95 S.W.2d 994, 997. See Restatement, Agency, Second § 8B.

Estoppels are legal estoppels, as distinguished from the last kind, known as equitable estoppels.
For Acquiescence, estoppel by; Collateral attack; Contract, estoppel by; Deed, estoppel by; Election, estoppel by; Equitable estoppel; In pais, estoppel; Judgment, estoppel by; Judicial estoppel; Laches, estoppel by; Legal estoppel; Negligence, estoppel by; Promissory estoppel; Quasi estoppel; Record, estoppel by; Representation, estoppel by; Silence, estoppel by; and Verdict, estoppel by, see those titles.

Acts and declarations. An “estoppel by acts and declarations” is such as arises from the acts and declarations of a person by which he designedly induces another to alter his position injuriously to himself.

Estoppel by deed. A grantor in a warranty deed who does not have title at the time of the conveyance but who subsequently acquires title is estopped from denying that he had title at the time of the transfer and such after-acquired title inures to the benefit of the grantee or his successors. See also Deed, estoppel by.

Estoppel by judgment. Term means that when a fact has been agreed on, or decided in a court of record, neither of the parties shall be allowed to call it in question, and have it tried over again at any time thereafter, so long as judgment or decree stands unreversed. Humphrey v. Faison, 247 N.C. 127, 100 S.E.2d 524, 529. Final adjudication of material issue by a court of competent jurisdiction binds parties in any subsequent proceeding between or among them, irrespective of difference in forms or causes of action. Mansker v. Dealers Transport Co., 160 Ohio St. 255, 116 N.E.2d 3, 6. See also Judgment, estoppel by.

Estoppel certificate. A signed statement by a party, such as a tenant or a mortgagee, certifying for the benefit of another party that a certain statement of facts is correct as of the date of the statement, such as that a lease exists, that there are no defaults and that rent is paid to a certain date. Delivery of the statement by the tenant prevents (estops) the tenant from later claiming a different state of facts.

Estoppel in pais. The doctrine by which a person may be precluded by his act or conduct, or silence when it is his duty to speak, from asserting a right which he otherwise would have had. Mitchell v. McIntee, 15 Or.App. 85, 514 P.2d 1357, 1359. See also Equitable estoppel.

Misrepresentation. See Representation, estoppel by.

Pleading. Plead must allege and prove not only that person sought to be estopped made misleading statements and representations but that pleador actually believed and relied on them and was misled to his injury thereby. Stanolind Oil & Gas Co. v. Midas Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 342, 345.

Under rules practice in most states, and in the federal courts, estoppel is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded. Fed.R. Civ.R.P. 8(c).

Ratification distinguished. The substance of “estoppel” is the inducement of another to act to his prejudice. The substance of “ratification” is confirmation after conduct.

By ratification party is bound because he intended to be, while under “estoppel” he is bound because other party will be prejudiced unless the law treats him as legally bound. Carlile v. Harris, Tex.Civ.App., 38 S.W.2d 622. See Ratification.

Res judicata distinguished. A prior judgment between same parties, which is not strictly res judicata because based upon different cause of action, operates as an “estoppel” only as to matters actually in issue or points controverted. Etna Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Martin, C.C.A.Ark., 108 F.2d 824, 827; Cunningham v. Oklahoma City, 188 Okl. 466, 110 P.2d 1102, 1104. In a later action upon a different cause of action a judgment operates as an “estoppel” only as to such issues in second action as were actually determined in the first action. Lorber v. Vista Irr. Dist., C.C.A.Cal., 127 F.2d 628, 634. The doctrine of “res judicata” is a branch of law of “estoppel”. Krisher v. McAllister, 71 Ohio App. 58, 47 N.E.2d 817, 819. The plea of “res judicata” is in its nature an “estoppel” against the losing party from again litigating matters involved in previous action, but the plea does not have that effect as to matters transpiring subsequently. Fort Worth Stockyards Co. v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 549, 555. See Res (Res judicata).

Waiver distinguished. Waiver is voluntary surrender or relinquishment of some known right, benefit or advantage; estoppel is the inhibition to assert it. In insurance law, however, the two terms are commonly used interchangeably. See Waiver.

Estover /astówvar/. The right or privilege which a tenant has to furnish himself with so much wood from the demised premises as may be sufficient or necessary for his fuel, fences, and other agricultural operations. 2 Bl.Comm. 35.

An allowance made to a person out of an estate or other thing for his or her support, as for food and raiment.

An allowance (more commonly called “alimony”) granted to a woman divorced a mensa et thoro, for her support out of her husband’s estate. 1 Bl.Comm. 441.

Estoveria sunt ardensi, arandi, construendi et claudendi /és stoviri vía sánt ardéndy, arándy, konstrúwéndy ét klóó déndy/. Estovers are of fire-bote, plow-bote, house-bote, and hedge-bote.

Estoveris habendis /és stoviri yás hábédzis/. A writ (now obsolete) for a wife judicially separated to recover her alimony or estovers.

Est quiddam perfectius in rebus licitis /és kwídám parféksh(i)ýýas i riýýes líísds/. There is something more perfect in things allowed.

Estray /astrý/. An estray is an animal that has escaped from its owner, and wanders or strays about; usually defined, at common law, as a wandering animal whose owner is unknown. An animal cannot be an estray when on the range where it was raised, and permitted by its owner ‘to run, and especially when the owner is known to the party who takes it up.

The term is also used of flotsam at sea.

Estreat, v. /astríyt/. To take out a forfeited recognition from the recordings of a court, and return it to the court to be prosecuted. See Estreat, n.
Estreat, n. (From Lat. extractum.) In English law, a copy or extract from the book of estreats, that is, the rolls of any court, in which the amercements or fines, recognizances, etc., imposed or taken by that court upon or from the accused, are set down, and which are to be levied by the bailiff or other officer of the court. A true copy or duplicate of some original writing or record, and especially of fines and amercements imposed by a court, extracted from the record, and certified to a proper officer or officers authorized and required to collect them.

Estreclatius /astryles(h)yéydas/. Straightened, as applied to roads.

Estrepe /astryp/. To strip; to despoil; to lay waste; to commit waste upon an estate, as by cutting down trees, removing buildings, etc. To injure the value of a reversionary interest by stripping or spoiling the estate.

Estrepelement /astrípmant/. A species of aggravated waste, by stripping or devastating the land, to the injury of the reversioner, and especially pending a suit for possession.

Estrepelement, writ of. A common-law writ of waste, which lay in particular for the reversioner against the tenant for life, in respect of damage or injury to the land committed by the latter. As it was only auxiliary to a real action for recovery of the land, and as equity afforded the same relief by injunction, the writ fell into disuse in England, and was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.

Estuary /és(h)cháwéhriy/. That part of the mouth or lower course of a river flowing into the sea which is subject to tide; especially, an enlargement of a river channel toward its mouth in which the movement of the tide is very prominent.

Et. And. The introductory word of several Latin and law French phrases formerly in common use.

Et adjournatur /éd adjornéydar/. And it is adjourned. A phrase used in the old reports, where the argument of a cause was adjourned to another day, or where a second argument was had.

Et al. /éd ál/. An abbreviation for et alii, “and others.” The singular is “et alius” (q.v.). It may also mean “and another” in the singular.

The abbreviation et al. (sometimes in the plural written et als.) is often affixed to the name of the person first mentioned, where there are several plaintiffs, grantors, persons addressed, etc.

Where the words “et al.” are used in a judgment against defendants, the quoted words include all defendants. Williams v. Williams, 25 Tenn.App. 290, 156 S.W.2d 363, 369.

Et alli è contra /éd élyiyay iy kóntra/. And others on the other side. A phrase constantly used in the Year Books, in describing a joinder in issue.

Et allus /éd élyiyas/. And another.

Et allocatur /éd élakéydar/. And it is allowed.

Et cetera (or etc.) /et sédara/. And others; and other things; and others of like character; and others of the like kind; and the rest; and so on; and so forth. In its abbreviated form (etc.) this phrase is frequently affixed to one of a series of articles or names to show that others are intended to follow or understood to be included. So, after reciting the initiatory words of a set formula, or a clause already given in full, etc. is added, as an abbreviation, for the sake of convenience. And other things of like kind or purpose as compared with those immediately theretofore mentioned.

Et de cæo se mettent en le pays. L. Fr. And of this they put themselves upon the country.

Et de hoc ponit se super patriam /ét diy hók pówwnt siy s(y)ówr pañtriyam/. And of this he puts himself upon the country. The formal conclusion of a common-law plea in bar by way of traverse. 3 Bl.Comm. 313. The literal translation is retained in the modern form.

Et ei legitur in hec verba /éd iyay liyjadar an hiyk várba/. L. Lat. And it is read to him in these words. Words formerly used in entering the prayer ofoyer on record.

Eternal security. The doctrine of “eternal security” means that once one becomes a Christian or has been “regenerated” his future conduct, no matter what it may be, will not jeopardize his salvation. Ashman v. Studebaker, 115 Ind.App. 73, 156 N.E.2d 674, 678.

Et habeas li tunc hoc breve /ét hébyiyas ibay tánk hók bryiyiv/. And have you then there this writ. The formal words directing the return of a writ. The literal translation was retained in the latter form of a considerable number of writs.

Et habuit /ét hábyuwat/. And he had it, a common phrase in the Year Books, expressive of the allowance of an application or demand by a party.

Ethics. Of or relating to moral action, conduct, motive or character; as, ethical emotion; also, treating of moral feelings, duties or conduct; containing precepts of morality; moral. Professionally right or befitting; conforming to professional standards of conduct. Kraushaar v. La Yin, 181 Misc. 607, 42 N.Y.S.2d 857, 859.

Legal ethics. See Canon (Canons of judicial ethics); Code of Professional Responsibility; Legal ethics.

Et hoc paratus est verificare /ét hók párayyas ét vêhrásfákéry/. And this he is prepared to verify. The Latin form of concluding a plea in confession and avoidance; that is, where the defendant has confessed all that the plaintiff has set forth, and which for that reason was said to “conclude with a verification,” in contradistinction to a pleading which simply denied matter alleged by the opposite party, and which for that reason was said to “conclude to the country,” because the party merely put himself upon the country, or left the matter to the jury.
Et hoc petit quod inquiratur per patrlam /et hòk pédat kwòd ìkwarvéydar pàr pàtriýsam/. And this he prays may be inquired of by the country. The conclusion of a plaintiff's pleading, tendering an issue to the country. Literally translated in the modern forms.

Et inde petit judicium /èd ïndiy pédst juwðish(iy)íam/. And thereupon [or thereof] he prays judgment. A clause at the end of pleadings, praying the judgment of the court in favor of the party pleading. It occurs as early as the time of Bracton, and is literally translated in the modern forms.

Et inde product sectam /èd ïndiy prásd(y)úwst séktam/. And thereupon he brings suit. The Latin conclusion of a declaration, except against attorneys and other officers of the court. 3 Bl.Comm. 295.

Etiquette of the profession /èdakot sv ðo pràfethan/. The code of honor agreed on by mutual understanding and tacitly accepted by members of the legal profession, especially by the bar. See Code of Professional Responsibility; Legal ethics.

Et modo ad hunc diem /èt mówdow ðè hǹg dáyam/. Lat. And now at this day. This phrase was the formal beginning of an entry of appearance or of a continuance. The equivalent English words are still used in this connection.

Et non /èt nòn/. Lat. And not. A technical phrase in pleading, which introduces the negative averments of a special traverse. It has the same force and effect as the words absque hoc, "without this," and is occasionally used instead of the latter.

Et seq. /èt sàkwéntiyz/et sàkwéndh(iy)a/. An abbreviation for et sequentes (masculine and feminine plural) or et sequentia (neuter), "and the following." Thus a reference to "p. 1, et seq." means "page first and the following pages." Also abbreviated "et seq.," which is preferred by some authorities for a reference to more than one following page.

Et sic /èt sik/. And so. In the Latin forms of pleading these were the introductory words of a special conclusion to a plea in the bar, the object being to render it positive and not argumentative; as et sic nil debet.

Et sic ad judicium /èt sik ðè juwðishiyam/. And so to judgment.

Et sic ad patrimam /èt sik ðè pàtriýam/. And so to the country. A phrase used in the Year Books, to record an issue to the country.

Et sic fecit /èt sik fèyst/. And he did so.

Et sic pendet /èt sik pèndst/. And so it hangs. A term used in the old reports to signify that a point was left undetermined.

Et sic ulterius /èt sik èlýriyäs/. And so on; and so further; and so forth.

Et ux /èd ìksar/. An abbreviation for et uxor,—"and wife." Where a grantor's wife joins him in the conveyance, it is sometimes expressed (in abstracts, etc.) to be by "A. B. et ux."

Eudondo, morando, et redeundo /iýandow, maràndow, èt rèdiýandow/. Lat. Going, remaining, and returning. A person who is privileged from arrest (as a witness, legislator, etc.) is generally so privileged eudondo, morando, et redeundo; that is, on his way to the place where his duties are to be performed, while he remains there, and on his return journey.

Eunomy /riýwmanyi/. Equal laws and a well-adjusted constitution of government.

Eunuch /riýwna/. A male of the human species who has been castrated.

Euphoria /riýwfoiriya/. Exaggerated feeling of physical and emotional well-being not consonant with apparent stimuli or events; usually of psychologic origin, but also seen in organic brain diseases, or toxic and drug induced states.

Eurodollar /riýurowdólar/. A dollar in U.S. currency on deposit in a bank abroad, especially in a bank in Europe.

Euthanasia /riýwthànyzyha/. The act or practice of painlessly putting to death persons suffering from incurable and distressing disease as an act of mercy.

Evarts Act. See Judiciary acts.

Evasion. An act of eluding, dodging, or avoiding, or avoidance by artifice. City of Wink v. Griffith Amusement Co., 129 Tex. 40, 100 S.W.2d 695, 701. A subtle endeavoring to set aside truth or to escape the punishment of the law. Tax "evasion" is to be distinguished from tax "avoidance," the former meaning the illegal nonpayment of taxes due, the latter referring to the legal reduction or nonpayment of taxes through allowable deductions, exemptions, etc.

Evasive. Tending or seeking to evade; elusive; shifting; as an evasive argument or plea. If a pleading to which a responsive pleading is required is evasive, a party may make motion for a more definite statement. Fed.R.Civil P. 12(e).

Evasive answer. One which consists in refusing either to admit or to deny a matter in a direct, straight-forward manner as to which the person is necessarily presumed to have knowledge. Under Fed.R.Civil P. 37, an evasive answer is considered and treated as a failure to answer, for which a party may on motion Euclidian. Type of general zoning ordinance which excludes apartment houses, businesses, retail shops and the like from a residential zone; name is derived from case of Village of Euclid, Ohio et al. v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 47 S.Ct. 114, 71 L.Ed. 303.

Eum qui nocentem infamat, non est oequum ob eam rem condemneri; delicta enim nocentum nota esse oportet et expedit /iýam kwy naséntam inféyamy non èst iýkam ët bòwmam ëb iýam rém kòndemnérày; daliká iýam naséndh(iy)íam nówða exemple sòrdst ëd ëkspòdat/. It is not just and proper that he who speaks ill of a bad man should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the crimes of bad men should be known. 1 Bl.Comm. 125.
seek a court order compelling answers to discovery questions.

Eve. Evening. The period immediately preceding an important event.

Even. Nothing due or owing on either side; neither a profit nor loss; i.e. breaking even.

Evening. The closing part of the day and beginning of the night; in a strict sense, from sunset till dark. In common speech, the latter part of the day and the earlier part of the night, until bedtime. The period between sunset or the evening meal and ordinary bedtime. See also Nighttime.

Evenings. In old English law, the delivery at evening or night of a certain portion of grass, or corn, etc., to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, given him as a gratuity or encouragement.

Event. The consequence of anything; the issue or outcome of an action as finally determined; that in which an action, operation, or series of operations, terminates. Noteworthy happening or occurrence. Something that happens.

Distinguished from an act in that an act is the product of the will whereas an event is an occurrence which takes place independent of the will such as an earthquake or flood.

See also Fortuitous event.

Eventus est qui ex causa sequitur; et dicitur eventus quia ex causis eventit /sévěntás ēst kwáy ěks kóz̃ sékwaːdɐ, ēt dísdár avěntás kwáːy ěks kóz̃ s évənət/. An event is that which follows from the cause, and is called an "event" because it eventuates from causes.

Eventus varios res nova semper habet /sévěntás véɾiˈyəwɔs rɪˈvɔː sɛmˈpər hɛˈbət/. A new matter always produces various events.

Evergreen contract. A contract which renews itself from year to year in lieu of notice by one of the parties to the contrary. Chemplex Co. v. Tauber Oil Co., D.C.Iowa, 309 F.Supp. 904, 908.

Every. Each one of all; all the separate individuals who constitute the whole, regarded one by one. The term is sometimes equivalent to "all"; and sometimes to "each".

Every other thing. This phrase, as used in requiring employer to furnish safe place of employment and to do "every other thing" reasonably necessary to protect employees, relates to things of same kind that employer must necessarily do in making place safe.

Evesdroppers. See Eavesdropping.

Evict. In civil law, to recover anything from a person by virtue of the judgment of a court or judicial sentence. See Eviction.

Eviction. Dispossess by process of law; the act of depriving a person of the possession of land or rental property which he has held or leased. Act of turning a tenant out of possession, either by re-entry or legal proceedings, such as an action of ejection. Deprivation of lessee of possession of premises or disturbance of lessee in beneficial enjoyment so as to cause tenant to abandon the premises (the latter being constructive eviction). Estes v. Gatiff, 291 Ky. 93, 163 S.W.2d 273, 276.

See also Actual eviction; Constructive eviction; Ejectment; Forcible entry and detainer; Notice to quit; Partial eviction; Retaliatory eviction; Total eviction.

Evidence. Any species of proof, or probative matter, legally presented at the trial of an issue, by the act of the parties and through the medium of witnesses, records, documents, exhibits, concrete objects, etc., for the purpose of inducing belief in the minds of the court or jury as to their contention. Taylor v. Howard, 111 R.I. 527, 304 A.2d 891, 893.

Testimony, writings, material objects, or other things presented to the senses that are offered to prove the existence or nonexistence of a fact. Calif. Evid.Code.

All the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. Any matter of fact, the effect, tendency, or design of which is to produce in the mind a persuasion of the existence or nonexistence of some matter of fact. That which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or on the other. That which tends to produce conviction in the mind as to existence of a fact. The means sanctioned by law of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question of fact.

As a part of procedure "evidence" signifies those rules of law whereby it is determined what testimony should be admitted and what should be rejected in each case, and what is the weight to be given to the testimony admitted. See Evidence rules.

For Presumption as evidence, see Presumption; Proof and evidence distinguished, see Proof; Testimony as synonymous or distinguishable, see Testimony; View as evidence, see View.

See also Admissible evidence; Alimund; Autoptic evidence; Best evidence; Beyond a reasonable doubt; Circumstantial evidence; Competent evidence; Conclusive evidence; Conflicting evidence; Corroborating evidence; Cumulative evidence; Demonstrative evidence; Derivative evidence; Direct evidence; Documentary evidence; Exculpatory evidence; Extraneous evidence; Extrinsic evidence; Fabricated evidence; Fact; Fair preponderance of evidence; Hearsay; Illegally obtained evidence; Immaterial evidence; Incompetent evidence; Incriminating evidence; Indefensible evidence; Inexplicable evidence; Independent source rule; Indirect evidence; Indispensable evidence; Inference; Laying foundation; Legal evidence; Legally sufficient evidence; Limited admissibility; Material evidence; Mathematical evidence; Moral evidence; Narrative evidence; Newly-discovered evidence; Offer of proof; Opinion evidence; Oral evidence; Original document rule; Parol evidence rule; Partial evidence; Past recollection recorded; Perpetuating testimony; Physical fact rule; Positive evidence; Preliminary evidence; Preponderance; Presumption; Presumptive evidence; Prima facie evidence; Primary evidence; Prior inconsistent statements; Privileged evidence; Probable evidence; Probative evidence; Probative facts; Proof; Proper evidence; Real evidence; Reasonable inference rule; Rebuttal evidence; Relevant evidence; Satisfactory evidence; Scintilla of evidence; Secondary evidence; Second-hand evidence; State's evidence; Substantial evidence; Substantive evidence; Substitutionary evidence; Sufficiency of evidence; Traditional evidence; View; Weight of evidence; Withholding of evidence.

There are, generally speaking, two types of evidence from which a jury may properly find the truth as to the facts of a case. One is direct evidence—such as the testimony of an eyewitness. The other is indirect or circumstantial evidence—the proof of a chain of circumstances pointing to the existence or non-existence of certain facts. As a general rule, the law makes no distinction between direct and circumstantial evidence, but simply requires that the jury find the facts in accordance with the preponderance of all the evidence in the case, both direct and circumstantial.

Autoptic evidence. Type of evidence presented in court which consists of the thing itself and not the testimony accompanying its presentation. Articles offered in evidence which the judge or jury can see and inspect. Real evidence as contrasted with testimonial evidence; e.g. in contract action, the document purporting to be the contract itself, or the gun in a murder trial.

Character evidence. Evidence of a person's character or traits is admissible under certain conditions in a trial, though, as a general rule, evidence of character traits are not competent to prove that a person acted in conformity therewith on a particular occasion. Fed.Evid.R. 404.

Curative admissibility. See Curative.

Exculpatory evidence. A defendant in a criminal case is entitled to evidence in possession or control of the government if such evidence tends to indicate his innocence or tends to mitigate his criminality if he demands it and if the failure to disclose it results in a denial of a fair trial. U. S. v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 96 S.Ct. 2392, 49 L.Ed.2d 342. Disclosure of evidence by the government is governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

Expert evidence. Testimony given in relation to some scientific, technical, or professional matter by experts, i.e., persons qualified to speak authoritative by reason of their special training, skill, or familiarity with the subject. See also Expert witness.

Identification evidence. See Exemplars.

Illegally obtained evidence. See Exclusionary rule; Miranda Rule; Mapp v. Ohio; McNab-Mallory Rule; Motion to suppress; Poisonous tree doctrine.

Inculpatory evidence. Evidence tending to show a person's involvement in a crime; incriminating evidence.

Irrelevant evidence. Evidence is irrelevant if it is not so related to the issues to be tried and if it has no logical tendency to prove the issues. See also Relevant evidence, infra.

Material evidence. See Relevant evidence, infra.

Oral evidence. See Testimony.

Original evidence. See Original; Original document rule.

Preponderance of the evidence. A standard of proof (used in many civil suits) which is met when a party's evidence on a fact indicates that it is "more likely than not" that the fact is as the party alleges it to be. See Fair preponderance of evidence.

Proffered evidence. Evidence, the admissibility or inadmissibility of which is dependent upon the existence or nonexistence of a preliminary fact. Calif. Evid.Code.

Relevant evidence. Evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Fed.Evid.R. 401. Evidence, including evidence relevant to the credibility of a witness or hearsay declarant, having any tendency in reason to prove or disprove any disputed fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action. Calif.Evid.Code. Evidence which bears a logical relationship to the issues in a trial or case.

Tangible evidence. Physical evidence; evidence that can be seen or touched, e.g., documents, weapons. Testimonial evidence is evidence which can be heard, e.g., the statements made by anyone sitting in the witness box. See Demonstrative evidence.

Evidence by inspection. Such evidence as is addressed directly to the senses without intervention of testimony. Tangible; physical evidence. See Demonstrative evidence.

Evidence codes. Statutory provisions governing admissibility of evidence and burden of proof at hearings and trials. See also Evidence rules, infra.

Evidence completed. Exists where both sides have offered testimony and rested, or where plaintiff has rested and defendant has made motion for finding on plaintiff's case and stands on motion and declines to offer evidence. Merriam v. Sugrue, D.C.Mun.App., 41 A.2d 166, 167.

Evidence, law of. The aggregate of rules and principles regulating the burden of proof, admissibility, relevancy, and weight and sufficiency of evidence in legal proceedings. See Evidence codes; Evidence rules.

Evidence of debt. A term applied to written instruments or securities for the payment of money, importing on their face the existence of a debt. See Bonds.

Evidence of insurability satisfactory to company. Evidence which would satisfy a reasonable person experienced in the life insurance business that insured was in an insurable condition. Bowie v. Bankers Life Co., C.C.A.Colo., 105 F.2d 806, 808.

Evidence of title. A deed or other document establishing the title to property, especially real estate.

Evidence reasonably tending to support verdict. Means evidence that is competent, relevant, and material, and which to rational and impartial mind naturally leads, or involuntarily tends to lead, to conclusion for which there is valid, just, and substantial reason. Kelly v. Oliver Farm Equipment Sales Co., 169 Okl. 269, 36 P.2d 888, 891.
EVIDENCE RULES

Means some legal evidence tending to prove every material fact in issue as to which the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered had the burden of proof. Nicolai-Neppach Co. v. Smith, 154 Or. 450, 58
P.2d 1016, 1024.

Evidence rules. Rules which govern the admissibility of evidence at hearings and trials, e.g. Federal Rules of Evidence; Uniform Rules of Evidence; Maine Rules of Evidence. In certain states evidence rules are codified (e.g. California Evidence Code) or otherwise set forth in statutes (e.g. state statutes commonly regulate admissibility of confidential communications).

Evidence to support findings. Substantial evidence or such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion and each to justify, if the trial were to a jury, a refusal to direct a verdict when the conclusion sought to be drawn from it is one of fact for jury. Jordan v.
Craighead, 114 Mont. 337, 136 P.2d 526, 528.

Evident. Clear to the understanding and satisfactory to the judgment; manifest; plain; obvious; conclusive.
Noticeable; apparent to observation.

Proof evident. See Proof.

Evidentiary /'eva dentsh(3)'ri/. L. Evidence.

Evidentiary /'eva dentsh(3)'ri// 'charly// 'iyery/. Having the quality of evidence; constituting evidence; evidencing. A term introduced by Bentham, and, from its convenience, adopted by other writers.

Evidentiary fact. Those facts which are necessary for determination of the ultimate facts; they are the premises upon which conclusions of ultimate facts are based. Womack v. Industrial Comm., 168 Colo.
364, 451 P.2d 761, 764. Facts which furnish evidence of existence of some other fact.

Evidentiary harpoon. Exists where prosecution through its witnesses successfully places before jury improper evidence, such as previous arrests and convictions of defendant, in situations where such evidence would not be admissible. Kramer v. State, 258
Ind. 257, 317 N.E.2d 203, 207.

Evidently. Means in an evident manner; perceptibly, clearly, obviously, plainly. It is employed to express the idea of full-proof conviction. Tennes v. Tennes, 320 Ill.App. 19, 50 N.E.2d 132, 139.

Evocation. In French law, the withdrawal of a cause from the cognizance of an inferior court, and bringing it before another court or judge. In some respects this process resembles the proceedings upon certiorari.

Evolution statute. Legislative enactment which forbids teaching of evolution in schools and which has been held unconstitutional as violative of the Establishment Clause of First Amend., U.S.Const. Epperson
v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97, 89 S.Ct. 266, 21 L.Ed.2d 228.

Ewage /'yuwa}/. (L. Fr. Ewe, water.) In old English law, toll paid for water passage. The same as aquage or aquatorium.

Ewbrce /'yuwbriy/. Adultery; spouse-breach; mar­riage-breach.

Ewry /'yuwr(3)'ri/. An office in the royal household where the table linen, etc., is taken care of.

Ex /'eks/ L. a latin preposition meaning from, out of, by,
on, on account of, or according to.

A prefix, denoting removal, cessation or former.
Prefixed to the name of an office, relation, status, etc., it denotes that the person spoken of once occupied that office or position, but does so no longer, or that he is now out of it. Thus, ex-mayor, ex-partner, ex-judge.

A prefix which is equivalent to "without," "reserving," or "excepting." In this use, probably an abbreviation of "except." Thus, ex-interest, ex-coupons, ex-dividend.

Also used as an abbreviation for "exhibit."

Ex abundant /'eks abandontay/. Out of abundance; abundantly; superfluously; more than sufficient.

Ex abundant cautela /'eks abandontay kotiyla/. Lat.
Out of abundant caution.

Exaction. The wrongful act of an officer or other person in compelling payment of a fee or reward for his services, under color of his official authority, where no payment is due. See also Extortion.

Exactor. In the civil law, a gatherer or receiver of money; a collector of taxes. In old English law, a collector of the public moneys; a tax gatherer. Thus, exactor regis was the name of the king's tax collector, who took up the taxes and other debts due the treasury.

Ex adverso /'eks advarsow/. On the other side.
Applied to opposing counsel.

Ex equitate /'eks eykwateydiy/. According to equity;
in equity.

Ex equo et bono /'eks eykwow et bownow/. A phrase derived from the civil law, meaning, in justice and fairness; according to what is just and good; according to equity and conscience. 3 Bl.Comm. 163.

Ex altera parte /'eks oltara pardiy/. Of the other part.

Examen /'agzeyman/. L. Lat. A trial. Examen com­ ti, the balance of an account.

Examination. An investigation; search; inspection; interrigation.

Abstract of title. An investigation of the abstract of title made by or for a person who intends to purchase real estate, to ascertain the history and present condition of the title to such land, and its status with reference to liens, incumbrances, clouds, etc., to determine if marketable title exists.

Bankruptcy. Questioning of bankrupt during course of bankruptcy proceedings (first meeting of creditors) concerning extent of his debts and assets, conduct of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind, and whereabouts of his property, and all mat­ters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate. Bankruptcy Act, § 343.
Criminal procedure. An investigation by a magistrate of a person who has been charged with crime and arrested, or of the facts and circumstances which are alleged to have attended the crime, in order to ascertain whether there is sufficient ground to hold him to bail for his trial by the proper court. The preliminary hearing to determine whether person charged with having committed a crime should be held for trial. See Court of Inquiry; Examining court; Examining trial; Preliminary hearing.

Discovery. See Deposition; Discovery; Interrogatories.

Invention. An inquiry made at the patent-office, upon application for a patent, into the novelty and utility of the alleged invention, and as to its interfering with any other patented invention. 35 U.S.C.A. § 36.

Witnesses. The examination of a witness consists of the series of questions put to him by a party to the action, or his counsel, for the purpose of bringing before the court and jury in legal form the knowledge which the witness has of the facts and matters in dispute, or of probing and sifting his evidence previously given.

See also Cross-examination; Direct examination; Leading question; Preliminary hearing; Re-cross examination; Redirect examination; Reexamination; Separate examination. As regards examination of witnesses prior to trial, see Deposition; Interrogatories. As regards compulsory examination, see Subpoena.

Examined copy. A copy of a record, public book, or register, and which has been compared with the original.

Examiner. Officer or other person authorized to conduct an examination (e.g. bank examiner) or appointed by court to take testimony of witnesses.

An officer appointed by the court to take testimony in cases pending in that court; e.g. a master, auditor, referee.

An officer in the patent-office charged with the duty of examining the patentability of inventions for which patents are asked.

See also Auditor; Inspector; Master; Referee.

Examiners, bar. Persons appointed to test law graduates to ascertain their qualifications to practice law. Such test is called “bar examination.”

Examining board. Generally, a board composed of public or quasi public officials who are responsible for conducting tests and examinations for those applying for licenses.

Examining court. A lower court which conducts preliminary examinations to determine probable cause and set bail before a criminal defendant is bound over to the grand jury. See Court of Inquiry; Preliminary hearing.

Examining trial. A preliminary hearing to determine whether there exists probable cause for binding one over to the grand jury. See also Preliminary hearing.
Exceptio

An exception, plea, or objection. In civil law, a plea by which the defendant admits the cause of action, but alleges new facts which, provided they be true, totally or partially answer the allegations put forward on the other side; thus distinguished from a mere traverse of the plaintiff's averments. In this use, the term corresponds to the common-law plea in confession and avoidance. Such answers to the "defense" or "plea" of the common law. An allegation and defense of a defendant by which the plaintiff's claim or complaint is defeated, either according to strict law or upon grounds of equity. In a stricter sense, the exclusion of an action that lay in strict law, on grounds of equity (actionis jure stricto competentis ob sequitatem exclusionis). A kind of limitation of an action, by which it was shown that the action, though otherwise just, did not lie in the particular case. A species of defense allowed in cases where, though the action as brought by the plaintiff was in itself just, yet it was unjust as against the particular party sued.

Exceptio dilatoria

A dilatory exception; called also "temporalis" (temporary); one which defeated the action for a time (que ad tempus nocet), and created delay (et temporis dilatationem tribuit); such as an agreement not to sue within a certain time, as five years.

Exceptio dolis mali

An exception or plea of fraud.

Exceptio dominii

A claim of ownership set up in an action for the recovery of property not in the possession of the plaintiff.

Exceptio dotis caute non numerate

A defense to an action for the restitution of a dowry that was never paid, though promised, available upon the dissolution of the marriage within a limited time.

Exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissoluto nulla est

A plea denying a fact is the last of all.

Exceptio falsi omnium ultima

A plea denying the dissolution of which is sought [by the action] is null [or of no effect].

Exceptio falsi omnium ultima

A plea denying the dissolution of which is sought [by the action] is null [or of no effect].

Exceptio firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis

An exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted.

Exceptio firmat regulam in contrarium

An exception proves an opposite rule. See Exceptio probat regulam.

Exceptio in factum

An exception on the fact. An exception or plea founded on the peculiar circumstances of the case.

Exceptio in personam

A plea or defense of a personal nature, which may be alleged only by the person himself to whom it is granted by the law.

Exceptio in rem

A plea or defense not of a personal nature, but connected with the legal circumstances on which the suit is founded, and which may therefore be alleged by any party in interest, including the heirs and sureties of the proper or original debtor.

Exceptio jurisjurandi

An exception of oath; an exception or plea that the matter had been sworn to. This kind of exception was allowed where a debtor, at the instance of his creditor (creditoire defere), had sworn that nothing was due the latter, and had notwithstanding been sued by him.

Exceptio metus

An exception or plea of fear or compulsion. Answering to the modern plea of duress.

Exception

Act of excepting or excluding from a number designated or from a description; that which is excepted or separated from others in a general rule or description; a person, thing, or case specified as distinct or not included; an act of excepting, omitting from mention or leaving out of consideration. Express exclusion of something from operation of contract or deed. An "exception" operates to take something out of thing granted which would otherwise pass or be included. Christman v. Emineth, N.D., 212 N.W. 543, 552.

Object to order or ruling of trial court. A formal objection to the action of the court, during the trial of a cause, in refusing a request or overruling an objection; implying that the party excepting does not acquiesce in the decision of the court, but will seek to procure its reversal, and that he means to save the benefit of his request or objection in some future proceeding. Under rules practice in the federal and most state courts, the need for claiming an exception to evidence or to a ruling to preserve appellate rights has been eliminated in favor of an objection. Fed.R.Civ.P. 46.

See also Challenge; Dilatory exceptions; General exception; Objection; Peremptory exceptions; Special exception.

Bill of exceptions. See Bill.

Deed. An exception withdraws from operation of deed part of thing granted which would otherwise pass to grantee.

Insurance policy. An exclusion of one or more risks. Kirkby v. Federal Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mich., 35 F.2d 126, 128. The object of an exception is to exclude that which otherwise would be included, to take special cases out of a general class, or to guard against misinterpretation.

"Reservation" and "proviso" compared. A "reservation" creates some new right in grantor while an "exception" withholds from grant title to some part of property which would otherwise pass. Clark v. Pauley, 291 Ky. 637, 165 S.W.2d 161, 162. A reservation does not affect the description of the property conveyed, but retains to the grantor some right upon the property, as an easement, whereas an exception operates upon the description and withdraws from the description the excepted property. Moore v. Davis, 273 Ky. 838, 117 S.W.2d 1033, 1035. A "reservation" is always of something taken back out of that which is clearly granted, while an "exception" is of some part of the estate not granted at all. Lewis v. Standard Oil Co. of California, C.C.A. Cal., 88 F.2d 512, 514. An exception excepts, absolutely, from the operation of an engagement or an enactment; a proviso, properly speaking, defeats their operation, conditionally. An exception takes out of an engagement or enactment something which would otherwise be part of the subject-matter of it; a proviso avoids them by way of defeasance or excuse. Reservation reserves to grantor some new interest out of thing granted, while exception excludes from operation some existing part of estate. Petty v. Griffith, Mo., 165 S.W.2d 412, 414; U. S. v. 1,010.8 Acres, More or Less, Situate in Sussex County, Del., D.C. Del., 56 F.Supp. 120, 128.

It has also been held however that a "proviso" and an "exception" are substantially the same thing, and that the terms are frequently used interchangeably for synonymous terms. Victory Oil Co. v. Hancock Oil Co., 270 P.2d 604, 611. Compare also Variance.

Statutory laws. An exception in a statute is a clause designed to reserve or exempt some individuals from the general class of persons or things to which the language of the act in general attaches. The office of an "exception" in a statute is to except something from the operative effect of a statute or to qualify or restrain the generality of the substantive enactment to which it is attached, and it is not necessarily limited to the section of the statute immediately following or preceding. Gatilff Coal Co. v. Cox, C.C.A. Ky., 142 F.2d 876, 882. Two statutes relating to same subject must be read together, and provisions of one having special application to particular subject will be deemed an "exception" to other statute general in its terms. Eagleton v. Murphy, 348 Mo. 949, 156 S.W.2d 683, 685. See Grandfather clause.

Exceptional circumstances. Conditions which are out of the ordinary course of events; unusual or extraordinary circumstances. Lack of original jurisdiction to hear and determine a case constitutes "exceptional circumstances" as basis for raising question for the first time on habeas corpus. Wesley v. Schneckloth, 55 Wash.2d 90, 346 P.2d 658, 660.

 Exceptio non adimpleti contractus /akséisp(ɪ)yəw nən ədəməpliday kəntərɛktəs/. An exception in an action founded on a contract involving mutual duties or obligations, to the effect that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue because he has not performed his own part of the agreement.

Exception non solute pecunie /akséisp(ɪ)yəw nən sa(ɪ)yəwdi ɔjɪkɪyúniwiəy/. A plea that the debt in suit was not discharged by payment (as alleged by the adverse party) notwithstanding an acquittance or receipt given by the person to whom the payment is stated to have been made.

Exception nulla est versus actionem quæ exceptionem perimit /akséisp(ɪ)yəw nəla ɛst ʋərəs ækʃiŋiˈʃiʌnəm kwɪli ækséispɪˈʃiʌnɪˈpiːɾəmat/. There is [can be] no plea against an action which destroys [the matter of] the plea.

Exceptio pacti conventi /akséisp(ɪ)yəw pɛktaɪ kənˈvɛntəɪ/. An exception of compact; an exception or plea that the plaintiff had agreed not to sue.

Exceptio pecunie non numerate /akséisp(ɪ)yəw pokɪˈjuːnɪwiən ən nəməriˈteɪt/. An exception of pecuniary; an exception or plea that the plaintiff had agreed not to sue.

Exceptio peremptoria /akséisp(ɪ)yəw pəˈrɛmptrəɪə/. A peremptory exception; called also "perpetua," (perpetual); one which forever destroyed the subject-matter or ground of the action (que semper rem de qua agitur perimit); such as the exceptio doli mali, the exceptio metus, etc.

Exceptio plurium concubentium /akséisp(ɪ)yəw pəˈriːʌm ˈkɔnkəbəntjəm/. The plea or defense of several lovers (i.e. multiple access) in paternity actions. Yarmark v. Strickland, Fla.App., 193 So.2d 212.

Exceptio probat regulam /akséisp(ɪ)yəw prəˈboʊt rəˈɡləm/. The exception proves the rule. Sometimes quoted with the addition "de rebus non exceptis" ("so far as concerns the matters not excepted").

Exceptio quæ firmat legem, exponit legem /akséisp(ɪ)yəw kwæ fɜrmət liˈjɛm, əkˈspɔnət liˈjɛm/. An exception which confirms the law and explains the law.

Exceptio quoque regulam declarat /akséisp(ɪ)yəw kwəʊkwəkwɪˈriɡələm dəkəˈræt/. The exception also declares the rule.

Exceptio rei judicata /akséisp(ɪ)yəw riˈjʊdɪkəˈtə/. An exception or plea of matter adjudged; a plea that the subject-matter of the action had been determined in a previous action.

Exceptio rei vendite et tradite /akséisp(ɪ)yəw riˈvɛndɪtə ɛt ˈtɹædɪtə/. An exception or plea of sale and delivery of the thing. This exception presumes that there was a valid sale and a proper tradition; but though, in consequence of the rule that no one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself has, no property was transferred, yet because of some particular circumstance the real owner is estopped from contesting it.

Exceptio semper ultimo ponenda est /akséisp(ɪ)yəw sɛmpər əltəməʊ ˈpənəndə əst/. An exception should always be put last.

Exceptio senatusconsulti macedoniani /akséisp(ɪ)yəw sənəˈdɔsksənsɨltə ˈmeɪsdəʊnɨˈjɛnəj/. A defense to an action for the recovery of money loaned, on the ground that the loan was made to a minor or person under the paternal power of another; so named from the decree of the senate which forbade the recovery of such loans.

Exceptio senatusconsulti vellediani /akséisp(ɪ)yəw sənəˈdɔsksənsɨltə ˈvɛlədɪənəj/. A defense to an action on a contract of suretyship, on the ground that the surety was a woman and therefore incapable of becoming bound for another; so named from the decree of the senate forbidding it.
EXCEPTIO TEMPORIS

Exceptio temporis /eksépshiyəw tɛmpərəs/. An exception or plea analogous to that of the statute of limitations in our law, viz., that the time prescribed by law for bringing such actions has expired.

Exceptis excipiendis /akséptas aksipiyəndəs/. Lat. With all necessary exceptions.

Exceptor. In old English law, a party who entered an exception or plea.

Except right of way. Recitals “less the right of way” and “except right of way” in granting clause of deed have well-defined accepted certain and unambiguous meaning by which grantor conveys entire interest in servient estate and at same time expressly recognizes and acknowledges dominant estate. Jennings v. Am. erada Petroleum Corporation, 179 Okl. 561, 66 P.2d 1069, 1071.

Excerpta /aksёрpta/ or excerpts /êksærptəs/. Extracts.

Ex certa scientia /êksə sɜrdə sayénsəh(i)yə/. Of certain or sure knowledge. These words were anciently used in patents, and imported full knowledge of the subject-matter on the part of the king.

Excess. Act or amount which goes beyond that which is usual, proper, or necessary. Degree or amount by which one thing or number exceeds another. See also Excessive.

Excess condemnation. Taking more property under condemnation than is actually needed. See Condemnation.

Excess insurance. That amount of insurance coverage which is beyond the dollar amount of coverage of one carrier but which is required to pay a particular loss as distinguished from “other insurance” which may be used to pay or contribute to the loss. See also Excess policy.

Excess jurisdiction. Such exists where a court, having jurisdiction of persons and subject matter of the case before it, exceeds its power in trial of such case by dealing with matters about which it is without power of authority to act; and error in court’s ruling is not synonymous with ruling in excess of jurisdiction. Robrock v. Robrock, 105 Ohio App. 25, 151 N.E.2d 234, 239.

Excessive. Greater than what is usual or proper. A general term for what goes beyond just measure or amount. Austin St. Ry. Co. v. Oldham, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 235, 237. Tending to or marked by excess, which is the quality or state of exceeding the proper or reasonable limit or measure.

Excessive ball. The 8th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution prohibits excessive bail. Bail in a sum more than will be reasonably sufficient to prevent evasion of the law by flight or concealment; bail which is per se unreasonably great and clearly disproportionate to the offense involved, or shown to be so by the special circumstances of the particular case. Blunt v. U. S., 322 A.2d 579. See also Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 3146.

Excessive damages. See Damages.

Excessive drunkenness. Drunkenness is excessive where a party is so far deprived of his reason and understanding as to render him incapable of understanding character and consequences of his act. See Drunkling while intoxicated.

Excessive fine or penalty. The 8th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution prohibits excessive fines. A state may not constitutionally imprison a person for inability to pay a fine if he would not have been imprisoned on a showing of ability to pay the fine and on payment of the fine. Tate v. Short, 401 U.S. 395, 91 S.Ct. 668, 28 L.Ed.2d 130. Any fine or penalty which seriously impairs the capacity of gaining a business livelihood. See Corporal punishment; Excessive punishment; Punishment.

Excessive force. That amount of force which is beyond the need and circumstances of the particular event or which is not justified in the light of all the circumstances as in the case of deadly force to protect property as contrasted with protecting life. See Self defense.

Excessively. To excess.

Excessively intoxicated. Exists where one is so intoxicated as to be so far deprived of his reason and understanding as to render him incapable of knowing the character and consequences of his act. See Driving while intoxicated.

Excessive punishment. Any sentence or fine which does not commensurate with the gravity of the offense or the criminal record of the defendant. Excessive length of a sentence may be cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of the prohibition in the 8th Amendment, U.S. Constitution. Weems v. U. S., 217 U.S. 349, 30 S.Ct. 544, 54 L.Ed. 793. See Corporal punishment; Excessive fine or penalty; Punishment.

Excessive speed. Automobile’s speed is “excessive” whenever it places car beyond driver’s control.

Excessive verdict. A verdict which is result of passion or prejudice. Babb v. Murray, 26 Cal.App.2d 153, 79 P.2d 159, 160. The test of whether a verdict is “excessive” is whether the amount thereof is such as to shock the conscience of the court. Scheidegger v. Thompson, Mo.App., 174 S.W.2d 216, 222. See Remittitur.

Excessivum in jure reprobatur. Excessus in re quallbet jure reprobatur communi /êksesayvam in juriy rşprəbədəyərd. eksəsəs in riy kwələblət juriy rşprəbədəyər kamɨwɨwɨy/. Excess in law is reprehended. Excess in anything is reprehended at common law.
Excess of jurisdiction. A case in which court has initially proceeded properly within its jurisdiction but steps out of jurisdiction in making of some order or in the doing of some judicial act. Olson v. District Court of Salt Lake County, 93 Utah 145, 71 P.2d 529, 534. Acts which exceed defined power of court in any instance. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, Third Dist., 17 Cal.2d 280, 109 P.2d 942, 948. A departure by a court from those recognized and established requirements of law, however close apparent adherence to mere form in method of procedure, which has the effect of depriving one of a constitutional right, is an “excess of jurisdiction.” Wuest v. Wuest, 53 Cal.App.2d 339, 127 P.2d 934, 937.

Excess or surplus water. Water which is flowing in stream in addition to what may be termed adjudicated waters. Any water not needed for reasonable beneficial uses of those having prior rights is “excess or surplus water”. City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 207 P.2d 17, 28.

Excess policy. One that provides that the insurer is liable only for the excess above and beyond that which may be collected on other insurance. Brownsville Fabrics, Inc. v. Gulf Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 550 S.W.2d 332, 337.

Excess profits tax. Tax levied on profits which are beyond the normal profits of a business and generally imposed in times of national emergency such as war to discourage profiteering. The Internal Revenue Code also imposes a tax on corporations which accumulate an unreasonable surplus of profits rather than paying such out as dividends. I.R.C. § 531 et seq. See Accumulated earnings tax.

Commerce or trade in goods, currency, or commercial paper.

Any organization, association, or group of persons, incorporated or not, which constitutes, maintains, or provides a market place or facilities for bringing together purchasers and sellers of securities, and includes the market place and facilities maintained by such an exchange. A major stock and bond exchange is the New York Stock Exchange. Similar exchanges exist for the trading of commodities, e.g. New York Commodities Exchange; Minneapolis Grain Exchange; Chicago Board of Trade. Trading in securities is controlled by the Securities and Exchange Commission; trading in commodities by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

For Arbitration of exchange; Dry exchange; First of exchange, and Owelty of exchange, see those titles. For “Bill of exchange,” see Bill. See also Barter.

Commercial law. A negotiation by which one person transfers to another funds which he has in a certain place, either at a price agreed upon or which is fixed by commercial usage. The process of settling accounts or debts between parties residing at a distance from each other, without the intervention of money, by exchanging orders or drafts, called bills of exchange. The payment of debts in different places by an exchange or transfer of credits. The profit which arises from a maritime loan, when such profit is a percentage on the money lent, considering it in the light of money lent in one place to be returned in another, with a difference in amount in the sum borrowed and that paid, arising from the difference of time and place.

Conveyancing. A mutual grant of equal interests (in lands or tenements), the one in consideration of the other.

Like kind exchange. See Like-kind exchange.

Nontaxable exchange. Exists where property is transferred to a corporation in exchange for stock or securities in corporation and where transferors immediately after exchange are in control of corporation through ownership of 80 per cent of all other classes of stock of corporation. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Cement Investors, C.C.A.Colo., 122 F.2d 380, 383.

Exchange broker. One who negotiates bills of exchange drawn on foreign countries or on other places in the same country. One who makes and concludes bargains for others in matters of money or merchandise.

Exchange offer. In a bilateral contract, such constitutes part of the consideration for the ultimate contract when such offer is accepted.
Exchange rate. The value of one country's money in terms of the value of another country's currency (e.g., dollar vs. pound). See also Foreign exchange rate; Rate (Rate of exchange).

Exchequer /éksɛʃər/. That department of the English government which has charge of the collection of the national revenue; the treasury department.

It is said to have been so named from the chequered cloth, resembling a chess-board, which anciently covered the table there, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. 3 Bl. Comm. 44.

For "Court of Exchequer" and "Court of Exchequer Chamber," see those titles.

Exchequer bills. Bills of credit issued in England by authority of parliament.

Instruments issued at the exchequer, under the authority, for the most part, of acts of parliament passed for the purpose, and containing an engagement on the part of the government for repayment of the principal sums advanced with interest.

Exchequer division. A division of the English high court of justice, to which the special business of the court of exchequer was specially assigned by section 34 of the judicature act of 1873. Merged in the queen's bench division from and after 1881, by order in council under section 31 of that act.

Excise. A tax imposed on the performance of an act, the engaging in an occupation, or the enjoyment of a privilege. Rapa v. Haines, Ohio Com.Pl., 101 N.E.2d 733, 735. Tax laid on manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities or upon licenses to pursue certain occupations or upon corporate privileges. In current usage the term has been extended to include various license fees and practically every internal revenue tax except the income tax.

Excise tax. See Excise.

Excited utterance. In evidence, a statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition. It is an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed.Evid. Rule 803(2); State v. Emery, 4 Or. App. 527, 480 P.2d 445, 447. See also Fresh complaint rule; Spontaneous declarations.

Exclusa /ɛkskluːwə/. In old English law, a sluice to carry off water; the payment to the lord for the benefit of such a sluice.

Exclusion. Denial of entry or admittance.

Evidence. The action by the trial judge in which he excludes from consideration by the trier of fact whatever he rules is not admissible as evidence. See also Exclusionary Rule.

Gift tax. The amount which a donor may transfer by gift each year without tax consequences. I.R.C. § 2503(b).

Insurance. In insurance policy, "exclusion" is provision which eliminates coverage where were it not for exclusion, coverage would have existed. Kansas-Nebraska Natural Gas Co., Inc. v. Hawkeye-Security Ins. Co., 195 Neb. 658, 240 N.W.2d 28, 31. Provision in policy specifying the situations, occurrences or persons not covered by the policy.

Witness. A trial judge may, under certain circumstances, sequester witnesses and require that they be kept apart from other witnesses until they are called to testify.

Exclusionary Rule. This rule commands that where evidence has been obtained in violation of the privileges guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution, the evidence must be excluded at the trial. Evidence which is obtained by an unreasonable search and seizure is excluded from evidence under the Fourth Amendment, U.S. Constitution and this rule is applicable to the States. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081. See also Counsel, right to; illegally obtained evidence; Independent source rule. Miranda Rule; Motion to suppress; Suppression of evidence; Suppression hearing.

Exclusionary zoning. Any form of zoning ordinance which tends to exclude specific classes of persons or businesses from a particular district or area.

Exclusive. Appertaining to the subject alone, not including, admitting, or pertaining to any others. Sole. Shutting out; debarring from interference or participation; vested in one person alone.

Exclusive agency. Grant to agent of exclusive right to sell within a particular market or area. A contract to give an "exclusive agency" to deal with property is ordinarily interpreted as precluding competition in the principal generally, but only as precluding him from appointing another agent to accomplish the result. Navy Gas & Supply Co. v. Schoeck, 105 Colo. 374, 98 P.2d 860, 861, 863. The grant of an "exclusive agency to sell," that is, the exclusive right to sell the products of a wholesaler in a specified territory, ordinarily is interpreted as precluding competition in any form within designated areas. Navy Gas & Supply Co. v. Schoeck, 105 Colo. 374, 98 P.2d 860, 861.

Exclusive agency listing. Agreement between a property owner and a real estate broker whereby the owner promises to pay a fee or commission to broker if his real property is sold during the listing period, regardless of whether the broker is responsible for the sale. Carlson v. Zane, 261 Cal.App.2d 399, 67 Cal.Rptr. 747, 749. See also Exclusive right (Exclusive right to sell); Listing.

Exclusive agent. An agent who has exclusive right to sell within a particular market or area. See also Exclusive agency.

Exclusive contract. A contract by which one binds himself to sell to or buy from only one person for his total requirements. See Entire output contract; Exclusive dealing arrangements.

Exclusive control. The "exclusive control" of thing causing accident, applies to right of control of instrumentality causing injury. Gerhart v. Southern California Gas Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 425, 132 P.2d 874, 877. Under the rule "of exclusive control", where a thing is shown to be under management of defendant or his servants, and accident is such as in ordinary course does not happen if those having management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence in absence of explanation that the accident arose from want of care. Mack v. Reading Co., 377 Pa. 135, 103 A.2d 749, 751.

Exclusive dealing arrangements. At common law, generally, agreements to deal exclusively with one seller or buyer were upheld, but under the Sherman Act as well as the Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts, such agreements are usually illegal.

Exclusive franchise. See Exclusive agency.

Exclusive jurisdiction. That power which a court or other tribunal exercises over an action or over a person to the exclusion of all other courts. That forum in which an action must be commenced because no other forum has the jurisdiction to hear and determine the action. For example, by statute, actions brought under the Securities Exchange Act must be brought in federal district court.

Exclusive and concurrent jurisdiction. The federal courts have original and exclusive jurisdiction over certain actions (e.g. controversies between two or more states) and concurrent jurisdiction with that of state courts in others (e.g. actions between citizens of different states).

Exclusive license. Exclusive right granted by patent holder to licensee to use, manufacture, and sell patented article. Permission to do thing and contract not to give leave to any one else to do same thing. Overman Cushion Tire Co. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 59 F.2d 998, 999. A license which binds licensor not to enlarge thereafter the scope of other licenses already granted, or increase the number of licenses, is an "exclusive license". Mechanical Ice Tray Corporation v. General Motors Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 144 F.2d 720, 725. See also Exclusive agency; License.

Exclusive listing. See Exclusive agency listing.

Exclusively. Apart from all others; only; solely; substantially all or for the greater part. To the exclusion of all others; without admission of others to participation; in a manner to exclude. Standard Oil Co. of Texas v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 519, 521, 522, 523.

Exclusively used. The phrase in provision exempting from taxation properties exclusively used for religious worship, for schools or for purposes purely charitable, has reference to primary and inherent as over against a mere secondary and incidental use. Salvation Army v. Hoehn, Mo., 354 Mo. 107, 188 S.W.2d 826, 830.

Exclusive ownership. Ownership free from any kind of legal or equitable interest in any one else. See Fee simple.

Exclusive possession. Exclusive possession by adverse possessor means that adverse possessor must show an exclusive dominion over the land and an appropriation of it to his own use and benefit. Vernon's Ann.Civ.St. art. 5510. W. T. Carter & Bro. v. Holmes, 131 Tex. 365, 113 S.W.2d 1225, 1226. Possession may be "exclusive" so as to entitle possessor to title by adverse possession, notwithstanding that the land is subject to exercise of easement by private party. Young v. City of Lubbock, Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 418, 420.

Exclusive right. An exclusive right is one which only the grantee thereof can exercise, and from which all others are prohibited or shut out.

Exclusive right to sell. An "exclusive right to sell" agreement listing real property for sale prohibits the owner from selling his property either by himself or through another broker without liability while the property is listed with the original broker. Foltz v. Begnoche, 222 Kan. 383, 565 P.2d 592, 595. See Exclusive agency listing.

Exclusive use. As used in law authorizing registration of trade-marks, means exclusive use not only of specific mark but also any other confusingly similar mark or term. McKesson & Robbins v. Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co., C.C.A.Conn., 53 F.2d 1011.

Exclusive use, as essential element of acquisition of easement by prescription, means that exercise of right shall not be dependent upon similar right in others, but use may be shared with owner of servient estate. White v. Wheatland Irr. Dist., Wyo., 413 P.2d 252, 260. Exclusive use, for purpose of establishing a right in easement by adverse user, does not mean use to exclusion of use by all others, but exclusive use under claim of right requires only that right claimed by adverse user be not dependent on right of any one else to use way and may be established by common user thereof with owner of servient land and without any subjective claim of right. Feldman v. Knapp, 196 Or. 453, 250 P.2d 92, 102.

Ex colore. By color; under color of; under pretense, show, or protection of. Thus, ex colore officii, under color of office.

Ex comitata. Out of comity or courtesy.

Excommencement. From or out of loan. A term applied in the old law of England to a right of action arising out of a loan (commodatum).

Excommunication. In old English law, a sentence of censure pronounced by one of the spiritual courts for offenses falling under ecclesiastical cognizance. It is described as two-fold: (1) The lesser excommunication, which is an ecclesiastical censure, excluding the party from the sacraments; (2) the greater, which excludes him from the company of all Christians. Formerly, too, an excommunicated man was under various civil disabilities. He could not serve upon juries, or be a witness in any court; neither could he bring an action to recover lands or money due to him. These penalties were abolished in England by St. 53 Geo. III, c. 127.
Excommunicatio capiendo /ěkskamyūwnakýedow kǎ̀p-piyéndow/. In ecclesiastical law, a writ issuing out of chancery, founded on a bishop's certificate that the defendant had been excommunicated, and requiring the sheriff to arrest and imprison him, returnable to the king's bench.

Excommunicatio delibrando /ěkskamyūwnakýedow dālībrāndow/. In old English law, a writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicated person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

Excommunicatio interdictur omnis actus legitimus, ita quod agere non potest, nec aliquem convenire, licet ipse ab aliis possit conveniri /ěkskamyūwnakýedow ļ(251,430),(548,448) /akstas laj̄dmas, āyda kwǒd ǎj̄jirii nǒn pówdst, něk ālakov kǒnvānāyry, lǐs˚d īpˇiy āb ēyilIAS pǒst kǒnvānāyray/. Every legal act is forbidden an excommunicated person, so that he cannot act, nor sue any person, but he may be sued by others.

Excommunicatio recapiendo /ěkskamyūwnakýedow ra-kǎ̀p-piyéndow/. A writ commanding that persons excommunicated, who for their obstinacy had been committed to prison, but were unlawfully set free before they had given caution to obey the authority of the church, should be sought after, retaken, and imprisoned again.

Ex comparatione scriptorum /ěks kōmpərē̄shiyóânyi skriptóram/. By a comparison of writings or handwriting. A term in the law of evidence.

Ex concessio /ěks kǎnˈʃe̅sɔs/. From the premises granted. According to what has been already allowed.

Ex consulto /ěks kǎnˈʃulto/. With consultation or deliberation.

Ex continenti /ěks kǒntiniyěntay/. Immediately; without any interval or delay; incontinently. A term of the civil law.

Ex contractu /ěks kɔntrækt(y)uwoord/. From or out of a contract. In both the civil and the common law, rights and causes of action are divided into two classes,—those arising ex contractu (from a contract), and those arising ex delicto (from a delict or tort). 3 Bl.Comm. 117. Where cause of action arises from breech of a promise set forth in a contract, the action is "ex contractu", but where it arises from a breech of duty growing out of contract, it is "ex delicto". Eads v. Marks, 39 C.2d 807, 249 P.2d 257, 260. See also Ex delicto.

Exculpate /ěkskɑ̀lpeyt/ /e̅kskɑ̀lpeyt/. Term is employed in sense of excuse of justification. State v. Langdon, 46 N.M. 277, 127 P.2d 875, 876.

Exculpatory /ěkskɑ̀lpaˈtɔrii/. Clearing or tending to clear from alleged fault or guilt; excusing. Baird v. State, 246 S.W.2d 192, 195.

Exculpatory clause. Such clause in favor of a trustee in will implies that trustee has power which he purports to execute, and it exculpates him where this power is exercised in good faith. In re Wacht's Estate, Sur., 32 N.Y.S.2d 871, 897.

Exculpatory statement. A statement which tends to justify, excuse or clear the defendant from alleged fault or guilt. State v. Cobb, 2 Ariz.App. 71, 406 P.2d 421, 423.

Ex curia /ěks kɔryinga/. Out of court; away from the court.

Excusable. Admitting of excuse or palliation. As used in the law, this word implies that the act or omission spoken of is on its face unlawful, wrong, or liable to entail loss or disadvantage on the person chargeable, but that the circumstances attending it were such as to constitute a legal "excuse" for it, that is, a legal reason for withholding or forgoing the punishment, liability, or disadvantage which otherwise would follow. See Justification; Legal excuse.

Excusable assault. One committed by accident or misfortune in doing any lawful act by lawful means, with ordinary caution and without any unlawful intent. People v. O'Conner, 82 App.Div. 55, 81 N.Y.S. 555. See e.g. Self defense.

Excusable homicide. See Homicide.

Excusable neglect. In practice, and particularly with reference to the setting aside of a judgment taken against a party through his "excusable neglect," this means a failure to take the proper steps at the proper time, not in consequence of the party's own carelessness, inattention, or willful disregard of the process of the court, but in consequence of some unexpected or unavoidable hindrance or accident, or reliance on the care and vigilance of his counsel or on promises made by the adverse party. As used in rule (e.g. Fed.R.Civ. P. 6(b)) authorizing court to permit an act to be done after expiration of the time within which under the rules such act was required to be done, where failure to act was the result of "excusable neglect", quoted phrase is ordinarily understood to be the act of a reasonably prudent person under the same circumstances. Conlan v. Conlan, Ky., 293 S.W.2d 710, 712.

Excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus quod non operatur Idem in civilibus /ěkskɔ̅yuwɔz̄ ǒt skəstən-yuwat dəliktam iₜ kǎp-pətəyləbas kwǒd nǒn ope̅rəydər āydam iₜ saviləbas/ /ěkskɔ̅yuwɔz̄ jיוו⁹ ǒt skəstən-yuwat dəliktam iₜ kǎp-pətəyləbas kwǒd nǒn ope̅rəydər āydam iₜ saviləbas/. That may excuse or palliate a wrongful act in capital cases which would not have the same effect in civil injuries.

Excusatio /ěkskɔ̅yəz̄e̅sh(y)iorrow/. In the civil law, an excuse or reason which exempts from some duty or obligation.

Excusator /ěkskɔ̅yuwəzyədər/. In English law, an excuser. In old German law, a defendant; he who utterly denies the plaintiff's claim.

Excusatur quis quod clameum non opposuerit, ut sit toto tempore litigii fuit alta mare quacunque occasione /ěkskɔ̅yuwəzyədər kwǒd kwǒd kʎiəmiyam nǒn əpɔz(y)uwerət, ət säy tǒwod t Concept of Excuse in Law exemption from some duty or obligation. That which is offered as a reason for being excused, or a plea offered in extenuation of a fault or irregular deportment. It is that plea or statement made by the accused which arises out of the state of facts constituting and relied on as the cause. See also Defense.

Excuss. To seize and detain by law.

Excussio /ēks dēbōdōw jastfįshiyį/. In civil law, a diligent prosecution of a remedy against a debtor. The exhausting of a remedy against a principal debtor before resorting to his sureties. Translated “discussion” (q.v.).

Ex debito justitiae /ēks dēbītō jįstētʃiyą/. From or as a debt of justice; in accordance with the requirements of justice; of right; as a matter of right. The opposite of ex gratia (q.v.). 3 Bl.Comm. 48, 67.

Ex defunctu sanguinis /ēks daʃ'ekt(y)oʊw sęngwɔnəs/. From failure of blood; for want of issue.

Ex delicto /ēks dēlɪktow/. From a delict, tort, fault, crime, or malfeasance. In both the civil and the common law, obligations and causes of action are divided into two classes—those arising ex contractu (out of a contract), and those ex delicto. The latter are such as grow out of or are founded upon a wrong or tort, e.g., trespass, trover, replevin. See also Ex contractu.

Where cause of action arises from breach of a promise set forth in contract, the action is “ex contractu”, but where it arises from a breach of duty growing out of contract, it is “ex delicto”. Eads v. Marks, 39 Cal.2d 807, 249 P.2d 257, 260.

Ex delicto non ex supplicio emergit infamia /ēks dēlɪktow nɒn ēks spəplɪʃ(y)ow əmɜrd ənfēmɪə/. Infamy arises from the crime, not from the punishment.

Ex delicto trusts. Trusts which are created for illegal purposes, the most common of which are trusts created to prevent creditors of the settlor from collecting their claims out of the property.

Ex demissione /ēks dəˈmɪʃən ə/. Upon the demise. A phrase forming part of the title of the old action of ejectment.

Ex directo /ēks dəˈrɛktə/. Directly; immediately.

Ex duituritate temporis, omnia præsumuntur solemnité ter esse acta /ēks djuːtəˈrɪteː təˈpɔrɪs əmˈniə praɪzəməntər səˈlɛmˌnədər əˈsiː əkta/. From length of time (after lapse of time) all things are presumed to have been done in due form.

Ex dividend. A synonym for “without dividend.” The buyer of a stock selling ex-dividend does not receive the recently declared dividend. Said of a stock at the time when the declared dividend becomes the property of the person who owned the stock on the record date. The payment date follows the ex-dividend date. When stock is sold ex dividend, the seller, not the buyer, has the right to the next dividend which has been declared but not paid.

Ex dolo malo /ēks dəˈloʊ məˈloʊ/. Out of fraud; out of deceitful or tortious conduct. A phrase applied to obligations and causes of action vitiated by fraud or deceit.

Ex dolo malo non ortitur actio /ēks dəˈloʊ məˈloʊ nɒn ˈɔrətʊr əktʃu/. Out of fraud no action arises; fraud never gives a right of action. No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or illegal act.

Ex donationibus autem feoda militaris vel magnum ser­jeantium non continentibus oritur nobis quoddam no­men generale, quod est socage /ēks dənəˈʃiːliʒwɔnɔbəs ədəm fjuːɪdə məˈɡɑnm səˈrɪʒiːnəʃ(ə)yən nɒn kəntənəntəbəs ˈɔrərdə nəʊwəbəs kəˌwɔdəm nʊwəm ˈdʒɛnərəlɪjɪˌ, kwɔd ˈɛst səˈkɑʒ(ə)mləˌmən/ˌ. From grants not containing military fees or grand serjeanty, a kind of general name is used, which is “socage.”

Exeat /eˈskıət/. A permission which a bishop grants to a priest to go out of his diocese; also leave to go out generally. For Ne Exeat, see that title.

Execute. To complete; to make; to sign; to perform; to do; to follow out; to carry out according to its terms; to fulfill the command or purpose of. To perform all necessary formalities, as to make and sign a contract, or sign and deliver a note. See also Execution.

Executed. Completed; carried into full effect; already done or performed; signed; taking effect immediately; now in existence or in possession; conveying an immediate right or possession. Act or course of conduct carried to completion. Term imports idea that nothing remains to be done. The opposite of executory. See also Execution.

Executed consideration. A consideration which is wholly performed. An act done or value given before the making of the agreement.

Executed contract. Contract which has been performed. If performed in part, it is partially executed (executory); if entirely performed, it is fully or wholly executed. See also Contract; Executed oral agreement; Executory contract.

Executed estate. Estate in property which is vested. See Estate.

Executed fine. The fine sur cognizance de droit, come cee que il ad de son done; or a fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizer, as that which he has of the gift of the cognizer. Abolished in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74.

Executed gift. See Gift.

Executed note. Promissory note which has been signed and delivered.

Executed oral agreement. An oral agreement is not “executed” unless it has been fully performed by both parties. Walther v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., 40 Cal. App.2d 160, 104 P.2d 551, 554.

Executed remainder. See Remainder.

Executed sale. See Sale.

Executed trust. See Trust.

Executed use. See Use.
Executive /eksakyúwsh(i)yow/. Lat. The doing or following up of a thing; the doing a thing completely or thoroughly; management or administration.

In old practice, execution; the final process in an action.

Execution /eksakyúwsh(i)yow banóram/. In old English law, management or administration of goods. Ad ecclesiæm et ad amicis pertinet executio bonorum, the execution of the goods shall belong to the church and to the friends of the deceased.

Executio est executio juris secundum judicium /eksakyúwsh(i)yow ét eksakyúwsh(i)yow júras sekádam juwdish(i)yam/. Execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment.

Executio est finis et fructus legis /eksakyúwsh(i)yow ét faýnas ét fríktas liyjást/. Execution is the end and fruit of the law.

Executio juris non habet injuriam /eksakyúwsh(i)yow júras nón héybad anjúriyám/. The execution of law does no injury.

Execution. Carrying out some act or course of conduct to its completion. Northwest Steel Rolling Mills v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Wash., 110 F.2d 286, 290. Completion of an act. Putting into force. The completion, fulfillment, or perfecting of anything, or carrying it into operation and effect.

Execution of contract includes performance of all acts necessary to render it complete as an instrument and imports idea that nothing remains to be done to make complete and effective contract. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Chicago Bridge & Iron Co., Tex.Civ.App., 442 S.W.2d 888, 895.

Execution upon a money judgment is the legal process of enforcing the judgment, usually by seizing and selling property of the debtor. See Writ of execution, infra.

Execution is a process in action to carry into effect the directions in a decree or judgment. Foust v. Foust, 47 Cal.2d 121, 302 P.2d 11, 13.

Body execution. An order of court which commands the officer to take the body of the defendant or debtor; generally to bring him before court to pay debt. A capias.

Writ of execution. Formal process issued by court generally evidencing the debt of the defendant to the plaintiff and commanding the officer to take the property of the defendant in satisfaction of the debt. Unless the court directs otherwise, the process to enforce a money judgment shall be a writ of execution. Fed.R. Civil P. 69. A writ of execution is a written demand to bailiff, directing him to execute the judgment of the court. Miami Motor Sales v. Singleton, Ohio Mun., 94 N.E.2d 819, 822. Process issuing from a court in a civil action authorizing the sheriff or other competent officer to carry out the court's decision in favor of the prevailing party.

For "Attachment execution," see Attachment. For "Testatum execution," see Testatum. See also Alias execution; Dormant execution; General execution; Judgment execution; Junior execution; Special execution.

Execution creditor. See Creditor.

For Executione faciendá in withernam /eksakyúwshi­yóuniw fáshiyánda in wišerméymiym/. A writ that lay for taking cattle of one who has conveyed the cattle of another out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot replevy them.

Executione judicíi /eksakyúwshiyóuniw juwdishiyay/. A writ directed to the judge of an inferior court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return some reasonable cause wherefore he delays the execution.

Executioner. Person who executes (i.e. carries out) capital punishment.

Execution lien. An execution lien may be created by service of execution, levy upon real estate, and filing of a certificate of levy in the proper office of county in which real estate is located. Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Maley, C.C.A.III., 125 F.2d 131, 135.

Execution of instrument. Completion of instrument, including signing and delivery. Execution includes performance of all acts necessary to render instrument complete and of every act required to give instrument validity or to carry it into effect. Northwest Steel Rolling Mills v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Wash., 110 F.2d 286, 290. "Execution" of written contract includes signing, unconditional delivery by promisor, and acceptance by promisee. Coen v. American Surety Co. of New York, C.C.A.Mo., 120 F.2d 393, 397.

Execution of judgment or decree. See Execution.

Execution parée /eksakyuwyswójyn párey/. In French law, a right founded on an act passed before a notary, by which the creditor may immediately, without citation or summons, seize and cause to be sold the property of his debtor, out of the proceeds of which to receive his payment. It imports a confession of judgment, and is not unlike a warrant of attorney.

Execution sale. A sale by a sheriff or other ministerial officer under the authority of a writ of execution which he has levied on property of the debtor. See also Judicial sale.

Executive. As distinguished from the legislative and judicial departments (i.e. branches) of government, the executive department is that which is charged with the detail of carrying the laws into effect and securing their due observance. See also Executive department; Executive powers.

The word "executive" is also used as an impersonal designation of the chief executive officer of a state or nation. Term also refers to upper level management of business. See also Executive employees.

Executive administration, or ministry. A political term in England, applicable to the higher and responsible class of public officials by whom the chief departments of the government of the, kingdom are administered.

Executive agency. A department of the executive branch of government such as the Army and Air Force Exchange Service whose activities are subject to statutes and whose contracts are subject to judicial review. W. B. Fishburn Cleaners Inc. v. Army &
Executive agreement. A treaty-like agreement with another country in which the President may bind the country without submission to the Senate (as in the case of a treaty). State of Russia v. National City Bank of N. Y., C.C.A.N.Y., 69 F.2d 44, 48; United States v. Belmont, 301 U.S. 324, 57 S.Ct. 758, 81 L.Ed. 1134.

Executive clemency. The power of the chief executive (i.e. President or a governor) to pardon or commute a criminal sentence as, for example, the power to reduce the death penalty to life imprisonment. Art. II, § 2, U.S.Const. See also Clemency.

Executive committee. In business, the body which directly manages the operations between meetings of the board of directors; commonly consisting of the principal officers and directors.

Executive department. That branch of government charged with carrying out the laws enacted by the legislature. The President is the chief executive officer of the country and the governor is chief executive officer of a state. Used to describe that branch of the government in contrast to the other two branches; i.e. legislative and judicial. See Art. II, U.S.Const.

Executive employees. Persons whose duties include some form of managerial authority, actually directing the work of other persons. Persons whose duties relate to active participation in control, supervision, and management of business, or who administer affairs, or who direct, manage, execute or dispense. Steiner v. Pleasantville Constructors, 181 Misc. 798, 46 N.Y.S.2d 120, 123. The term executive employee carries the idea of supervision of or control over ordinary employees. Ralph Knight, Inc. v. Mantel, C.C.A.Mo., 135 F.2d 514, 517.

Executive officer. An officer of the executive department of government; one in whom resides the power to execute the laws; one whose duties are to cause the laws to be executed and obeyed. Petzak v. Graves, 33 Wis.2d 175, 147 N.W.2d 294, 297. Officers who are neither judicial nor legislative are executive officers. Spivey v. State, 69 Okl.Cr. 397, 104 P.2d 263, 277. One who assumes command or control and directs course of business, or some part thereof, and who outlines duties and directs work of subordinate employees. President and vice president of corporation are executive officers. Emmerglick v. Philip Wolf, Inc., C.C.A.N.Y., 138 F.2d 661, 662.

Executive order. An order or regulation issued by the President or some administrative authority under his direction for the purpose of interpreting, implementing, or giving administrative effect to a provision of the Constitution or of some law or treaty. To have the effect of law, such orders must be published in the Federal Register.

Executive order Indian reservation. Reservation created by order of President withdrawing land within its boundaries from settlement or making other disposition of it under public land laws of United States. Santa Rita Oil & Gas Co. v. Board of Equalization, 101 Mont. 268, 54 P.2d 117, 122.

Executive pardon. An executive act of grace exempting an individual from punishment for a crime he has committed. Such presidential power is authorized by Art. II, § 2, U.S.Const. Similar powers are afforded to governors by state constitutions. See also Executive clemency; Pardon.

Executive powers. Power to execute laws. The enumerated powers of the President are provided for in Article II of the U.S.Const. Executive powers of governors are provided for in state constitutions. The executive powers vested in governors by state constitutions include the power to execute the laws, that is, to carry them into effect, as distinguished from the power to make the laws and the power to judge them. Tucker v. State, 218 Ind. 614, 35 N.E.2d 270, 291. See also Executive order.

Executive privilege. Executive privilege, based on constitutional doctrine of separation of powers, exempts the executive from disclosure requirements applicable to the ordinary citizen or organization where such exemption is necessary to the discharge of highly important executive responsibilities involved in maintaining governmental operations, and extends not only to military and diplomatic secrets but also to documents integral to an appropriate exercise of the executive's domestic decisional and policy making functions, that is, those documents reflecting the frank expression necessary in intra-governmental advisory and deliberative communications. Black v. Sheraton Corp. of America, D.C.D.C., 371 F.Supp. 97, 100. However, need for confidentiality of high level communications cannot, without more, sustain an absolute unqualified presidential privilege of immunity from judicial process under all circumstances. U. S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3106, 3107, 31 F.2d 1039. See also Privilege.

Executive session. Executive session of a board or governmental body is a session closed to the public.

Executor /agzékadar/. A person appointed by a testator to carry out the directions and requests in his will, and to dispose of the property according to his testamentary provisions after his decease. A person who either expressly or by implication is appointed by a testator to carry out testator's directions concerning the dispositions he makes under his will. In re Silverman's Estate, 6 Ill.App.3d 225, 226, 285 N.E.2d 548, 550. "Personal representative" includes "executor." Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201. Compare Administrator.

For Co-executor; General executor; Instituted executor; Joint executors; Limited executor; Special executor and Substituted executor, see those titles.

Civil Law

A ministerial officer who executed or carried into effect the judgment or sentence in a cause.
Ecclesiastical Law

Executor à lege constitutus. An executor appointed by law; the ordinary of the diocese.

Executor ab episcope constitutus, or executor datius. An executor appointed by the bishop; an administrator to an intestate.

Executor à testatore constitutus. An executor appointed by a testator. Otherwise termed "executor testamentarius;" a testamentary executor.

An executor to the tenor. One who, though not directly constituted executor by the will, is therein charged with duties in relation to the estate which can only be performed by the executor.

Executor by substitution. A successor executor appointed by testator entitled to succeed to administration of estate following resignation of first executor who had partially administered upon such estate. In re Stahl's Estate, 113 Ind.App. 29, 44 N.E.2d 529, 532.

Executor creditor. See Creditor.

Executor dative. See Dative.

Executor de son tort. See De son tort.

Executor lucratus /ēkskyūw'dar lī'ywkrē'ydas/. An executor who has assets of his testator who in his life-time made himself liable by a wrongful interference with the property of another.

Executorship. Office held by an executor.

Executory /āg泽kyatɔriy/. That which is yet to be executed or performed; that which remains to be carried into operation or effect; incomplete; depending upon a future performance or event. The opposite of executed.

As to executory Bequests; Contracts; Devise; Estates; Remainder; Trust, and Use, see those titles.

Executory accord. An agreement for the future discharge of an existing claim by a substituted performance; it is the promised performance that is to discharge the existing claim, not the promise to render performance. Elliot v. Whitney, 215 Kan. 256, 524 P.2d 699, 703. Two principal categories of compromise agreements are "executory accord," providing for acceptance in future of stated performance in satisfaction of claim, and "substituted contract" which itself is accepted as substitution for and extinguishment of existing claim. Johnson v. Utile, 86 Nev. 593, 472 P.2d 335, 337.

Executory consideration. A consideration which is to be performed after the contract for which it is a consideration is made.

Executory devise. Devise of a future estate, and, if the executory devisee dies before the event happens, the estate goes to the heir at the time of the event, and not to the heir at the time of the death of the devisee. The happening of the contingency determines who is to take the estate, and until that time no one has an interest to transmit. By the earlier common law it was an established rule that a devise of lands, without words of limitation, conferred upon the devisee an estate for life only. An exception was soon recognized in the case of a will, so that an estate in fee could be given without the use of the technical words required in a conveyance or deed. The gift in such case was known as an "executory devise."

Executory interests. A general term, comprising all future estates and interests in land or personality, other than reversions and remainders.

A contingent future interest which: (a) cannot qualify as a remainder; (b) is always in favor of a conveyee, and; (c) takes effect when the contingency happens as a springing use or shifting use under the Statute of Uses (1535), or Statute of Wills (1540).

Executory limitation. A limitation of a future interest by deed or will; if by will, it is also called an "executory devise."

Executory process. A civil law process which can be resorted to in the following cases, namely: (1) When the right of the creditor arises from an act importing confession of judgment, and which contains a privilege or mortgage in his favor; (2) when the creditor demands the execution of a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution is sought. An accelerated procedure, summary in nature, by which holder of a mortgage or privilege evidenced by an authentic act importing a confession of judgment seeks to effect an ex parte seizure and sale of the subject property, without previous citation, contradictory hearing or judgment. Cameron Brown South, Inc. v. East Glen Oaks, Inc., La.App., 341 So.2d 450, 457.

Executory sale. See Sale.

Executory trust. Under this type of trust a further conveyance or settlement is to be made by the trustee. The test as to whether a trust is an "executory trust" is to determine whether settlor has acted as his own conveyancer and defines precisely the settlement to be made, and, if he has, the word "heirs" is one of limitation, and if he has not, the trust is executory, and the word "heirs" is a word of purchase, and the persons coming within such definition have an interest in the property. Sutliff v. Aydelott, 373 Ill. 633, 27 N.E.2d 529, 532.

Executory unilateral accord. An offer to enter a contract.

Executory warranties. Such arise where insured undertakes to perform some executory stipulation, as that certain acts will be done, or that certain facts will continue to exist.

Executress /āg泽kyatɔstras/. A female executor.

Executrix /āg泽kyatɔtriks/. Female executor. A woman who has been appointed by will to execute such will or testament.
Exempt /'eksempt/. Out of purchase; founded on purchase. A term of the civil law, adopted by Bracton.

Exempts. Persons who are not bound by law, but excused from the performance of duties imposed upon others.

Exempt transactions. Those dealings in securities which fall outside the scope of Securities Act of 1933 and Securities Exchange Act.

Exemnun /'eksenyum/. In old English law, a gift; a new year's gift.

Exequatur /'eksakweydar/. Lat. Let it be executed.

An "exequatur" is a written official recognition and authorization of consular officer, issued by government to which he is accredited. Doyle v. Fleming, D.C. Canal Zone, 219 F.Supp. 277, 283.

In French practice, this term is subscribed by judicial authority upon a transcript of a judgment from a foreign country, or from another part of France, and authorizes the execution of the judgment within the jurisdiction where it is so indorsed.

Exercise. To make use of. Thus, to exercise a right or power is to do something which it enables the holder to do; e.g. exercising option to purchase stock.

To put in action or practice, to carry on something, to transact.

Exercise of judgment. Exercise of sound discretion, that is, discretion exercised, not arbitrarily or willfully, but with regard to what is right and equitable. United States v. Beckman, C.C.APa., 104 F.2d 260, 262.

Exercitails /'agzarscheylas/. A soldier; a vassal.

Exercitoria actio /'agzarsatoria eksh(i)yow/. In the civil law, an action which lay against the employer of a vessel (exercitor navis) for the contracts made by the master.

Exercitordial power /'agzarsirtiadal pawar/. The trust given to a ship-master.

Exercitor navis /'agzarsadar nevyas/. Lat. The temporary owner or charterer of a ship.

Exercital /'egzarsichuwal/. In old English law, a heriot paid only in arms, horses, or military accouterments.

Exercitus /'agzarsads/. In old European law, an army; an armed force. The term was absolutely indefinite.

Exemption laws. Laws which provide that a certain amount or proportion of a debtor's property shall be exempt from execution and bankruptcy. Bankruptcy Act, § 522.

Exemption, words of. It is a maxim of law that words of exemption are not to be construed to import any liability; the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius, or its converse, exclusio unius inclusio alterius, not applying to such a case.

Exempto /'eksemptow/. Nontestimonial identification evidence taken from defendant; e.g. fingerprints, blood samples, voiceprints, lineup identification, handwriting samples.

Exemplars /'egzemplarz/. Nontestimonial identification evidence taken from defendant; e.g. fingerprints, blood samples, voiceprints, lineup identification, handwriting samples.

Exemplary damages /'egzemplary dëmςajz/. Damages on an increased scale, awarded to plaintiff over and above what will barely compensate him for his property loss, where wrong done to him was aggravated by circumstances of violence, oppression, malice, fraud, or wanton and wicked conduct on part of defendant. Goines v. Pennsylvania R. R., 208 Misc. 103, 143 N.Y.S.2d 576, 583. See also Damages (Exemplary or punitive damages).

Exemplification. An official transcript of a document from public records, made in form to be used as evidence, and authenticated or certified as a true copy. See Certified copy.

Exemplification /'egzemplifekshun/. A writ granted for the exemplification or transcript of an original record.

Exemplified copy. Copy of document which has been authenticated. See Certified copy.

Exemplil Gratia /'egzemplay graysh(i)yaw/. For the purpose of example, or for instance. Often abbreviated "e.g." or "ex. gr."

Exemplum /'egzemplam/. In the civil law, copy; a written authorized copy. This word is also used in the modern sense of example—ad exemplum constituti singulares non trahi, exceptional things must not be taken for examples.

Exempt. To release, discharge, waive, relieve from liability. To relieve, excuse, or set free from a duty or service imposed upon the general class to which the individual exempted belongs; as to exempt from military service.

To relieve certain classes of property from liability to sale on execution, or from taxation, or from bankruptcy or attachment.

See also Exemption; Exemption laws.

Exemption. Freedom from a general duty or service; immunity from a general burden, tax, or charge. Immunity from certain legal obligations, as jury duty, military service, or the payment of taxes.

A privilege allowed by law to a judgment debtor, by which he may hold property to a certain amount or certain classes of property, free from all liability to levy and sale on execution or attachment.

Property exempt in bankruptcy proceedings is provided for under Bankruptcy Act § 522.

Term used for various amounts subtracted from gross income to determine taxable income; e.g. personal tax exemptions for self and dependents. I.R.C. § 151 et seq.

See also Immunity.
as to number. It was applied, on various occasions, to a gathering of forty-two armed men, of thirty-five, or even of four.

Ex facie /éks féys(h)iyiy/. From the face; apparently; evidently. A term applied to what appears on the face of a writing.

Ex facto /éks fákto/. From or in consequence of a fact or action; actually. Usually applied to an unlawful or tortious act as the foundation of a title, etc. Sometimes used as equivalent to "de facto."

Ex facto jus ortitur /éks fákotow jás órdar/. The law arises out of the fact. A rule of law continues in abstraction and theory, until an act is done on which it can attach and assume as it were a body and shape.

Exhaustion of state remedies. Where an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must first be sought by exhausting such remedies before the courts will act. McKart v. U. S., 395 U.S. 185, 89 S.Ct. 1657, 23 L.Ed.2d 194.

Exhibit, v. To show or display; to offer or present for inspection. To produce anything in public, so that it may be taken into possession. To present; to offer publicly or officially; to file of record. To administer; to cause to be taken, as medicines. To submit to a court or officer in course of proceedings.

Exhibit, n. A paper or document produced and exhibited to a court during a trial or hearing, or to a commissioner taking depositions, or to auditors, arbitrators, etc., as a voucher, or in proof of facts, or as otherwise connected with the subject-matter, and which, on being accepted, is marked for identification and annexed to the deposition, report, or other principal document, or filed of record, or otherwise made a part of the case.

Paper, document, chart, map, or the like, referred to and made a part of an affidavit, pleading or brief.

An item of physical/tangible evidence which is to be or has been offered to the court for inspection.

Exhibits may be included as a part of the appendix to appellate briefs. See Fed.R.App.P. 30(e).

Exhibito billie /ézgabish(i)yow billy/. Lat. Exhibition of a bill. In old English practice, actions were instituted by presenting or exhibiting a bill to the court, in cases where the proceedings were by bill; hence this phrase is equivalent to "commencement of the suit."

Exhibition. See Exhibit.

Exhibition value. "Minimum sale" or "exhibition value" is interchangeably used with term "price expectancy" in moving picture industry, denoting minimum receipts which distributors expect to realize from exhibition of pictures. Export & Import Film Co. v. B. P. Schulberg Productions, 125 Misc. 756, 211 N.Y.S. 838, 839.

Exhumation /éks(h)yuwméysahn /éz(y)uw*/. Disinterment; the removal from the earth of anything previously buried therein, particularly a human corpse.

Ex hypothesi /éks háypóøasay/. By the hypothesis; upon the supposition; upon the theory or facts assumed.

Exidos /éyhiyðows/. See Ejidos.

Exigence /ézgjan(t)s/ or exigency /ézgjanisy/ /agziO*. Demand, want, need, imperativeness. Something arising suddenly out of the current of events; any event or occasional combination of circumstances, calling for immediate action or remedy; a pressing necessity; a sudden and unexpected happening or an unforeseen occurrence or condition. Los Angeles County v. Payne, 8 Cal.2d 563, 66 P.2d 658, 663. State of being urgent or exigent; pressing need or demand; also, case requiring immediate attention, assistance, or remedy; critical period or condition, pressing necessity. State v. Rubion, Tex.Civ.App., 292 S.W.2d 650, 657. See Exigent circumstances, infra.

Exigency of a bond. That which the bond demands or exacts, i.e., the act, performance, or event upon which it is conditioned.
Exigency of a writ. The command or imperativeness of a writ; the directing part of a writ; the act or performance which it commands.

Exigendary /ēksajəndərI/. In English law, an officer who makes out exigents. See Exigenter.

Exigent, /ēksajənt/ exigí facias /ēksəjəj fēyʃ(b)əˌvəs/. L. Lat. In English practice, a judicial writ made use of in the process of outlawing, commanding the sheriff to demand the defendant (or cause him to be demanded, exigí faciat), from county court to county court, until he be outlawed; or, if he appear, then to take and have him before the court on a day certain in term, to answer to the plaintiff's action. 3 Bl.Comm. 283, 284. Outlawry has long been obsolete. See Allocatur exigent.

Exigent circumstances. The "exigent circumstances" test permits police to make warrantless entry to effect an arrest when exigencies of situation make that course imperative. Vance v. State of N. C., C.A.N.C., 432 F.2d 984, 990. Exception to rule requiring search warrant is presence of exigent or emergency-like circumstances as for example presence of weapons in a motor vehicle stopped on highway and such exigent circumstances permit warrantless search and seizure. Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42, 90 S.Ct. 1975, 26 L.Ed.2d 419.

Exigent circumstances. The "exigent circumstances" test permits police to make warrantless entry to effect an arrest when exigencies of situation make that course imperative. Vance v. State of N. C., C.A.N.C., 432 F.2d 984, 990. Exception to rule requiring search warrant is presence of exigent or emergency-like circumstances as for example presence of weapons in a motor vehicle stopped on highway and such exigent circumstances permit warrantless search and seizure. Chambers v. Maroney, 399 U.S. 42, 90 S.Ct. 1975, 26 L.Ed.2d 419.

Exigent /ēksəjənt/. An officer of the English court of common pleas, whose duty it was to make out the exigents and proclaiming in the process of outlawry. Abolished by St. 7 Wm. IV, and 1 Vict., c. 30.

Exigent list. A phrase used to indicate a list of cases set down for hearing upon various incidental and ancillary motions and rules.

Exigent search. See Exigent circumstances.

Exigible /ēksəjəbl/. Demandable; requirable.

Exigible debt /ēksəjəbl dēt/. A liquidated and demandable or matured claim.

Exigí facias /ēksəjəj fēyʃiəˌvəs/. That you cause to be demanded. The emphatic words of the Latin form of the writ of exigent. They are sometimes used as the name of that writ.

Exile /ēgzəjil/ēksəjil/. Banishment; the person banished.

Exilium /agzilium/. Lat. In old English law: (1) Exile; banishment from one’s country. (2) Driving away; despoiling. The name of a species of waste, which consisted in driving away tenants or vassals from the estate; as by demolishing buildings, and so compelling the tenants to leave, or by enfranchising the bond-servants, and unlawfully turning them out of their tenements.

Exilium est patriæ privatio, natalis soll mutatio, legum nativarum amissio /agzilium est pætriyi pravéysh(i)yow, natéylas sowlay myuwtéysh(i)yow, llygam nedyadéwéram smsh(i)yow/. Exile is a privation of country, a change of natural state, a loss of native laws.

Ex industria /ēks indistrəʊə/. With contrivance or deliberation; designedly; on purpose.

Ex integro /ēks intəɡrəʊ/. Anew; afresh.

Exist. To live; to have life or animation; to be in present force, activity, or effect at a given time, as in speaking of "existing" contracts, creditors, debts, laws, rights, or liens. To be or continue to be. State v. Sawtooth Men's Club, 59 Idaho 616, 85 P.2d 695, 698.

Existimatio /agzistaméysh(i)yow/. In the civil law, the civil reputation which belonged to the Roman citizen, as such. Called a state or condition of unimpeached dignity or character (dignitatis inlsesse status); the highest standing of a Roman citizen. Also the decision or award of an arbitrator.

Existing claim. Claim which has arisen and is pending.

Existing debt. To have an "existing debt" it is sufficient if there is an absolute debt owing though the period for its payment may not yet have arrived. A tax may be a "debt" within meaning of agreement to assume "existing debts". Shepard v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.1.III., 101 F.2d 595, 598. Within provision of Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act which defines "insolvency", an "existing debt" is an existing legal liability, whether matured or unmatured, liquidated or unliquidated, absolute, fixed or contingent. Baker v. Geist, 457 Pa. 73, 321 A.2d 634, 636.

Existing disease. A chronic or definite affliction such as would be embraced in the common understanding and meaning of the term "diseased" or "sick." Browning v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 94 Utah 532, 72 P.2d 1060, 1074.

Existing person. A child conceived, but not born, is to be deemed an "existing person" so far as may be necessary for its interests in the event of its subsequent birth.

Exit /ēgzat/. Lat. It goes forth. This word is used in docket entries as a brief mention of the issue of process. Thus, "exit fl. fa." denotes that a writ of fieri facias has been issued in the particular case. The "exit of a writ" is the fact of its issuance.

Way out; opposite of entrance. See Egress.

Exitus /éksθʊs/. Children; offspring. The rents, issues, and profits of lands and tenements. An export duty. The conclusion of the pleadings.

Exit wound. A term used in medical jurisprudence to denote the wound made by a weapon on the side where it emerges, after it has passed completely through the body, or through any part of it.

Ex justa causa /ēks jāstə kōzo/. From a just or lawful cause; by a just or legal title.

Exlegalitas /ēksɡlæɡəˈlɪtəs/. In old English law, outlawry.

Exlegalitus /ēksɡlæɡəˈlɪtəs/. He who is prosecuted as an outlaw.

Exlegare /ēksɡlæɡərə/. In old English law, to outlaw; to deprive one of the benefit and protection of the law (exuere alicuem beneficium legis).

Ex lege /ēks lɪˈdʒi/. By the law; by force of law; as a matter of law.
Ex legibus /éks liyjabas/. According to the laws. A phrase of the civil law, which means according to the intent or spirit of the law, as well as according to the words or letter.

Exlex /ékslèks/. In old English law, an outlaw; qui est extra legem, one who is out of the law's protection.

To relieve from responsibility, duty, or obligation. To clear from guilt; i.e. dropping criminal charges against accused.

Ex licentia regis /éks lsènsh(y)as/. By the king's license. 1 Bl.Comm. 168, note.

Ex locato /éks lakèdow/. From or out of lease or letting. A term of the civil law, applied to actions or rights of action arising out of the contract of locatum. Adopted in the early period in the law of common law.

Ex maleficio /éks màlsfish(i)yow/. Defined variously as from or growing out of wrongdoing; tortious; tortiously; growing out of, or founded on, misdoing or tort; on account of misconduct; by virtue of or out of an illegal act. Synonymous with "malefeasance". Lucas v. Central Missouri Trust Co., 350 Mo. 593, 166 S.W.2d 1053, 1056. This term is frequently used in the civil law as the synonym of "ex delicto" (q.v.), and is thus contrasted with "ex contractu". In this sense it is of more rare occurrence in the common law.

Ex maleficio non oritur contractus /éks màlsfish(i)yow nòn òrdàr kontràktas/. A contract cannot arise out of an act radically vicious and illegal.

Ex mals moribus bone leges nate sunt /éks màls mòrbàs bównì liyjìyj neydiy sànt/. Good laws arise from evil morals, i.e., are necessitated by the evil behavior of men.

Ex malitia /éks màlish(y)à/. From malice; maliciously.

In the law of libel and slander, this term imports a publication that is false and without legal excuse.

Ex mero motu /éks mírow mówdùw/. Of his own mere motion; of his own accord; voluntarily and without prompting or request. In England, royal letters patent which are granted at the crown's own instance, and without request made, are said to be granted ex mero motu. When a court interferes, of its own motion, to object to an irregularity, or to do something which the parties are not strictly entitled to, but which will prevent injustice, it is said to act ex mero motu, or ex proprio motu, or sua sponte, all these terms being here equivalent.

Ex mora /éks móra/. A term of the civil law, meaning from or in consequence of delay. Interest is allowed ex mora; that is, where there has been delay in repaying a sum borrowed.

Ex more /éks móriy/. According to custom.

Ex multitudine signorum, colligtur identitas vera /éks múlytwid niy sigronàr, káljìpàr àdèntàtès víra/. From a great number of signs or marks, true identity is gathered or made up. A thing described by a great number of marks is easily identified, though, as to some, the description may not be strictly correct.

Ex mutuo /éks myùwchuwow/. From or out of loan. In the old law of England, a debt was said to arise ex mutuo when one lent another anything which consisted in number, weight, or measure.

Ex necessitate /éks nàssèstéddiy/. Of necessity.

Ex necessitate legis /éks nàssèstéddiy líjìy/. From or by necessity of law. 4 Bl.Comm. 394.

Ex necessitate rel /éks nàssèstéddiy rliyay/. From the necessity or urgency of the thing or case.

Ex nihil nihil fit /éks nài(h)alow nái(h)al fit/. From nothing nothing comes.

Ex nudo pacto non oritur [nascitur] actio /éks n(y)àwdow pàktow nòn òrdàrd àkskiyow *nàk(h)àdàr/. Out of a nude or naked pact [that is, a bare parol agreement without consideration] no action arises. Out of a promise neither attended with particular solemnity (such as belongs to a specialty) nor with any consideration no legal liability can arise. A parol agreement, without a valid consideration, cannot be made the foundation of an action. A leading maxim both of the civil and common law.

Ex officio /éks sfish(i)yow/. From office; by virtue of the office; without any other warrant or appointment than that resulting from the holding of a particular office. Powers may be exercised by an officer which are not specifically conferred upon him, but are necessarily implied in his office; these are ex officio. Thus, a judge has ex officio the powers of a conservator of the peace.

Ex officio information /éks sfish(i)yow informéyshan/. In English law, a criminal information filed by the attorney general ex officio on behalf of the crown, in the court of king's bench, for offenses more immediately affecting the government, and to be distinguished from informations in which the crown is the nominal prosecutor.

Ex officio justices. Judges who serve in a particular capacity by reason of their office as a judge who serves on a commission or board because the law requires a particular judge to serve thereon and not he is selected for such post. May also refer to one who exercises judicial functions by reason of his office.

Ex officio services /éks sfish(i)yow sàrvàss/. Services which the law annexes to a particular office and requires the incumbent to perform.

Exolone. In French law, an act or instrument in writing which contains the reasons why a party in a civil suit, or a person accused, who has been summoned, agreeably to the requisitions of a decree, does not appear. The same as "Essoin" (q.v.).

Exoneration /agzônàreyt/. To exculpate.

Exoneration /agzônàreyshan/. The removal of a burden, charge, responsibility, or duty. Right to be reimbursed by reason of having paid that which another should be compelled to pay while "indemnity" generally is based upon contract, express or implied, and means compensation for loss already sustained. Up tagrafft v. U. S., C.A.Va., 315 F.2d 200, 203.

Exoneratione secte /agzônàreyshiywàny nièktyi/. A writ that formerly lay for the crown's ward, to be free from all suit to the county court, hundred court, leet, etc., during wardship.

Exonerazione secte ad curiam baron /agzōnaréyshiyówniy sęktyi æd kyriyam bærën/. A writ of the same nature as that last above described, issued by the guardian of the crown’s ward, and addressed to the sheriffs or stewards of the court, forbidding them to distrain him, etc., for not doing suit of court, etc.

Exoneretur /agzōnarýydar/. Lat. Let him be relieved or discharged. An entry made on a bailpiece, whereby the surety is relieved or discharged from further obligation, when the condition is fulfilled by the surrender of the principal or otherwise.

Exorbitant /agzörbadant/. Deviating from the normal or customary course, or going beyond the rule of established limits of right or propriety.

Exordium /agzórdiyam/. The beginning or introductory part of a speech or document.

Ex parte illicito non oritur actio /èks póssas diktas anténdariy pl(y)ýýrýma póssas/. You can imply many things from few expressions.

Ex parte investigation. An investigation conducted about a person who is not personally contacted or questioned.

Ex parte hearing. Hearings in which the court or tribunal hears only one side of the controversy.

Ex parte injunction. An injunction which issues from a court which has heard only one side, the moving side, of the controversy.

Ex parte proceeding. Any judicial or quasi judicial hearing in which only one party is heard as in the case of a temporary restraining order.

Ex parte revocation. The withdrawal or revocation of a license or other authority from a person without that person’s participation or without notice and opportunity to be heard and defend.

Ex peruaton /èkspéytriyéyshan/. The voluntary act of abandoning one’s country, and becoming the citizen or subject of another.

Ex paucis dictis intendere plurima possis /èks póssas diktas anténdariy pl(y)ýýrýma póssas/. You can imply many things from few expressions.

Ex parte hearing.

Expectancy. To await; to look forward to something intended, promised, or likely to happen.

Expectancy. That which is expected or hoped for. The condition of being deferred to a future time, or of dependence upon an expected event. Contingency as to possession or enjoyment. With respect to the time of their enjoyment, estates may either be in possession or in expectancy; and of expectancies there are two sorts,—one created by the act of the parties, called a “remainder;” the other by act of law, called a “reversion.” Expectancy as applied to property, is contingency as to possession, that which is expected or hoped for. At most it is a mere hope or expectation, contingent upon the will and pleasure of the landowner, and hardly reaches the height of a property right, much less a vested right, because where there is no obligation, there is no right. It is a possibility for which a party may under certain circumstances properly hope for or expect.

Expectancy of life. With respect to life annuities, the share or number of years of life which a person of a given age may, upon an equality of chance, expect to enjoy. See Actuarial table; Mortality tables.

Expectancy tables. See Actuarial table; Mortality tables.

Expectant. Contingent as to enjoyment. Having relation to, or dependent upon, a contingency. See Contingent.

Expectant estates. See Estate in expectancy.

Expectant heir /èkspektant ér/. A person who has the expectation of inheriting property or an estate, but small present means.

Expectant right. A contingent right, not vested; one which depends on the continued existence of the present condition of things until the happening of some future event. Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co., 161 U.S. 646, 16 S.Ct. 705, 40 L.Ed. 838. A right is contingent, not vested, when it comes into existence only on an event or condition which may not happen.

Expectation of life. See Actuarial table; Expectancy of life; Mortality tables.

Expedient. Apt and suitable to end in view. Werner v. Biederman, 64 Ohio App. 423, 28 N.E.2d 957, 959. Whatever is suitable and appropriate in reason for the accomplishment of a specified object.

Expediente /èkspéydiyéyente/. An historical record of proceedings in connection with grant of land by the sovereign. State v. Balli, Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 522, 526. In Mexican law, a term including all the papers or documents constituting a grant or title to land from government.
Expedition. A sending forth or setting forth for the execution of some object of consequence. Speed or promptness in performance. An important journey or excursion for a specific purpose; as, a military or exploring expedition; also, the body of persons making such an excursion. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States v. Dyess, 194 Ark. 1023, 109 S.W.2d 1263, 1265. A journey, march, or voyage generally of several or many persons for definite purpose, such as a military or exploring expedition or a trading expedition to the African coast. The word carries an implication of a military exploit or of an exploration into remote regions or over new routes. Day v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 83 F.2d 147, 149.

Expeditious /ekspeditiəs/. Possessed of, or characterized by, expedition or efficiency and rapidity in action; performed with, or acting with, expedition; quick; speedy.

Expedit reipublice ne sua re quis male utatur /ekspodist riyaypoblasi yiy s(y)uwa riy kwis maliy yUwd;sd;r I. It is for the interest of the state that a man should not enjoy his own property improperly (to the injury of others).

Expedit reipublice ut sit finis litium /ekspodist riyaypoblasi at sit fayn;liy yRM(y)am/. It is for the advantage of the state that there be an end of suits; it is for the public good that actions be brought to a close. This maxim belongs to the law of all countries.

Expel. In regard to trespass and other torts, this term means to eject, to put out, to drive out, and generally with an implication of the use of force. See also Ejectment; Eviction.

Expend. To pay out, lay out, consume, use up; normally implying receiving something in return.

Expendable. That which is consumed in its use over a short period of time such as expenses for day to day operations which are charged as expenses to current income as contrasted with payments for long term or capital improvements. Not essential or critical to preserve.

Expendere /akspeˈndərə/. The word “expense” had its origin in the Latin word “expendere”; “ex” meaning “out,” and “pendere” meaning “to weigh.”

Expenditors /akspeˈndədərz/. Paymasters. Those who expend or disburse certain taxes.

Expenditure. Spending or payment of money: the act of expending, disbursing, or laying out of money; payment. Compare Appropriation. See also Expense. As regards “Capital expenditure” see Capital.

Expense litis /akspeˈnəsi láyda/. Costs or expenses of the suit, which are generally allowed to the successful party.

Expense. That which is expended, laid out or consumed. An outlay; charge; cost; price. The expenditure of money, time, labor, resources, and thought. See also Costs; Fee.

Accrued expense. One which has been incurred in a given period but not yet paid.

Business expense. One which is directly related to one’s business as contrasted with personal expenses incurred for personal and family reasons. See Tax deduction, infra.

Current expense. Normal expense incurred, for example, in daily operations of a business. See Operating expenses, infra.

Operating expenses. The cost of operating an income producing property, such as rent, wages, utilities, and similar day to day expenses, as well as taxes, insurance, and a reserve for depreciation.

Ordinary expense. See Ordinary.

Out of pocket expenses. A direct expense which requires the immediate outlay of cash in contrast to an accrued expense.

Prepaid expense. Payment of rent, interest, insurance, or like expenses, prior to actual due date. Cash basis as well as accrual basis taxpayers are generally required to capitalize prepayments for rent, insurance, etc. that cover more than one year. Deductions are taken during the period the benefits are received.

Tax deduction. Certain expenses such as those directly related to production of income are deductions from gross income for tax purposes.

Expense in carrying on business. Usual or customary expenditure in course of conducting business during the year. Whitney v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.N.Y., 73 F.2d 589, 591.

Expense ratio. Proportion or ratio of expenses to income.

Expenses of family. Medical and funeral expenses are “expenses of the family” within meaning of statute making expenses of family chargeable upon property of both husband and wife. Hansen v. Hayes, 175 Or. 358, 154 P.2d 202, 205. Under such a statute the term includes not only merchandise used by family as a whole, but also expenses, such as medical aid, hospital services and burial attendance, incurred or supplied for one of the spouses. In re De Nisson’s Guardianship, 197 Wash. 265, 84 P.2d 1024, 1026.

Expenses of receivership. Includes allowances to receivers’ counsel, master’s fees, appraisers’ fees, auditors’ fees, and rent and other expenses incurred by receivers in conducting business.

Expenses of the state. Within constitutional provision for raising revenue has reference to general operating expenses of state government for fiscal year.

Expensis militum non levandis /akspliys(h)(i)yam/ non lavësnds/. An ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire upon those who held lands in ancient demesne.

Experience. A state, extent, or duration of being engaged in a particular study or work; the real life as contrasted with the ideal or imaginary. A word implying skill, facility, or practical wisdom gained by personal knowledge, feeling, and action, and also the course or process by which one attains knowledge or wisdom.

Experience rating. In insurance, a method of determining rates by using the loss experience of the insured over a period of time.

Experientia per varios actus legem factit. Magistra re-rum experientia /aksplirijëns(h)(iy)a/ pár vériyows éctas liyjam fíysat. majistra ríram akspíyiðyëns(h)(iy)a/. Experience by various acts makes law. Experience is the mistress of things.

Experiment. A trial or special test or observation made to confirm or disprove something doubtful. The process of testing.

Expert testimony. Opinion evidence of some person who possesses special skill or knowledge in some science, profession or business which is not common to the average man and which is possessed by the expert by reason of his special study or experience. Board of Ed. of Claymont Special School Dist. v. 13 Acres of Land in Brandywine Hundred, Del.Super., 11 Terry 387, 131 A.2d 180, 184. Testimony given in relation to some scientific, technical, or professional matter by experts, i.e., persons qualified to speak authoritatively by reason of their special training, skill, or familiarity with the subject. Evidence of persons who are skilled in some art, science, profession, or business, which skill or knowledge is not common to their fellow men, and which has come to such experts by reason of special study and experience in such art, science, profession, or business.

If scientific, technology, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise. Fed.Evid.R. 702, 703. See also Expert witness.

Expert witness. One who by reason of education or specialized experience possesses superior knowledge respecting a subject about which persons having no particular training are incapable of forming an accurate opinion or deducing correct conclusions. Kim Mfg., Inc. v. Superior Metal Treating, Inc., Mo.App., 537 S.W.2d 424, 428. A witness who has been qualified as an expert and who thereby will be allowed (through his/her answers to questions posted) to assist the jury in understanding complicated and technical subjects not within the understanding of the average lay person. One possessing, with reference to particular subject, knowledge not acquired by ordinary persons. One skilled in any particular art, trade, or profession, being possessed of peculiar knowledge concerning the same, and one who has given subject in question particular study, practice, or observation. One who by habits of life and business has peculiar skill in forming opinion on subject in dispute. See also Expert testimony; Hypothetical question.

Explore /ëksplér/-/iy/. In the civil law, to spoil; to rob or plunder. Applied to inheritances.

Explatio /ëkspliyòsh(i)yow//. In the civil law, the offense of unlawfully appropriating goods belonging to a succession. It is not technically theft (furto) because such property no longer belongs to the deceased, nor to the heir, since the latter has not yet taken possession. In the common law, the grant of letters testamentary, or letters of administration, relates back to the time of the death of the testator or intestate; so that the property of the estate is vested in the executor or administrator from that period.

Explorator /ëksplièydar/. In the civil law, a robber; a spoiler or plunderer.

Expiration. Cessation; termination from mere lapse of time, as the expiration of a lease, insurance policy, statute, and the like. Coming to close; termination or end.

The term “expiration,” as in an insurance policy, refers to termination of the policy by lapse of time covering the policy period, while “cancellation” refers to termination of the policy by act of either or both parties prior to ending of the policy period.

Expire. See Expiration.

Exples /a(k)spliy/z/ . See Espleses.

Expletia /akspliyda/ , expletia /akspliysh(i)y(a)/ , or explicita /akspliysh(h)(i)y(a)/ . The rents and profits of an estate.

Exploratio /ëksplakéysh(i)yow/ . In the civil law, the fourth pleading; equivalent to the surrejoinder of the common law.

Explicet. Not obscure or ambiguous, having no disguised meaning or reservation. Clear in understanding.

Exploitation /ëksplóytéshãh/ . Act or process of exploiting, making use of, or working up. Utilization by application of industry, argument, or other means of turning to account, as the exploitation of a mine or a forest. State Finance Co. v. Hamacher, 171 Wash. 15, 17 P.2d 610, 613. Taking unjust advantage of another for one’s own advantage or benefit.
Exploration. The examination and investigation of land supposed to contain valuable minerals, by drilling, boring, sinking shafts, driving tunnels, and other means, for the purpose of discovering the presence of ore and its extent.

Explorator /eksplərəˈɛdər/. A scout, huntsman, or chaser.

Export. To carry or to send abroad. Canton R. Co. v. Rogan, 340 U.S. 511, 71 S.Ct. 447, 449, 95 L.Ed. 488. To send, take, or carry an article of trade or commerce out of the country. To transport merchandise from one country to another in the course of trade. To carry out or convey goods by sea. Transportation of goods from United States to foreign country. West India Oil Co. v. Sancho, C.C.A. Puerto Rico, 108 F.2d 144, 147. See also Re-export.

Export, n. A thing or commodity exported. More commonly used in the plural.

Exportation. The act of sending or carrying goods and merchandise from one country to another. A severance of goods from mass of things belonging to United States with intention of uniting them to mass of things belonging to some foreign country. Matson Nav. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 136 Cal.2d 577, 289 P.2d 73, 77.

Export declaration. Document which contains details of export shipment and required by federal law.

Export-import Bank. Independent agency of federal government whose function is to aid in financing exports and imports.

Export quotas. Amounts of specific goods which may be exported. Such quotas are set by the federal government for purposes of national defense, economic stability, price support, etc.

Exports clause. Provision in U.S.Const., Art. I, Sec. 10, Cl. 2, limiting power of states to impose duties or imposts on imports or exports.

Export tax. Tax levied upon merchandise and goods shipped out of a country. Tax levied upon right to export or upon goods because of fact that they are being exported or intended to be exported. Virgo Corp. v. Paiewonsky, D.C.Virgin Islands, 251 F.Supp. 279, 283.

Expose. To show publicly; to display; to offer to the public view, as, to "expose" goods to sale, to "expose" a tariff or schedule of rates, to "expose" misconduct of public or quasi-public figures.

To place in a position where the object spoken of is open to danger, or where it is near or accessible to anything which may affect it detrimentally; as, to "expose" a child, or to expose oneself or another to a contagious disease or to danger or hazard of any kind.

For indecent exposure, see Indecent.

Exposté /eksˈpɔːz/ˌeksˈpɔːzɨ/. Fr. A statement; account; recital; explanation. The term is used in diplomatic language as descriptive of a written explanation of the reasons for a certain act or course of conduct. Exposure of discreditable matter concerning a person, government, etc.

Expostito /eksˈpɔːzəˌθiʃ(ɨ)ˈjʊə/. Lat. Explanation; exposition; interpretation.

Exposition. Explanation; interpretation.

Exposition de part. In French law, the abandonment of a child, unable to take care of itself, either in a public or private place.

Expostito quo ex visceribus cause nascitur, est aptissima et fortissima in lege /eksˈpɔːzəˌθiʃ(ɨ)ˈjʊə kwen kwiˈjeksəˌθiʃ(ɨ)ˈjʊə kwɪv vəˈsɛrɪbəʊs kəʊsə ˈneɪskaɪt ɜːr əptɪsɪmə ət ˈfɔrtɪsɪmə ɪn lɛɡ. That kind of interpretation which is born [or drawn] from the bowels [or vitals] of a cause is the aptest and most forcible in the law.

Expository statute. A law that is enacted to explain the meaning of a previously enacted law. Such statutes are often expressed thus: "The true intent and meaning of an act passed * * * be and is hereby declared to be"; "the provisions of the act shall not hereafter extend"; or "are hereby declared and enacted not to apply", and the like. This is a common mode of legislation.

Ex post facto /eksˈpɔːst ˈfəktəʊ/ˌ. After the fact; by an act or fact occurring after some previous act or fact, and relating thereto; by subsequent matter; the opposite of ab initio. Thus, a deed may be good ab initio, or, if invalid at its inception, may be confirmed by matter ex post facto.

Ex post facto law /eksˈpɔːst ˈfəktəʊ ˈləʊ/ˌ. A law passed after the occurrence of a fact or commission of an act, which retrospectively changes the legal consequences or relations of such fact or deed. By Art. I, § 10 of U.S.Const., the states are forbidden to pass "any ex post facto law." Most state constitutions contain similar prohibitions against ex post facto laws.

An "ex post facto law" is defined as a law which provides for the infliction of punishment upon a person for an act done which, when it was committed, was innocent; a law which aggravates a crime or makes it greater than when it was committed; a law that changes the punishment or inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when it was committed; a law that changes the rules of evidence and receives less or different testimony than was required at the time of the commission of the offense in order to convict the offender; a law which, assuming to regulate civil rights and remedies only, in effect imposes a penalty or the deprivation of a right which, when done, was lawful; a law which deprives persons accused of crime of some lawful protection to which they have become entitled, such as the protection of a former conviction or acquittal, or of the proclamation of amnesty; every law which, in relation to the offense or its consequences, alters the situation of a person to his disadvantage. Wilensky v. Fields, Fla., 267 So.2d 1, 5.

Exposure. The act or state of exposing or being exposed. See Exposé.

For "Indecent exposure," see Indecent.

Exposure of child. Placing child in such a place or position as to leave it unprotected against danger to its health or life or subject it to the peril of severe suffering or serious bodily harm.
Exposure of person. In criminal law, such an intentional exposure, in a public place, of the naked body or the private parts as is calculated to shock the feelings of chastity or to corrupt the morals of the community. See also Indecent (Indecent exposure).

Express. Clear; definite; explicit; plain; direct; unmistakable; not dubious or ambiguous. Declared in terms; set forth in words. Directly and distinctly stated. Made known distinctly and explicitly, and not left to inference. Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co. v. Federal Surety Co., C.C.A.Minn., 34 F.2d 270, 274. Manifested by direct and appropriate language, as distinguished from that which is inferred from conduct. The word is usually contrasted with "implied."

As to express Condition; Consent; Consideration; Contracts; Covenants; Dedication; Emancipation; Invitation; Malice; Notice; Obligation; Trust; Waiver; and Warranty, see those titles.

Express abrogation. Abrogation by express provision or enactment; the repeal of a law or provision by a subsequent one, referring directly to it. Express abrogation is that literally pronounced by the law either in general terms, as when a final clause abrogates or repeals all laws contrary to the provisions of the new one, or in particular terms, as when it abrogates certain preceding laws which are named.

Express active trust. See Trust.

Expressa nocent, non expressa non nocent /eksprésə nōsənt, nōn eksprésə nōn nōsənt/. Things expressed are [may be] prejudicial; things not expressed are not. Express words are sometimes prejudicial, which, if omitted, had done no harm.

Expressa non prosunt que non expressa prædærum /eksprésə nōn prōwsənt kwiə nōn eksprésə praudərm/. The expression of things of which, if unexpressed, one would have the benefit, is useless. Things expressed may be prejudicial which when not expressed will profit.

Express assumpt /eksprésə ssāmpət/. An undertaking to do some act, or to pay a sum of money to another, manifested by express terms. An undertaking made orally, by writing not under seal, or by matter of record, to perform act, or to pay sum of money to another. Holcomb v. Kentucky Union Co., 262 Ky. 192, 90 S.W.2d 25, 27; Anderson v. Biesman & Carrick Co., 287 Ill.App. 507, 4 N.E.2d 639, 640, 641.

Express authority. Authority delegated to agent by words which expressly authorize him to do a delegable act. Authority distinctly, plainly expressed, orally or in writing. Ulen v. Knecttle, 50 Wyo. 94, 58 P.2d 446, 449. Authority which is directly granted to or conferred upon agent in express terms. That authority which principal intentionally confers upon his agent by manifestations to him. Epstein v. Corporacion Peruana de Vapores, D.C.N.Y., 325 F.Supp. 535, 537.

That which confers power to do a particular identical thing set forth and declared exactly, plainly, and directly with well-defined limits. An authority given in direct terms, definitely and explicitly, and not left to inference or implication, as distinguished from authority which is general, implied, or not directly stated or given.

Express color. In old English law, an evasive form of special pleading in a case where the defendant ought to plead the general issue. Abolished by the common-law procedure act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict., c. 76, § 64.

Express common-law dedication. See Dedication.

Express company. A firm or corporation engaged in the business of transporting parcels or other movable property, in the capacity of common carriers, and especially undertaking the safe carriage and speedy delivery of small but valuable packages of goods and money.

Express conditions. See Condition.

Express contract. See Contract.

Express dissatisfaction. Where will declares that any one expressing dissatisfaction with its provisions should forfeit his interest, "dissatisfaction" is legally "expressed" when beneficiary contests or objects in legal proceeding to enforcement of any provision of will.

Expressed. Means stated or declared in direct terms; set forth in words; not left to inference or implication. Anderson v. Board of Ed. of School Dist. No. 91, 390 Ill. 412, 61 N.E.2d 562, 567. See Express.

Expressio eorum que tacite insunt nihil operatur /eksprésiə oʊrməʊ kwiə tæsiət inzənt ni(h)iəl əpərətər/. The expression or express mention of those things which are tacitly implied avails nothing. A man's own words are void, when the law speaks as much. Words used to express what the law will imply without them are mere words of abundance.

Expression, freedom of. One of the basic freedoms guaranteed by the First Amendment of U.S.Const. and by most state constitutions. Such is equivalent to freedom of speech, press, or assembly.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius /eksprésiə oʊnəɪəs əst ekskwɪsəoʊriz(h)(i)əʊn oʊltaɪriəs/. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.

Expressio unius personae est exclusio alterius /eksprésiə oʊnəɪəs pərsəʊnwɪən əst ekskwɪsəoʊriz(h)(i)əʊn oʊltaɪriəs/. The mention of one person is the exclusion of another.
Expressly. In an express manner; in direct or unmistakable terms; explicitly; definitely; directly. Le Ballister v. Redwood Theatres, 1 Cal.App.2d 447, 36 P.2d 827; St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. Hill, 336 Mo. 17, 76 S.W.2d 685, 689. The opposite of impliedly. Bolles v. Toledo Trust Co., 144 Ohio St. 195, 58 N.E.2d 381, 396.

Express malice. Express malice for purposes of first degree murder includes malice, formed design or intention to kill or to do great bodily harm, and sedate and deliberate mind of which that intention is the product. State v. Gardner, 7 Storey 588, 203 A.2d 77, 80. As used with respect to libel, means publication of defamatory material in bad faith, without belief in the truth of the matter published, or with reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the matter. Barlow v. International Harvester Co., 95 Idaho 881, 522 P.2d 1102, 1113. See also Malice.

Express permission. Within statute respecting automobile owner's liability, includes prior knowledge of intended use and affirmative and active consent thereto.

Express private trust. See Trust.

Express repeal. Abrogation or annulment of previously existing law by enactment of subsequent statute declaring that former law shall be revoked or abrogated.

Express republication. Occurs with respect to will when testator repeats ceremonies essential to valid execution, with avowed intention of republishing will.

Express request. That which occurs when one person commands or asks another to do or give something, or answers affirmatively when asked whether another shall do a certain thing.

Express terms. Within provision that qualified acceptance, in "express terms," varies effect of draft, "express terms" means clear, unambiguous, definite, certain, and unequivocal terms.

Express trust. See Trust.

Expressum facit cessare tacitum /eksprézam fésyst saéséry tássadém/. That which is expressed makes that which is implied to cease [that is, supersedes it, or controls its effect]. Thus, an implied covenant in a deed is in all cases controlled by an express covenant. Where a law sets down plainly its whole meaning the court is prevented from making it mean what the court pleases. Munro v. City of Albuquerque, 48 N.M. 306, 150 P.2d 733, 743.

Expressum servitium regat vel declarat tacitum /eksprézam servish(y)am riyat vél dékléráfr tássadém/. Let service expressed rule or declare what is silent.

Express warranty. See Warranty.

Expromissio /ekspramis(h)(i)yow/. In the civil law, the species of novation by which a creditor accepts a new debtor, who becomes bound instead of the old, the latter being released.

Expromissor /ekspramísar/. In the civil law, a person who assumes the debt of another, and becomes solely liable for it, by a stipulation with the creditor. He differs from a surety, inasmuch as this contract is one of novation, while a surety is jointly liable with his principal.

Expromittere /ekspramidariy/. In the civil law, to undertake for another with the view of becoming liable in his place.

Expropriation. A taking, as under eminent domain. This term is also used in the context of a foreign government taking an American industry located in the foreign country. In Louisiana, the word has the same general meaning as eminent domain.

A voluntary surrender of rights or claims; the act of divesting oneself of that which was previously claimed as one's own, or renouncing it. In this sense it is the opposite of "appropriation."

See also Condemnation; Eminent domain.

Ex proprio motu /eks prówpriyow mówduw/. Of its own accord. See Ex mero motu.

Ex proprio vigore /eks prówpriyow vágóriy/. By their or its own force.

Ex provisone hominis /eks prvíz(h)yójówni hómínya/. By the provision of man. By the limitation of the party, as distinguished from the disposition of the law.

Ex provisone mariti /eks prvíz(h)yójówni márétäy/. From the provision of the husband.

Expulsion. A putting or driving out. Ejectment; banishment; a cutting off from the privileges of an institution or society permanently. The act of depriving a member of a corporation, legislative body, assembly, society, commercial organization, etc., of his membership in the same, by a legal vote of the body itself, for breach of duty, improper conduct, or other sufficient cause. Also, in the law of torts and of landlord and tenant, an eviction or forcible putting out. See Deportation; Ejectment; Eviction; Expel; Forcible entry and detainer; Summary (Summary process).

Expunge /ekspréng/. To destroy; blot out; obliterate; erase; efface designedly; strike out wholly. The act of physically destroying information—including criminal records—in files, computers, or other depositories.

Expungement of record. Process by which record of criminal conviction is destroyed or sealed after expiration of time. See also Erasure (Erasure of record).

Expurgation /eksprérgeyshän/. The act of purging or cleansing, as where a book is published without its obscene passages.

Expurgator /eksprérgeydr/. One who corrects by expurgating.

Ex quasi contractu /eks kwéysáy kantrékchuw/. From quasi contract.

Ex rel. See Ex relatione.

Ex relatione /eks ráléyshiyówni/. Upon relation or information.

Legal proceedings which are instituted by the attorney general (or other proper person) in the name and behalf of the state, but on the information and at the instigation of an individual who has a private interest in the matter, are said to be taken “on the relation” (ex relatione) of such person, who is called the “relator.” Such a cause is usually entitled thus: “State ex rel. Doe v. Roe.”

In the books of reports, when a case is said to be reported ex relatione, it is meant that the reporter derives his account of it, not from personal knowledge, but from the relation or narrative of some person who was present at the argument.

Ex rights. Literally, without rights. Stock sold ex rights is sold without privileged subscription rights to a current new issue by a corporation.

Ex rigore juris (eks rägöri jüras/). According to the rigor or strictness of law; in strictness of law.

Exrogare (eks rägräri/). (From ex, from, and rogare, to pass a law.) In Roman law, to take something by a new law.

Ex scriptis olim visis (eks skripts ülym väyzäs/). From writings formerly seen. A term used as descriptive of that kind of proof of handwriting where the knowledge has been acquired by the witness having seen letters or other documents professing to be the handwriting of the party, and having afterwards communicated personally with the party upon the contents of those letters or documents, or having otherwise acted upon them by written answers, producing further correspondence or acquiescence by the party in some matter to which they relate, or by the witness transacting with the party in some business to which they relate, or by any other mode of communication between the party and the witness which, in the ordinary course of the transactions of life, induces a reasonable presumption that the letters or documents were the handwriting of the party.

Ex ship. See Ship.

Ex statuto (eks stachüwdow/). According to the statute.

Ex stipulatu actio (eks stipiäleydow äksbüiyow/). In the civil law, an action of stipulation. An action given to recover marriage portions.

Ex tempore (eks tämpariy/). From or in consequence of time; by lapse of time. Ex diuturno tempore, from length of time. Without preparation or premeditation.

Extend. Term lends itself to great variety of meanings, which must in each case be gathered from context. It may mean to expand, enlarge, prolong, lengthen, widen, carry or draw out further than the original limit; e.g., to extend the time for filing an answer, to extend a lease, term of office, charter, railroad track, etc. Keetch v. Cordner, 90 Utah 423, 62 P.2d 273, 277. To stretch out or to draw out Crane Enamelware Co. v. Smith, 168 Tenn. 203, 76 S.W.2d 644; Loeffler v. Federal Supply Co., 187 Oktl. 373, 102 P.2d 862, 864. See also Extension; Renewal.

Extended. A lengthening out of time previously fixed and not the arbitrary setting of a new date. Stretched, spread, or drawn out.

Extended coverage clause. Provision in insurance policy which carries protection for hazards beyond those covered in the basic policy. See also Omnibus clause.

Extended insurance. An option to use dividend to procure extended insurance is one to procure extension of term of insurance from date to which premiums have been paid, without further payment. Williams v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., Tex., 291 U.S. 170, 54 S.Ct. 348, 78 L.Ed. 711.

Extendi facias (äksäntëdad feys(h)(j)iyas/). Lat. You cause to be extended. In English practice, the name of a writ of execution (derived from its two emphatic words); more commonly called an “extent.”

Extension. An increase in length of time (e.g. of expiration date of lease, or due date of note).

The word “extension” ordinarily implies the existence of something to be extended. See also Renewal.

Bankruptcy. An extension proposal is an agreement on part of creditors that they will extend time within which their claims are probably to be paid, in full as to secured creditors, on terms proposed by debtor and approved by court. Heldstab v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, C.C.A.Kan., 91 F.2d 655, 658.

Commercial law. An allowance of additional time for the payment of debts. An agreement between a debtor and his creditors, by which they allow him further time for the payment of his liabilities. A creditor’s indulgence by giving a debtor further time to pay an existing debt.

Lease. The word “extension,” when used in its proper and usual sense in connection with a lease, means a prolongation of the previous leasehold estate. The distinction between “extension” and “renewal” of lease is chiefly that, in the case of renewal, a new lease is requisite, while, in the case of extension, the same lease continues in force during additional period upon performance of stipulated act. An option for renewal implies giving of new lease on same terms as old lease, while an option for extension contemplates a continuance of old lease for a further period.

Patents. Extension of life of patent for an additional statutorily allowed period.

Extension agreements. Those agreements which provide for further time in which performance of the basic agreement may be performed.

Extension or renewal of note. Takes place when parties agree upon valuable consideration for maturity of debt on day subsequent to that provided in original contract. Elk Horn Bank & Trust Co. v. Spragins, 182 Ark. 27, 30 S.W.2d 858, 859.

Extensive. Widely extended in space, time, or scope; great or wide or capable of being extended.

Extensores /ékstensóriyz/. In old English law, extenders or appraisers. The name of certain officers appointed to appraise and divide or apportion lands. It was their duty to make a survey, schedule, or inventory of the lands, to lay them out under certain heads, and then to ascertain the value of each, as preparatory to the division or partition.

Extent. Amount; scope; range; magnitude.

In old English law, a writ of execution issuing from the exeqcher upon a debt due the crown, or upon a debt due a private person, if upon recognizance or statute merchant or staple, by which the sheriff was directed to appraise the debtor's lands, and, instead of selling them, to set them off to the creditor for a term during which the rental will satisfy the judgment. It was so called because the sheriff was to cause the lands to be appraised at their full extended value before he delivers them to the plaintiff. The term was at one time used in the various states of the United States to denote writs which give the creditor possession of the debtor's lands for a limited time till the debt be paid.

Extenta manerli /áksténta manéríyáy/. (The extent or survey of a manor.) The title of English statute passed 4 Edw. I, St. 1; being a sort of direction for making a survey or terrier of a manor, and all its appendages.

Extent in aid. In old English law, that kind of extent which issued at the instance and for the benefit of a debtor to the crown for the recovery of a debt due to himself. This writ was much abused, owing to some peculiar privileges possessed by crown-debtors, and its use was regulated by Stat. 57 Geo. III, c. 117. 3 Bl.Comm. 419. Abolished by Crown Proceedings Act (1947). The writ formerly used by a debtor of the king against his debtor to enforce the right of preference given to him because of his indebtedness to the king. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Carter, 161 Va. 381, 170 S.E. 764, 768.

Extent in chief. In old English law, a summary process by which the king's action was commenced against his debtor and his body, personal property (tangible and intangible), and lands at once seized for the satisfaction of the king's debt. The principal kind of extent, issuing at the suit of the crown, for the recovery of the crown's debt. Abolished by Crown Proceedings Act (1947). An adverse proceeding by the king, for the recovery of his own debt.

Extent of such payment. Under statute extending right of subrogation to Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, phrase "to the extent of such payment" is equivalent to term "pro tanto" or words "as to the portion of the deposit paid". Federal Deposit Ins. Corporation v. Citizens State Bank of Niuangua, C.C.A.Mo., 130 F.2d 102, 103.

Extenuate /áksténuweyt/. To lessen; to palliate; to mitigate.

Extenuating circumstances. Such as render a delict or crime less aggravated, heinous, or reprehensible than it would otherwise be, or tend to palliate or lessen its guilt. Such circumstances may ordinarily be shown in order to reduce the punishment or damages. See also Extraordinary circumstances.

Extenuation. That which renders a crime or tort less heinous than it would be without it. It is opposed to aggravation. See Extenuating circumstances.

External. Apparent, outward, visible from the outside, patent, exterior, capable of being perceived. Acting from without, as the external surface of a body; physical or corporeal, as distinguished from mental or moral. Provident Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 18 Tenn.App. 452, 79 S.W.2d 292, 296. In double indemnity clause of life policy, the term "external" applies to the force or means and not to the injury. Hanna v. Rio Grande Nat. Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 908, 911.

Exterritoriality. The privilege of those persons (such as foreign ministers) who, though temporarily resident within a country, are not subject to the operation of its laws. The exemption from the operation of the ordinary laws of the country accorded to foreign monarchs temporarily within the country and their retinue, to diplomatic agents and the members of their household, and to others of similar position and rank. See Capitulation; Extraterritoriality.

Exterus /ékstárás/. Lat. A foreigner or alien; one born abroad. The opposite of civis.

Exterus non habet terras /ékstárás nón héybat téhrás/. An alien holds no lands.

Ex testamento /ékstéstámentó/. From, by, or under a will. The opposite of ab intestato (q.v.).

Extinct. Extinguished. No longer in existence or use. Lacking a claimant. A rent is said to be extinguished when it is destroyed and put out. See Extinguishment.

Extincto subjecto, tollitur adjunctum /ákstíktów subjektó tôldárd shjakít/. When the subject [or substance] is extinguished, the incident [or adjunct] ceases. Thus, when the business for which a partnership has been formed is completed, or brought to an end, the partnership itself ceases.

Extinguish. To bring or put an end to. Onondaga Water Service Corporation v. Crown Mills, Inc., 132 Misc. 848, 230 N.Y.S. 691, 698. To terminate or cancel. To put out, quench, stifle, as to extinguish a fire or flame. See also Cancellation; Termination.

Extinguishment. The destruction or cancellation of a right, power, contract, or estate. The annihilation of a collateral thing or subject in the subject itself out of which it is derived. See Cancellation.

"Extinguishment" is sometimes confounded with "merger," though there is a clear distinction between them. "Merger" is only a mode of extinguishment, and applies to estates only under particular circumstances; but "extinguishment" is a term of general application to rights, as well as estates. "Extinguishment" connotes the end of a thing, precluding the existence of future life therein; in "mergers" there is a carrying on of the substance of the thing, except that it is merged into and becomes a part of a separate thing with a new identity. McRoberts v. McRoberts, 177 Okl. 156, 57 P.2d 1175, 1177.

Extinguishment of common. In English law, loss of the right to have common, which could happen from various causes.

Extinguishment of copyhold. In English law, a copyhold is said to be extinguished when the freehold and copyhold interests unite in the same person and in the same right, which may be either by the copyhold interest coming to the freehold or by the freehold interest coming to the copyhold.

Extinguishment of debts. This takes place by payment; by accord and satisfaction; by novation, or the substitution of a new debtor; by merger, when the creditor recovers a judgment or accepts a security of a new debtor, or by compromise; and where one of the parties, debtor or creditor, makes the other his executor. See also Bankruptcy.

Extinguishment of legacy. This occurs in case the identical thing bequeathed is not in existence, or has been disposed of so that it does not form part of the testator's estate, at the time of his death. See Ademption.

Extinguishment of lien. Discharge by operation of law.

Extinguishment of rent. If a person have a yearly rent of lands, and afterwards purchase those lands, so that he has as good an estate in the land as in the rent, the rent is extinguished. Rent may also be extinguished by conjunction of estates, by confirmation, by grant, by release, and by surrender.

Extinguishment of ways. This is usually effected by unity of possession, as if a man had a way over the close of another, and he purchased that close, the way is extinguished.

Exterpation /ékstarpéyshan/ . In English law, a species of destruction or waste, analogous to estreprement. See Estrepement.

Extrirpation /ékstarpéshiyówni/. A judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lay against a person who, when a verdict was found against him for land, etc., maliciously overthrew any house or extripated any trees upon it.

Extorsively /skóstórsvili/. A technical word used in indictments for extortion.

Extort. To compel or coerce, as a confession or information by any means serving to overcome one's power of resistance, thus making the confession or admin-
Extra allowance. In New York practice, a sum in addition to costs, which may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to the successful party in cases of unusual difficulty. Hascall v. King, 54 App.Div. 441, 66 N.Y.S. 1112.

Extra commercia /ékstra kamárs(h)(i)ya/. Property once dedicated to public use is "extra commercia".

Extract, v. To draw out or forth; to pull out from a fixed position.

Extract, n. A portion or segment of a writing.

Extracta curis /ékstráekta kyúriyiy/. In old English law, the issues or profits of holding a court, arising from the customary fees, etc.

Extradition. The surrender by one state or country to another of an individual accused or convicted of an offense outside its own territory and within the territorial jurisdiction of the other, which being competent to try and punish him, demands the surrender. U.S.Const., Art. IV, § 2; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3181 et seq. Most states have adopted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. See also Interstate rendition; Rendition.

Extra dividend. Dividend paid by corporation in cash or stock beyond that which is regularly paid. See also Ex dividendi; Extraordinary dividend.

Extra-dotal property. In Louisiana this term is used to designate that property which forms no part of the dowry of a woman, and which is also called "paraphernal property." Fleitas v. Richardson, 147 U.S. 550, 13 S.Ct. 495, 37 L.Ed. 276.

Extra feodum /ékstra fýd(1)dam/. Out of his fee; out of the seigniory, or not held of him that claims it.

Extrahazardous. In the law of insurance, means conditions of special and unusual danger.

Extrahora /ékstrahyúra/. In old English law, an animal wandering or straying about, with an owner; an estray.

Extrajudicial /ékstrajúwdíshal/. That which is done, given, or effected outside the course of regular judicial proceedings. Not founded upon, or unconnected with, the action of a court of law, as e.g. extrajudicial evidence, or an extrajudicial oath.

That which, though done in the course of regular judicial proceedings, is unnecessary to such proceedings, or interpolated, or beyond their scope; as an extrajudicial opinion (dictum).

That which does not belong to the judge or his jurisdiction, notwithstanding fact that he takes cognizance of it.

Extrajudicial confession /ékstrajúwdíshal kanféshan/. See Confession.

Extrajudicial evidence. That which is used to satisfy private persons as to facts requiring proof.

Extrajudicial oath. One taken not in the course of judicial proceedings, or taken without any authority of law, though taken formally before a proper person.

Extrajudicial statement. Any utterance, written or oral, made outside of court. It is governed by the hearsay rule and its exceptions when offered in court as evidence.

Extra judicium /ékstra júdiš(1)am/. Extrajudicial; out of the proper cause; out of court; beyond the jurisdiction. See Extrajudicial.

Extra jus /ékstra jós/. Beyond the law; more than the law requires.

Extralateral right. In mining law, the right of the owner of a mining claim duly located on the public domain to follow, and mine, any vein or lode the apex of which lies within the boundaries of his location on the surface, notwithstanding the course of the vein on its dip or downward direction may so far depart from the perpendicular as to extend beyond the planes which would be formed by the vertical extension downwards of the side lines of his location.

Extramural /ékstramýrdí/. As applied to the powers of a municipal corporation, its "extramural" powers are those exercised outside the corporate limits, as distinguished from "intramural".

Extranational. Beyond the territorial and governing limits of a country. See also Extraterritorial.

Extraneous evidence. With reference to a contract, deed, will, or any writing, extraneous evidence is such as is not furnished by the document itself, but is derived from outside sources; the same as evidence aliunde. See also Aliunde; Parol evidence rule.

Extraneous offense. One that is extra, beyond, or foreign to the offense for which the party is on trial. Ridinger v. State, 146 Tex.Cr.R. 286, 174 S.W.2d 319, 320.

Extraneous questions. Issues which are beyond or beside the point to be decided.

Extraneus /ékstréniyas/. In old English law, one foreign born; a foreigner.

In Roman law, an heir not born in the family of the testator. Those of a foreign state. The same as alienus.

Extraneus est subditus qui extra terram, i.e., potestatem regis natus est /ékstréniyas șest sãbdadás kwá ekstra téhrãm, id șest, pówdstéyeyam riýjás nýydâ șest/. A foreigner is a subject who is born out of the territory, i.e., government of the king.
Extraordinary.  Out of the ordinary; exceeding the usual, average, or normal measure or degree; beyond or out of the common order or rule; not usual, regular, or of a customary kind; remarkable; uncommon; rare.  Courtney v. Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, 346 Mo. 703, 142 S.W.2d 858, 861.  The word is both comprehensive and flexible in meaning.  Beyond or out of the common order or method; exceeding the ordinary degree; not ordinary; unusual; employed for an exceptional purpose or on a special occasion.  As a noun it is defined as something extraordinary, especially, an extraordinary expense or allowance.  State v. Rogers, 142 Kan. 841, 52 P.2d 1185, 1195.

Extraordinary designates an accident, casualty, occurrence or risk of a class or kind other than those which ordinary experience or prudence would foresee, anticipate or provide for.  Western & Atlantic Ry. Co. v. Hassler, 92 Ga.App. 278, 88 S.E.2d 559, 562.

Extraordinary average.  A contribution by all the parties concerned in a commercial voyage, either as to the vessel or cargo, toward a loss sustained by some of the parties in interest for the benefit of all.

Extraordinary care.  Synonymous with greatest care, utmost care, highest degree of care.  See Care; Diligence; Negligence.

Extraordinary circumstances.  Factors of time, place, etc., which are not usually associated with a particular thing or event; out of the ordinary factors.  See also Extenuating circumstances.

Extraordinary danger.  Danger or risk of employment, not ordinarily incident to the service.  The "extraordinary circumstances" justifying federal equitable intervention in pending state criminal prosecution must be extraordinary in the sense of creating an extraordinary pressing need for immediate federal equitable relief, not merely in the sense of presenting a highly unusual factual situation.  Kugler v. Helfant, N.J., 421 U.S. 117, 95 S.Ct. 1524, 1531, 44 L.Ed.2d 15.  See also Extraordinary hazard.

Extraordinary dividend.  Dividend of corporation which is nonrepetitive and generally paid at irregular times because of some unusual corporate event (e.g. unusually high profits).  An "extraordinary dividend" is distinguished from an "ordinary dividend" or "regular dividend" in that it is not declared from ordinary profits arising out of regular course of business of corporation and is generally declared by reasons of unusually large income or unexpected increment in capital assets due to fortuitous conditions or circumstances occurring outside of activities and control of corporation but advantageous to corporation either in stepping up its product and sales or in giving added value to its property.  In re Bank of N. Y. & Fifth Ave. Bank, 105 N.Y.S.2d 211, 217, 222.  See also Extra dividend.

Cash disbursements by "wasting asset" companies are apportioned as "extraordinary dividends" where they represent, in part at least, distribution of proceeds of capital assets.

Extraordinary expenses.  This term in a constitutional provision that the state may incur indebtedness for extraordinary expenses, means other than ordinary expenses and such as are incurred by the state for the promotion of the general welfare, compelled by some unforeseen condition which is not regularly provided for by law, such as flood, famine, fire, earthquake, pestilence, war, or any other condition that will compel the state to put forward its highest endeavors to protect the people, their property, liberty, or lives.

Extraordinary flood.  One of those unexplained occurrences whose coming is not foreshadowed by the usual course of nature, and whose magnitude and destructiveness could not have been anticipated or provided against by the exercise of ordinary foresight.  Jensen v. Buffalo Drainage Dist. of Cloud County, 148 Kan. 712, 84 P.2d 961, 965.  One of such unusual occurrence that it could not have been foreseen by men of ordinary experience and prudence.

Extraordinary grand jury.  Such jury is limited in scope of its investigation which may not go beyond terms of executive proclamation, and examination of witness must be confined within those terms, and must not be used as a means of disclosing or interfering with extraneous matters.

Extraordinary hazard.  One not commonly associated with a job or undertaking.  If hazards are increased by what other employees do, and injured employee has no part in increasing them, they are "extraordinary".  Stone v. Howe, 92 N.H. 425, 32 A.2d 494, 497.  See also Extraordinary risk.

Extraordinary remedies.  The writs of mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and some others are often classified or termed "extraordinary remedies," in contradistinction to the ordinary remedy by action.

Under Rules practice in most states, most extraordinary "writs" have been abolished.  In any action seeking relief formerly obtainable under any such writ, the procedure shall follow that of a regular action.

Extraordinary repairs.  Within the meaning of a lease, such as are made necessary by some unusual or unforeseen occurrence which does not destroy the building but merely renders it less suited to the use for which it was intended.  Courtney v. Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, 346 Mo. 703, 142 S.W.2d 858, 861.  In lease provisions for "extraordinary" repairs, word "extraordinary" means beyond or out of common order of rule, not the usual, customary or regular kind, not ordinary.  Atlanta & St. A. B. Ry. Co. v. Chilean Nitrate Sales Corp., D.C.Fla., 277 F.Supp. 242, 246.

Extraordinary risk.  An "extraordinary risk" is one lying outside of the sphere of the normal, arising out of conditions not usual in the business.  It is one which is not normally and necessarily incident to the employment.  It is one which may be obviated by the exercise of reasonable care by the employer.  See also Extraordinary hazard.

Extraordinary session.  A legislative session, called usually by the governor, which meets in the interval between regular sessions.  In most States such sessions are limited to the consideration of matters specified in the governor's call.  See also Extra session, supra.
EXTRAORDINARY STORM

Extraordinary storm. One which is not necessarily an unprecedented one, but one that happens so rarely that it is unusual and not ordinarily to be expected. Oklahoma City v. Evans, 173 Okl. 586, 50 P.2d 234, 238. See also Extraordinary flood.

Extraordinary writs. See Extraordinary remedies.

Extraparochial /ekstraparook'fkal/. In English law, out of a parish; not within the bounds or limits of any parish.

Extrapolation. The process of estimating an unknown number outside the range of known numbers. Term sometimes used in cases when a court deduces a principle of law from another case.

Extra presentiam mariti /ekstra prazenshyam maritday/. Out of her husband’s presence.

Extra quatuor maria /ekstra kwodwuar marriya/. Beyond the four seas; out of the kingdom of England.

Extra regnum /ekstra regnam/. Out of the realm.

Extra session. After a Legislature has adjourned or prorogued, it may be recalled for an additional session by the Governor to deal with matters which could not be considered during the regular term. Also, a court may provide additional court sessions to eliminate or reduce a case backlog. See also Extraordinary session.

Extraterritorial. Beyond the physical and juridical boundaries of a particular state or country. See Extraterritoriality.

Extraterritoriality. The extraterritorial operation of laws; that is, their operation upon persons, rights, or jural relations, existing beyond the limits of the enacting state or nation, but still amenable to its laws. A term used, especially formerly, to express, in lieu of the word extrerritoriality the exemption from the obligation of the laws of a state granted to foreign diplomatic agents, warships, etc. The term is used to indicate jurisdiction exercised by a nation in other countries by treaty, or by its own ministers or consuls in foreign lands. Crime is said to be extraterritorial when committed in a state or country other than that of the forum in which the party is tried.

Extraterritorial jurisdiction. Juridical power which extends beyond the physical limits of a particular state or country. See Long-arm statutes.

Extra territorium /ekstra tehroaritriyam/. Beyond or without the territory.

Extra territorium jus dicentis impune non paretur /ekstra tehroaritriyam jas dasentay impyuwniyn non pariyad/. One who exercises jurisdiction out of his territory is not obeyed with impunity. He who exercises judicial authority beyond his proper limits cannot be obeyed with safety.

Extravagantes /ekstrapoganytyez/. In canon law, those decretal epistles which were published after the Clementines. They were so called because at first they were not digested or arranged with the other papal constitutions, but seemed to be, as it were, detached from the canon law. They continued to be called by the same name when they were afterwards inserted in the body of the canon law. The first extravagantes are those of Pope John XXII, successor of Clement V. The last collection was brought down to the year 1483, and was called the “Common Extravagantes,” notwithstanding that they were likewise incorporated with the rest of the canon law.

Extra viam /ekstra vyam/. Outside the way. In common law pleading, where the defendant in trespass pleaded a right of way in justification, and the replication alleged that the trespass was committed outside the limits of the way claimed, these were the technical words to be used.

Extra vires /ekstra vyaritzy/. Beyond powers. See Ultra (Ultra vires).

Extra work. As used in connection with construction contract, means work done not required in performance of the contract, i.e. something done or furnished in addition to or in excess of the requirement of the contract. Work entirely outside and independent of contract—something not required or contemplated in its performance.

Extra work, for which a contractor is entitled to charge additional compensation, depends on construction of the original contract, and generally means only labor and materials not contemplated by or embraced in terms of the original contract. Trinity Builders, Inc. v. Schaff, N.D., 199 N.W.2d 914, 918. Such work is usually defined as being work not foreseen at time of entrance into contract. W. R. Ferguson, Inc. v. William A. Berbusse, Jr., Inc., Del., 216 A.2d 876, 879. Materials and labor not contemplated by the contract, but which are required by changes in the plans and specifications made after the contract had been entered into, are “extra work”. Collins v. Hall, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 311, 314.

Extreme. At the utmost point, edge, or border; most remote. Last; conclusive. Greatest, highest, strongest, or the like. Immoderate; violent.

Extreme case. One in which the facts or the law or both reach the outer limits of probability; desperate.

Extreme cruelty. Extreme cruelty authorizing divorce may consist of personal injury or physical violence or it may be acts or omissions of such character as to destroy peace of mind or impair bodily or mental health of person upon whom inflicted or be such as to destroy the objects of matrimony. Schlueter v. Schlueter, 158 Neb. 233, 62 N.W.2d 871, 876.

Extreme low tide. Tides which are lower than lower low. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Extrems /in/ skstriymas/. When a person is sick, beyond the hope of recovery, and near death, he is said to be in extremis.

Extremis probatis, presumuntur media /skstriymas probeydas, priyzymintar myliydiya/. Extremes being proved, intermediate things are presumed.

Extremity. The furthest point, section, or part. Limb of the body (hand or foot). Extreme danger or need. Desperate act or measure.
Extrinsic. Foreign; from outside sources; dehors. As to "Extrinsic fraud", see Fraud.

Grounds for quashing of indictment may be matters "intrinsic" to the pleading, as defects apparent upon its face. United States v. Frankfeld, D.C.D.C., 38 F.Supp. 1018, 1019.

Extrinsic ambiguity. In a written contract, such is an uncertainty which does not arise by the terms of the instrument itself, but is created by some collateral matter not appearing in the instrument. Pacific Indemnity Co. v. California Electric Works, 29 Cal. App.2d 260, 84 P.2d 313, 320.

Extrinsic evidence. External evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agreement, contract, and the like. Extrinsic evidence is also said to be evidence not legitimately before the tribunal in which the determination is made. See Parol evidence rule.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio /éks tárpay kóza nòn órdar áksh(iy)ow/. Out of a base [illegal, or immoral] consideration, an action does [can] not arise.

Ex turpi contractu actio non oritur /éks tárpay kántrikchuw áksh(iy)ow nòn órdar/. From an immoral or iniquitous contract an action does not arise. A contract founded upon an illegal or immoral consideration cannot be enforced by action.

Exuere patriam /éks yùwna párdiy/. Of one part or side; on one side.

Ex uno discis omnes /éks yùwnow disiyz ómniz/. From one thing you can discern all.

Exuperare /égz(y)ùwpériy/. To overbear; to oppress, or to take.

Ex utroque parte /éks yuwréykwiy párdiy/. On both sides.

Ex utrique parentibus conjuncti /éks yuwréykwiy párdiy/. Related on the side of both parents; of the whole blood.

Ex visceribus /éks vaséhrbas/. From the bowels. From the vital part, the very essence of the thing. Ex visceribus verborum, from the mere words and nothing else.

Ex visitatione Dei /éks vizateyshiyówni diyay/. By the dispensation of God; by reason of physical incapacity. Anciently, when a prisoner, being arraigned, stood silent instead of pleading, a jury was impaneled to inquire whether he obstinately stood mute or was dumb ex visitatione Dei.

Also by natural, as distinguished from violent, causes. When a coroner's inquest finds that the death was due to disease or other natural cause, it is frequently phrased "ex visitatione Dei."

Ex visu scriptionis /éks váysyuw skripshiyównas/. From sight of the writing; from having seen a person write. A term employed to describe one of the modes of proof of handwriting.

Ex vi termini /éks váy tármusay/. From or by the force of the term. From the very meaning of the expression used. 2 Bl.Comm. 109, 115.

Ex voluntate /éks vólanteydip/. Voluntarily; from free will or choice.

Ex warrants. A security is traded ex warrants when sold without warrants which have been retained by seller.

Eyde /éyd/. Aid; assistance; relief. A subsidy.

Eyewitness identification. Type of evidence by which one who has seen the event testifies as to the person or persons involved from his own memory of the event. See also Lineup.

Eygne /éyn/. The same as "eigne" (q.v.).

Eyre /éar/. A journey; a court of itinerant justices.

Justices in eyre were judges commissioned in Anglo-Norman times in England to travel systematically through the kingdom, once in seven years, holding courts in specified places for the trial of certain descriptions of causes.

Eyrer /éar/. L. Fr. To travel or journey; to go about or itinerate.
F. Under the old English criminal law, this letter was branded upon felons upon their being admitted to clergy; as also upon those convicted of fights or frays, or falsity. Federal Reporter, First Series.

F.A.A. Federal Aviation Administration. In maritime insurance means: "Free of all average", denoting that the insurance is against total loss only.

Fabrica /fæˈbrɪkə/. In old English law, the making or coining of money.

Fabricare /fæˈbrɪkərɪə/. Lat. To make. Used in old English law of a lawful coining, and also of an unlawful making or counterfeiting of coin. Used in an indictment for forging a bill of lading.

Fabricate. To invent; to devise falsely.

Fabricated evidence. Evidence manufactured or arranged after the fact, and either wholly false or else warped and discolored by artifice and contrivance with a deceitful intent. To fabricate evidence is to arrange or manufacture circumstances or indicia, after the fact committed, with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if accidental or undesigned. To devise falsely or contrive by artifice with the intention to deceive. Such evidence may be wholly forged and artificial, or it may consist in so warping and distorting real facts as to create an erroneous impression in the minds of those who observe them and then presenting such impression as true and genuine. See also Fabricated fact.

Fabricated fact. In the law of evidence, a fact existing only in statement, without any foundation in truth. An actual or genuine fact to which a false appearance has been designedly given; a physical object placed in a false connection with another, or with a person on whom it is designed to cast suspicion. See also Decel; Fraud.

Fabric lands. In old English law, lands given towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairing of cathedral and other churches.

Fabula /fæˈbʊlə/. In old European law, a contract or formal agreement; particularly used in the Lombardic and Visigothic laws to denote a marriage contract or a will.

Face. The surface of anything, especially the front, upper, or outer part or surface. That which particularly offers itself to the view of a spectator. The words of a written paper in their apparent or obvious meaning, as, the face of a note, bill, bond, check, draft, judgment record, or contract. The face of a judgment for which it was rendered exclusive of interest. Cunningham v. Great Southern Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 765, 773.

Face amount. The face amount of an instrument is that shown by the mere language employed, and excludes any accrued interest. See Face of instrument; Face value.

Face amount insured by the policy. Within statute relating to extended life insurance, means the amount which is, in all events, payable under the policy as straight life insurance without regard to additional features such as accident or disability insurance. Wilkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 350 Mo. 185, 165 S.W.2d 858, 861, 862; Wilkins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 236 Mo.App. 586, 159 S.W.2d 354, 356. See also Face of policy; Face value.

Face of instrument. That which is shown by the language employed, without any explanation, modification, or addition from extrinsic facts or evidence. Investors' Syndicate v. Willcuts, D.C.Minn., 45 F.2d 900, 902. Thus, if the express terms of the paper disclose a fatal legal defect, it is said to be "void on its face." Regarded as an evidence of debt, the face of an instrument is the principal sum which it expresses to be due or payable, without any additions in the way of interest or costs.

Face of judgment. The sum for which it was rendered, exclusive of interest.

Face of policy. A phrase which, as used in a statute forbidding life insurance policies to contain provision for any mode of settlement at maturity of less value than the amount insured on the "face of the policy," does not mean merely the first page, but denotes the entire insurance contract contained in the policy, including a rider attached and referred to on the first page. See also Face value.

Face of record. The entire record in a case, not merely what the judgment recites. Every part of trial proceedings reserved in courts of record under direction of court for purpose of its records. Permian Oil Co. v. Smith, 129 Tex. 413, 107 S.W.2d 564, 566. The "face of the record" means, in a criminal case, the indictment and the verdict. See also Record.
The word "facilities" embraces anything which aids or makes easier the performance of the activities involved in the business of a person or corporation. Hartford Electric Light Co. v. Federal Power Commis.

face amount.

A name formerly given to certain notes of some of the banks in the state of Connecticut, which were made payable in two years after the close of the war of 1812. Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322.

Facsimile probate. In England, where the construction of a will may be affected by the appearance of the original paper, the court will order the probate to pass in facsimile, as it may possibly help to show the meaning of the testator.

Facsimile signature. One which has been prepared and reproduced by some mechanical or photographic process. Many states have adopted the Uniform Facsimile Signatures of Public Officials Act.

Fact. A thing done; an action performed or an incident transpiring; an event or circumstance; an actual occurrence; an actual happening in time space or an event mental or physical; that which has taken place. City of South Euclid v. Clapacs, 6 Ohio Misc. 101, 213 N.E.2d 828, 832. A fact is either a state of things, that is, an existence, or a motion, that is, an event. The quality of being actual; actual existence or occurrence.

Evidence. A circumstance, event or occurrence as it actually takes or took place; a physical object or appearance, as it usually exists or existed. An actual and absolute reality, as distinguished from mere supposition or opinion. A truth, as distinguished from fiction or error. "Fact" means reality of events or things the actual occurrence or existence of which is to be determined by evidence. Peoples v. Peoples, 10 N.C.App. 402, 179 S.E.2d 138, 141. Under Rule of Civil Procedure 41(b), providing for motion for disposal of all questions of fact. Missal at close of plaintiff's evidence in nonjury case on ground that upon the facts and the law plaintiff has shown no right to relief, the "facts" referred to are the prima facie facts shown by plaintiff's evidence viewed in light most favorable to him. Schad v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, C.C.A. Pa., 136 F.2d 991, 993.

Fact and law distinguished. "Fact" is very frequently used in opposition or contrast to "law". Thus, questions of fact are for the jury; questions of law for the court. Fraud in fact consists in an actual intention to defraud, carried into effect; while fraud imputed by law arises from the man's conduct in its necessary relations and consequences. A "fact", as distinguished from the "law", may be taken as that out of which the point of law arises, that which is asserted to be or not to be, and is to be presumed or proved to be or not to be for the purpose of applying or refusing to apply a rule of law. Hinckley v. Town of Barnstable, 311 Mass. 600, 42 N.E.2d 581, 584. Law is a principle; fact is an event. Law is conceived; fact is actual. Law is a rule of duty; fact is that which has been according to or in contravention of the rule. See Fact question.

See also Collateral facts; Dispositive facts; Evidentiary fact; Fabricated fact; Fact question; Finding (Finding of fact); Material fact; Principal (Principal fact); Ultimate facts.

Facta /fékta/. In old English law, deeds. Facta armorum, deeds or feats of arms; that is, jousts or tournaments.

Facta sunt potentiora verbis /fékts sônt pätnésbyôrs várbs/. Deeds [or facts] are more powerful than words.

Facta tenent multa qua fieri prohibentur /fékts têntânt máltâ kwì fâyârây prôwhâbèntâr/. Deeds contain many things which are prohibited to be done.

Fact finding board. A group or committee appointed by business or government to investigate and report facts concerning some event or situation.

Factio testamenti /féksh(ô)yôw têstâmèntây/. In the civil law, the right, power, or capacity of making a will; called "factio activa."

The right or capacity of taking by will; called "factio passiva."

Fact material to risk. See Material fact.

Facto /fékto/. In fact; by an act; by the act or fact. Ipso facto, by the act itself; by the mere effect of a fact, without anything superadded, or any proceeding upon it to give it effect.

Facto et animo /fékto ed ânîmôw/. In fact and intent.

Factor. A commercial agent, employed by a principal to sell merchandise consigned to him for that purpose, for and in behalf of the principal, but usually in his own name, being entrusted with the possession and control of the goods, and being remunerated by a commission, commonly called "factorage." A commercial agent to whom the possession of personality is entrusted by or for the owner, to be sold, for a compensation, in pursuance of the agent's usual trade or business, with title to goods remaining in principal and the "factor" being merely a bailee for the purposes of the agency. Neild v. District of Columbia, 71 App.D.C. 306, 110 F.2d 246, 259. See also Commission merchant.

Any circumstance or influence which brings about or contributes to a result such as a factor of production.

Broker and factor distinguished. A factor differs from a "broker" in that he is entrusted with the possession, management, and control of the goods (which gives him a special property in them); while a broker acts as a mere intermediary without control or possession of the property. A factor may buy and sell in his own name, as well as in that of the principal, while a broker, as such, cannot ordinarily buy or sell in his own name.

Factorage /féklt(s)raj/. The wages, allowance, or commission paid to a factor for his services. The business of a factor.

Factoring. Sale of accounts receivable of a firm to a factor at a discounted price. The purchase of accounts receivable from a business by a factor who thereby assumes the risk of loss in return for some agreed discount. Manhattan Factoring Corp. v. Ors- burn, 238 Ark. 947, 385 S.W.2d 785, 790.

Factorizing process. A process by which the effects of a debtor are attached in the hands of a third person. More commonly termed "trustee process", "garnishment", and process by "foreign attachment".

Factors' acts. The name given to several English statutes (6 Geo. IV, c. 94; 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39; 40 & 41 Vict., c. 39) by which a factor was enabled to make a valid pledge of the goods, or of any part thereof, to one who believed him to be the bona fide owner of the goods. Similar legislation is not uncommon in the United States.

Factor's lien. The right (usually provided by statute) of a factor to keep possession of his principal's merchandise until the latter has settled his account with him.

Factory acts. Laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the hours of work, and the health and safety conditions. See e.g. Fair Labor Standards Act; Occupational Safety and Health Act; Wage and Hour Laws.

Factory prices. The prices at which goods may be bought at the factories, as distinguished from the prices of goods bought in the market after they have passed into the hands of wholesalers or retailers.

Fact question. Those issues in a trial or hearing which concern facts or events and whether such occurred and how they occurred as contrasted with issues and questions of law. Fact questions are for the jury, unless the issues are presented at a bench trial, while law questions are decided by the judge. Fact questions and their findings are generally not appealable though rulings of law are subject to appeal.

Facts. See Fact.

Facts incomplete. A certificate of trial judge to bill of exceptions not certifying to correctness of any recital therein and only certifying that the bill is "facts incomplete", that is, not finished, not perfect, defective, verifies nothing and brings nothing before the Court of Appeals for review. Loving v. Kamm, Ohio App., 34 N.E.2d 591.

Facts in issue. Those matters of fact on which the plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts in his defense. Under civil rule practice in the federal courts, and in most state courts, the facts alleged in the initial complaint are usually quite brief, with the development of additional facts being left to discovery and pretrial conference.

Civil law. Fact; a fact; a matter of fact, as distinguished from a matter of law.

French law. A memoir which contains concisely set down the fact on which a contest has happened, the means on which a party founds his pretensions, with the refutation of the means of the adverse party.

Old English law. A deed; a person's act and deed. A culpable or criminal act; an act not founded in law. Anything stated or made certain; a deed of conveyance; a written instrument under seal: called, also, charta. 2 Bl.Comm. 295. A fact; a circumstance; particularly a fact in evidence. Factum probandum (the fact to be proved).

Old European law. A portion or allotment of land; otherwise called a hide, bovata, etc.

Testamentary law. The execution or due execution of a will. The factum of an instrument means not merely the signing of it, and the formal publication or delivery, but proof that the party well knew and understood the contents thereof, and did give, will, dispose, and do, in all things, as in the said will is contained. Weatherhead's Lessee v. Baskerville, 52 U.S. (11 How.) 329, 13 L.Ed. 717.

Factum a judice quod ad ejus officium non spectat non ratum est /fæk'təm ɛ̃ yɛ̃ ʒuɔdɛzyi, kʁoud ɛd ɛjɔs ʃfish(i)ɛm ɛnɔn ʃpekɛtə, ɛnɔn rɛdɛm ɛst/. An action of a judge which relates not to his office is of no force.

Factum cuique suum non adversario, necere debet /fæk'təm k(yu)wʒykwiz ʃ(y)uəwɔm ɛnɔn ɔdəvɔsɛrijo, ɔnɔsɔri ʒuəbət/. A party's own act should prejudice himself, not his adversary.

Factum infectum fieri nequit /fæk'təm anfæk'təm fəjərərə nɛkwɪt/. A thing done cannot be undone.

Factum juridicum /fæk'təm ʒuɾidɪkəm/. A juridical fact. Denotes one of the factors or elements constituting an obligation.

Factum negantis nulla probatio sit /fæk'təm ɲɛgəntɪs nɔlə prəbəjɪʃ(i)yəw sit/. There is no proof incumbent upon him who denies a fact.

"Factum" non dicitur quod non perseverat /fæk'təm ɲɔn dɪsˈdɔd kʁɔd ɲɔn pɔrsəˈvəɾt/. That is not called a "deed" which does not continue operative. That is not said to be done which does not last.

Factum probandum /fæk'təm prəbəndəm/. Lat. In the law of evidence, the fact to be proved; a fact which is in issue, and to which evidence is to be directed.

Factum probans /fæk'təm prəwˈbən(d)z/. A probative or evidentiary fact; a subsidiary or connected fact tending to prove the principal fact in issue; a piece of circumstantial evidence.

Factum unius alteri noceri non debet /fæk'təm ɣənəˈʒəs ˈdœbət/. The deed of one should not hurt another.

Facultas probationum non est angustanda /fəkəltəs prəbəˈʃiʃ(i)yəwɔm ɲɔn ɛst æŋɡəstəndə/. The power of powers [right of offering or giving testimony] is not to be narrowed.

Facultative compensation /fəkəltəˈtɛydəv kəmpəˈnɛʃən/. That which operates by the will of the parties, when one of them removes an obstacle preventing compensation, resulting from the dispositions of the law.

Facultative reinsurance /fəkəltəˈtɛydəv r̩jənʃəˈrən(t)s/. Under type designated "facultative", the reinsurer has the option of accepting the tendered part of the original insurer's risk. Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. State Tax Commission, 196 Miss. 82, 16 So.2d 369.

Faculties /fəkəltəˈtiz/ . Abilities; powers; capabilities. In the law of divorce, the capability of the husband to render a support to the wife in the form of alimony, whether temporary or permanent, including not only his tangible property, but also his income and his ability to earn money. See Allegation of faculties.

Faculties, Court of. In English ecclesiastical law, a jurisdiction or tribunal belonging to the archbishop. It does not hold pleas in any suits, but creates rights to pews, monuments, and particular places, and modes of burial. It has also various powers under 25 Hen. VIII, c. 21, in granting licenses of different descriptions, as a license to marry, a faculty to erect an organ in a parish church, to level a church-yard, to remove bodies previously buried. Faculties are also granted by Consistory Courts.

Faculties, Master of the. An official in the archdiocese of Canterbury who is head of the Court of Faculties. See Arches Court.

Faculty. Ability; power; capability. Teaching staff of school. See also Faculties.

Faderfium /fáðərfiəm/. In old English law, a marriage gift coming from the father or brother of the bride.

Fading health. See Extremis.

Failing circumstances. Insolvency, that is, the lack of sufficient assets to pay one’s debts. A person (or a corporation or institution) is said to be in failing circumstances when he is about to fail, that is, when he is actually insolvent and is acting in contemplation of giving up his business because he is unable to carry it on.

A bank is in “failing circumstances” when, from any cause, it is unable to pay its debts in the ordinary or usual course of business, Sanders v. Owens, Mo. App., 47 S.W.2d 132, 134; when in state of uncertainty as to whether it will be able to sustain itself, depending on favorable or unfavorable contingencies, over which its officers have no control. Graf v. Allen, 230 Mo.App. 721, 74 S.W.2d 61, 66. See also Failure to meet obligations.

Fail. Involuntarily to fall short of success or the attainment of one’s purpose; to become insolvent and unable to meet one’s obligations as they mature; to become or be found deficient or wanting; to keep or cease from an appointed, proper, expected, or required action, Romero v. Department of Public Works, 17 Cal.2d 189, 109 P.2d 662, 665; to lapse, as a legacy which has never vested or taken effect; to leave unperformed; to omit; to neglect; to be wanting in action. See also Failure; Lapse.

Failure, Abandonment or defeat. Failure of duty or obligation. Lapse. Deficiency, want, or lack; inefficiency as measured by some legal standard; an unsuccessful attempt. See also Fail; Lapse.

Failure of consideration. As applied to notes, contracts, conveyances, etc., this term does not necessarily mean a want of consideration, but implies that a consideration, originally existing and good, has since become worthless or has ceased to exist or been extinguished, partially or entirely. It means that sufficient consideration was contemplated by the parties at the time contract was entered into, but either on account of some innate defect in the thing to be given or nonperformance in whole or in part of that which the promisee agreed to do or forbear nothing of value can be or is received by the promisee. Holcomb v. Long Beach Inv. Co., 129 Cal.App. 285, 19 P.2d 31, 36. It occurs where the thing expected to be received by one party and given by the other party cannot be or has not been given without fault of the party contracting to give it.

Failure to execute a promise the performance of which has been exchanged for performance by other party. Taliaferro v. Davis, 216 Cal.App.2d 398, 31 Cal.Rptr. 164, 172.

Failure of evidence. See Failure of proof.

Failure of good behavior. As enumerated in statute as ground for removal of a civil service employee, means behavior contrary to recognized standards of propriety and morality, misconduct or wrong conduct. State ex rel. Ashbaugh v. Bahr, 68 Ohio App. 308, 40 N.E.2d 677, 680, 682.

Failure of issue. Dying without children. The failure at a fixed time, or the total extinction, of issue to take an estate limited over by an executory devise. A definite failure of issue is when a precise time is fixed by the will for the failure of issue, as in the case where there is a devise to one, but if he dies without issue or lawful issue living at the time of his death, etc. An indefinite failure of issue is the period when the issue or descendants of the first taker shall become extinct, and when there is no longer any issue of the issue of the grantee, without reference to any particular time or any particular event. See also Dying without issue.

Failure of justice. The defeat of a particular right, or the failure of reparation for a particular wrong, from the lack or inadequacy of a legal remedy for the enforcement of the one or the redress of the other. The term is also colloquially applied to the miscarriage of justice which occurs when the result of a trial is so palpably wrong as to shock the moral sense. See also Miscarriage of justice.

Failure of proof. A "failure of proof" consists in failure to prove the cause of action or defense in its entire scope and meaning. Breslin-Griffitt Carpet Co. v. Asadorian, Mo.App., 145 S.W.2d 494, 496.

Where evidence is such as would support either of two contradictory inferences, or presumptions, respecting the ultimate facts, there is a "failure of proof". Muesenfechter v. St. Louis Car Co., Mo. App., 139 S.W.2d 1102, 1106.

See Directed verdict; Failure to state cause of action; Non obstante veredicto; Summary judgment.

Failure of record. Failure of the defendant to produce a record which he has alleged and relied on in his plea.

Failure of title. The inability or failure of a vendor to make good title to the whole or a part of the property which he has contracted to sell. See also Cloud on title; Curing title; Marketable title.

Failure of trust. The lapsing or nonexistence of a proposed trust, by reason of the defect or insufficiency of the deed or instrument creating it, or on account of illegality, indefiniteness, or other legal impediment.

Failure otherwise than upon merits. Phrase imports some action by court which plaintiff is defeated without a trial upon the merits; e.g. judgment on pleadings, summary judgment.

Failures in revenue. Terms "casual deficits" and "failures in revenue," within provision authorizing legislature to contract debt to meet such deficits, are synonymous. State Budget Commission v. Lebus, 244 Ky. 700, 51 S.W.2d 965.

Failure to bargain collectively. An employer's refusal to discuss with union, as employees' bargaining agency, questions involving conditions of employment and interpretation of contract constitutes a "failure to bargain collectively" with union. Rapid Roller Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, C.C.A.7, 126 F.2d 452, 459.

Failure to make delivery. Misdelivery or nondelivery. This phrase is fully adequate to cover all cases where delivery has not been made as required. Georgia, F. & A. Ry. Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U.S. 190, 36 S.Ct. 541, 543, 60 L.Ed. 948.

Failure to meet obligations. Bank's failure to pay depositors on demand constitutes "failure to meet obligations" in most cases. Where bank closed its doors and ceased to transact business or make transfers of capital stock, and thereafter ordinary deposits could not be drawn out and checks in process of collection were dishonored, returned unpaid, was "failure to meet obligations". State of Ohio ex rel. Squire v. Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, 137 Pa.Super. 75, 8 A.2d 476, 480. See also Failing circumstances; Insolvency.

Failure to perform. As regards reciprocal promises, allegation of defendant's "failure to perform" when demanded is equivalent to allegation of "refusal to perform," unless performance by plaintiff is condition precedent to cause of action. Brooks v. Scoville, 81 Utah 163, 17 P.2d 218, 220.

Failure to state cause of action. Failure of the plaintiff to allege enough facts in the complaint. Even if the plaintiff proved all the facts alleged in the complaint, the facts would not establish a cause of action entitling the plaintiff to recover against the defendant. The motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action is sometimes referred to as (a) a demurrer (e.g. California) or (b) a failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b). See also Directed verdict; Summary judgment.

Failure to testify. In criminal trial, defendant is not required to testify and such failure may not be commented on by judge or prosecution because of protection of Fifth Amendment. U.S.Const. Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106. See also Self Incrimination.

Faint (or feigned) action. In old English practice, an action was so called where the party bringing it had no title to recover, although the words of the writ were true. See also Feigned action.

Faint pleader. A fraudulent, false, or collusive manner of pleading to the deception of a third person.

Fair. Having the qualities of impartiality and honesty; free from prejudice, favoritism, and self-interest. Just; equitable; even-handed; equal, as between conflicting interests. See also Equitable; Reasonable.

A gathering of buyers and sellers for purposes of exhibiting and sale of goods; usually accompanied by amusements, contests, entertainment, and the like.

In England, a greater species of market; a privileged market. It is an incorporeal hereditament, granted by royal patent, or established by prescription presupposing a grant from the crown. A public mart or place of buying or selling. 1 Bl.Comm. 274.

In the earlier English law, the franchise to hold a fair conferred certain important privileges; and fairs, as legally recognized institutions, possessed distinctive legal characteristics. Most of these privileges and characteristics, however, are now obsolete. In American fairs, in the ancient technical sense, are unknown, and, in the modern and popular sense, they are entirely voluntary and nonlegal, and transactions arising in or in connection with them are subject to the ordinary rules governing sales, etc.

Fair and impartial jury. Means that every member of the jury must be a fair and impartial juror. City of San Antonio v. McKenzie Const. Co., 136 Tex. 315, 150 S.W.2d 989, 993. See Fair and impartial trial.

Fair and impartial trial. One where accused's legal rights are safeguarded and respected. Raney v. Commonwealth, 287 Ky. 492, 153 S.W.2d 935, 937, 938. A fair and impartial trial by a jury of one's peers contemplates counsel to look after one's defense, compulsory attendance of witnesses, if need be, and a reasonable time in the light of all prevailing circumstances to investigate, properly prepare, and present the defense. One wherein defendant is permitted to be represented by counsel and neither witnesses nor counsel are intimidated. One wherein no undue advantage is taken by the district attorney or any one else. People v. Nationwide News Service, 172 Misc. 752, 16 N.Y.S.2d 277, 279. Wherein witnesses of litigants are permitted to testify under rules of court within proper bounds of judicial discretion, and under law governing testimony of witnesses with right in parties to testify, if qualified, and of counsel to be heard. It requires that the jury chosen to sit in judgment shall have no fixed opinion concerning the guilt or innocence of one on trial. Baker v. Hudspeth, C.C.A.Kan., 129 F.2d 779, 782, 783. There must not only be fair and impartial jury, and learned and upright judge, but there should be atmosphere of calm in which witnesses can deliver their testimony without fear and intimidation, in which attorneys can assert accused's rights freely and fully, and in which the truth may be received and given credence without fear of violence. Raney v. Commonwealth, 287 Ky., 492, 153 S.W.2d 935, 937, 938. See also Fair trial; Impartial jury.

Fair and proper legal assessment. Such as places the value of property on a fair, equal, and uniform basis with other property of like character and value throughout the county and state.

Fair and reasonable value. See Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair and valuable consideration. One which is a substantial compensation for the property conveyed, or which is reasonable, in view of the surrounding circumstances and conditions, in contradistinction to an inadequate consideration. Lucas v. Coker, 189 Okl. 95, 113 P.2d 589, 590. See also Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair cash market value. Terms "cash market value", "fair market value", "reasonable market value" or "fair cash market value" are substantially synonymous. Fort Worth & D. N. Ry. Co. v. Sugg, Tex.Civ. App., 68 S.W.2d 570, 572.

Fair cash value. The phrase is practically synonymous with "reasonable value," "fair market value," and "actual cash value," meaning the fair or reasonable cash price for which the property can be sold on the market. Fair cash value for property tax purposes is interpreted as meaning "fair market value" or price that property would bring at a sale where both parties are willing, ready and able to do business and under no duress to do so. Consolidation Coal Co. v. Property Tax Appeal Bd. of Dept. of Local Government Affairs, 29 III.App.3d 465, 331 N.E.2d 122, 126.

For tax purposes "fair cash value", means the highest price the property would bring free of incumbrances, at a fair and voluntary private sale for cash. Commonwealth v. Sutcliffe, 287 Ky. 809, 155 S.W.2d 243, 245. The price that an owner willing but not compelled to sell ought to receive from one willing but not compelled to buy. Assessors of Quincy v. Boston Consolidated Gas Co., 309 Mass. 60, 34 N.E.2d 623, 626. The price that the property would bring at a voluntary sale where the owner is ready, willing and able to sell but not compelled to do so. In re 168 Adams Bldg. Corporation, C.C.A.Ill., 105 F.2d 704, 708. The price which someone will pay for it in open market.

See also Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair comment. A term used in the law of libel, applying to statements made by a writer in an honest belief of their truth, relating to official acts, even though the statements are not true in fact. Defense of "fair comment" is not destroyed by circumstance that jury may believe that the comment is logically unsound, but it suffices that a reasonable man may honestly entertain such opinion, on facts found. Cohalan v. New York Tribune, 172 Misc. 20, 15 N.Y.S.2d 58, 60, 61. Fair comment must be based on facts truly stated, must not contain imputations of corrupt or dishonorable motives except as warranted by the facts, and must be honest expression of writer's real opinion. Cohalan v. New York World-Telegram Corporation, 172 Misc. 1061, 16 N.Y.S.2d 706, 712; Hall v. Binghamton Press Co., 263 A.D. 403, 33 N.Y.S.2d 840, 848. Imputation to official of corrupt or dishonorable motives is justified as "fair comment" if it is inference which fair-minded man might reasonably draw from facts. Tanzer v. Crowley Pub. Corporation, 240 App.Div. 203, 268 N.Y.S. 620.

See also Fairness or equal time doctrine.

Fair competition. Open, equitable, just competition, which is fair as between competitors and as between any of them and their customers. See Clayton Act; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Fair consideration. A fair equivalent. One which, under all the circumstances, is honest, reasonable, and free from suspicion. Full and adequate consideration. Good-faith satisfaction of an antecedent debt. One which fairly represents the value of the property transferred. One which is not disproportionate to the value of the property conveyed. See also Adequate consideration; Fair cash value; Fair market value; Fair value; Just compensation.

Fair Credit Reporting Acts. Federal Act. This law represents the first Federal regulation of the vast consumer reporting industry, covering all credit bureaus, investigative reporting companies, detective and collection agencies, lenders' exchanges, and computerized information reporting companies. The purpose of this Act is to insure that consumer reporting activities are conducted in a manner that is fair and equitable to the affected consumer, upholding his right to privacy as against the informational demands of others. The consumer is given several important new rights, including the right to notice of reporting activities, the right to access to information contained in consumer reports, and the right to correction of erroneous information that may have been the basis for a denial of credit, insurance, or employment. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1681 et seq.

State Acts. Typical state acts cover consumer's rights against credit investigatory agencies; prohibit reporting of obsolete information; require that person giving credit disclose to consumer that report is being obtained, and require reporting agency to make copy available to consumer.
Fair equivalent. As used in statute providing that fair consideration is given for property exchanged at fair equivalent means value at time of conveyance. "Equivalent" means equal in worth or value; "fair" means equitable as a basis for exchange; reasonable; a fair value.

Fair hearing. One in which authority is fairly exercised; that is, consistently with the fundamental principles of justice embraced within the conception of due process of law. Contemplated in a fair hearing is the right to present evidence, to cross examine, and to have findings supported by evidence.

Fair hearing of an alien's right to enter the United States means a hearing before the immigration officers in accordance with the fundamental principles that inhere in due process of law, and implies that alien shall not only have a fair opportunity to present evidence in his favor, but shall be apprised of the evidence against him, so that at the conclusion of the hearing he may be in a position to know all of the evidence on which the matter is to be decided; it being not enough that the immigration officials meant to be fair.

The test of a "fair hearing" before the National Labor Relations Board is whether the issues were clearly defined, so that the employer could address itself to the charges made against it. National Labor Relations Board v. Air Associates, C.C.A.N.Y., 121 F.2d 586, 591.

See also Fair trial.

Fair knowledge or skill. A reasonable degree of knowledge or measure of skill.

Fair Labor Standards Act. Federal Act (1938) which set a minimum standard wage (periodically increased by later statutes) and a maximum work week of 40 hours in industries engaged in interstate commerce. Such Act also prohibited the labor of children under 16 in most occupations, and under 18 in dangerous occupations. The Act created the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor.

Fair market price. See Fair market value.

Fair market value. The amount at which property would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller, neither being under any compulsion to buy or sell and both having reasonable knowledge of the relevant facts. By fair market value is meant the price in cash, or its equivalent, that the property would have brought at the time of taking, considering its highest and most profitable use, if then offered for sale in the open market, in competition with other similar properties at or near the location of the property taken, with a reasonable time allowed to find a purchaser. State, by Commissioner of Transp. v. Cooper Alloy Corp., 136 N.J.Super. 560, 347 A.2d 365, 368. Fair market value is the price that the asset would bring by bona fide bargaining between well-informed buyers and sellers at the date of acquisition. Usually the fair market price will be the price at which bona fide sales have been consummated for assets of like type, quality, and quantity in a particular market at the time of acquisition. The amount of money which purchaser who is willing but not obligated to buy would pay owner who is willing but not obligated to sell, taking into consideration all uses to which the land is adapted and might in reason be applied. Arkansas State Highway Commission v. DeLaughter, 250 Ark. 990, 468 S.W.2d 242, 247.

See also Fair value.

Fairness or equal time doctrine. This doctrine imposes affirmative responsibilities on the broadcaster to provide coverage of issues of public importance which is adequate and which fairly reflects differing viewpoints. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Democratic National Committee, Dist.Col., 412 U.S. 94, 93 S.Ct. 2080, 2089, 36 L.Ed.2d 772. Section of Federal Communications Act which provides that major advocates of both sides of political and public issues should be given fair or equal opportunity to broadcast their viewpoints. 47 U.S.C.A. § 315. See also Equal Time Act.

Fair on its face. A tax deed "fair on its face," is one which cannot be shown to be illegal without extraneous evidence. Denny v. Stevens, 52 Wyo. 253, 73 P.2d 308, 310. A process fair on its face does not mean that it must appear to be perfectly regular or in all respects in accord with proper practice and after the most approved form, but that it shall apparently be process lawfully issued and such as the officer may lawfully serve, and a process is fair on its face which proceeds from a court, magistrate, or body having authority of law to issue process of that nature and which is legal in form and on its face contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise the officer that it is issued without authority.

Fair persuasion. Argument, exhortation, or entreaty addressed to a person without threat of physical harm or economic loss, or persistent molestation or harassment or material and fraudulent misrepresentations. City of Reno v. Second Judicial District Court in and for Washoe County, 59 Nev. 416, 95 P.2d 994, 998.

Fair play. Equity, justice and decency in dealings with another. See Equity.
Fair pleader. See Beau pleader.

Fair preponderance of evidence. Evidence sufficient to create in the minds of the triers of fact the conviction that the party upon whom is the burden has established its case. The greater and weightier evidence; the more convincing evidence. Belmont Hotel v. New Jersey Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 22 N.J.Misc. 261, 37 A.2d 681, 682. Such a superiority of evidence on one side that the fact of its outweighing the evidence on the other side can be perceived if the whole evidence is fairly considered. Such evidence as when weighed with that which is offered to oppose it, has more convincing power in the minds of the jury. The term conveys the idea of something more than a preponderance. The term is not a technical term, but simply means that evidence which outweighs that which is offered to oppose it, and does not necessarily mean the greater number of witnesses.

Fair return on investment. A net return upon fair value of property. State ex rel. City of St. Louis v. Public Service Commission, 341 Mo. 920, 110 S.W.2d 749, 778. A "fair return" is to be largely measured by usual returns in like investments in the same vicinity over the same period of time. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America v. Federal Power Commission, C.C.A. Ill., 120 F.2d 625, 633, 634. Reasonable profit on sale or holding of investment assets. A fair return on value of property used and useful in carrying on the enterprise, performing the service or supplying the thing for which the rates are paid. Lubin v. Finkelstein, 82 N.Y.S.2d 329, 335. Term is generally used in reference to setting of rates for public utilities.

Fair sale. In foreclosure and other judicial proceedings, this means a sale conducted with fairness and impartiality as respects the rights and interests of the parties affected. A sale at a price sufficient to warrant confirmation or approval when it is required.

Fair trade laws. State statutes which permit manufacturers or distributors of namebrand goods to fix minimum retail prices. Following a series of court decisions striking down such statutes, Congress in 1976 repealed such statutes.

Fair trial. A hearing by an impartial and disinterested tribunal; a proceeding which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial consideration of evidence and facts as a whole. A basic constitutional guarantee contained implicitly in the Due Process Clause of Fourteenth Amendment, U.S. Constitution. A legal trial or one conducted in all material things in substantial conformity to law. Stacey v. State, 79 Okl.Cr. 417, 155 P.2d 736, 737. A trial which insures substantial justice. A trial without prejudice to the accused. An orderly trial before an impartial jury and judge whose neutrality is indifferent to every factor in trial but that of administering justice. One conducted according to due course of law. A trial before an impartial judge, an impartial jury, and in an atmosphere of judicial calm. In such trial the judge may and should direct and control the proceedings, and may exercise his right to comment on the evidence, yet he may not extend his activities so far as to become either an assisting prosecutor or a thirteenth juror. Goldstein v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 63 F.2d 609, 613. An adequate hearing and an impartial tribunal, free from any interest, bias, or prejudice. The Reno, C.C.A.N.Y., 61 F.2d 966, 968. See also Fair and impartial trial.

Fair use doctrine. "Fair use" is privilege in other than owner of copyright to use copyrighted material in reasonable manner without consent, notwithstanding monopoly granted to the owner. Meeropol v. Nizer, D.C.N.Y., 361 F.Supp. 1063, 1067. Section 107 of the Copyright Act sets forth factors to be considered in determining whether the use made in any particular case is "fair use."

Fair value. Present market value; such sum as the property will sell for to a purchaser desiring to buy, the owner wishing to sell; such a price as a capable and diligent business man could presently obtain from the property after conferring with those accustomed to buy such property; the amount the property would bring at a sale on execution shown to have been in all respects fair and reasonable; the fair market value of the property as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell the property. Where no definite market value can be established and expert testimony must be relied on, fair valuation is the amount which the property ought to give to a going concern as a fair return, if sold to some one who is willing to purchase under ordinary selling conditions. In determining "fair valuation" of property, court should consider all elements entering into the intrinsic value, as well as the selling value, and also the earning power of the property. In re Gibson Hotels, D.C.W.Va., 24 F.Supp. 859, 863. In determining depreciation, "fair value" implies consideration of all factors material in negotiating sale and purchase of property, such as wear, decay, deterioration, obsolescence, inadequacy, and redundancy. Idaho Power Co. v. Thompson, D.C.Idaho, 19 F.2d 547, 566. Price which a seller, willing but not compelled to sell, would take, and a purchaser, willing but not compelled to buy, would pay. Price which buyers of the class which would be interested in buying property would be justified in paying for it. In re Crane's Estate, 344 Pa. 141, 23 A.2d 851, 855.

Within provision of business corporation act for determination of fair value of dissenting stockholder's shares, "fair value" means intrinsic value. Santee Oil Co., Inc. v. Cox, 265 S.C. 270, 217 S.E.2d 789, 793. Among elements to be considered in arriving at "fair value" or "fair cash value" of stock of a stockholder who dissents from a sale of corporate assets is its market value, net asset value, investment value, and earning capacity. Lucas v. Pembroke Water Co., 205 Va. 84, 135 S.E.2d 147, 150.

"Actual value," "market value," "fair value," and the like, are commonly used as convertible terms. See also Fair market value.

Fait /fę/ · L. Fr. Anything done. A deed; act; fact. A deed lawfully executed.

Fait accompli. Factor deed accomplished, presumably irreversible.

Fait enrolle /fę ét onrō/ · A deed enrolled, as a bargain and sale of freeholds.

Faith. Confidence; credit; reliance. Thus, an act may be said to be done "on the faith" of certain representations.
Belief; credence; trust. Thus, the Constitution provides that “full faith and credit” shall be given to the judgments of each state in the courts of the others.

Purpose; intent; sincerity; state of knowledge or design. This is the meaning of the word in the phrases “good faith” and “bad faith.” See Good faith.

Faithful. Honest; loyal; trustworthy; reliable; allegation; conscientious. Wright v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 176 Okl. 274, 54 P.2d 1084, 1087.

As used in the rule that executors must be “faithful,” means that they must act in good faith. In re McCafferty's Will, 147 Misc. 179, 264 N.Y.S. 38. Where a public officer gives a bond for the “faithful” discharge of his duties, “faithful” implies that he has assumed that measure of responsibility laid on him by law had no bond been given. London & Lancaster Indemnity Co. of America v. Community Savings & Loan Ass'n, 102 Ind.App. 665, 4 N.E.2d 688, 693.

Faithfully. Conscientious diligence or faithfulness in meeting obligations, or just regard of adherence to duty, or due observance of undertaking of contract. Commonwealth v. Polk, 256 Ky. 100, 75 S.W.2d 761, 765. Diligently, and without unnecessary delay. Truthfully, sincerely, accurately.

As used in bonds of public and private officers, this term imports not only honesty, but also a punctilious discharge of his duties, “faithful” implies that he has assumed that measure of responsibility laid on him by law had no bond been given. London & Lancaster Indemnity Co. of America v. Community Savings & Loan Ass'n, 102 Ind.App. 665, 4 N.E.2d 688, 693.

Fait juridique /féy zhyúrdíjy/ In French law, a juridical fact. One of the factors or elements constitutive of an obligation.

Faitours /féytár/. Idle persons; idle livers; vagabonds.

Fake. To make or construct falsely. A “faked alibi” is a made, manufactured, or false alibi. Something that is not what it purports to be; counterfeit. An imposter. See Counterfeit; Forgery.

Faker. A petty swindler.

Fakir /féykir/féykar/. A term applied among the Mohammedans to a kind of religious ascetic or beggar, whose claim is that he “is in need of mercy, and poor in the sight of God, rather than in need of worldly assistance.”

Sometimes spelled faqueer or faker. It is commonly used to designate a person engaged in some useless or dishonest business. Fake is also so used and also to designate the quality of such business. A street peddler who disposes of worthless wares, or of any goods above their value, by means of any false representation, trick, device, lottery, or game of chance.

Falcarious. See Falsarius.

Falcidia /fólsidía/fâél/. In Spanish law, the Faldician portion; the portion of an inheritance which could not be legally bequeathed away from the heir, viz., one-fourth.

Falcidian law /fólsidiyán ló/fâél/. In Roman law, a law on the subject of testamentary disposition. It was enacted by the people during the reign of Augustus, in the year of Rome 714, on the proposition of the tribune Falcidius. By this law, the testator’s right to burden his estate with legacies was subjected to an important restriction. It prescribed that no one could bequeath more than three-fourths of his property in legacies, and that the heir should have at least one-fourth of the estate, and that, should the testator violate this prescription, the heir may have the right to make a proportional deduction from each legatee, so far as necessary.

A similar principle exists in Louisiana. See Legitime. In some of the states the statutes authorizing bequests and devises to charitable corporations limit the amount which a testator may give, to a certain fraction of his estate.

Faldician portion /fólsidiyán pórshàn/fâél/. That portion of a testator's estate which, by the Faldician law, was required to be left to the heir, amounting to at least one-fourth. See also Legitime.

Faldworth. In Saxon law, a person reckoned old enough to become a member of the decennary, and so subject to the law of frank-pledge.

Falk-land. See Fok-lan-d.

Fall. One of the four seasons of the year, embracing, in the Northern Hemisphere, the three months commencing with the 21st of September and terminating with the 20th of December. Autumn.

To come within limits, scope, or jurisdiction of something. To decrease in value. To recede, as a depression or recession in the economy.

Fallo /fâl()yow/. In Spanish law, the final decree or judgment given in a controversy at law.

Fallopian tube. An essential part of the female reproductive system, consisting of a narrow conduit, some four inches in length, that extends on each side of a woman's body from the base of the womb to the ovary upon that side.

Fallow-land. Land plowed, but not sown, and left uncultivated for a time after successive crops. Land tilled, but left unsowed during the growing season.

Fallum. In old English law, an unexplained term for some particular kind of land.

Falsa demonstratio /fólså dəmåstréštsh(y)ow/. In the civil law, false designation; erroneous description of a person or thing in a written instrument.

Falsa demonstracione legatum non perimi /fólså dəmåstréštiyshiyownti lágéydam nón pêrmåy/. A bequest is not rendered void by an erroneous description.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet, cum de corpore (persona) constat /fólså dəmåstréštsh(y)ow noû'nôsåt, kâm diy kôrpariy (parsōwna) kônsåt/. False description does not injure or vitiate, provided the thing or person intended has once been sufficiently described. Mere false description does not make an instrument inoperative.

False orthographia non vitiat chartam, concessionem. False in the civil law, false or counterfeit money.

False grammatica non vitiat concessionem. If false or dishonest representation does not vitiate a deed.

Falsarius (or falcarious) False answer. False arrest.

Falsare False check. False claim.

FALSE. False. False arrest. False arrest consists in unlawful restraint of an individual's personal liberty or freedom of locomotion. Johnson v. Jackson, 43 Ill.App.2d 251, 193 N.E.2d 485, 489. An arrest without proper legal authority is a false arrest and because an arrest restrains the liberty of a person it is also false imprisonment. The gist of the tort is protection of the personal interest in freedom from restraint of movement. Neither ill will nor malice are elements of the tort, but if these elements are shown, punitive damages may be awarded in addition to compensatory or nominal damages.

False character. In England, the offense of personating the master or mistress of a servant, or any representative of such master or mistress, and giving a false character to the servant.

False action. See Feigned action.

False and fraudulent. To amount to actionable "false and fraudulent representations", they must have been as to existing fact or known by one making them, from his superior knowledge, to have been untrue when made. Burlison v. Weis, Mo.App., 152 S.W.2d 201, 203. See False representation; Fraud.

False answer. In pleading, a sham answer; one which is false in the sense of being a mere pretense set up in bad faith and without color of fact. Such answer may be ordered stricken on motion. Fed.R. Civil P. 12(f).

False arrest. Such arrest consists in unlawful restraint of an individual's personal liberty or freedom of locomotion. Johnson v. Jackson, 43 Ill.App.2d 251, 193 N.E.2d 485, 489. An arrest without proper legal authority is a false arrest and because an arrest restrains the liberty of a person it is also false imprisonment. original false entry makes a false entry in every book which is made up in regular course from the entry or entries from the original book of entry.

An entry in books of a bank or trust company which is intentionally made to represent what is not true or does not exist, with intent either to deceive its officers or a bank examiner or to defraud the bank or trust company. Agnew v. U. S., 165 U.S. 36, 17 S.Ct. 235, 41 L.Ed. 624.

False fact. In the law of evidence, a feigned, simulated, or fabricated fact; a fact not found in truth, but existing only in assertion; the deceitful semblance of a fact. See Perjury.

Falsehood. A statement or assertion known to be untrue, and intended to deceive. A willful act or declaration contrary to the truth. It is committed either by the wilful act of the party, or by dissimulation, or by words. A fabrication. Werner v. Southern Cal. Associated Newspapers, Cal.App., 206 P.2d 952, 961. See Perjury.

False impersonation. To impersonate another falsely, and in such assumed character to do any act whereby any benefit might accrue to the offender or to another person. People v. Horkans, 109 Colo. 177, 123 P.2d 824. See also False personation.

False imprisonment. See False arrest; Imprisonment; Probable cause.

False instrument. A counterfeit; one made in the similitude of a genuine instrument and purporting on its face to be such. See also Counterfeit; False making; Forgery.

False judgment. In old English law, a writ which lay when a false judgment had been pronounced in a court not of record, as a county court, court baron, etc.

In old French law, the defeated party in a suit had the privilege of accusing the judges of pronouncing a false or corrupt judgment, whereupon the issue was determined by his challenging them to the combat or duelum. This was called the "appeal of false judgment."

False Latin. When law proceedings were written in Latin, if a word were significant though not good Latin, then an indictment, declaration, or fine should not be made void by it; but if the word were not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole void.

False lights and signals. Lights and signals falsely and maliciously displayed for the purpose of bringing a vessel into danger.

The word "falsely", particularly in a criminal statute, suggests something more than a mere untruth and includes perfidiously or treacherously or with intent to defraud. United States v. Achtner, C.C.A. N.Y., 144 F.2d 49, 52. Commonly used in the sense of designedly untrue and deceitful, and as implying an intention to perpetrate some treachery or fraud. As applied to making or altering a writing in order to make it forgery, implies that the paper or writing is not genuine; that in itself it is false or counterfeit. See also False.

Falsely impersonate. To falsely impersonate may mean to pretend to be a particular person without lawful authority. People v. Horkans, 109 Colo. 177, 123 P.2d 824, 826. See also False personation; Personate.

Falsely make. To make an instrument which has no original as such and no genuine maker whose work is copied, although in form it may resemble a type of recognized security. Pines v. United States, C.C.A. Iowa, 123 F.2d 825, 828. See Counterfeit; Forgery.

False making. An essential element of forgery, where material alteration is not involved. Term has reference to manner in which writing is made or executed rather than to its substance or effect. A falsely made instrument is one that is fictitious, not genuine, or in some material particular something other than it purports to be and without regard to truth or falsity of facts stated therein. Wright v. U. S., C.A.Ariz., 172 F.2d 310, 311. See also Counterfeit; Forgery.

False news. Spreading false news, whereby discord may grow between the queen of England and her people, or the great men of the realm, or which may produce other mischiefs, seems to have been a misde­meanor, under St. 3 Edw. I, c. 34.

False oath. To defeat discharge in bankruptcy "false oath" must contain all the elements involved in "perjury" at common law, namely, an intentional untruth in matter material to a material issue. It must have been knowingly and fraudulently made. In re Stone, D.C.N.H., 52 F.2d 639, 641. See also Perjury.

False personation. The criminal offense of falsely representing some other person and acting in the character thus unlawfully assumed, in order to deceive others, and thereby gain some profit or advantage, or enjoy some right or privilege belonging to the one so personated, or subject him to some expense, charge, or liability. See also False impersonation; Personate.

False plea. See Sham (Sham pleading).

False pretenses. False pretenses, a statutory crime, although defined in slightly different ways in the various jurisdictions, consists in most jurisdictions of these elements: a false representation of a material present or past fact which causes the victim to pass title to his property to the wrongdoer, who (a) knows his representation to be false and (b) intends thereby to defraud the victim.

Essential elements of offense of "false pretenses", as defined by statute, are design, false pretense, intent to defraud, obtaining of signature, and character of instrument signed as one the false making of which would be punishable as forgery. State v. Pullen, 252 Iowa 1324, 110 N.W.2d 328, 331. False pretense is representation of some fact or circumstance which is not true and is calculated to mislead; representation may be implied from conduct or may consist of concealment or nondisclosure where there is duty to speak, and may consist of any acts, work, symbol or token calculated and intended to deceive. Bright v. Sheriff, Washoe County, 90 Nev. 168, 521 P.2d 371, 373.
Other definitions of "false pretenses" include: false representation of existing fact or condition by which a party obtains property of another; false representation of existing fact, whether by oral or written words or conduct, calculated to deceive, intended to deceive, and does in fact deceive, whereby one person obtains value from another without compensation; false representation of existing or past fact calculated to induce confidence on part of one to whom representation is made, and accompanied by or blended with a promise to do something in future, State v. Parkinson, 181 Wash. 69, 41 P.2d 1095, 1097; false representation of existing fact, made with knowledge of falsity, with intent that party to whom it is made should act upon it, and acted upon by such party to his detriment; false representation of past or existing fact, made with knowledge of falsity, with intent to deceive and defraud, and which is adapted to deceive person to whom made.

Larceny distinguished. In larceny owner has no intention to part with his property, although he may intend to part with possession, while in false pretenses the owner does intend to part with the property, but it is obtained from him by fraud. The intention of owner of property not to part with title when relinquishing possession of property is vital point to be determined in distinguishing between "larceny by fraud" and obtaining property by "false pretenses", Dobson v. State, 74 Okl.Cr. 341, 126 P.2d 95, 101.

False representation. A "false representation" in order to be actionable must consist of a statement of fact which is untrue, such statement must have been made with intent to defraud and for the purpose of inducing another to act upon it, and he must have in fact relied on such statement and must have been induced thereby to act to his injury or damage. Household Finance Corp. v. Christian, 8 Wis.2d 53, 98 N.W.2d 390, 392. To maintain an action for damages for "false representation," the plaintiff, in substance, must allege and must prove by a preponderance of the evidence the following elements: (1) What representation was made; (2) that it was false; (3) that the defendant knew it was false, or else made it without knowledge as a positive statement of known fact; (4) that the plaintiff believed the representation to be true; (5) that the plaintiff relied on and acted upon the representation; (6) that the plaintiff was thereby injured; and (7) the amount of the damages.

See also Deceit; Fraud; Material fact; Reliance.

False return. See Return.

False statement. As used in bankruptcy statute provision concerning discharge, these words denote or connote guilty scienter on part of bankrupt. In re Krulewicz, D.C.N.J., 60 F.2d 1038, 1041; Wilensky v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., C.C.A.Mass., 67 F.2d 389, 390. They mean an incorrect statement made or acquiesced in with knowledge of incorrectness or with reckless indifference to actual facts and with no reasonable ground to believe it correct. International Shoe Co. v. Lewine, C.C.A.Miss., 68 F.2d 517, 518. Statement knowingly false, or made recklessly with intention to deceive person to whom it is made, when he does not believe the statement to be true, is guilty of a misdemeanor: (a) the falsification occurs in an official proceeding; or (b) the falsification is intended to mislead a public servant in performing his official function. Model Penal Code, § 241.2.

The essential elements of "false swearing" consist in willfully, knowingly, absolutely and falsely swearing under oath or affirmation on a matter concerning which a party could legally be sworn and on oath administered by one legally authorized to administer it. Smith v. State, 66 Ga.App. 669, 19 S.E.2d 168, 169. It must appear that matter sworn to was judicially pending or was being investigated by grand jury, or was a subject on which accused could legally have been sworn, or on which he was required to be sworn. Capps v. Commonwealth, 294 Ky. 743, 172 S.W.2d 610, 611. See also Perjury.

False token. In criminal law, a false document or sign of the existence of a fact, in general, used for the purpose of fraud. Device used to obtain money by false pretenses. See Counterfeit; False weights.

False verdict. See Verdict.

False weights. False weights and measures are such as do not comply with the standard prescribed by the state or governmental, or with the custom prevailing in the place and business in which they are used.

Falsi crimmen /fōsi devastation/. Fraudulent subornation or concealment, with design to darken or hide the truth, and make things appear otherwise than they are. It is committed (1) by words, as when a witness swears falsely; (2) by writing, as when a person antedates a contract; (3) by deed, as selling by false weights and measures. See Crimen falsi.

Falsification. See Falsify.

Falsify. To counterfeit or forge; to make something false; to give a false appearance to anything. To make false by mutilation, alteration, or addition; to tamper with, as to falsify a record or document. The word "falsify" may be used to convey two distinct meanings—either that of being intentionally or knowingly untrue, made with intent to defraud, or mistakenly and accidentally untrue. Washer v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 21 Cal.2d 822, 136 F.2d 297, 301. See also Alteration; Counterfeit; False; Forgery.

To disprove; to prove to be false or erroneous; to avoid or defeat. Spoken of verdicts, appeals, etc.
Falsifying a record. A high offense against public justice, punishable in England by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, §§ 27, 28, and in the United States, generally, by statute.

Falsity. Term implies more than erroneous or untrue; it indicates knowledge of untruth.

Falsonarius /fəlsənəriəs/. A forger; a counterfeiter.

Falso retorno brevium /fəlsəu rəˈtɔrnə uˈbriəviəm/. In old English law, a writ which formerly lay against the sheriff who had execution of process for false returning of writs.

Falsum /fəlsəm/. Lat. False; fraudulent; erroneous; deceitful; mistaken. In the sense of "deceiving" or "counterfeit," it is applied to persons in respect to their acts and conduct, as well as to things; and in the sense of "erroneous," it is applied to persons on the question of personal identity.

Falsus /fəlsəs/. Lat. False; fraudulent; erroneous; deceitful; mistaken. Also falsification, which may be either by falsehood, concealment of the truth, or fraudulent alteration, as by cutting out or erasing part of a writing.

The doctrine means that if testimony of a witness on a material issue is willfully false and given with an intention to deceive, jury may disregard all the witness' testimony. Hargrave v. Stockloss, 127 N.J.L. 262, 21 A.2d 820, 823. The maxim deals only with weight of evidence. It does not relieve jury from passing on credibility of the whole testimony of a false swearing witness or excuse jury from weighing the whole testimony. State v. Willard, 346 Mo. 773, 142 S.W.2d 1046, 1052. It is a mere rule of evidence affirming a rebuttable presumption of fact, under which the jury must consider all the evidence of the witness, other than that which is found to be false, and it is their duty to give effect to so much of it, if any, as is relieved from the presumption against it and found to be true. It is not a rule of the law of evidence, but is merely an aid in weighing and sifting of evidence. Dawson v. Bertolini, 70 R.I. 325, 38 A.2d 765, 768. It is particularly applied to the testimony of a witness who, if he is shown to have sworn falsely in one detail, may be considered unworthy of belief as to all the rest of his evidence.

Fama /fəˈmeɪə/. Lat. Fame; character, reputation; report of common opinion.

Famacide /fəˈmeɪsəˌdə/. A killer of reputation; a slanderer.

Fama, fides et oculus non patiuntur ludum /fəˈmeɪə, fɛɪdɪəz ət oʊˈklʌsə nɔn ˈpætiʊntər lɨdəm/. Fame, faith, and eyesight do not suffer a cheat.

Fama que suspicione inducit, oriri debet apud bonos et graves, non quidem malevolos et maledicos, sed providas et fide dignas personas, non semel sed sæpius, quia clamor minuit et defamatio manifestat /fəˈmeɪə kwɪ səˈspɪʃənə wɪˈnʌm ɪnˈdɪ(ʊ)rɪˌdəˌˌkɑːt, əˈrɪri ˈdɛbət əpʊd ˈbɒnəs ət ˈgreɪvəs, nɒn kwiˈdɛm ˈmeɪləˈvɔləʊs ət ˈmeɪləˈdeɪkəʊs, sɛd ˈprəvɪdəs ət ˈfɪdə ˈdaɪnəs ˈpərəˈsəʊnəz, nɒn ˈsɛməl ˈsed ˈsɛpɪəs, kwɪə ˈklæmər ˈmɪnjuwət ət ˈdeɪfəˈmeɪʃ(ə)rɪˈd(ə)ˌˌkɑːt/. Report, which induces suspicion, ought to arise from good and grave men; not, indeed, from malevolent and malicious men, but from cautious and credible persons; not only once, but frequently, for clamor diminishes, and defamation manifests.

Familia /fəˈmaɪliə/. Old English law. A household; the body of household servants; a quantity of land, otherwise called "mansa," sufficient to maintain one family.

Roman law. A household; a family. Family right; the right or status of being the head of a family, or of exercising the patria potestas over others. This could belong only to a Roman citizen who was a "man in his own right."

Spanish law. A family, which might consist of domestics or servants.

Familia empor /fəˈmaɪliə ˈɛm(ə)pər/. In Roman law, an intermediate person who purchased the aggregate inheritance when sold per aet. et libram, in the process of making a will under the Twelve Tables. This purchaser was merely a man of straw, transmitting the inheritance to the heres proper.

Família eriscunde /fəˈmaɪliə ərɪskəndə. In Roman law, an action for the partition of the aggregate succession of a familia, where that devolved upon cohæredes. It was also applicable to enforce a contribution towards the necessary expenses incurred on the familia.

Familiar. Fair or reasonable knowledge of, or acquaintance with. Closeness; intimacy.

Familiarity. Close or reasonable acquaintance with or knowledge of.

Family. The meaning of word "family" necessarily depends on field of law in which word is used, purpose intended to be accomplished by its use, and facts and circumstances of each case. LeRoux v. Edmundson, 276 Minn. 120, 148 N.W.2d 812, 814. Most commonly refers to group of persons consisting of parents and children; father, mother and their children; immediate kindred, constituting fundamental social unit in civilized society. People v. Haase, 57 Misc.2d 59, 291 N.Y.S.2d 53, 55. A collective body of persons who live in one house and under one head or management. A group of blood-relatives; all the relations who descend from a common ancestor, or who spring from a common root. A group of kindred persons. Hartley v. Bohrer, 52 Idaho 72, 11 P.2d 616, 618. Husband and wife and their children, wherever they may reside, and whether they dwell together or not. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Shadid, Tex.Com.App., 68 S.W.2d 1030, 1032.

The word conveys the notion of some relationship, blood or otherwise. Collins v. Northwest Casualty Co., 180 Wash. 347, 39 P.2d 986, 989. In restricted sense, the word "family" may be used interchangeably with household. Collins v. Northwest Casualty Co., 180 Wash. 347, 39 P.2d 986, 989.

When used in constitution of benefit society, declaring its purpose among others as that of aiding the families of members, the word means such persons as habitually reside under one roof and form one domestic circle, or such persons as are dependent on each other for support or among whom there is legal or equitable obligation to furnish support and in its widest scope it would include all descendants of a common progenitor. Logan v. St. Louis Police Relief Ass'n, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1048, 1049, 1050.

As used in context of uninsured motorist insurance coverage, "family" is not confined to those who stand in a legal or blood relationship, but rather should include those who live within the domestic circle of, and are economically dependent on, the named insured (e.g. foster child or ward). Brokenbaugh v. N. J. Manufacturers Ins. Co. et al., 158 N.J.Super. 424, 386 A.2d 433.

Descent and descendants. The word "family" may mean all descendants of a common progenitor, Logan v. St. Louis Police Relief Ass'n, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1048, 1049, 1050; In re Lund's Estate, 26 Cal.2d 472, 159 P.2d 643, 645; or, those who are of the same lineage, or descend from one common progenitor.

Homestead and exemption laws. To constitute family there must be one whom law designates or recognizes as head of family who by natural ties or by legal or moral obligation is under duty to support others of the household. Owens v. Altsheimer & Co., 263 Ky. 727, 93 S.W.2d 844, 846. To constitute persons living with another in same house a "family", it must appear that they are being supported by that other in whole or in part, and are dependent on him therefor, and that he is under a natural or moral obligation to render such support.

Household. Those who live in same household subject to general management and control of the head thereof. Family and household are substantially synonymous terms for certain purposes.

Support. A "family" is a collection of persons living together under one head, under such circumstances or conditions that the head is under a legal or moral obligation to support the other members, and the other members are dependent upon him or her for support. Hurt v. Perryman, 173 Tenn. 646, 122 S.W.2d 426, 427. Those entitled by law to look to person for support and protection. In re Fulton's Estate, 15 Cal.App.2d 202, 59 P.2d 508, 510. See also Dependent.

Wills. As respects construction of will, the word "family" denotes a group of persons related to each other by marriage or blood living together under a single roof and comprising a household whose head is usually the father or husband, but the word is not one of inflexible meaning and its significance to a large extent depends upon the context and the purpose for which it is employed. For example, the word "family" has been held to include those who have left father's home and have married and established their own homes when context and purpose indicate such significance should be attributed to the word. Magill v. Magill, 317 Mass. 89, 56 N.E.2d 892, 894, 896.

When the word "family" is used to designate those entitled to receive a legacy, the intended meaning of the word depends upon the context of the will and upon a showing as to whom were the objects of the testator's bounty by reason of kinship or friendship.

Family allowance. Consists of certain amount of decedent's property allocated for the support of the widow and children during the period of estate administration.

Family arrangement. A term denoting an agreement between a father and his children, or between the heirs of a deceased father, to dispose of property, or to partition it in a different manner than that which would result if the law alone directed it, or to divide up property without administration. In these cases, frequently, the mere relation of the parties will give effect to bargains otherwise without adequate consideration. See also Family settlement.

Family automobile doctrine. In a number of jurisdictions, when an automobile is maintained by the owner thereof for the general use and convenience of his or her family, such owner is liable for the negligence of a member of the family, having general authority to drive the car, while it is being used as such family car; that is, for the pleasure or convenience of the family or a member of it. This doctrine has been rejected, superseded, or limited in its application, in most states.

The doctrine rests upon the basis that the automobile is furnished by the husband in his individual capacity and as common-law head of the family for the use of the family, and not as the agent of the community. Under the doctrine, a father furnishing automobile for pleasure and convenience of family makes the use of automobile by family his business and any member of family driving automobile with father's express or implied consent is the father's agent and the father is liable for the member's negligence. Donn v. Kunz, 52 Ariz. 219, 79 P.2d 965, 966, 967.

See also Family group; Family purpose doctrine, which are synonymous terms.

Family Bible. A Bible containing a record of the births, marriages, and deaths of the members of a family.

Family car doctrine. See Family automobile doctrine.

Family council. See Family arrangement; Family meeting; Conseil de famille.

Family court. Such courts exist in several states. While the jurisdiction of such courts will differ somewhat from state to state, typically this court will have jurisdiction over: (1) child abuse and neglect proceedings, (2) support proceedings, (3) proceedings to determine paternity and for support of children born out of wedlock, (4) proceedings permanently to terminate custody by reason of permanent neglect, (5) proceedings concerning juvenile delinquency and whether a person is in need of supervision, and (6) family offenses proceedings. The family court may be a division or department of a court of general jurisdiction.

Family disturbance. Generic term used to describe any crime, tort or disorder within or touching the family.
Family expense statutes. State statutes which permit charge against property of husband or wife for debts connected with family such as rent, groceries, clothing, and tuition.

As used in tax law, expenses incurred for personal, living or family purposes for which no deduction may be claimed. I.R.C. § 262.

Family group. Within purview of the family automobile doctrine, is not confined to persons related to the owner, but includes members of the collective body of persons living in his household for whose convenience the car is maintained and who have authority to use it. See also Family automobile doctrine; Family purpose doctrine, which are synonymous terms.

Family law. Branch or specialty of law, also denominated "domestic relations" law, concerned with such subjects as divorce, separation, paternity, custody, support and child care. See also Family court.

Family meeting. In Louisiana, an advisory jury called to aid court in determining matters or affairs in which members of family are concerned. An institution of the laws of Louisiana, being a council of the relatives (or, if there are no relatives, of the friends) of a minor, for the purpose of advising as to his affairs and the administration of his property. It corresponds to the "conseil de famille" of French law.

Family partnership. In tax law, partnership consisting of members of family and such members shall include only a spouse, ancestors and lineal descendants. I.R.C. § 704(e).

Family physician. A physician who regularly attends and is consulted by the members of the family as their medical adviser; but he need not attend in all cases or be consulted by all the members of the family.

Family purpose doctrine. A doctrine that the owner of a car, who gives it over to the use of his family and permits it to be operated by the members thereof, is liable for the injuries inflicted while being operated by a member of the family. Turoff v. Burch, 60 App.D.C. 221, 50 F.2d 986, 987. Under "family purpose" doctrine where one purchases and maintains automobile for comfort, convenience, pleasure, entertainment and recreation of his family, any member thereof operating automobile will be regarded as agent or servant of the owner and owner will be held liable for injuries sustained by third person by reason of negligent operation of vehicle by member of family. Freeland v. Freeland, 152 W.Va. 332, 162 S.E.2d 922, 925. This doctrine has been rejected, or limited in its application, in many states. See also Family automobile doctrine and Family group, which are synonymous terms.

Family service rule. See Family automobile doctrine.

Family settlement. An agreement between members of a family settling the distribution of family property among them. Fitzgerald v. Nelson, 159 Or. 264, 79 P.2d 254, 255. An arrangement or an agreement, between heirs of a deceased person, by which they agree on distribution or management of estate without administration by court having jurisdiction of such administration proceedings. Wright v. Salt-marsh, 174 Okl. 226, 50 P.2d 694, 703. An agreement made between a father and his son or children or between brothers to dispose of property in a different manner from that which would otherwise take place. Peterson v. Hegna, 158 Minn. 289, 197 N.W. 484, 487. A term of practically the same significance as "family arrangement" (q.v.).

Fanatic. A religious or political enthusiast; a person entertaining extravagant notions, or affected by excessive zeal or enthusiasm, especially upon religious or political subjects.

Fanciful trade-name. Trade-names are "fanciful" when they do not, by their usual and ordinary meaning, denote or describe products to which they are applied, but indicate their purpose by application and association. Skinner Mfg. Co. v. General Foods Sales Co., D.C.Neb., 52 F.Supp. 432, 445.

Faneja /fənˈjɛɡə/. In Spanish law, a measure of land varying in different provinces, but in the Spanish settlements in America consisting of 6,400 square varas or yards.

Faquier /fəkɪr/. See Fakir.

Fardel of land /fərdəl ov lænd/. In old English law, the fourth part of a yard-land.

Farding-deal. The fourth part of an acre of land.

Fare. A voyage, journey, or passage. The transportation charge paid by passenger. A paying passenger.

As used in connection with interstate transportation means a rate of charge for the carriage of passengers, as approved by the proper governmental agency. Krause v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 141 Neb. 844, 5 N.W.2d 229, 232.

Farleu (or Farley) /fərlɪuː/ /fərlɪ/-. Money paid by tenants in lieu of a heriot. It was often applied to the best chattel, as distinguished from heriot, the best beast.

Farlingaril /fərəŋɡəˈrɪə/-. Whoremongers; adulterers.

Farm, n. A tract of land devoted to agriculture, pasturage, stock raising, or some allied industry. Includes dairy, stock, and poultry farms.

The original meaning of the word was rent; a term; a lease of lands; a leasehold interest, and by a natural transition it came to mean the land out of which the rent or lease issued.

A letting out of the collection of taxes and revenues for a fixed sum. See also Farmer.

Farm, v. To lease or let; to demise or grant for a limited term and at a stated rental. To carry on business or occupation of farming.
FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Farming products. All things are considered as "farming products" or "agricultural products" which have a situs of their production upon the farm and which are brought into condition for uses of society by labor of those engaged in agricultural pursuits as contradi

Farm-to-market roads. Within act designating purposes for which road funds were allotted to counties, held to mean county public highways leading directly to, or intersecting, state highways leading to markets. Hastings v. Pfieffer, 184 Ark. 952, 43 S.W.2d 1073, 1074.

Farthing /fær/. An ancient English coin, containing much from farding-deal (q.v.).

Farrier /fær/. Occupation of shoeing horses.

Farthing of gold. An ancient English coin, containing value the fourth part of a noble.

Farthing of land. A great quantity of land, differing much from farding-deal (q.v.).

Fast estate. A nautical measure of six feet in length. Occasionally used as a superficial measure of land and in mining, and in that case it means a square fathom or thirty-six square feet.

Fast /fæst/. In Roman law, lawful. Dies fasti, lawful days; days on which justice could lawfully be administered by the prætor.

Fast bill of exceptions. A former practice in Georgia in injunction suits and similar cases, meaning to bring the case up for review with great expedition.

Fast-day. A day of fasting and penitence, or of mortification by religious abstinence.

Fastermans, fastermannes, or fastingmen /fæstərmənz/ /fæstɪŋmən/. Men in repute and substance; pledges, sureties, or bondsmen, who, according to the Saxon polity, were fast bound to answer for each other's peaceable behavior.

Fast-mansion. See Mansion.

Fast estate. See Estate.

Fastl /fæstl/. In Roman law, lawful.

Fatal errors. Harmful errors; reversible errors. Such only as may reasonably be held to have worked substantial injury or prejudice to complaining party. Such errors generally afford party right to new trial, as contrasted with "harmless" errors which do not. See Error.

Fatal injury. A term embracing injuries resulting in death, which, as used in accident and disability insurance policies is distinguished from "disability," which embraces injuries preventing the insured from performing the work in which he is usually employed, but not resulting in death.

A fatal variance is a failure to prove material allegations contained in information; it is a failure of proof. Davis v. State, 241 Ark. 646, 242 Ark. 43, 411 S.W.2d 331, 354.

The general rule with respect to proof of time when an offense is committed is that there is no "fatal variance" from the allegation that it was committed on a particular date, to show that it was actually committed on or about or near that date unless the variance results in misleading defendant so as to prevent him from making his defense to the charge or to deprive him of the benefit of a plea of former jeopardy in event of another trial for the same offense. People v. Tracy, 50 Cal.App.2d 460, 123 P.2d 138, 140, 141.

See also Variance.

Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit /fætiydr fæsnas kwæy jadish(ï)yam fyûwjat/. He who flees judgment confesses his guilt.

Father. A male parent. He by whom a child is begotten. Natural father; procreator of a child. For "Putative father," see that title.

As used in law, this term may (according to the context and the nature of the instrument) include a putative as well as a legal father, also a stepfather, an adoptive father, or a grandfather, but is not as wide as the word "parent," and cannot be so construed as to include a female.

As used in statute providing that father may inherit from his illegitimate children, includes heirs of the father. State v. Chavez, 42 N.M. 569, 82 P.2d 900, 906.

A priest of the clergy.

Father-in-law. The father of one's wife or husband.

Fathom. A nautical measure of six feet in length. Occasionally used as a superficial measure of land and in mining, and in that case it means a square fathom or thirty-six square feet.

Fatua mulier /fæchuwə myùwl(ï)yər/. A whore; prostitute.

Fatuitas /fæchuwatəs/. In old English law, fatuity; idiocy.

Fatum /fæydəm/. Lat. Fate; a superhuman power; an event or cause of loss, beyond human foresight or means of prevention.

Fatuum judicium /fæchuwəm jadish(ï)yəm/. A foolish judgment or verdict. As applied to the latter it is one rather false by reason of folly than criminally so, or as amounting to perjury.

Fatuus /fæchuwəs/. An idiot or fool. Foolish; silly; absurd; indiscreet; or ill considered. See Fatuum judicium.
Fatuous, apud jurisconsultos nostros, accipitur pro non compos mentis; et fatuus dicitur, qui omnino desipit /fātūwās, āpōd jūrāskansālto𝑤s nōstrowś, aēksipādār prōw nōn kōmpōs méntōs; et fātīwūs disādār kwāy omnānōw dēspāt/. Fatuus, among our jurisconsults, is understood for a man not of right mind; and he is called “fatuous” who is altogether foolish.

Fatuous præsumitur qui in proprio nomine errat /fātīwūs prāz(y)īwāmādār kwāy in pōrwprīwiw nómaniā ēhrāt/. A man is presumed to be simple who makes a mistake in his own name.

Faubourg /fözōbōrɡ/ˈfōw包围/. In French law, and in Louisiana, a district or part of a town adjoining the principal city; a suburb.

Fauces terrae /fōziy tēhriy/. (Jaws of the land.) Narrow headlands and promontories, inclosing a portion or arm of the sea within them.

Fault. Negligence; an error or defect of judgment or of conduct; any deviation from prudence, duty, or rectitude; any shortcoming, or neglect of care or performance resulting from inattention, incapacity, or perversity; a wrong tendency, course, or act; bad faith or mismanagement; neglect of duty. Continental Ins. Co. v. Sabine Towing Co., C.C.A.Tex., 117 F.2d 694, 697.

Wrongful act, omission or breach. U.C.C. § 1–201(16).

Fauntleroy doctrine. In Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, 52 L.Ed. 1039, the U.S. Supreme Court held that a state must give full faith and credit to a judgment of a sister state if such state had jurisdiction to render it even though the judgment is based on an original cause of action which is illegal in the state in which enforcement is sought.

Fautor /fōdar/. Old English law. A favorer or supporter of others; an abettor. A partisan. One who encouraged resistance to the execution of process.

Spanish law. Accomplice; the person who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime.

Faux /fōw/. Civil law. The fraudulent alteration of the truth. The same with the Latin falsum or crimen falsi.

French law. A falsification or fraudulent alteration or suppression of a thing by words, by writings, or by acts without either. Faux may be understood in three ways. In its most extended sense it is the alteration of truth, with or without intention; it is nearly synonymous with “lying.” In a less extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, accompanied with fraud, mutatio veritatis cum dolo facta. And lastly, in a narrow, or rather the legal, sense of the word, when it is a question to know if the faux be a crime, it is the fraudulent alteration of the truth in those cases ascertained and punished by the law.

Favor, n. An act of kindness or generosity, as distinguished from one that is inspired by regard for justice, duty, or right. Friendly regard shown towards another. Bias; partiality; lenity; prejudice. See Challenge.

Favor, v. To regard with favor; to aid or to have the disposition to aid; to show partiality or unfair bias towards; practically synonymous with “support.”

Favorabilia in lege sunt fiscus, dos, vita, libertas /févarīb(i)yay ˈlɪjɪjɪj sɪnt fɪskəs, dəʊs, vɪtə, lɪbərtəs/. Things favorably considered in law are the treasury, dower, life, liberty.

Favorabiliores rei, potius quam actores, habentur /févarīb(i)yayorɪˈriy ˈriː, pəˈtjuːʃ(ə) kɒˈtʃɪəri, həˈbɛntər/. The condition of the defendant must be favored, rather than that of the plaintiff.

Favorabiliores sunt executiones allis processibus quis­buscunque /févarīb(i)yayorɪˈriy sɪnt ˈkwɪsˌbʌkswarentʃiˈkjuːˈbɛnkwɪʃən/. Exeuctions are preferred to all other processes whatever.

Favored beneficiary. Within rule that confidential relations and activity by favored beneficiary in the execution of the will raises a prima facie presumption of undue influence, is one who in the circumstances has been favored over others having equal claims to testator’s bounty. Mindler v. Crocker, 245 Ala. 578, 18 So.2d 278, 281.

Favored nation. See Most favored nation clause.

Favores amplandi sunt; odia restringenda /favɔˈriːviʒ æmpliˈændə jɔˈdiə rɛˈstrɪŋdəndə/. Favors are to be enlarged; things hateful restrained.

Favoritism. Invidious preference and selection based on friendship and factors other than merit. See Nepotism; Patronage.

Favor legitimationis /fɛˈviːvar laɪˈdɪməˈmɛʃəˈwəʊnəs/. Favor of legitimacy; in conflicts of law, principle which is invoked to uphold a marriage. In conflicts of law, principle invoked to uphold a marriage.

Favor negotii /fɛˈviːvar nəˈɡətʃiˌi/. In conflicts of laws, legal principle which favors agreement of the parties against a construction which would render an agreement illegal or unenforceable.

Favor paternitatis /fɛˈviːvar pəˈtərnəˌtɪtəs/. Favor of paternity. Legal principle which is invoked to uphold paternity of child.

Favor solutionis /fɛˈviːvar səˈljuːʃənəs/. In conflicts, a rule of interpretation of a contract in terms of the applicable law governing performance.

Favor testamenti /fɛˈviːvar tɛstəməntˌi/. In conflicts, general rule favoring the validity of a will.

Fear /fiər/ n. 1. A feeling of apprehension or dread; mental fear. 2. Profound reverence and awe.

Feasable /fiəzəbəl/ adj. 1. Capable of being done, executed, affected or accomplished. 2. Reasonable assurance of success. See Possible.

Feasance /fiəsəns/ n. A doing; the doing of an act; a performing or performance. See Malfeasance; Misfeasance; Nonfeasance.

Feasor /fiəzər/ n. Doer; maker. Feasors del estatute, makers of the statute. Also used in the compound term, "tort-feasor," one who commits or is guilty of a tort.

Feasant /fiəzənt/ n. Doing, or making, as, in the term "damage feasant" (doing damage or injury), spoken of cattle straying upon another's land.

Feasality /fiəzələti/ n. 1. Doer; maker. Feasors del estatute, makers of the statute. Also used in the compound term, "tort-feasor," one who commits or is guilty of a tort.

Feast. Certain established festivals or holidays in the ecclesiastical calendar. These days were annually used as the dates of legal instruments, and in England the quarter-days, for paying rent, are four feast-days. The terms of the courts, in England, before 1875, were fixed to begin on certain days determined with reference to the occurrence of four of the chief feasts.

Featherbedding. The name given to employee practices which create or spread employment by unnecessarily maintaining or increasing the number of employees, or the amount of time consumed, to work on a particular job. It may take the form of minimum-crew regulations on the railroad, make-work rules such as the setting and prompt destruction of unneeded "bogus" type in the newspaper industry, stand-by pay for musicians when a radio station broadcasts music from phonograph records, or production ceilings for work on the assembly line or at the construction site. Most of these practices stem from a desire on the part of employees for job security in the face of technological improvements. In addition to job security, employees often justify such practices as required by minimum standards of health and safety (e.g., minimum-crew and production-ceiling limitations).

Fecial law /fiəshəl laʊ/ n. The nearest approach to a system of international law known to the ancient world. It was a branch of Roman jurisprudence, concerned with embarks declarations of war, treaties of peace. It received this name from the feciales (q.v.), who were charged with its administration.

Federal. Belonging to the general government or union of the states. Founded on or organized under the Constitution of the United States. Pertaining to the national government of the United States. Of or constituting a government in which power is distributed between a central authority (i.e., federal government) and a number of constituent territorial units (i.e., states). See also Federal government.

A league or compact between two or more states, to become united under one central government. See Federation.

Federal Acts. Statutes enacted by Congress, relating to matters within authority delegated to federal government by U.S. Constitution.

Federal Aviation Administration. The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), formerly the Federal Aviation Agency, became a part of the Department of Transportation in 1967 as a result of the Department of Transportation Act (80 Stat. 932). The Federal Aviation Administration is charged with regulating air commerce to foster aviation safety; promoting civil aviation and a national system of airports; achieving efficient use of navigable airspace; and developing and operating a common system of air traffic control and air navigation for both civilian and military aircraft.

Federal Bureau of Investigation. The FBI (established in 1908) is charged with investigating all violations of Federal laws with the exception of those which have been assigned by legislative enactment or otherwise to some other Federal agency. The FBI’s jurisdiction includes a wide range of responsibilities in the criminal, civil, and security fields. Among these are espionage, sabotage, and other subversive activities; kidnaping; extortion; bank robbery; interstate transportation of stolen property; civil rights matters; interstate gambling violations; fraud against the Government; and assault or killing the President or a Federal officer. Cooperative services of the FBI for other duly authorized law enforcement agencies in-Federal census. A census of each state or territory or of a certain state or of any subdivision or portion of any state, provided it is taken by and under the direction and supervision of the Census Bureau of the United States, and approved and certified by it as the census of that state or subdivision. See Census.

Federal citizenship. Rights and obligations accruing by reason of being a citizen of the United States. State or status of being a citizen of the United States.

A person born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof is a citizen of the United States and of the State wherein he resides. Fourteenth Amend., U.S. Const.

See also Citizenship; Naturalization.

Federal common law. A body of a decisional law developed by the federal courts untrammeled by state court decisions. O'Brien v. Western Union Telegraph Co., C.C.A.Mass., 113 F.2d 539, 541. The application of federal common law was restricted by Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188, which held that the federal courts are required to apply state law except as to cases governed by the U.S. Constitution and Acts of Congress, thereby overruling Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. (16 Pet.) 1, 10 L.Ed. 865. See Swift v. Tyson case.

Federal Communications Commission. The Federal Communications Commission was created by the Communications Act of 1934 to regulate interstate and foreign communications by wire and radio in the public interest. It was assigned additional regulatory jurisdiction under the provisions of the Communications Satellite Act of 1962. The scope of its regulatory powers includes radio and television broadcasting; telephone, telegraph, and cable television operation; two-way radio and radio operators; and satellite communication.

Federal courts. The courts of the United States as created either by Art. III of U.S. Const., or by Congress. See specific courts; e.g. Court of Appeals; Court of Claims; District (District courts); Supreme Court; Three-Judge courts.

Federal crimes. Those acts which have been made criminal by federal law. There are no federal common law crimes though many federal statutes have incorporated the elements of common law crimes. Most federal crimes are codified in Title 18 of the United States Code; though other Code Titles also include specific crimes.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The F.D.I.C. is an independent agency within the executive branch of the Government. The management of the Corporation is vested in a Board of Directors consisting of three members, one of whom is the Comptroller of the Currency, and two of whom are appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. Appointive members serve 6-year terms, and one serves as Chairman of the Board of Directors. The Corporation insures, up to the statutory limitation, the deposits in national banks, in State banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System, and in State banks which apply for Federal Deposit Insurance and meet certain prescribed qualifications.

Federal Employees' Compensation Act. Type of workers' compensation plan for federal employees by which payments are made for death or disability sustained in performance of duties of employment. 5 U.S.C.A. § 8101 et seq.

Federal government. The system of government administered in a nation formed by the union or confederation of several independent states.

In strict usage, there is a distinction between a confederation and a federal government. The former term denotes a league or permanent alliance between several states, each of which is fully sovereign and independent, and each of which retains its full dignity, organization, and sovereignty, though yielding to the central authority a controlling power for a few limited purposes, such as external and diplomatic relations. In this case, the component states are the units, with respect to the confederation, and the central government acts upon them, not upon the individual citizens. In a federal government, on the other hand, the allied states form a union,—not, indeed, to such an extent as to destroy their separate organization or deprive them of quasij soverignty with respect to the administration of their purely local concerns, but so that the central power is erected into a true national government, possessing sovereignty both external and internal,—while the administration of national affairs is directed, and its effects felt, not by the separate states deliberating as units, but by the people of all, in their collective capacity, as citizens of the nation. The distinction is expressed, by the German writers, by the use of the two words "Staatenbund" and "Bundesstaat," the former denoting a league or confederation of states, and the latter a federal government, or state formed by means of a league or confederation.

See also Federal.

Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The board which charters and regulates federal savings and loan associations, and controls the system of Federal Home Loan Banks.

Federal Home Loan Banks. Banks created under the Federal Home Loan Act of 1932, for the purpose of keeping a permanent supply of money available for home financing. The banks are controlled by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Savings and loans, insurance companies, and other similar companies making long term mortgage loans may become members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, and thus may borrow from one of twelve regional banks throughout the country.

Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation. A federal agency which purchases first mortgages (both conventional and federally insured) from members of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Home Loan Bank System. Commonly called "Freddie Mac."
Federal Housing Administration. This federal agency, established by Congress in 1934, insures mortgage loans made by FHA-approved lenders on homes that meet FHA standards in order to make mortgages more desirable investments for lenders.

Federal Insurance Contributions Act. Federal Act imposing social security tax on employees, self-employed, and employers. Under the F.I.C.A. the employer matches the tax paid by the employee. These taxes fund the social security and medicare programs.

Federalism. Term which includes interrelationships among the states and relationship between the states and the federal government.

Federalist Papers. A series of 85 essays by Alexander Hamilton, James Madison and John Jay, expounding and advocating the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. All but six of the essays were first published in the "Independent Journal" of New York City from October, 1787, to April, 1788.

Federal Judicial Code. This Code, comprising Title 28 of the United States Code, is concerned with the organization, jurisdiction, venue, and procedures of the federal court system. Also covered by this Code is the Department of Justice as well as court officers and personnel.

Federal jurisdiction. Powers of federal courts founded on U.S. Constitution (Article III) and Acts of Congress (e.g. Title 28 of United States Code). See Diversity of citizenship; Federal question; Jurisdiction.

Federal Land Banks. Regional banks established by Congress to provide mortgage loans to farmers. See Federal Home Loan Banks.

Federal laws. See Federal acts.

Federal Maritime Commission. The Federal Maritime Commission regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic offshore commerce of the United States, assures that United States international trade is open to all nations on fair and equitable terms, and guards against unauthorized monopoly in the waterborne commerce of the United States. This is accomplished through maintaining surveillance over steamship conferences and common carriers by water; assuring that only the rates on file with the Commission are charged; approving agreements between persons subject to the Shipping Act; guaranteeing equal treatment to shippers and carriers by terminal operators, freight forwarders, and other persons subject to the shipping statutes; and ensuring that adequate levels of financial responsibility are maintained for indemnification of passengers or oil spill cleanup.

Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service helps prevent disruptions in the flow of interstate commerce caused by labor-management disputes by providing mediators to assist disputing parties in the resolution of their differences. The Service can intervene on its own motion or by invitation of either side in a dispute. Mediators have no law enforcement authority and rely wholly on persuasive techniques. The Service also helps provide qualified third party neutrals as factfinders or arbitrators.

Federal National Mortgage Association. Organized in 1938 to provide a secondary mortgage market for purchase and sale of mortgages guaranteed by Veterans Administration and those insured under Federal Housing Administration. The short name for this association is "Fannie Mae".

Federal Power Commission. The Federal Power Commission issues permits and licenses for non-Federal hydroelectric power projects; regulates the rates and other aspects of interstate wholesale transactions in electric power and natural gas; issues certificates for interstate gas sales and construction and operation of interstate pipeline facilities; conducts continuing investigations of the electric power and natural gas pipeline industries and their relationships to national programs and objectives, including conservation and efficient utilization of resources; recommends and enforces protection of our environment in the construction of new hydroelectric projects and natural gas transmission lines consistent with the Nation's needs for adequate and reliable electric power and natural gas services; and allocates resources consistent with the public interest under the Federal Power Act and the Natural Gas Act. The Federal Power Commission was terminated in 1977, with its functions taken over by the Department of Energy, and, within the DOE, by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Federal pre-emption. The U.S. Constitution and acts of Congress have given to the federal government exclusive power over certain matters such as interstate commerce and sedition to the exclusion of state jurisdiction. Occurs where federal law so occupies the field that state courts are prevented from asserting jurisdiction. State v. McHorse, 85 N.M. 753, 517 P.2d 75, 79. See also Pre-emption.

Federal question. Cases arising under Constitution of United States, Acts of Congress, or treaties, and involving their interpretation and application, and of which jurisdiction is given to federal courts, are commonly described as involving a "federal question." See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1331 with respect to "federal question" jurisdiction of federal courts.

Federal Register. The Federal Register, published daily, is the medium for making available to the public Federal agency regulations and other legal documents of the executive branch. These documents cover a wide range of Government activities. An important function of the Federal Register is that it includes proposed changes (rules, regulations, standards, etc.) of governmental agencies. Each proposed change published carries an invitation for any citizen or group to participate in the consideration of the proposed regulation through the submission of written data, views, or arguments, and sometimes by oral presentations. Such regulations and rules as finally approved appear thereafter in the Code of Federal Regulations.

Federal Reserve Act. Law which created Federal Reserve banks which act as agents in maintaining money reserves, issuing money in the form of bank notes, lending money to banks, and supervising banks. Administered by Federal Reserve Board (q.v.).

Federal Reserve Banks. See Federal Reserve Act; Federal Reserve Board of Governors; Federal Reserve System.

Federal Reserve Board of Governors. The seven-member Board of Governors, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Congress, sets reserve requirements for member banks, reviews and approves the discount-rate actions of regional Federal Reserve Banks, sets ceilings on the rates of interest that banks can pay on time and savings deposits, and issues regulations. Members also sit on the Federal Open Market Committee—the principal instrument for implementing the Board's national monetary policy.

Federal reserve notes. Form of currency issued by Federal Reserve Banks in the likeness of noninterest bearing promissory note payable to bearer on demand. The federal reserve note (e.g., one, five, ten, etc. dollar bill) is the most widely used paper currency. Such have replaced silver and gold certificates which were backed by silver and gold. Such reserve notes are direct obligations of the United States.

Federal Reserve System. Network of twelve central banks to which most national banks belong and to which state chartered banks may belong. Membership rules require investment of stock and minimum reserves. The Federal Reserve System was established in 1913 to give the country an elastic currency, provide facilities for discounting commercial paper and to improve the supervision of banking.

The System consists of five parts: the Board of Governors in Washington; the 12 Federal Reserve Banks, their branches and other facilities situated throughout the country; the Federal Open Market Committee; the Federal Advisory Council; and the member commercial banks, which include all national banks and State-chartered banks that have voluntarily joined the System.

Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. These rules govern procedure in appeals to United States courts of appeals from the United States district courts and the Tax Court of the United States; in proceedings in the courts of appeals for review or enforcement of orders of administrative agencies, boards, commissions and officers of the United States; and in applications for writs or other relief which a court of appeals or a judge thereof is competent to give. Certain states have adopted appellate rules patterned on such federal rules.

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Body of procedural rules which govern all civil actions in U.S. District Courts and after which most of the states have modeled their own rules of procedure. These rules were promulgated by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1938 under power granted by Congress, and have since been frequently amended. Such rules also govern bankruptcy proceedings in the bankruptcy courts; and, Supplemental Rules, in addition to main body of rules, govern admiralty and maritime actions.

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Procedural rules which govern all criminal proceedings in the U.S. District Courts, and, where specified, before U.S. Magistrates. Such rules were promulgated by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1945 under power granted by Congress, and have since been frequently amended. Several states have adopted criminal rules patterned on the federal criminal rules.

Federal Rules of Evidence. Rules which govern the admissibility of evidence at trials in the Federal Courts and before U.S. Magistrates. Several states have adopted Evidence Rules patterned on these federal rules.

Federal statutes. See Federal Acts.

Federal Tort Claims Act. The government of the United States may not be sued in tort without its consent. That consent was given in the Federal Tort Claims Act (1946), which largely abrogated the federal government's immunity from tort liability and established the conditions for suits and claims against the federal government. The Act preserves governmental immunity with respect to the traditional categories of intentional torts, and with respect to acts or omissions which fall within the "discretionary function or duty" of any federal agency or employee. See also Governmental immunity; Sovereign immunity.

Federal Trade Commission. Agency of the federal government created in 1914. The Commission's principal functions are to promote free and fair competition in interstate commerce through prevention of general trade restraints such as price-fixing agreements, false advertising, boycotts, illegal combinations of competitors and other unfair methods of competition. See also Clayton Act; Robinson-Patman Act; Sherman Antitrust Act.

Federation. A joining together of states or nations in a league or association; the league itself. See also Compact; Federal; Federal government.

An unincorporated association of persons for a common purpose.

Fee. A charge fixed by law for services of public officers or for use of a privilege under control of government. Fort Smith Gas Co. v. Wiseman, 189 Ark. 675, 74 S.W.2d 789, 790. A recompense for an official or professional service or a charge or emolument or compensation for a particular act or service. A fixed charge or perquisite charged as recompense for labor; reward, compensation, or wage given to a person for performance of services or something done or to be done.

See also Base (Base fee); Commitment (Commitment fee); License fee; Poundage fees; Retainer.

Attorney fees. Numerous federal statutes provide for the award of attorney fees to the prevailing party, e.g. 25% of award in social security disability claim actions. See Contingent fees, infra; also, American Rule; Minimum fee schedules; Suit (Suit money).

Contingent fees. Arrangement between attorney and client whereby attorney agrees to represent client with compensation to be a percentage of the amount recovered; e.g. 25% if case is settled, 30% if case goes to trial. Frequently used in personal injury actions. Such fees are often regulated by court rule or statute depending on the type of action and amount of recovery.

Docket fees. See Docket.

Estates

An estate of inheritance without condition, belonging to the owner, and alienable by him or transmissible to his heirs absolutely and simply, and is an absolute estate in perpetuity and the largest possible estate a man can have, being, in fact, allodial in its nature. Stanton v. Sullivan, 63 R.I. 216, 7 A.2d 696, 698, 699. See also Fee simple.

Ordinarilly, word "fee" or "fee simple" is applied to an estate in land, but term is applicable to any kind of hereditament, corporeal or incorporeal, and is all the property in thing referred to or largest estate therein which person may have. In re Forsstrom, 44 Ariz. 472, 38 P.2d 878, 888.

A freehold estate in lands, held of a superior lord, as a reward for services, and on condition of rendering some service in return for it. The true meaning of the word "fee" is the same as that of "feud" or "fief," and in its original sense it is taken in contradistinction to "allodium," which latter is defined as a man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without owing any rent or service to any superior. 2 Bl.Com. 105.

In modern English tenures, "fee" signifies an estate of inheritance, being the highest and most extensive interest which a man can have in a feud; and when the term is used simply, without any adjunct, or in the form "fee-simple," it imports an absolute inheritance clear of any condition, limitation, or restriction to particular heirs, but descendible to the heirs general, male or female, lineal or collateral. 2 Bl.Com. 106.

Base fee. A determinable or qualified fee; an estate having the nature of a fee, but not a fee simple absolute.

Conditional fee. An estate restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others, Blume v. Pearcy, 204 S.C. 409, 29 S.E.2d 673, 674, as to the heirs of a man's body, by which only his male descendants were admitted, in exclusion of collateral; or to the heirs male of his body, in exclusion of heirs female, whether lineal or collateral. It was called a "conditional fee," by reason of the condition expressed or implied in the donation of it that, if the donee died without such particular heirs, the land should revert to the donor. The term includes a fee that is either to commence or determine on some condition; and is sometimes used interchangeably with "base fee," that is, one to determine or be defeated on the happening of some contingent event or act.

Determinable fee. Also called a "base" or "qualified" fee. One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. An estate in fee which is liable to be determined by some act or event expressed on its limitation to circumscribe its continuance, or inferred by law as bounding its extent. An estate which may last forever is a "fee," but if it may end on the happening of a merely possible event, it is a "determinable," or "qualified fee."

Determinable fee or fee simple. Estate created with special limitation which delimits duration of estate in land.

Fee damages. See Damages.

Fee expectant. A name sometimes applied to an estate created where lands are given to a man and his wife and the heirs of their bodies. See also Frank-Marriage.

Fee simple. See Fee simple.

Fee simple defeasible. Title created in trustees "where legal title in fee simple to active trust estate is by will placed in trustees who are required to distribute property in fee simple upon happening of event. Also called a "determinable fee", "base fee", or "qualified fee."

Great fee. In feudal law, the designation of a fee held directly from the crown.

Knight's fee. See Knight's fee.

Limited fee. An estate of inheritance in lands, which is clogged or confined with some sort of condition or qualification. Such estates are based on qualified Fees, conditional fees, and fees-tail. The term is opposed to "fee-simple."

Plowman's fee. In old English law, was a species of tenure peculiar to peasants or small farmers, somewhat like gavelkind, by which the lands descended in equal shares to all the sons of the tenant.

Qualified fee. In English law, a fee having a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end; otherwise termed a "base fee." An interest which may continue forever, but is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event, circumscribing its continuance or extent. An interest given to a man and certain of his heirs at the time of its limitation.

Quasi fee. An estate gained by wrong.

Feed. To lend additional support; to strengthen ex post facto. Similarly, a subsequent title acquired by the mortgagor is said "to feed the mortgage."

Fee-farm. A species of tenure, where land is held of another in perpetuity at a yearly rent, without fealty, homage, or other services than such as are specially comprised in the feoffment. It corresponds very nearly to the "emphyteusis" of the Roman law. Fealty, however, was incident to a holding in fee-farm, according to some authors.

Fee-farm is where an estate in fee is granted subject to a rent in fee of at least one-fourth of the value of the lands at the time of its reservation. Such rent appears to be called "fee-farm" because a grant of lands reserving so considerable a rent is indeed only letting lands to farm in fee-simple, instead of the usual method of life or years. Fee-farms are lands held in fee to render for them annually the true value, or more or less; so called because a farm rent is reserved upon a grant in fee. Such estates are estates of inheritance. They are classed among estates in fee-simple. No reversionary interest remains in the lessor, and they are therefore subject to the operation of the legal principles which forbid restraints upon alienation in all cases where no feudal relation exists between grantor and grantee.

Fee-farm rent. The rent reserved on granting a fee-farm. It might be one-fourth or one-third the value of the land. Fee-farm rent is a rent-charge issuing out of an estate in fee; a perpetual rent reserved on a conveyance in fee-simple.

Fee simple.

Absolute. A fee simple absolute is an estate limited absolutely to a man and his heirs and assigns forever without limitation or condition. An absolute or fee-simple estate is one in which the owner is entitled to the entire property, with unconditional power of disposition during his life, and descending to his heirs and legal representatives upon his death intestate. Such estate is unlimited as to duration, disposition, and descendibility. Slayden v. Hardin, 257 Ky. 685, 79 S.W.2d 11, 12.

The estate which a man has where lands are given to him and to his heirs absolutely without any end or limit put to his estate. 2 Bl.Comm. 106. The word "fee," used alone, is a sufficient designation of this species of estate, and hence "simple" is not a necessary part of the title, but it is added as a means of clearly distinguishing this estate from a fee-tail or from any variety of conditional estates. Fee-simple signifies a pure fee; an absolute estate of inheritance clear of any condition or restriction to particular heirs, being descendible to the heirs general, whether male or female, lineal or collateral. It is the largest estate and most extensive interest that can be enjoyed in land.

Conditional. Type of transfer in which grantor conveys fee simply on condition that something be done or not done. A defeasible fee which leaves grantor with right of entry for condition broken, which right may be exercised by some action on part of grantor when condition is breached.

At common law an estate in fee simple conditional was a fee limited or restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others. But the statute "De donis" converted all such estates into estates tail. 2 Bl. Comm. 110.

Defeasible. Type of fee grant which may be defeated on the happening of an event. An estate which may last forever, but which may end upon the happening of a specified event, is a "fee simple defeasible". Newbern v. Barnes, 3 N.C.App. 521, 165 S.E.2d 526, 530.

Determinable. A "fee simple determinable" is created by conveyance which contains words effective to create a fee simple and, in addition, a provision for automatic expiration of estate on occurrence of stated event. Selectmen of Town of Nahant v. U.S., D.C.Mass., 293 F.Supp. 1076, 1978.

Fee simple title. See Fee simple.

Fee tail. A freehold estate in which there is a fixed line of inheritable succession limited to the issue of the body of the grantee or devisee, and in which the regular and general succession of heirs at law is cut off. Coleman v. Shoemaker, 147 Kan. 689, 78 P.2d 905, 907.

An estate tail; an estate of inheritance given to a man and the heirs of his body, or limited to certain classes of particular heirs. It corresponds to the feudum talliatum of the feudal law, and the idea is believed to have been borrowed from the Roman law, where, by way of fidei commissa, lands might be entailed upon children and freedmen and their descendants, with restrictions as to alienation. For the varieties and special characteristics of this kind of estate, see Tail, Estate in.

Fegangt /fæŋgænja/. In old English law, a thief caught while escaping with the stolen goods in his possession.

Fehmerichte /fēm'garkita/. The name given to certain secret tribunals which flourished in Germany from the end of the twelfth century to the middle of the sixteenth, usurping many of the functions of the governments which were too weak to maintain law and order, and inspiring dread in all who came within their jurisdiction. Such a court existed in Westphalia (though with greatly diminished powers) until finally suppressed by Jerome Bonaparte in 1811.

Feligned /fē>'nd/. fictitious; pretended; supposititious; simulated.
Feigned accomplice. One who pretends to consult and act with others in the planning or commission of a crime, but only for the purpose of discovering their plans and confederates and securing evidence against them.

Feigned action. An action, now obsolete, brought on a pretended right, when the plaintiff has no true cause of action, for some illegal purpose. In a feigned action the words of the writ are true. It differs from false action, in which case the words of the writ are false. See also Feigned issue.

Feigned diseases. Simulated or pretended illness. Diseases are generally feigned from one of three causes, —fear, shame, or the hope of gain.

Feigned issue. A proceeding, now obsolete, whereby parties, by consent, could have matter determined by jury without actually bringing action. See also Feigned action.

FELA. Federal Employers’ Liability Act.

Felagus /faˈleɪɡəs/. In Saxon law, one bound for another by oath; a sworn brother. A friend bound in the decennary for the good behavior of another. One who took the place of the deceased. Thus, if a person was murdered, the recompense due from the murderer went to the felagus of the slain, in default of parents or lord.

Feld. A field; in composition, wild.

Felle. L. Fr. Faithful. See Feal.

Fellow. A co-worker; a partaker or sharer of; a companion; one with whom we consort; one joined with another in some legal status or relation; a member of a college or corporate body.

Fellow-heir. A co-heir; partner of the same inheritance.

Fellow servant. One who serves and is controlled by the same master. Walsh v. Eubanks, 183 Ark. 34, 34 S.W.2d 762, 764. Those engaged in the same common pursuit, under the same general control. Those who derive authority and compensation from the same common source, and are engaged in the same general business, though it may be in different grades or departments of it. Southern Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 57 App.D.C. 21, 16 F.2d 517, 519. When servants are employed and paid by the same master, and their duties are such as to bring them into such relation that negligence of one in doing his work may injure other in performance of his, then they are engaged in the same common business, and are “fellow servants.” See also Employee.

Fellow servant rule. A common law doctrine, now generally abrogated by workers’ compensation acts and Federal Employers’ Liability Act, that in an action for damages brought against an employer by an injured employee the employer may allege that the negligence of another employee was partly or wholly responsible for the accident resulting in the injury and, thus reducing or extinguishing his own liability.

Felo de se /fəˈloʊ di ˈsiː/. Killing of self; suicide.

Felon /ˈfɛlən/. Person who commits or has committed a felony (q.v.).

Felonía /faˈlowniə/. Felony. The act or offense by which a vassal forfeited his fee. Per feloniwm, with a criminal intention.

Felonía, ex vi termini significat quodlibet capitale crimen felleo animo perpetratum /faˈlowniə, əksv ˈvɛɪ tərˈməni ˈsɪɡnɪˈkɪət kwɒdlɪbət kæpiˈtɛlɪə crɪmən fɛlɨˈo ənɨˈmo ˈpɛrprɛtərætm/. Felony, by force of the term, signifies any capital crime perpetrated with a malignant mind.

Felonía implicatur in qualibet priditione /faˈlowniə ɪmpləˈkɛdər ɪn kwæliˈbɛt prɪdɪˈʃəni/. Felony is implied in every treason.

Felonice /faˈlownəsɪə/. Feloniously.

Felonious /faˈlownɪʃəs/. A technical word of law which means done with intent to commit crime, i.e. criminal intent. Of the grade or quality of a felony, as, for example, a felonious assault (q.v.). Malicious; villainous; traitorous; malignant. Proceeding from an evil heart or purpose. Wickedly and against the admonition of the law; unlawfully. See also Felony; Feloniously.

Felonious assault. Such an assault upon the person as, if consummated, would subject the party making it, upon conviction, to the punishment of a felony, that is, to imprisonment. Aggravated assault as contrasted with simple assault.

Felonious entry. Type of statutory burglary. See Burglary.

Felonious homicide. Killing of human being without justification or excuse. See Homicide; Manslaughter; Murder; Premeditation.

Felonious intent. An act of the will in which one forms his desire to commit a felony.

Feloniously. Of, pertaining to, or having, the quality of felony. Proceeding from an evil heart or purpose; done with a deliberate intention of committing a crime. Golden v. Commonwealth, 245 Ky. 19, 53 S.W.2d 185, 186. Without color of right or excuse. Malignantly; maliciously. Acting with a felonious intent; i.e. acting with intent to commit a felony. See also Felonious.

Felonious taking. As used in the crimes of larceny and robbery, it is the taking with intent to steal.

Felony. A crime of a graver or more serious nature than those designated as misdemeanors; e.g. aggravated assault (felony) as contrasted with simple assault (misdemeanor). Under federal law, and many state statutes, any offense punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1. Many state penal or criminal codes define felony status crimes, and certain states in turn also have various classes of felonies (e.g. Class A, B, C, etc.) with varying sentences for each class.

At common law, an offense occasioning total forfeiture of either land or goods to which capital or other punishment might be superadded according to degree of guilt. At early common law the term was applied to describe the more serious offenses cognizable in the royal courts, conviction for which entailed forfeiture of life, limb and chattels and escheat of lands to Felony

Felony murder doctrine. At common law, one whose conduct brought about an unintended death in the commission or attempted commission of a felony was guilty of murder. While some states still follow the common law rule, today the law of felony murder varies substantially throughout the country, largely as a result of efforts to limit the scope of the rule. Jurisdictions have limited the rule in one or more of the following ways: (1) by permitting its use only as to certain types of felonies; (2) by more strict interpretation of the requirement of proximate or legal cause; (3) by a narrower construction of the time period during which the felony is in the process of commission; (4) by requiring that the underlying felony be independent of the homicide.

Female. The sex which conceives and gives birth to young. Also a member of such sex. The term is generic, but may have the specific meaning of "woman," if so indicated by the context.

Feme sole trader /fém sówl tréydár/. In old English law, a married woman, who, by the custom of London, trades on her own account, independently of her husband; so called because, with respect to her trading, she is the same as a feme sole. The term is applied also to women deserted by their husbands, who do business as femes sole.

Femicide /fémásájyd/. The killing of a woman. One who kills a woman.

Feminine /fémínon/. Of or belonging to females.

Femme couleur libre /fám kūwîlr lybrə/. Up to the time of Civil War, term applied to all persons not of the white race, including Indians.

Fence, n. A hedge, structure, or partition, erected for the purpose of inclosing a piece of land, or to divide a piece of land into distinct portions, or to separate two contiguous estates. An enclosure about a field or other space, or about any object; especially an enclosing structure of wood, iron or other materials, intended to prevent intrusion from without or straying from within.

A colloquial characterization of a receiver of stolen property.

Fence-month, or defense-month. In old English law, a period of time, occurring in the middle of summer, during which it was unlawful to hunt deer in the forest, that being their fawning season. Probably so called because the deer were then defended from pursuit or hunting.

Fencing patents. Patents procured in an effort to broaden the scope of the invention beyond the article or process which is actually intended to be manufactured or licensed. Special Equipment Co. v. Coe, 79 U.S.App.D.C. 133, 144 F.2d 497, 499.

Federation /fənərəʃən/. USury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending. Sometimes applied to interest on money lent.

Fengeld /féngeld/. In Saxon law, a tax or imposition, exacted for the repelling of enemies.

Fenian /fənən/. A champion, hero, giant. This word, in the plural, is generally used to signify invaders or foreign spoilers. A member of an organization of persons of Irish birth, resident in the United States, Canada, and elsewhere, having for its aim the overthrow of English rule in Ireland.

Fod /fɔːd/. The same as feud or fief. 2 Bl.Comm. 45.

Feodal /fəʊdəl/. Belonging to a fee or feud; feudal. More commonly used by the old writers than feudal.

Feodal actions /fəʊdəl əksənəns/. Real actions. 3 Bl.Comm. 117.

Feodalities /fəʊdələdɪz/. Fidelity or fealty. See Fealty.

Feodal system /fəʊdəl ˈsɪstəm/. See Feudal system.

Feodarum (or feudaram) constuetudines /fəʊdərəm kənstrjuˈtjuːdznəz/. The customs of feuds. The name of a compilation of feudal laws and customs made at Milan in the twelfth century. It is the most ancient work on the subject, and was always regarded, on the continent of Europe, as possessing the highest authority.

Feodary /fyúwdariy/. In England, an officer of the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court, under 32 Hen. VIII, c. 26, whose business was to be present with the escheator in every county at the finding of offices of lands, and to give evidence for the king, as well concerning the value as the tenure; and his office was also to survey the land of the ward, after the office found, and to rate it. He also assigned the king's widows their dower; and received all the rents, etc.

Feodatory, or feudatory /fyúwdst(ó)riy/. In feudal law, the grantee of a feod, feudal fee, or fee; the vassal or tenant who held his estate by feudal service. Blackstone uses "feudatory." 2 Bl.Comm. 46.

Feodzi /fyúwday fárma/. In old English law, fee-farm (q.v.).

Feodifirmarlus /fyúwday farmériyas/. The lessee of a fee-farm.

Feodum /fyúwdam/. This word (meaning a feud or fee) is the one most commonly used by the older English law-writers, though its equivalent, "feudum" (q.v.), is used generally by the more modern writers and by the feudal law-writers. There were various classes of feoda, among which may be enumerated the following: Feodum laicum, a lay fee. Feodum militare, a knight's fee. Feodum improprium, an improper or derivative fee. Feodum proprium, a proper and original fee, regulated by the strict rules of feudal succession and tenure. Feodum simplex, a simple or pure fee; fee-simple. Feodum talliatum, a fee-tail.

In old English law, a seigniory or jurisdiction. A fee, a perquisite or compensation for a service.

Feodum antiquum /fyúwdam antákwywam/. A feud which devolved upon a vassal from his intestate ancestor.

Feodum est quoq quis tenet ex quacunque causa sive sit tenementum sive redditus /fyúwdam ét kwód kwis ténad ãk kwékýkwykvi közó sávyvi sit tenaméntam sávyvi réddáz/. A fee is that which any one holds from whatever cause, whether tenement or rent.

Feodum nobile /fyúwdam nówbály/. A fief for which the tenant did guard and owed homage.

Feodum novum /fyúwdam nówywam/. A feud acquired by a vassal himself.

Feodum simplex quia feodum ideum est quoq hereditatas, et simplex ideum est quoq legentilimum vel purum; et sic feodum simplex ideum est quoq hereditatis legitima vel heredititas pura /fyúwdam simpleks kwaës fyúwdam áydam ét kwód hórédástas, et simpleks áydam ét kwód lajdamam vël pyúram; et sìk fyúwdam simpleks áydam ét kwód hórédástas lajdamam vël hórédástas pyúra/. A fee-simple, so called because fee is the same as inheritance, and simple is the same as lawful or pure; and thus fee-simple is the same as a lawful inheritance, or pure inheritance.

Feodum talliatum, i.e., hereditas in quandam certitudinem limitata /fyúwdam tèliyéyédam, id ét, háríyéyédas in kwóndam sàrtat(y)wúdnam línméyédas/. Fee-tail, i.e., an inheritance limited in a definite descent.

Feoffamentum /fyiy fàsméntam/. A feoffment.

Feoffare /fyiy fèriy/. To enfeoff; to bestow a fee. The bestower was called "feoffator," and the grantee or feoffee, "feoffatus."

Feoffator /fyiy fèyddar/. In old English law, a feoffer or feoffor; one who gives or bestows a fee; one who makes a feoffment.

Feoffatus /fyiy fèyddas/. In old English law, a feoffee; one to whom a fee is given, or a feoffment made.

Feoffee /fyiy fìyfy/. He to whom a fee is conveyed.

Feoffo to use /fyiy ta yúwssz/fyiyfy/ . A person to whom land was conveyed for the use of a third party. (The latter was called "cestui que use." ) One holding the same position with reference to a use that a trustee does to a trust. He answers to the heres fiduciarius of the Roman law.

Feoffment /fèmánt/fiyfy/. The gift of any corporeal hereditament to another, operating by transmutation of possession, and requiring, as essential to its completion, that the seisin be passed, which might be accomplished either by investiture or by livery of seisin. A gift of a freehold interest in land accompanied by livery of seisin. The essential part is the livery of seisin. Also the deed or conveyance by which such corporeal hereditament is passed.

A feoffment originally meant the grant of a feud or fee; that is, a barony or knight's fee, for which certain services were due from the feoffee to the feoffor. By custom it came afterwards to signify also a grant (with livery of seisin) of a free inheritance to a man and his heirs, referring rather to the perpetuity of the estate than to the feudal tenure. It was for ages the only method (in ordinary use) for conveying the freehold of land in possession, but has now fallen in great measure into disuse, even in England, having been almost entirely supplanted by some of that class of conveyances founded on the statute law of the realm.

Feoffment to use /fèmánt ta yúwssz/fiyfy/ . A feoffment of lands to one person to the use of another. In such case the feoffee was bound in conscience to hold the lands according to the use, and could himself derive no benefit. Sometimes such feoffments were made to the use of the feoffor. The effect of such conveyance was entirely changed by the statute of uses.

Feoffor /fèfar/fiyfar/. The person making a feoffment, or enfeoffing another in fee.

Feoh /fyiy/. This Saxon word meant originally cattle, and thence property or money, and, by a second transition, wages, reward, or fee. It was probably the original form from which the words "feod," "feudum," "fief," "feu," and "fee" (all meaning a feudal grant of land) have been derived.

Feorme /fàrm/. A certain portion of the produce of the land due by the grantee to the lord according to the terms of the charter.

Fere bestie /fíriy bés(h)chiyiy/. Wild beasts.
Feræ naturæ

Ferae naturalia. Lat. Of a wild nature or disposition. Animals which are by nature wild are so designated, by way of distinction from such as are naturally tame, the latter being called "domitia naturæ."

Ferdella terræ. A fardel-land; ten acres; or perhaps a yard-land.

Ferdfare. Sax. A summons to serve in the army. An acquittance from going into the army.

Ferdingus. A term denoting, apparently, a freeman of the lowest class, being named after the cotseti.

Ferdwite. In Saxon law, an acquittance of manslaughter committed in the army; also a fine imposed on persons for not going forth on a military expedition.

Feria. In old English law, a weekday; a holiday; a day on which process could not be served; a fair; a ferry.

Ferim. In Roman law, holidays; generally speaking, days or seasons during which free-born Romans suspended their political transactions and their lawsuits, and during which slaves enjoyed a cessation from labor.

All feriae were thus dies nefasti. All feriae were divided into two classes—"feriae publicæ" and "feriae privatae." The latter were only observed by single families or individuals, in commemoration of some particular event which had been of importance to them or their ancestors.

Numerous festivals were called by this name in the early Roman empire. In the later Roman empire the single days occurring at intervals of a week apart, commencing with the seventh day of the ecclesiastical year, were so called.

Ferial days. Originally and properly, days free from labor and pleading; holidays.

Ferita. In old European law, a wound; a killing.

Ferling. In old records, the fourth part of a penny; also the quarter of a ward in a borough.

Ferlingata. A fourth part of a yard-land.

Ferlingus, or ferlingum. A furlong.

Ferm. A house or land, or both, let by lease.

Ferme. A farm; a rent; a lease; a house or land, or both, taken by indenture or lease.

Fermentation. Beverages produced by, or which have undergone, a process of alcoholic fermentation, to which they owe their intoxicating properties, including beer, wine, hard cider, and the like, but not spirituous or distilled liquors.

Fermer, fermor. A lessee; a farmer. One who holds a term, whether of lands or an incorporeal right, such as customs or revenue.

Fermier. In French law, one who farms any public revenue.

Fermisona. In old English law, the winter season for killing deer.

Fermory. In old records, a place in monasteries, where they received the poor (hospicio excipiebant), and gave them provisions (ferm, firma). Hence the modern infirmary, used in the sense of a hospital.

Ferno. In old English law, a waste ground, or place where fern grows.

Ferrator. A carter (q.v.).

Ferri. In the civil law, to be borne; that is on or about the person. This was distinguished from portari (to be carried), which signified to be carried on an animal.

Ferriage. The toll or fare paid for the transportation of persons and property across a ferry. Literally speaking, it is the price or fare fixed by law for the transportation of the traveling public, with such goods and chattels as they may have with them, across a river, bay, or lake.

Ferry. Commercial transportation of people, vehicles, goods, etc. across body of water. Also, boat or vessel used in such transportation. In law it is treated as a franchise, and defined as the exclusive right to carry passengers and freight across a river, lake or arm of the sea, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one side of the water to the other. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Wash., 73 F.2d 831, 832.

A continuation of the highway from one side of the water over which it passes to the other, for transportation of passengers or of travelers with their vehicles and such other property as they may carry or have with them. U. S. v. Puget Sound Nav. Co., D.C. Wash., 24 F.Supp. 431, 432.

A liberty to have a boat on a stream, river, arm of the sea, lake, or other body of water for the transportation of passengers and vehicles with their contents, for a reasonable toll. Sometimes limited to the landing place. State Highway Commission v. Smith, 250 Ky. 269, 62 S.W.2d 1044.

Whether a boat is a "ferry" and comprises a continuous part of the road or highway depends on length of run, type of ship, whether it was operated under state franchise or federal certificate of convenience, whether it was equipped to carry cargo, extent to which service to passengers is emphasized and extent to which its use is necessitated by lack of land transportation. Alaska S. S. Co. v. Federal Maritime Commission, C.A.Wash., 399 F.2d 623, 628.

A public ferry is one to which all the public have the right to resort, for which a regular fare is established, and the ferryman is a common carrier, bound to take over all who apply, and bound to keep his ferry in operation and good repair.

A private ferry is one mainly for the use of the owner, and though he may take pay for ferriage, he does not follow it as a business. His ferry is not open to the public at its demand, and he may or may not keep it in operation.
Ferry franchise. The public grant of a right to maintain a ferry at a particular place; a right conferred to land at a particular point and secure toll for the transportation of persons and property from that point across the stream. A grant to a named person empowering him to continue an interrupted land highway over the interrupting waters. U. S. v. Puget Sound Nav. Co., D.C.Wash., 24 F.Supp. 431, 432.

Ferryman. One employed in taking persons across a lake, river or stream, in boats or other vessels, at a ferry.

Festa in capillis. In old English law, grand holidays, on which choirs wore caps.

Festinatio justitie est noverca infortunii /fés-ťnēsh(y)ōw jastīshīiy ĝēst navĕrkā inforchūwni-yay/. Hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune.

Festing-man. In old English law, a bondsman; a surety; a frank-pledge, or one who was surety for the good behavior of another. Monasteries enjoyed the privilege of being “free from festing-men,” which means that they were “not bound for any man’s forthcoming who should transgress the law.” See Frank-pledge.

Festing-penny. Earnest given to servants when hired or retained.

Festinum remedium /fèstēnūm ramiydīyiym/. Lat. A speedy remedy. A term applied to those cases where the remedy for the redress of an injury is given without any unnecessary delay. The action of dower was festinum remedium. The writ of assise was also thus characterized (in comparison with the less expeditious remedies previously available) by the statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. I, c. 24.)

Festus /fèstūwka/. In Frankish law, a rod or staff or (as described by other writers) a stick, on which imprécatory runs were cut, which was used as a gage or pledge of good faith by a party to a contract, or for symbolic delivery in the conveyance or quit-claim of land, before a court of law, anterior to the introduction of written documents by the Romans.

Festum /fèstüm/. A feast, holiday, or festival. Festum stultorum /fèstam stāltōrum/, the feast of fools.

Fetal death. The death of a child not yet born. Death in utero of a fetus weighing 500 grams or more. This weight corresponds roughly to a fetus of twenty weeks or more (gestational age), i.e. a viable fetus.

Death is defined in the following context: after expulsion, the fetus does not breathe or show any other evidence of life, such as the beating of the heart, pulsation of the umbilical cord, or definite movement of voluntary muscles.

Feticide /fiydāsāyd/. Destruction of the fetus; the act by which criminal abortion is produced. See also Abortion; Feticide.

Fettering. The act of shackling or placing manacles on another.

Fetters /fèdārz/. Chains or shackles for the feet; iron used to secure the legs of convicts, unruly prisoners, etc. Similar chains securing the wrists are called “handcuffs”.

Fetus /fiydās/. An unborn child. The unborn offspring of any viviparous animal; specifically the unborn offspring in the post embryonic period after major structures have been outlined (in man from seven or eight weeks after fertilization until birth).

Feud. Feudal law. An estate in land held of a superior on condition of rendering him services. 2 Bl.Comm. 105. An inheritable right to the use and occupation of lands, held on condition of rendering services to the lord or proprietor, who himself retains the property in the lands.

In this sense the word is the same as “feod”, “feodum”, “feudum”, “fief”, or “fee”.

Saxon and old German law. An enmity, or species of private war, existing between the family of his slayer. In Scotland and the north of England, a combination of all the kin to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. See Faida.

Feuda /fiúwda/. Feuds or fees.

Feudal /fiúwdlə/. Pertaining to feuds or fees; relating to or growing out of the feudal system or feudal law; having the quality of a feud, as distinguished from “alodial.”

Feudal actions. An ancient name for real actions, or such as concern real property only. 3 Bl.Comm. 117.

Feudal courts. In the 12th century a lord qua lord had the right to hold a court for his tenants. In the 13th century, they became of less importance for three reasons: The feudal principle would have led to a series of courts one above the other, and the dominions of the large landowners were usually scattered, so that great feudal courts became impossible. The growth of the jurisdiction of the king’s court removed the necessity for feudal courts. All the incidents of the feudal system came to be regarded in a commercial spirit—as property. Its jurisdiction became merely appendant to landowning.

Feudalism. The feudal system; the aggregate of feudal principles and usages. The social, political, and economic system that dominated the major European nations between the ninth and fifteenth centuries. The system was based upon the servile relationship between a “vassal” and a “lord.” The vassal paid homage and service to the lord and the lord provided land and protection to the vassal. See also Feudal system.

Feudalize /fiúwdaləyz/. To reduce to a feudal tenure; to conform to feudalism.

Feudal law. The body of jurisprudence relating to feuds; the real-property law of the feudal system; the law anciently regulating the property relations of lord and vassal, and the creation, incidents, and transmission of feudal estates.

The body of laws and usages constituting the “feudal law” was originally customary and unwritten, but a compilation was made in the twelfth century, called “Feodarum Consuetudines,” which has formed the basis of later digests. The feudal law prevailed over Europe from the twelfth to the fourteenth century, and was introduced into England at the Norman Conquest, where it formed the entire basis of the law of real property until comparatively modern times. Survivals of the feudal law, to the present day, so affected and color that branch of jurisprudence as to require a certain knowledge of the feudal law in order to better comprehend modern tenures and rules of real-property law.

See also Feudal system.

Feudal possession. The equivalent of "seisin" under the feudal system.

Feudal system. The system of feuds. A political and social system which prevailed throughout Europe during the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, and is supposed to have grown out of the peculiar usages and policy of the Teutonic nations who overran the continent after the fall of the Western Roman Empire, as developed by the exigencies of their military domination, and possibly furthered by notions taken from the Roman jurisprudence.

It was introduced into England, in its completeness, by William I, A.D. 1085, though it may have existed in a rudimentary form among the Saxons before the Conquest. It formed the entire basis of the real-property law of England in medieval times; and survivals of the system, in modern days, so modify and color that branch of jurisprudence, both in England and America, that many of its principles require for their complete understanding a knowledge of the feudal system. The feudal system originated in the relations of a military chieftain and his followers, or king and retainers, or lord and vassals, and especially their relations as determined by the bond established by a grant of land from the former to the latter. From this it grew into a complete and intricate complex of rules for the tenure and transmission of real estate, and of correlated duties and services; while, by tying men to the land and to those holding above and below them, it created a close-knit hierarchy of persons, and developed an aggregate of social and political institutions.

Feudal tenures. The tenures of real estate under the feudal system, such as knight-service, socage, villenage, etc.

Feudary /fyúwdarì/. A tenant who holds by feudal tenure (also spelled "feodatory" and "feudatory"). Held by feudal service. Relating to feuds or feudal tenures.

Feudbote /fyúwbòwt/. A recompense for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent, it having been the custom in ancient times for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman's quarrel.

Feude /fyúwd/. An occasional early form of "feud" in the sense of private war or vengeance. See Feud.

Feudist /fyúwdst/. A writer on feuds, as Cujacius.

Feudo /feyúwðow/. In Spanish law, feud or fee.

Feudorum liber /fyúwdòram làybar/. The Books of Feuds. A compilation of feudal law, prepared by order of the emperor Frederick I, and published at Milan in 1170. It comprised five books, of which only the first two are now extant with fragmentary portions of the others, printed at the end of modern editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis.

Feudorum libri /fyúwdòrám làybrai/. The Books of Feuds published during the reign of Henry III, about the year 1152. The particular customs of Lombardy as to feuds began about the year 1152 to be the standard of authority to other nations by reason of the greater refinement with which that branch of learning had been there cultivated. This compilation was probably known in England, but does not appear to have had any other effect than to influence English lawyers to the more critical study of their own tenures, and to induce them to extend the learning of real property so as to embrace more curious matter of similar kind.

Feudum /fyúwdam/. L. Lat. A feud, fief, or fee. A right of using and enjoying forever the lands of another, which the lord grants on condition that the tenant shall render fealty, military duty, and other services. It is not properly the land, but a right in the land.

This form of the word is used by the feudal writers. The earlier English writers generally prefer the form feodum. There was an older word feum. Its use by the Normans is exceedingly obscure. "Feudal" was not in their vocabulary. Usually it denoted a stretch of land, rarely a tenure or mass of rights. It came to be applied to every person who had heritable rights in land.

Feudum antiquum /fyúwdam aントäiykwam/. An ancient feud or fief; a fief descended to the vassal from his ancestors. 2 Bl.Comm. 212, 221. A fief which ancestors had possessed for more than four generations.

Feudum apertura /fyúwdam spárđam/. An open feud or fief; a fief resulting back to the lord, where the blood of the person last seised was utterly extinct and gone or where the tenant committed a crime, or gave other legal cause.

Feudum francum /fyúwdam frægkam/. A free feud. One which was noble and free from talliage and other subsidies to which the plebeia feuda (vulgar feuds) were subject.

Feudum hauberticum /fyúwdam hobárđakam/. A fee held on the military service of appearing fully armed at the ban and arriere ban.

Feudum imprroprium /fyúwdam imprówpriyam/. An improper or derivative feud or fief.

Feudum individuum /fyúwdam indávíjuwam/. An indivisible or impartible feud or fief; descendible to the eldest son alone.

Feudum laicum /fyúwdam lýakam/. A lay fee.

Feudum ligium /fyúwdam líjyam/. A liege feud or fief; a fief held immediately of the sovereign; one for which the vassal owed fealty to his lord against all persons. 1 Bl.Comm. 367.

Feudum maternum /fyúwdam mátármam/. A maternal fief; a fief descended to the feudatory from his mother. 2 Bl.Comm. 212.

Feudum militare /fyúwdam milátriy/. A knight's fee, held by knight service and esteemed the most honorable species of tenure. 2 Bl.Comm. 62.

Feudum noble /fyúwdam nówbalty/. A fee for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage.
Feudum novum /fyúwdam nówvəm/. A new feud or fief; a fief which began in the person of the feudator, and did not come to him by succession. 2 Bl. Comm. 212.

Feudum novum ut antiquum /fyúwdam nówvəm əd əntákviwəm/. A new fee held with the qualities and incidents of an ancient one. 2 Bl. Comm. 212.

Feudum paternum /fyúwdam pàtərnum/. A fee which the paternal ancestors had held for four generations. One descpicable to heirs on the paternal side only. 2 Bl. Comm. 223. One which might be held by males only.

Feudum proprium /fyúwdam prówpriyəm/. A proper, genuine, and original feud or fief; being of a purely military character, and held by military service. 2 Bl. Comm. 57, 58.

Feudum talutum /fyúwdam táliyədəm/. A restricted fee. One limited to descend to certain classes of heirs. 2 Bl. Comm. 112, note.

Feu et lieu /fyúw ə liyə/. Fr. In old French and Canadian law, hearth and home. A term importing actual settlement upon land by a tenant.

Feu holding /fyúw hówldiŋ/. A holding by tenure of rendering grain or money in place of military service.

Feum /fyuyəm/. An older form of feudum.

Few. Not many; of small number. U. S. v. Margolis, C.C.A.N.J., 138 F.2d 1002, 1003. An indefinite expression for a small or limited number. Indicating a small number of units or individuals which constitute a whole. A relative term of great elasticity of meaning.

Fr. A Latin abbreviation for "Fragmenta," designating the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian; so called because that work is made up of fragments or extracts from the writings of numerous jurists.

F.G.A. In marine insurance means: "Free from general average"; also, sometimes, "foreign general average." The precise meaning of this abbreviation must be gathered from the context. See Average; General average contribution.

FHA. Federal Housing Administration.

FHLB. Federal Home Loan Bank. A Federal System which loans money to members of savings and loan associations. See Federal Home Loan Banks.

FHLBB. Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

FHLMC. Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation.

Flancer. L. Fr. To pledge one's faith.

Flanza /fyánsə/. Sp. In Spanish law, trust, confidence, and correlatively a legal duty or obligation arising therefrom. The term is sufficiently broad in meaning to include both a general obligation and a restricted liability under a single instrument. But in a special sense, it designates a surety or guarantor, or the contract or engagement of suretyship; the contract by which one person engages to pay the debt or fulfil the obligations of another if the latter should fail to do so.

Fiat /fáyət, fáyət/. (Lat. "Let it be done.") In old English practice, a short order or warrant of a judge or magistrate directing some act to be done; an authority issuing from some competent source for the doing of some legal act.

One of the proceedings in the English bankruptcy practice, being a power, signed by the lord chancellor, addressed to the court of bankruptcy, authorizing the petitioning creditor to prosecute his complaint before it. By the statute 12 & 13 Vict., c. 116, fiats were abolished.

Arbitrary or authoritative order or decision.

Joint fiat. In old English law, a fiat in bankruptcy, issued against two or more trading partners.

Fiat justitia /fáyət jástish(iy)ə/. Let justice be done. On a petition to the king for his warrant to bring a writ of error in parliament, he writes on the top of the petition, "Fiat justitia," and then the writ of error is made out, etc.

Fiat justitia, ruat celem /fáyət jástish(iy)ə, ruwət siyləm/. Let right be done, though the heavens should fall.

Fiat money. Paper currency not backed by gold or silver.

Fiat pro prori consuevlt (nO temere novandum) /fáyət prówət fáyəray kanswiwət, nəl təməri navəndəm/. Let it be done as it hath used to be done (nothing must be rashly innovated).

Fiat ut petitur /fáyət ət pədədər/. Let it be done as it is asked. A form of granting a petition.

Flaut /fáyənt/. An order; command. See Fiat.

Fictio /fiksh(iy)ow/. In Roman law, a fiction; an assumption or supposition of the law. Such was properly a term of pleading, and signified a false averment on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant was not allowed to traverse; as that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner. The object of the fiction was to give the court jurisdiction.

Fictio cedit veritati. Fictio juris non est ubi veritas /fiksh(iy)ow siydət vəhərətədəyədəy. fiksh(iy)ow jürəs nən əst yəubəy vəhərətəsə/. Fiction yields to truth. Where there is truth, fiction of law exists not.

Fictio est contra veritatem, sed pro veritate habetur /fiksh(iy)ow əst kɔntrə vəhərətədəyədəy, səd prów vəhərətədəyədy həbəyda/. Fiction is against the truth, but it is to be esteemed truth.

Fictio juris non est ubi veritas /fiksh(iy)ow jürəs nən əst yəubəy vəhərətəsə/. Where truth is, fiction of law does not exist.

Fictio legis inique operatur aliuc damnum vel injuriam /fiksh(iy)ow əliik(yə)wət əpərətədər əlik(yə)wəj dəmnəm vəl injuriyəm/. A legal fiction does not properly work loss or injury. Fiction of law is wrongful if it works loss or injury to anyone.
Fiction of law. An assumption or supposition of law that something which is or may be false is true, or that a state of facts exists which has never really taken place. An assumption, for purposes of justice, of a fact that does not or may not exist. A rule of law which assumes as true, and will not allow to be disproved, something which is false, but not impossible.

These assumptions are of an innocent or even beneficial character, and are made for the advancement of the ends of justice. They secure this end chiefly by the extension of procedure from cases to which it is applicable to other cases to which it is not strictly applicable, the ground of inapplicability being some difference of an immaterial character.

See also Legal fiction.

Estoppels distinguished. Fictions are to be distinguished from estoppels; an estoppel being the rule by which a person is precluded from asserting a fact by previous conduct inconsistent therewith on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to question.

Presumptions distinguished. Fictions are to be distinguished from presumptions of law. By the former, something known to be false or unreal is assumed as true; by the latter, an inference is set up, which may be and probably is true, but which, at any rate, the law will not permit to be controverted. It may also be said that a presumption is a rule of law prescribed for the purpose of getting at a certain conclusion, though arbitrary, where the subject is intrinsically liable to doubt from the remoteness, discrepancy, or actual defect of proofs.

Fictitious. Founded on a fiction; having the character of a fiction; pretended; counterfeit. Feigned, imaginary, not real, false, not genuine, nonexistent. Arbitrarily invented and set up, to accomplish an ulterior object.

Fictitious action. An action brought for the sole purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law, not for the settlement of any actual controversy between the parties. See Declaratory judgment; Feigned action; Feigned issue.

Fictitious name. A counterfeit, alias, feigned, or pretended name taken by a person, differing in some essential particular from his true name (consisting of Christian name and patronymic), with the implication that it is meant to deceive or mislead. See also Alias.

Fictitious payee. Negotiable instrument is drawn to fictitious payee whenever payee named in it has no right to it, and its maker does not intend that such payee shall take anything by it; whether name of payee used by maker is that of person living or dead or one who never existed is immaterial. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of California v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 694, 37 P.2d 483. The test is not whether the named payee is "fictitious" but whether the signer intends that he shall have no interest in the instrument. U.C.C. § 3–405.

Fictitious person. A person, who, though named as payee in a check has no right to it or its proceeds because the drawer of it so intended. Johnston v. Exchange Nat. Bank of Tampa, 152 Fla. 228, 9 So.2d 810, 811, 812. See Fictitious payee.

Fictitious plaintiff. A person appearing in the writ, complaint, or record as the plaintiff in a suit, but who in reality does not exist, or who is ignorant of the suit and of the use of his name in it. It is a contempt of court to sue in the name of a fictitious party.

Fictitious promise. See Promise.

Fide-commissum /faidiyay kōməsəriːəs/. In the civil law, this term corresponds nearly to our "cestui que trust." It designates a person who has the real or beneficial interest in an estate or fund, the title or administration of which is temporarily confided to another.

Fide-commissum /faidiyay kamisəm/. In the civil law, a species of trust: being a gift of property (usually by will) to a person, accompanied by a request or direction of the donor that the recipient will transfer the property to another, the latter being a person not capable of taking directly under the will or gift. Elements of "fidei commissum" are that donee or legatee is invested with title and charged or directed to convey it to another or to make particular disposition of it. Succession of Abraham, La.App., 136 So.2d 471, 478.

Fide-jubere /faidiy jəbəriː/. /faidiy jũwбиwjoː/. In the civil law, to order a thing upon another's faith; to pledge one's self; to become surety for another. Fide-jubes? Fide-jubo: Do you pledge yourself? I do pledge myself. One of the forms of stipulation.

Fide-jussio /faidiy jəʃiəʊiː/. An act by which any one binds himself as an additional security for another. This giving security does not destroy the liability of the principal, but adds to the security of the surety.

Fide-jussor /faidiy jũsər/. In Roman law, a guarantor; one who becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt, by a stipulation which binds him to discharge it if the principal debtor fails to do so. 3 Bl.Comm. 108. He differs from a co-obligor in this, that the latter is equally bound to a debtor, with his principal, while the former is not liable till the principal has failed to fulfill his engagement. The obligation of the fide-jussor was an accessory contract; for, if the principal obligation was not previously contracted, his engagement then took the name of mandate. The sureties taken on the arrest of a defendant, in the court of admiralty, were formerly denominated "fide jussors." 3 Bl.Comm. 108.

Fidelitas /ɔdiətəs/. Fealty; fidelity. See Fealty.

Fidelitas. De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagii; fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramen-
Fidelity and guaranty insurance. A contract of fidelity or guaranty insurance is one whereby the insurer, for a valuable consideration, agrees, subject to certain conditions, to indemnify the insured against loss consequent upon the dishonesty or default of a designated person. Guaranty insurance, used in its broad sense, also includes credit insurance, and title insurance, as well as the numerous forms of surety bonds.

The contract partakes of the nature both of insurance and of suretyship. Hence, even in the absence of terms so providing, the contract is avoided by the failure of the insured to disclose to the insurer, at the time of making the contract, any known previous acts of dishonesty on the part of the employee, or any dishonest practices that may occur during the currency of the policy. But the insured is not required to give notice of mere irregularities not involving moral turpitude; nor, in the absence of agreement to that effect, does the insured owe to the insurer any duty of watching the conduct and accounts of the employee concerned.

Fidelity insurance. See Fidelity and guaranty insurance; Insurance.

Fidem mentiri /fáydítm mentíray/. Lat. To betray faith or fealty. A term used in feudal and old English law of a feudatory or feudal tenant who does not keep that fealty which he has sworn to the lord.

Fide-promissor /fáydít promíssar/. See Fide-jussor.

Fides /fáydít/. Lat. Faith; honesty; confidence; trust; veracity; honor. Occurring in the phrases "bona fides" (good faith), "mala fides" (bad faith), and "ubertina fides" (the utmost or most abundant good faith).

Fides est obligatio conscientie allicius ad intentionem alterius /fáydít est óblagéeşhtyjów kóñshíjénsiyi jélikyúwjas ad íntéshíjouñnam óltíriyjas/. A trust is an obligation of conscience of one to the will of another.

Fides facta /fáydít fákta/. Among the Franks and Lombards undertakings were guaranteed by "making one's faith"—"fides facta." This was symbolized by such formal acts as the giving of a rod; in suretyship giving the "festa" or "vadum."

Fides servanda est /fáydítz sárvánda ést/. Faith must be observed. An agent must not violate the confidence reposed in him.

Fides servanda est; simplicitas juris gentium prævaleat /fáydítz sárvánda ést; símpíliyá týrus jénsyjyám prævaljyát/. Faith must be kept; the simplicity of the law of nations must prevail. A rule applied to bills of exchange as a sort of sacred instruments.

Fiducia /fádtyjúwshiyiy/. In Roman law, an early form of mortgage or pledge, in which both the title and possession of the property were passed to the creditor by a formal act of sale (properly with the solemnities of the transaction known as manipatio), there being at the same time an express or implied agreement on the part of the creditor to reconvey the property by a similar act of sale provided the debt was duly paid; but on default of payment, the property became absolutely vested in the creditor without foreclosure and without any right of redemption.

Fiducial. An adjective having the same meaning as "fiduciary;" as, in the phrase "public or fiducial office."

Fiduciarius heres /fádtyjúwshiyériýyys híríyyz/. See Fiduciary heir.

Fiduciarius tutor /fádtyjúwshiyériýys týjúwday/. In Roman law, the elder brother of an emancipated pupillus, whose father had died leaving him still under fourteen years of age.

Fiduciary /fádtyjúwshiyiyary/. The term is derived from the Roman law, and means (as a noun) a person holding the character of a trustee, or a character analogous to that of a trustee, in respect to the trust and confidence involved in it and the scrupulous good faith and candor which it requires. A person having duty, created by his undertaking, to act primarily for another's benefit in matters connected with such undertaking. As an adjective it means of the nature of a trust; having the characteristics of a trust; analogous to a trust; relating to or founded upon a trust or confidence.

A person or institution who manages money or property for another and who must exercise a standard of care in such management activity imposed by law or contract; e.g. executor of estate; receiver in bankruptcy; trustee. A trustee, for example, possesses a fiduciary responsibility to the beneficiaries of the trust to follow the terms of the trust and the requirements of applicable state law. A breach of fiduciary responsibility would make the trustee liable to the beneficiaries for any damage caused by such breach.

The status of being a fiduciary gives rise to certain legal incidents and obligations, including the prohibition against investing the money or property in investments which are speculative or otherwise imprudent.

Many states have adopted the Uniform Fiduciaries Act; Uniform Management of Institutional Funds Act; and the Uniform Simplification of Fiduciary Security Transfers Act.

See also Fiduciary capacity; Fiduciary or confidential relation.
FIDUCIARY

Foreign fiduciary. A trustee, executor, administrator, guardian or conservator appointed by a jurisdiction other than the one in which he is acting.

Fiduciary bond. Type of surety bond required by court to be filed by trustees, administrators, executors, guardians, and conservators to insure proper performance of their duties.

Fiduciary capacity. One is said to act in a “fiduciary capacity” or to receive money or contract a debt in a “fiduciary capacity,” when the business which he transacts, or the money or property which he handles, is not his own or for his own benefit, but for the benefit of another person, as to whom he stands in a relation implying and necessitating great confidence and trust on the one part and a high degree of good faith on the other part. The term is not restricted to technical or express trusts, but includes also such offices or relations as those of an attorney at law, a guardian, executor, or broker, a director of a corporation, and a public officer.

Fiduciary contract. An agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another on the condition that he will restore it to him.

Fiduciary debt. A debt founded on or arising from some confidence or trust as distinguished from a “debt” founded simply on contract. Montgomery v. Phillips Petroleum Co., Tex.Civ.App., 49 S.W.2d 967, 973.

Fiduciary heir. The Roman laws called a fiduciary heir the person who was instituted heir, and who was charged to deliver the succession to a person designated by the testament.

Fiduciary or confidential relation. A very broad term embracing both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist wherever one man trusts in or relies upon another. One founded on trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another. A “fiduciary relation” arises whenever confidence is reposed on one side, and domination and influence result on the other; the relation can be legal, social, domestic, or merely personal. Hellman’s Estate, Matter of, 37 Ill.App.3d 390, 345 N.E.2d 536, 540. Such relationship exists when there is a reposing of faith, confidence and trust, and the placing of reliance by one upon the judgment and advice of the other. Williams v. Griffin, 35 Mich.App. 179, 192 N.W.2d 283, 285.

An expression including both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist whenever one man trusts in or relies upon another. It exists where there is special confidence reposed in one who in equity and good conscience is bound to act in good faith and with due regard to interests of one reposing the confidence. A relation subsisting between two persons in regard to a business, contract, or piece of property, or in regard to the general business or estate of one of them, of such a character that each must repose trust and confidence in the other and must exercise a corresponding degree of fairness and good faith. Out of such a relation, the law raises the rule that neither party may exert influence or pressure upon the other, take selfish advantage of his trust, or deal with the subject-matter of the trust in such a way as to benefit himself or prejudice the other except in the exercise of the utmost good faith and with the full knowledge and consent of that other, business shrewdness, hard bargaining, and astuteness to take advantage of the forgetfulness or negligence of another being totally prohibited as between persons standing in such a relation to each other. Examples of fiduciary relations are those existing between attorney and client, guardian and ward, principal and agent, executor and heir, trustee and cestui que trust, landlord and tenant, etc.

Fief /fiːf/. A fee, feod, or feud.

Fief d’haubert (or d’hauber) /fiːf dəwəbɛʁ(k)/. Fr. In Norman feudal law, a fief or fee held by the tenure of knight-service; a knight’s fee. 2 BI.Comm. 62. A fee held on the military tenure of appearing fully armed on the ban and arrière-ban.

Fief-tenant /fiːf tənɑ̃t/. In old English law, the holder of a fief or fee; a feesholder or freeholder.

Field /fiːd/. In Spanish law, a sequestration; a party who has reposed the confidence. This is allowed in six cases by the Spanish law where the title to property is in dispute.

Field-ale, or filkdale /fiːdəl/ /fiːdəl/. An ancient custom in England, by which officers of the forst and bailiffs of hundreds had the right to compel the hundred to furnish them with ale.

Field audit. See Audit.

Field book. A description of the courses and distances of the lines, and of the corners of the lots of the town as they were surveyed, and as they appear by number and division on the town plan.

Field Code. The original New York Code brought into being by David Dudley Field in 1848 calling for simplification of civil procedure. This Code served as the model for future state civil procedure codes and rules.

Field notes. A description of a survey.

Field office. A branch or subsidiary office of a government agency apart from the central office.

Field reeve. In old English law, an officer elected by the owners of a regulated pasture to keep in order the fences, ditches, etc., on the land, to regulate the times during which animals are to be admitted to the pasture, and generally to maintain and manage the pasture subject to the instructions of the owners.

Field vision. The general vision used in catching in sight, following and locating objects;—distinguished from “binocular vision” (q.v.).

Field warehouse receipt. Document issued by warehouseman evidencing receipt of goods which have been stored. Such may be used as collateral for loans. See also Field warehousing; Warehouse receipt.
Field warehousing. Arrangement whereby wholesaler, manufacturer, or merchant finances his business through pledge of goods remaining on his premises and it is limited type of warehousing as distinguished from public warehouse. Lawrence Warehouse Co. v. McKee, C.A.Fla., 301 F.2d 4, 6. An arrangement whereby a pledgor may have necessary access to the pledged goods, while the goods are actually in the custody and control of a third person, acting as a warehousman on the pledgor's premises. Field warehousing is often employed as a security device in inventory financing where the financier or secured party desires to maintain close control over the borrower's inventory and have the advantages of being a pledgee of the property. The device is employed in financing manufacturers or wholesalers in seasonal industries and is also useful where the manufactured products must be aged or cured or where they are accumulated over a period of time and then disposed of all at once.

Field work. Work in the field, specifically the task of gathering data from the field. Includes the sphere of practical operation, as of an organization or enterprise; also, the place or territory where direct contacts as with a clientele may be made, or whereby practical, first-hand knowledge may be gained. Sphere of action or place of contest, either literally or figuratively; hence, any scene of operations or opportunity for activity. State ex rel. McPherson v. Snell, 168 Or. 153, 121 P.2d 930, 937.

Fieri facias /fīəray fiyəs/. Latin for "cause (it) to be done." A writ of execution commanding the sheriff to levy and make the amount due by his testator. If the sheriff returns to this writ nulla bona, and a devastavit (q.v.), the plaintiff may sue out a fieri facias de bonis propriis, under which the goods of the executor himself are seized.

Fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis /fīəray fiyəs(h)i(y)əs dīy bównas əkliyzıəstəsəs/. When a sheriff to a common fi. fa. returns nulla bona, and that the defendant is a beneficed clerk, not having any lay fee, a plaintiff may issue a fi. fa. de bonis ecclesiasticis, addressed to the bishop of the diocese or to the archbishop (during the vacancy of the bishop's see), commanding him to make of the ecclesiastical goods and chattels belonging to the defendant within his diocese the sum therein mentioned.

Fieri facias de bonis testatoris /fīəray fiyəs(h)i(y)əs dīy bównas təstətərəs/. The writ issued on an ordinary judgment against an executor when sued for a debt due by his testator. If the sheriff returns to this writ nulla bona, and a devastavit (q.v.), the plaintiff may sue out a fieri facias de bonis propriis, under which the goods of the executor himself are seized.

Fieri feci /fīəray fiyəs/i. Means I have caused to be made. The return made by a sheriff or other officer to a writ of fieri facias, where he has collected the whole, or a part, of the sum directed to be levied. The return, as actually made, is expressed by the word "Satisfied" indorsed on the writ.

Fieri non debet (debit), sed factum valet /fīəray nən dēbat, sēd fakətəm vələt/"débyəwat". It ought not to be done, but [if] done, it is valid.

Fl. Fa. /fīəray feyə/. An abbreviation for fieri facias (q.v.).

FIFO. First-in, first-out; an inventory flow assumption by which ending inventory cost is determined from most recent purchases and cost of goods sold is determined from oldest purchases including beginning inventory. Contrast with Last-in, first-out (LIFO).

Fifteenth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution, ratified by the States in 1870, guaranteeing all citizens the right to vote regardless of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Congress was given the power to enforce such rights by appropriate legislation.

Fifteenths /fiftiynθs/. In old English law, this was originally a tax or tribute, levied at intervals by act of parliament, consisting of one-fifteenth of all the movable property of the subject or personality in every city, township, and borough. Under Edward III, the taxable property was assessed, and the value of its fifteenth part (then about £29,000) was recorded in the exchequer, whence the tax, levied on that valuation, continued to be called a "fifteenth," although as the wealth of the kingdom increased, the name ceased to be an accurate designation of the proportion of the tax to the value taxed. 1 Bl.Comm. 309.

Fifth Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution providing that no person shall be required to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous offense unless on indictment or presentment of a grand jury except in military cases; that no person will suffer double jeopardy; that no person will be compelled to be a witness against himself; that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law and that private property will not be taken for public use without just compensation.

Fifty decisions. Ordinances of Justinian (529–532) upon the authority of which all moot points were settled in the preparation of the second edition of the Code.

Fight. Hostile encounter; either physical or verbal in nature. To oppose or attempt to prevent combat or battle, as hostile encounter or engagement between opposing forces, suggesting primarily the notion of a brawl or unpremeditated encounter, or that of a pugnistic combat. Gitlow v. Kiely, D.C.N.Y., 44 F.2d 227, 232. See also Affray.

Fighting words. Fighting words, which may constitutionally be prohibited, are words directed to the person of the hearer which would have a tendency to cause acts of violence by the person to whom, individually, the remark is addressed. Conchito v. City of Tulsa, Okl.Cr., 521 P.2d 1384, 1388.

The "freedom of speech" protected by the Constitution is not absolute at all times and under all circumstances and there are well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which does not raise any constitutional problem, including the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libellous, and the insulting or "fighting words" which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031.

Fightwite. Sax. A mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. A payment to a lord possessing soc over a place where a wrong was done.

Figures. Artificial representations of a form, as in sculpture, drawing, or painting, especially the human body represented by art of any kind. People v. Eastman, 89 Misc. 596, 152 N.Y.S. 314, 317.

Numerals; number symbols. They are either Roman, made with letters of the alphabet: e.g. "MDCLXXVI"; or they are Arabic: e.g. "1776".

Filacer /flisar//flazdr/. In England an officer of the superior courts at Westminster, whose duty it was to file the writs on which he made process. There were fourteen filacers, and it was their duty to make out all original process. The office was abolished in 1837.

Filare /faldrty//. In old English practice, to file.

Filching /flshng//flsh//p/. To steal money, commonly of little value, secretly or underhandedly. Peck v. Bez, W.Va., 40 S.E.2d 1, 10.

File, n. A record of the court. Milton v. United States, C.C.A.La., 105 F.2d 253, 255. A paper is said to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file as a matter of record and reference. But, in general, "file," or "the files," is used loosely to denote the official custody of the court or the place in the offices of a court where the records and papers are kept. The "file" in a cause includes the original complaint and all pleadings and papers belonging thereto. See also Docket; Record.

File, v. To lay away and arrange in order, pleadings, motions, instruments, and other papers for preservation and reference. To deposit in the custody or among the records of a court. To deliver an instrument or other paper to the proper officer or official for the purpose of being kept on file by him as a matter of record and reference in the proper place. It carries the idea of permanent preservation as a public record. In re Gubelman, C.C.A.N.Y., 10 F.2d 926, 929; City of Overland Park v. Nikias, 209 Kan. 643, 498 P.2d 56, 59. See also Record.

Constructive filing. See that title.

Filing officer. The person in charge of the office (e.g. office or department of Secretary of State) in which a financing statement must be filed to perfect a security interest under the Uniform Commercial Code. U.C.C. § 9-401.

Filing with court. Fed.R.Civ.P. 5 requires that all papers after the complaint required to be served upon a party shall be filed with the court (i.e. clerk or judge) either before service or within a reasonable time thereafter.

Filed. See File.

File wrapper estoppel. Under doctrine of "file wrapper estoppel," if, in order to obtain patent, inventor restricts what he has claimed, he is thereafter bound by that surrender which may be readily ascertained by an examination of the file wrapper. Fraser v. Continental Realty Corp., D.C.W.Va., 356 F.Supp. 704, 706. Means that the inventor had earlier given up certain claims with respect to his patent that he is now attempting to assert through the doctrine of equivalents in order to establish a basis for his charge that the patent has been infringed. Systematic Tool & Machine Co. v. Oalter Kidde & Co., Inc., D.C.Pa., 390 F.Supp. 178, 200.

Filiation /fliyéyshn//. Judicial determination of paternity. The relation of child to father.

In the civil law, the descent of son or daughter, with regard to his or her father, mother, and their ancestors.

Filiation proceeding. A special statutory proceeding, criminal in form, but in the nature of a civil action to enforce a civil obligation or duty specifically for the purpose of establishing parentage and the putative father's duty to support his illegitimate child. State v. Morrow, 158 Or. 412, 75 P.2d 737, 738, 739, 744.

Filibuster. Tactics designed to obstruct and delay legislative action by prolonged and often irrelevant speeches on the floor of the House or Senate. See also Cloture; a means of cutting off filibustering.

Filing. See Constructive filing; File.

Fililus (or fillious) /fliyós lays/. In old records, a godchild.

Fililus /flíyis//. Lat. A son; a child. As distinguished from heir, filius is a term of nature, heres a term of law. In the civil law the term was used to denote a child generally. A distinction was sometimes made, in the civil law, between "filii" and "liberi"; the latter word including grandchildren (nepotes), the former not.

Fililus est nomen nature, sed heres nomen juris /filíyás ést nówman nashúri séd híryzd nówman júras/. Son is a name of nature, but heir is a name of law.

Fililus familias /flíyías famílías/. In the civil law, the son of a family; an unemancipated son.

Fililus in utero matris est pars viscerum matris /flíyías ín yúdwarow méytrás ést párz visaram méytrás/. A son in the mother's womb is part of the mother's vitals.

Fililus multieratus /flíyías myúwíli(y)aréyds/. In old law, the eldest legitimate son of a woman, who previously had an illegitimate son by his father. Otherwise called "mulier." 2 Bl.Comm. 248.

Fililus nullius /flíyías nálíyás/*nálíyas/. An illegitimate child; son of nobody.

Fililus popull /flíyías pópyalay/. A son of the people. Natural child.

Fill. To make full; to complete; to satisfy or fulfill; to possess and perform the duties of; to occupy the whole capacity or extent of, so as to leave no space vacant.
Filthy. Dirty, vulgar, indecent, obscene, lewd, offensive to the moral sense, morally depraving, debasing. Containing or covered with filth. See Obscene.

Filum /fáylam/. Lat. In old practice, a file, i.e., a thread or wire on which papers were strung, that being the ancient method of filing. An imaginary thread or line passing through the middle of a stream or road, as in the titles following.

Filum aquae /fáylam əkwiy/. A thread of water; a line of water; the middle line of a stream of water, supposed to divide it into two equal parts, and constituting in many cases the boundary between the riparian proprietors on each side. Medium filum is sometimes used with no additional meaning. Cf. Thalweg.

Filum vie /fáylam váiy/. The thread or middle line of a road. The boundary between the owners of the land on each side of a road.

Fin /fín/. Fr. An end, or limit; a limitation, or period of limitation.

Final. Last; conclusive; decisive; definitive; terminated; completed. In its use in reference to legal actions, this word is generally contrasted with "interlocutory." See also Final decision; Final judgment.

As to final Costs; Decree; Injunction; Judgment; Order; Process; Recovery; Sentence, and Settlement, see those titles.

Final appealable order. To constitute a "final, appealable order" the order must terminate the litigation and finally determine, fix and dispose of the parties' rights as to the issues in the suit. Myers v. Myers, 9 Ill.Dec. 603, 51 Ill.App.3d 830, 366 N.E.2d 1114, 1121.

Final architect's certificate. One which is issued after a job is done and which finally determines the rights of the parties as to money and disputes.

Final award. One which conclusively determines the matter submitted and leaves nothing to be done except to execute and carry out terms of award. Trollope v. Jeffries, 55 Cal.App.3d 816, 128 Cal.Rptr. 115, 120.

Final decision. One which leaves nothing open to further dispute and which sets at rest cause of action between parties. Judgment or decree which terminates action in court which renders it. One which settles rights of parties respecting the subject-matter of the suit and which concludes them until it is reversed or set aside. The filing of signed findings and conclusions and order for judgment. Synonymous with final judgment or decree. In re Tiffany, 252 U.S. 32, 40 S.Ct. 239, 240, 64 L.Ed. 443. Also, a decision from which no appeal or writ of error can be taken. U. S. v. Tod, C.C.A.N.Y., 1 F.2d 246, 251. "Final decision" which may be appealed is one that ends litigation on merits and leaves nothing for courts to do but execute judgment. Kappellmann v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., 176 U.S.App.D.C. 163, 539 F.2d 165, 168. See also Final decision rule; Final disposition; Final judgment; Interlocutory Appeals Act; Judgment (Final judgment); Res (Res judicata).

Final decision rule. Appeals to federal courts of appeals from U.S. district courts must be from "final decisions" of district courts. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1291. In other words, the courts of appeals lack jurisdiction over nonfinal judgments. The object of this restriction is to prevent piecemeal litigation which would otherwise result from the use of interlocutory appeals. See, however, Interlocutory Appeals Act.

Final decree. See Final decision; Final judgment.

Final determination. See Final decision.

Final disposition. Such a conclusive determination of the subject-matter that after the award, judgment, or decision is made nothing further remains to fix the rights and obligations of the parties, and no further controversy or litigation can arise thereon. Quatture v. Allegheny County, 141 Pa.Super. 356, 14 A.2d 575, 578. It is such an award that the party against whom it is made can perform or pay it without any further ascertainment of rights or duties. See Final decision.

Final hearing. Describes that stage of proceedings relating to the determination of a subject matter upon its merits as distinguished from those of preliminary or interlocutory nature.

Finalis concordia /fanéylas kaŋkórð(i)jya/. A final or conclusive agreement.

Finality rule. See Final decision rule.

Final judgment. One which finally disposes of rights of parties, either upon entire controversy or upon some definite and separate branch thereof. Casati v. Aero Marine Management Co., Inc., 43 Ill.App.3d 1, 1 Ill. Dec. 544, 356 N.E.2d 826, 833. Judgment is considered "final" only if it determines the rights of the parties and disposes of all of the issues involved so that no future action by the court will be necessary in order to settle and determine the entire controversy. Howard Gault & Son, Inc., v. First Nat. Bank of Hereford, Tex.Civ.App., 523 S.W.2d 496, 498. See also Final decision; Judgment.

Final judgment rule. See Final decision rule.

Final order. One which terminates the litigation between the parties and the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce by execution what has been determined. Richerson v. Jones, C.A. Pa., 551 F.2d 918, 921. See also Final decision.

Final passage. The vote on a passage of a bill or resolution in either house of the legislature after it has received the prescribed number of readings and has been subjected to such action as is required by the fundamental law governing the body or its own rule.

Final receiver's receipt. An acknowledgment by the government that it has received full payment for public land, that it holds the legal title in trust for the entryman, and will in due course issue to him a patent.

Final settlement. In probate proceeding, a direct adjudication that the estate is fully administered; that the administrator has completely executed his trust and has accounted for all moneys received as the law requires. In re Braun's Estate, 140 Kan. 188, 34 P.2d 94, 95.

With respect to final settlement in a real estate transaction, see Closing.

Final submission. Exists when nothing remains to be done to render submission complete. Where the whole case, both requested instructions and evidence, is submitted to the court for its ruling and the court takes the case under advisement, there is a "final submission" of the entire case. Piatt v. Helm & Overly Realty Co., 342 Mo. 772, 117 S.W.2d 327, 329.

Finance. As a verb, to supply with funds through the issuance of stocks, bonds, notes, or mortgages; to provide with capital or loan money as needed to carry on business.

Finance is concerned with the value of the assets of the business system and the acquisition and allocation of the financial resources of the system.

Finance charge. The consideration for privilege of deferring payment of purchase price. The amount however denominated or expressed which the retail buyer contracts to pay or pays for the privilege of purchasing goods or services to be paid for by the buyer in installments; it does not include the amounts, if any, charged for insurance premiums, delinquency charges, attorney's fees, court costs, collection expenses or official fees. The cost of credit which is regulated in most jurisdictions by statute; e.g., federal and state "truth-in-lending" statutes require full disclosure of finance charges on credit agreements, billing statements, and like.

Finance committee. A committee of the U.S. Senate with functions and powers similar to that of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. In business, an executive level committee, commonly made up of members of board of directors, responsible for major financial decisions of business.

Financial Institutions. Means any organization authorized to do business under state or federal laws relating to financial institutions, including, without limitation, banks and trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, savings and loan companies or associations, and credit unions. Uniform Probate Code, § 6–101(3).

Financial Interest. An interest equated with money or its equivalent.

Financially able. Solvent; able to pay debts and expenses as due. Means purchaser must be able to command the necessary funds to close the deal within the required time. Hersh v. Garau, 218 Cal. 460, 23 P.2d 1022. Credit worthy. See also Financial responsibility acts; Solvency.

Financial reports. See Annual report; Financial statement; Profit and loss statement.

Financial responsibility. Term commonly used in connection with motor vehicle insurance equivalents. See also Financial responsibility acts.
connection with mergers, refers to one who brings two companies together. May also refer to one who secures mortgage financing for borrower; or one who locates a particular type of executive or professional for a corporation; or one who locates a particular type of business acquisition for a corporation.

Finder’s fee. Amount charged for bringing lender and borrower or issuer and underwriter together, or for performing other types of services described under "Finder" supra. A finder’s fee for a securities issue may be stock or a combination of cash and stock.

Finding. The result of the deliberations of a jury or a court. A decision upon a question of fact reached as the result of a judicial examination or investigation by a court, jury, referee, coroner, etc. A recital of the facts as found. The word commonly applies to the result reached by a judge or jury. See also Decision; Judgment; Verdict.

Finding of fact. Determinations from the evidence of a case, either by court or an administrative agency, concerning facts averred by one party and denied by the other, and founded on evidence in case. C.I.T. Corp. v. Elliott, 66 Idaho 384, 159 P.2d 891, 897. A conclusion by way of reasonable inference from the evidence. Barker v. Narragansett Racing Ass’n, 65 R.I. 489, 16 A.2d 495, 497. Also the answer of the jury to a specific interrogatory. Com’rs, 31 Ill.App.3d 173, 334 N.E.2d 325, 329. A result reached by a judge or jury. See also Decision; Judgment; Verdict.

A general finding by a court is a general statement that the facts are in favor of a party or entitle him to judgment. It is a complete determination of all matters, and is a finding of every special thing necessary to be found to sustain the general finding.

A special finding is a specific setting forth of the ultimate facts established by the evidence and which are determinative of the judgment which must be given. It is only a determination of the ultimate facts on which the law must be determined. A special finding may also be said to be one limited to the fact issue submitted.

Finding of law. Term applies to rulings of law made by court in connection with findings of fact; such findings or rulings of law are subject to appellate review.

Fine, v. To impose a pecuniary punishment or mulct. To sentence a person convicted of an offense to pay a penalty in money.

Fine, n. A pecuniary punishment imposed by lawful tribunal upon person convicted of crime or misdemeanor. A pecuniary penalty. It may include a forfeiture or penalty recoverable in a civil action, and, in criminal convictions, may be in addition to imprisonment. See also Penalty.

Conveyancing. An amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the court, by which the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U.S. 297, 8 S.Ct. 143, 31 L.Ed. 156. Fines were abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74, substituting a disentailing deed. A fine is so called because it puts an end not only to the suit thus commenced, but also to all other suits and controversies concerning the same matter. The party who parted with the land, by acknowledging the right of the other, was said to levy the fine, and was called the “cognizor” or “conusor,” while the party who recovered or received the estate was termed the “cognizee” or “conusee,” and the fine was said to be levied to him.

Executed fine. See Executed.

Tenure law. A money payment made by a feudal tenant to his lord. The most usual fine was that payable on the admissitance of a new tenant, but there was also due in some manors fines upon alienation, on a license to demise the lands, or on the death of the lord, or other events.

Fine and recovery act. The English statutes 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74, abolishing fines and recoveries.

Fine annullando levato de tenemento quod fuit de antico dominico /fániy âmpalándow lávêyêdôw dîy tênmên-tîow kwôd fûwât dîy âmpáykow dâmîns-kôw/. An abolished writ for disannulling a fine levied of lands in ancient demesne to the prejudice of the lord.

Fine capiendo pro terris /fániy kâpiyêndôw prôw têhrs/. An obsolete writ which lay for a person who, upon conviction by jury, had his lands and goods taken, and his body imprisoned, to be remitted his imprisonment, and have his lands and goods redeemed to him, on obtaining favor of a sum of money, etc.

Fine for alienation. A fine anciently payable upon the alienation of a feudal estate and substitution of a new tenant. It was payable to the lord by all tenants holding by knight’s service or tenants in capite by socage tenure. Abolished in England by 12 Car. II, c. 24. 2 Bl.Comm. 71, 89.

Fine-force. An absolute necessity or inevitable constraint.

Fine for endowment. A fine anciently payable to the lord by the widow of a tenant, without which she could not be endowed of her husband’s lands. Abolished in England under Henry I, and by Magna Charta. 2 Bl.Comm. 135.

Finem facere /fániy mêsâriy/. To make or pay a fine.

Fine non capiendo pro pulchre placitando /fániy nôn kâpiyêndôw prôw pâlkiy plêssêtândôw/. An obsolete writ to inhibit officers of courts to take fines for fair pleading.

Fine pro redisseisinâ capiendo /fániy prôw rédäyiszâna kâpiyêndôw/. An old writ that lay for the release of one imprisoned for a redisseisin, on payment of a reasonable fine.
Fine rolls. See Oblate Rolls.

Fines le roy /fâynz la rôy/. In Old English law, the king's fines. Fines formerly payable to the king for any contempt or offense, as where one committed any trespass, or falsely denied his own deed, or did anything in contempt of law.

Fine sur cognizance de droit, cum ceo que il ad de son done /fâyn sâr kâgnâyzân(t)s dâ drôyt, kâm sîyow kwîy il âd da sôn dówn/. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor. By this the deforci- ant acknowledged in court a former feoffment or gift in possession to have been made by him to the plain- tiff. 2 Bl.Comm. 352.

Fine sur cognizance de droit tantum /fâyn sâr kâgnâyzân(t)s dâ drôyt tântam/. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right merely, and not with the circumstance of a preceding gift from the cognizor. This was commonly used to pass a reversionary interest which was in the cognizor, of which there could be no feoffment supposed. 2 Bl.Comm. 353.

Fine sur concessit /fâyn sâr kansézsât/. A fine upon concessit (he hath granted). A species of fine, where the cognizor, in order to make an end of disputes, though he acknowledged no precedent right, yet granted to the cognizee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of supposed composition. 2 Bl.Comm. 353.

Fine sur done grant et render /fâyn sâr dówn grânt èy rêndar/. A double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo and the fine sur concessit. It might be used to convey particular limitations of estates, whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc., conveyed nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance, or at least freehold. In this last species of fines, the cognizee, after the right was acknowledged to be in him, granted back again or rendered to the cognizor, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises. 2 Bl.Comm. 353.

Fingerprints. See Anthropometry.

Finire /fânyri/. In Old English law, to fine, or pay a fine. To end or finish a matter.

Finis /fâynas/. Lat. An end; a fine; a boundary or terminus; a limit. Also in L. Lat., a fine (q.v.).

Finis est amicabilis compositio et finalis concordia ex concensu et concordia domini regis vel justiciarum /fâynas èst ëmskêýbas kômpãzîsh(î)yow èt fânêyâs kânkôrdîya èks kânt(s)èn(t)sîyuv èt kânkôrdîya ðÔmnây rîyâs èt jastîshîyârâm/. A fine is an amicable settlement and decisive agreement by consent and agreement of our lord, the king, or his justices.

Finis finem litibus imponit /fâynas fâynam lîdâbas ìmpôvât/. A fine puts an end to litigation.

Finis rei attendendus est /fâynas rîyây ëtândândâs èst/. The end of a thing is to be attended to.

Finis unus diei est principium alterius /fâynas yanâyâs dâyiîyay èst prînsipiyam oltîryâs/. The end of one day is the beginning of another.

Finito /fonish(y)ow/. An ending; death, as the end of life.

Finium regundorum actio /fânyiym râgândôrâm ëksh(y)ow/. In the civil law, action for regulating boundaries. The name of an action which lay between those who had lands bordering on each other, to settle disputed boundaries.

Finors /fâynar/. Those that purify gold and silver, and part them by fire and water from coarser metals. In the English statute of 4 Hen. VII, c. 2, they are also called "parters."

Firdfare. Sax. In Old English law, a summoning forth to a military expedition (indictio ad profectioinem militarem).

Firdinga. Sax. A preparation to go into the army.

Firdsocne. Sax. In Old English law, exemption from military service.

Firdwite. In Old English law, a fine for refusing military service (mulcta detectantis militiam). A mulct or penalty imposed on military tenants for their default in not appearing in arms or coming to an expedition.

A fine imposed for murder committed in the army; an acquittance of such fine.

Fire. The effect of combustion. The juridical meaning of the word does not differ from the vernacular. The word "fire," as used in insurance policies, does not have the technical meaning developed from analysis of its nature, but more nearly the popular meaning, being an effect rather than an elementary principle, and is the effect of combustion, being equivalent to ignition or burning. A destructive burning.

To dismiss or discharge from a position or employment.

Firearm. An instrument used in the propulsion of shot, shell, or bullets by the action of gunpowder exploded within it. A weapon which acts by force of gunpowder. This word comprises all sorts of guns, fowling-pieces, blunderbusses, pistols, etc. In addition, grenade shells, fuses, and powder may be considered "firearm" even though disassembled. U. S. v. Shafer, C.A. II., 445 F.2d 579, 583.

The term "firearm" means any weapon which is designed to or may readily be converted to expel any projectile by the action of an explosive; or the frame or receiver of any such weapon. 18 U.S.C.A. § 232.

Firearms Acts. Statutes (federal and state) imposing criminal penalties for illegal possession, sale and use of firearms; e.g. possession without license; carrying concealed weapon.

Firebare /fây(a)rbër/. A beacon or high tower by the seaside, wherein are continual lights, either to direct vessels in the night, or to give warning of the approach of an enemy.

Firebote /fây(a)rbôwt/. Allowance of wood or estovers to maintain competent firing for the tenant. A sufficient allowance of wood to burn in a house.

Firebug. A popular phrase referring to persons guilty of the crime of arson; commonly understood to mean an incendiary, pyromaniac, or arsonist.
Fire district. One of the districts into which a city may be divided for the purpose of more efficient service by the fire department in the extinction of fires.

Fire insurance. See Insurance.

Fire marshal or warden. Official whose duties include supervision of firefighting and fire prevention for a state, county, city or town.

Fire ordeal. See Ordeal.

Fire sale. Sale of merchandise at reduced prices because of damage by fire or water; commonly, any sale at reduced prices, especially one brought about by an emergency. Fire sales are often regulated by statute or ordinance to protect the public-buyer from deceptive sales practices.

Firm. Business entity or enterprise. Unincorporated business. Partnership of two or more persons. See also Firm name.

Firm name. The name or title under which company transacts its business.

Firm offer. An offer by a merchant to buy or sell goods in a signed writing which by its terms give assurance that it will be held open is not revocable, for lack of consideration, during the time stated or if no time is stated for a reasonable time, but in no event may such period of irrevocability exceed three months; but any such term of assurance on a form supplied by the offeree must be separately signed by the offeror. U.C.C. § 2-205. A binding; definite offer.

Firmura /fârmûra/. In old English law, an assurance of some privilege, by deed or charter.

Firmly. A statement that an affiant "firmly believes" the contents of the affidavit imports a strong or high degree of belief, and is equivalent to saying that he "verily" believes it. The operative words in a bond or recognizance, that the obligor is held and "firmly bound," are equivalent to an acknowledgment of indebtedness and promise to pay.

Firmly offered. Offer which contains no conditions which may defeat acceptance and which by its terms remains open and binding until accepted or rejected.

First Amendment. Amendment to U.S. Constitution guaranteeing basic freedoms of speech, religion, press, and assembly and the right to petition the government for redress of grievances.

First blush. By the phrase "first blush," within the rule that damages, to justify reversal, must be so great as to strike the mind at first blush as having been superinduced by passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, is meant that immediately the judicial mind is shocked and surprised at the great disproportion of the size of the verdict to what the facts of the case would authorize. Cole & Crane v. May, 185 Ky. 135, 151, 214 S.W. 885, 887.

First-class. Of the most superior or excellent grade or kind; belonging to the head or chief or numerically foremost of several classes into which the general subject is divided; e.g. first class mail.

First-class inmate. Under the English prisons act (28 & 29 Vic., c. 126, § 67) prisoners in the county, city, and borough prisons convicted of misdemeanors, and not sentenced to hard labor, were divided into two classes, one of which was called the "first division;" and it was in the discretion of the court to order that such a prisoner be treated as a misdemeanor of the first division, usually called "first-class misdemeanor," and as such not to be deemed a criminal prisoner, i.e., a prisoner convicted of a crime.

First-class title. A marketable title, shown by a clean record, or at least not depending on presumptions that must be overcome or facts that are uncertain. See also Marketable title.

First degree murder. Murder committed with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought, or with extreme atrocity or cruelty, or in the commission or attempted commission of a crime punishable with death or imprisonment for life, is murder in the first degree. State v. McLaughlin, 286 N.C. 597, 213 S.E.2d 238, 244. See also Murder; Premeditation.

First devisee /féərst dəˈvɛɪzi/ /ˈdɛvəzɪ/. The person to whom the estate is first given by the will; term "next devisee" referring to the person to whom the remainder is given.

First fruits. In English ecclesiastical law, the first year's whole profits of every benefice or spiritual living, anciently paid by the incumbent to the pope, but afterwards transferred to the fund called "Queen Anne's Bounty," for increasing the revenue from poor livings.

In feudal law, one year's profits of land which belonged to the king on the death of a tenant in capite; otherwise called "first seizin." One of the incidents to the old feudal tenures. 2 Bl.Comm. 66, 67.

Firsthand knowledge. Information or knowledge gleaned directly from its source; e.g. eyewitness to a homicide.

First heir. The person who will be first entitled to succeed to the title to an estate after the termination of a life estate or estate for years.

First impression case. First examination. First presentation to a court for examination or decision. A case is said to be "of the first impression" when it presents an entirely novel question of law for the decision of the court, and cannot be governed by any existing precedent.

First in, first out. See FIFO.

First lien. One which takes priority or precedence over all other charges or encumbrances upon the same piece of property, and which must be satisfied before such other charges are entitled to participate in the proceeds of its sale. See also First mortgage.

First meeting. As used in a statute providing that, for insulting words or conduct to reduce homicide to manslaughter, killing must occur immediately or at "first meeting" after slayer is informed thereof, quoted words mean first time parties are in proximity under such circumstances as would enable slayer to act in the premises.

First meeting of creditors. In bankruptcy, the initial meeting called by the court for the examination of the bankrupt (i.e. debtor). Bankruptcy Act, § 341.

First mortgage. The senior mortgage which, by reason of its position, has priority over all junior encumbrances. The holder of the first or senior mortgage has priority right to payment on default. See also Mortgage.

First of exchange. Where a set of bills of exchange is drawn in duplicate or triplicate, for greater safety in their transmission, all being of the same tenor, and the intention being that the exceptance and payment of any one of them (the first to arrive safely) shall cancel the others of the set, they are called individually the "first of exchange," "second of exchange," etc.

First offender. One who has never before been convicted of a crime and, hence, one generally given special consideration in the disposition of his case. For example, first offenders of less serious crimes often receive suspended sentences or are placed on probation.

First policy year. In insurance, the year beginning with the first issuance of the insurance policy. This phrase in a statute eliminating suicide of insured after such year as defense, means year for which policy, annually renewed, was first issued.

First purchaser. In the law of descent, this term signifies the ancestor who first acquired (in any other manner than by inheritance) the estate which still remains in his family or descendants.

First return. The "first return", within statute as to depletion deduction is a first return listing items of gross income and deductions arising out of the property. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Alta Mines, C.C.A.Colo., 139 F.2d 580, 582.

First sale rule. Under the "first sale" doctrine where a copyright owner parts with title to a particular copy of his copyrighted work, he divests himself of his exclusive right to vend that particular copy, and vendee is not restricted by statute from further transfers of that copy. U. S. v. Drebin, C.A.Cal., 557 F.2d 1316, 1326.

First vested estate. Refers to first estate to vest in heirs after death of ancestor.

Fisc /fɪsk/ /ˈfɪsk/. A treasury of a kingdom, nation, state, or other governmental body. An Anglicized form of the Latin "fiscus" (which see).

Fiscal. In general, having to do with financial matters; i.e. money, taxes, public or private revenues, etc. Belonging to the fisc, or public treasury. Relating to accounts or the management of revenue. Of or pertaining to the public finances of a government or private finances of business.

Fiscal agent. Generally, a bank which collects and disburses money and serves as a depository of private and public funds in behalf of another.

Fiscal court. Formerly, a ministerial and executive body in some states.

Fiscal judge. A public officer named in the laws of the Riparians and some other Germanic peoples, apparently the same as the "Grat", "reeve", "comes", or "count", and so called because charged with the collection of public revenues, either directly or by the imposition of fines.

Fiscal officers. Those charged with the collection and distribution of public money, as, the revenues of a state (State Treasurer), county, or municipal corporation. In private corporation, officers directly charged with duty to oversee financial transactions such as treasurer and comptroller.
Fiscal period. In accounting, that space of time for which financial statements are prepared such as a year, a month or a quarter. See also Accounting period; Fiscal year.

Fiscal year. A period of twelve consecutive months chosen by a business as the accounting period for annual reports. A corporation's accounting year. Due to the nature of their particular business, some companies do not use the calendar year for their bookkeeping. A typical example is the department store which finds December 31 too early a date to close its books after Christmas sales. For that reason many stores close their accounting year January 31. Their fiscal year, therefore, runs from February 1 of one year through January 31 of the next. The fiscal year of other companies may run from July 1 through the following June 30. Most companies, though, operate on a calendar year basis. See also Accounting period.

Fiscus /fiskus/. Roman law. The treasury of the prince or emperor, as distinguished from "rerarium," which was the treasury of the state. This distinction was not observed in France. In course of time the fiscus absorbed the rerarium and became the treasury of the state. The treasury or property of the state, as distinguished from the private property of the sovereign.

English law. The king's treasury, as the repository of forfeited property. The treasury of a noble, or of any private person.

Fish Commissioner. A public officer of the United States, created by act of congress of February 9, 1871, R.S. § 4395, whose duties principally concerned the preservation and increase throughout the country of fish suitable for food. Office of Commissioner of Fisheries was abolished and functions were transferred to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Fishery. Business or process of catching, processing, or selling fish. A hatchery or place for catching fish.

A right or liberty of taking fish at a particular place or waters. A species of incorporeal hereditament, anciently termed "piscary," of which there are several kinds:

Common fishery. A fishing ground where all persons have a right to take fish. Not to be confounded with "common of fishery," as to which see Common, n.

Free fishery. A franchise in the hands of a subject, existing by grant or prescription, distinct from an ownership in the soil. It is an exclusive right, and applies to a public navigable river, without any right in the soil.

Right of fishery. The general and common right of the citizens to take fish from public waters, such as the sea, great lakes, etc. Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 548, 38 L.Ed. 331. Such rights are restricted however by federal and state laws that establish fishing seasons, licensing requirements, etc.

Several fishery. A fishery of which the owner is also the owner of the soil, or derives his right from the owner of the soil. 2 Bl.Comm. 39, 40. One by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing, independently of all other, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed; but a partial and independent right in another, or a limited liberty, does not derogate from the right of the owner.

Fishgarth. A dam or weir in a river for taking fish.

Fishing trip or expedition. Using the courts to find out information beyond the fair scope of the lawsuit. The loose, vague, unfocused questioning of a witness or the overly broad use of the discovery process. Discovery sought on general, loose, and vague allegations, or on suspicion, surmise, or vague guesses. The scope of discovery may be restricted by protective orders as provided for by Fed.Rule Civil P. 26(c).

Fish royal. These were the whale and the sturgeon, which, when thrown ashore or caught near the coast of England, became the property of the king by virtue of his prerogative and in recompense for his protecting the shore from pirates and robbers. Some authorities include the porpoise.

Fistuca, or festuca /fastyúwka/. In old English law, the rod or wand, by the delivery of which the property in land was formerly transferred in making a feoffment. Called, also, "baculum," "virga," and "fustis." See Festuca.

Fit. Suitable or appropriate. Conformable to a duty. Adapted to, designed, prepared.

Fitness for particular purpose. Where the seller at the time of contracting has reason to know any particular purpose for which the goods are required and that the buyer is relying on the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods, there is, unless excluded or modified, an implied warranty that the goods shall be fit for such purpose. U.C.C. § 2-315. See also Warranty.

Fitz. A Norman word, meaning "son." It is used in law and genealogy; as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzjames, the son of James; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It was originally applied to illegitimate children.

Five-Mile Act. An English act of parliament, passed in 1665, against non-conformists, whereby ministers of that body who refused to take the oath of non-resistance were prohibited from coming within five miles of any corporate town, or place where they had preached or lectured since the passing of the act of oblivion in 1660, nullified by act of 1689.

Fix. Adjust or regulate; determine; settle; make permanent. Term imports finality; stability; certainty; definiteness. See also Firm.

To liquidate or render certain. To fasten a liability upon one. To transform a possible or contingent liability into a present and definite liability.

Fixed. Prices are "fixed" when they are mutually agreed upon. United States v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U.S. 285, 62 S.Ct. 1070, 1076, 86 L.Ed. 1461. See Fixed prices; Price-fixing.

Fixed assets. Plant assets. Property used in operating a business which will not be consumed or converted into cash or its equivalent during the current accounting period; e.g. machinery, land, buildings. Contrast-ed with liquid assets; e.g. cash, securities.
Fixed bail. Setting the amount and terms of bail.

Fixed capital. The amount of money which is permanently invested in the business. May also refer to capital invested in fixed assets (land, buildings, machinery, etc.). Cost of total plant and general equipment. Lindheimer v. Illinois Bell Telephone Co., Ill., 292 U.S. 151, 54 S.Ct. 658, 78 L.Ed. 1182.

Fixed charges. The expenses that have to be borne whether any business is done or not. The chief items are the company's interest on bonds, certain taxes levied by the government, insurance payments, and depreciation due to obsolescence.

Fixed costs. See Fixed charges.

Fixed debt. A more or less permanent form of debt commonly evidenced by bonds or debenture. See also Fixed indebtedness; Fixed liabilities.

Fixed expenses. See Fixed charges.

Fixed fee. Term commonly used in construction contracts which provide for payment of costs plus a predetermined amount as a fee.

Fixed income. That species of income which does not fluctuate over a period of time such as interest on bonds and debentures or dividends from preferred stock as contrasted with dividend income from common stock. May also refer to income received by retiree from pension, annuity, or other form of fixed retirement benefit or income.

Fixed indebtedness. An established or settled indebtedness; not contingent. State ex rel. Hawkins v. State Board of Examiners, 97 Mont. 441, 35 P.2d 116, 120. See Fixed debt; Fixed liabilities.

Fixed liabilities. Those certain and definite as to both obligation and amount; e.g. interest on bonds or mortgage. Long term liabilities. See also Fixed debt.

Fixed opinion. A conviction, bias, or prejudgment as to guilt or liability disqualifying juror to impartially consider whole evidence and apply free from bias law as given in charge by court.

Fixed price contract. Type of contract in which buyer agrees to pay seller a definite, predetermined price.

Fixed prices. Prices established (i.e. mutually agreed upon) between wholesalers or retailers for sale or resale of materials, goods, or products. Agreements to fix prices are generally prohibited by state and federal statutes. See Price-fixing.

Fixed salary. One which is definitely ascertained and prescribed as to amount and time of payment, and does not depend upon the receipt of fees or other contingent emoluments; though not necessarily a salary which cannot be changed by competent authority. Established or settled, to remain for a time.

Fixture. An article in the nature of personal property which has been so annexed to the realty that it is regarded as a part of the land. Leawood Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. City Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Kansas City, Mo.App., 474 S.W.2d 641, 644. That which is fixed or attached to something permanently as an appendage, and not removable.

A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, imbedded in it, permanently resting upon it, or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. Ordinarily, requisites are actual annexation to realty, or something appurtenant thereto, appropriation to use or purpose of realty, and intention to make article permanent accession to property as gathered from nature of articles affixed, relation and situation of person making annexation, structure and mode of annexation, and purpose or use for which it has been made.

Goods are fixtures when they become so related to particular real estate that an interest in them arises under real estate law; e.g., a furnace affixed to a house or other building; counters permanently affixed to the floor of a store; a sprinkler system installed in a building. U.C.C. § 9–313(1)(a).

Trade fixtures. Articles placed in or attached to rented buildings by the tenant, to prosecute the trade or business for which he occupies the premises, or to be used in connection with such business, or promote convenience and efficiency in conducting it. Such chattels as merchants usually possess and annex to the premises occupied by them to enable them to store, handle, and display their goods, which are generally removable without material injury to the premises.

Flaco. A place covered with standing water.

Flag. A national standard on which are certain emblems; an ensign; a banner. It is carried by soldiers, ships, etc., and commonly displayed at forts, businesses and many other suitable places.

In common parlance, the word “flag,” when used as denoting a signal, does not necessarily mean the actual use of a flag, but by figure of speech the word is used in the secondary sense and signifies a signal given as with a flag, that is to say, as by a waving of the hand for the purpose of communicating information.

Flag desecration. Flagrant misuse of flag punishable by statutes in most jurisdictions; though such statutes must meet constitutional tests in balancing state's interest in protecting the flag from disgrace and the individual's right to freedom of speech (symbolic). Spence v. State of Washington, 418 U.S. 405, 94 S.Ct. 2727, 41 L.Ed.2d 842. See also Defile.

Flag, duty of the. This was an ancient ceremony in acknowledgment of British sovereignty over the British seas, by which a foreign vessel struck her flag and lowered her top-sail on meeting the British flag.

Flag, law of. In maritime law, the law of that nation or country whose flag is flown by a particular vessel. A shipowner who sends his vessel into a foreign port gives notice by his flag to all who enter into contracts with the master that he intends the law of that flag to regulate such contracts, and that they must either submit to its operation or not contract with him.

Flag of convenience. Practice of registering a merchant vessel with a country that has favorable (i.e. less restrictive) safety requirements, registration fees, etc.
Flag of the United States. By the act entitled "An act to establish the flag of the United States," (Rev.St. §§ 1791, 1792), it was provided that, "from and after the fourth day of July next, the flag of the United States be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be twenty stars, white in a blue field; that, on the admission of every new state into the Union, one star be added to the union of the flag; and that such addition shall take effect on the fourth day of July then next succeeding such admission." See 4 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2.

Flag of truce. A white flag displayed by one of two belligerent parties to notify the other party that communication and a cessation of hostilities are desired.

Flagrans /flêɣræn(d)/z/. Lat. Burning; raging; in actual perpetration.

Flagrans bellum /flêɣræn(d)/z krâyman/. In Roman law, a fresh or recent crime. This term designated a crime in the very act of its commission, or while it was of recent occurrence.

Flagrant delit /flâɡrânt deyli/. In French law, a crime which is in actual process of perpetration or which has just been committed.

Flagrant necessit/ flêɣrant nasésdi/. A case of urgency rendering lawful an otherwise illegal act, as an assault to remove a man from impending danger.

Flat check. A check drawn upon a banker by a person who has no funds at the banker's and knows that such is the case. Such act is a crime. Also called check kiting.

Flat. A place covered with water too shallow for navigation with vessels ordinarily used for commercial purposes. The space between high and low water mark along the edge of an arm of the sea, bay, tidal river, etc.

A floor or separate division of a floor, fitted for housekeeping and designed to be occupied by a single family. An apartment on one floor. A floor or story in a building. A building, the various floors of which are fitted up as flats, either residential or business.

In insurance, a policy without coinsurance provision; a provision for termination of renewal policy within short period after anniversary date without charge to insured.

Refraining from action. The term is used in this sense in general jurisprudence, in contradistinction to "act."

Within usury law, term signifies contractual obligation of lender or creditor to refrain, during given period of time, from requiring borrower or debtor to repay loan or debt then due and payable. Hafer v. Spaeth, 22 Wash.2d 378, 156 P.2d 408, 411.

As regards forbearance as a form of consideration, see Consideration.

For cause. With respect to removal from office "for cause", means for reasons which law and public policy recognize as sufficient warrant for removal and such cause is "legal cause" and not merely a cause which the appointing power in the exercise of discretion may deem sufficient. State ex rel. Nagle v. Sullivan, 98 Mont. 425, 40 P.2d 995, 998. They do not mean removal by arbitrary or capricious action but there must be some cause affecting and concerning ability and fitness of official to perform duty imposed on him. The cause must be one in which the law and sound public policy will recognize as a cause for official no longer occupying his office. Napolitano v. Ward, D.C.Ill., 317 F.Supp. 79, 81.

Force. Power dynamically considered, that is, in motion or in action; constraining power, compulsion; strength directed to an end. Commonly the word occurs in such connections as to show that unlawful or wrongful action is meant; e.g. forcible entry.

Power statically considered; that is at rest, or latent, but capable of being called into action upon occasion for its exercise. Efficacy; legal validity. This is the meaning when we say that a statute or a contract is "in force."

In old English law, a technical term applied to a species of accessory before the fact. See also Constructive force; Excessive force; Interposing force; Reasonable force.

Deadly force. Force which the actor uses with the purpose of causing or which he knows to create a substantial risk of causing death or serious bodily harm. Purposely firing a firearm in the direction of another person or at a vehicle in which another person is believed to be constitutes deadly force. A threat to cause death or serious bodily harm, by the production of a weapon or otherwise, so long as the actor's purpose is limited to creating an apprehension that he will use deadly force if necessary, does not constitute deadly force. Model Penal Code, § 3.11.

Unlawful force. Force, including confinement, which is employed without the consent of the person against whom it is directed and the employment of which constitutes an offense or actionable tort or would constitute such offense or tort except for a defense (such as the absence of intent, negligence, or mental capacity; duress; youth; or diplomatic status) not amounting to a privilege to use the force. Assent constitutes consent, within the meaning of this Section, whether or not it otherwise is legally effective, except assent to the infliction of death or serious bodily harm. Model Penal Code, § 3.11.

Force and arms. A phrase used in common law pleading in declarations of trespass and in indictments, but now unnecessary, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence.

Force and fear. Called also "vi metuque" means that any contract or act extorted under the pressure of force (vis) or under the influence of fear (metus) is voidable on that ground, provided, of course, that the force or the fear was such as influenced the party.

Superior Court In and For Pinal County, 8 Ariz.App. 163, 444 P.2d 521, 523. Exists where one originally in rightful possession of realty refuses to surrender it at termination of his possessory right. Sayers & Muir Service Station v. Indian Refining Co., 266 Ky. 779, 100 S.W.2d 687, 689. Forcible detainer may ensue upon a peaceable entry, as well as upon a forcible entry; but it is most commonly spoken of in the phrase "forcible entry and detainer." See also Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Every person is guilty of forcible entry who either (1) by breaking open doors, windows, or other parts of a house, or by any kind of violence or circumstance of terror, enters upon or into any real property; or (2) who, after entering peaceably upon real property, turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct the party in possession. Code Civil Proc.Cal. § 1159.

In many states, an entry effected without consent of rightful owner, or against his remonstrance, or under circumstances which amount to no more than a mere trespass, is now technically considered "forcible," while a detainer of the property consisting merely in the refusal to surrender possession after a lawful demand, is treated as a "forcible" detainer, the "force" required at common law being now supplied by a mere fiction.

See Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible detainer; Forcible entry and detainer; Process (Summary process).

Forcible entry and detainer. A summary proceeding for restoring to possession of land one who is wrongfully kept out or has been wrongfully deprived of the possession. Wein v. Albany Park Motor Sales Co., 312 Ill.App. 357, 38 N.E.2d 556, 559. See also Ejectment; Eviction; Forcible detainer; Process (Summary process).

Forcible rape. Aggravated form of statutory rape made punishable by statute. See also Rape.

Forcible trespass. An invasion of the rights of another with respect to his personal property, of the same character, or under the same circumstances, which would constitute a "forcible entry and detainer" of real property at common law. It consists in taking or seizing the personal property of another by force, violence, or intimidation or in forcibly injuring it. There must be actual violence used, or such demonstration of force as is calculated to intimidate or tend to a breach of the peace. It is not necessary that the person be actually put in fear.

For collection. A form of indorsement on a note or check where it is not intended to transfer title to it or to give it credit or currency, but merely to authorize the transferee to collect the amount of it. Such an indorsement is restrictive. U.C.C. § 3–205(c).

Ford /fôrd/. In old records, a ford or shallow, made by damming or penning up the water.

Fordal /fôrdal/. A butt or headland, jutting out upon other land.

Fordanno /fôrdânow/. In old European law, he who first assaulted another.

Foreclosure /fôrklowzhar/. To shut out, to bar, to destroy an equity of redemption. Anderson v. Barr, 178 Okl. 506, 62 P.2d 1242, 1246. A termination of all rights of the mortgagor or his grantee in the property covered by the mortgage. The process by which a mortgagor of real or personal property, or other owner of property subject to a lien, is deprived of his interest therein. Procedure by which mortgaged property is sold on default of mortgagor in satisfaction of mortgage debt.

In common usage, refers to enforcement of lien, trust deed, or mortgage in any method provided by law.

Statutory foreclosure. The term is sometimes applied to foreclosure by execution of a power of sale contained in the mortgage, without recourse to the courts, as it must conform to the provisions of the statute regulating such sales.
FORECLOSURE

Strict foreclosure. A decree of strict foreclosure of a mortgage finds the amount due under the mortgage, orders its payment within a certain limited time, and provides that, in default of such payment, the debtor's right and equity of redemption shall be forever barred and foreclosed; its effect is to vest the title of the property absolutely in the mortgagee, on default in payment, without any sale of the property.

Foreclosure decree. Properly speaking, a decree ordering the strict foreclosure of a mortgage; but the term is also loosely and conventionally applied to a decree ordering the sale of the mortgaged premises and the satisfaction of the mortgage out of the proceeds.

Foreclosure sale. A sale of mortgaged property to obtain satisfaction of the mortgage out of the proceeds, whether authorized by a decree of the court or by a power of sale contained in the mortgage. See also Forced sale.

Foregift /förgift/. A premium for a lease.

Foregoers /förgówarz/. Royal purveyors.

Forehand rent. In English law, rent payable in advance; or, more properly, a species of premium or bonus paid by the tenant on the making of the lease, and particularly on the renewal of leases by ecclesiastical corporations.

Foreign. Belonging to another nation or country; belonging or attached to another jurisdiction; made, done, or rendered in another state or jurisdiction; subject to another jurisdiction; operating or solvable in another territory; extrinsic; outside; extraordinary. Nonresident person, corporation, executor, etc.

As to foreign Administrator; Assignment; Attachment; Bill (Bill of exchange); Charity; Commerce; Corporation; County; Creditor; Divorce; Document; Domicile; Factor; Judgment; Jury; Minister; Plea; Port; State; Vessel, and Voyage, see those titles.

Foreign agent. Person who registers with the federal government as a lobbyist representing the interests (e.g. import quotas, tourism, foreign aid) of a foreign nation or corporation.

Foreign answer. In old English practice, an answer which was not triable in the county where it was made.

Foreign apposer /fóhran apówarz/. In England, an officer in the exchequer who examines the sheriff's escheats, comparing them with the records, and apposes (interrogates) the sheriff as to each particular sum therein.

Foreign bill of exchange. Bill of exchange which is drawn in one state and payable in another state or country. See also Bill (Bill of exchange).

Foreign coins. Coins issued as money under the authority of a foreign government. As to their valuation in the United States, see 31 U.S.C.A. § 372.

Foreign commerce. Trade between persons in the United States and those in a foreign country. See also Commerce; Foreign trade.

Foreign consulate. The office or headquarters of a consul who represents a foreign country in the United States.

Foreign corporation. A corporation doing business in one state though chartered or incorporated in another state is a foreign corporation as to the first state, and, as such, is required to consent to certain conditions and restrictions in order to do business in such first state. Under federal tax laws, a foreign corporation is one which is not organized under the laws of one of the states or territories of the United States. I.R.C. § 7701(a)(5). Service of process on foreign corporations is governed by Fed.R.Civ. P. 4. See also Corporation.

Foreign courts. The courts of a foreign state or nation. In the United States, this term is frequently applied to the courts of one of the states when their judgments or records are introduced in the courts of another.

Foreign diplomatic or consular offices. Officials appointed by a foreign government to protect the interest of its nationals in the United States. See also Foreign agent.

Foreign dominion. In English law, this means a country which at one time formed part of the dominions of a foreign state or potentate, but which by conquest or cession has become a part of the dominions of the British crown.

Foreigner. In old English law, this term, when used with reference to a particular city, designated any person who was not an inhabitant of that city. According to later usage, it denotes a person who is not a citizen or subject of the state or country of which mention is made, or any one owing allegiance to a foreign state or sovereign.

Person belonging to or under citizenship of another country.

Foreign exchange. Conversion of the money of one country into its equal of another country. Process by which money of one country is used to pay balances due in another country.

Foreign exchange rate. The rate or price for which the currency of one country may be exchanged for the money of another country. See also Float.

Foreign immunity. With respect to jurisdictional immunity of foreign nations, see 28 U.S.C.A. § 1602 et seq.

Foreign judgment. See Judgment.

Foreign jurisdiction. Any jurisdiction foreign to that of the forum; e.g. of a sister state or another country. Also the exercise by a state or nation of jurisdiction beyond its own territory. Long-arm service of process is a form of such foreign or extraterritorial jurisdiction. See also 28 U.S.C.A. § 1330.

Foreign laws. The laws of a foreign country, or of a sister state. In conflicts of law, the legal principles of jurisprudence which are part of the law of a sister state or nation. Foreign laws are additions to our own laws, and in that respect are called "jus receptum".

Foreign money. The currency or medium of exchange of a foreign country. See also Foreign exchange.

Foreign personal representative. A personal representative of another jurisdiction. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(14).
Foreign proceeding. Proceeding, whether judicial or administrative and whether or not under bankruptcy law, in a foreign country in which the debtor's domicile, residence, principal place of business, or principal assets were located at the commencement of such proceeding, for the purpose of liquidating an estate, adjusting debts by composition, extension, or discharge, or effecting a reorganization. Bankruptcy Act § 101(19).

Foreign receiver. An official receiver appointed by a court of another state or nation.

Foreign representative. Duly selected trustee, administrator, or other representative of an estate in a foreign proceeding. Bankruptcy Act § 101(20).

Foreign service. The United States Foreign Service conducts relations with foreign countries through its representatives at embassies, missions, consulates general, consulates, and consular agencies throughout the world. These representatives and agencies report to the State Department.

Feudal law. In feudal law, was that whereby a mesne lord held another, without the compass of his own fee, or that which the tenant performed either to his own lord or to the lord paramount out of the fee. Foreign service seems also to have been used for knight's service, or escuage uncertain.

Foreign states. Nations which are outside the United States. Term may also refer to another state; i.e. a sister state.

The term "foreign nations," as used in a statement of the rule that the laws of foreign nations should be proved in a certain manner, should be construed to mean all nations and states other than that in which the action is brought; and hence one state of the Union is foreign to another, in the sense of that rule.

A "foreign state" within statute providing for expatriation of American citizen who is naturalized under laws of foreign state is a country which is not the United States, or its possession or colony, an alien country, other than our own. Kletter v. Dulles, D.C. D.C., 111 F.Supp. 593, 598.

Foreign substance. Substance occurring in any part of the body or organism where it is not normally found, usually introduced from without. Adams v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 251 N.C. 565, 112 S.E.2d 92, 94. A "foreign substance" within rule that a cause of action against physician who leaves a foreign substance in body does not begin until patient discovers or should have discovered the presence of such substance includes drugs and medicine which are introduced into the body and which are not organically connected or naturally related. Rothman v. Silber, 83 N.J.Super. 192, 198 A.2d 86, 89, 92.

Foreign tax credit or deduction. Both individual taxpayers and corporations may claim a foreign tax credit on income earned and subject to tax in a foreign country or U.S. possession. As an alternative to the credit, a deduction may be taken for the foreign taxes paid.

Foreign trade. Commercial interchange of commodities between different countries; export and import trade. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 29 Cust. & Pat.App. 82, 120 F.2d 340, 342. See also Foreign commerce.

Foreign trade zone. Zones or areas established in states wherein component parts for electric products, watches, automobiles, etc. may be imported initially duty free; such duty being postponed until the finished product enters the larger American market.

Forejudge. In old English law and practice, to expel from court for some offense or misconduct. When an officer or attorney of a court was expelled for any offense, or for not appearing to an action by bill filed against him, he was said to be forejudged the court.

To deprive or put out of a thing by the judgment of a court. To condemn to lose a thing.

To expel or banish.

Forejudger. In English practice, a judgment by which a man is deprived or put out of a thing; a judgment of expulsion or banishment.

Foreman or foreperson. The presiding member of a grand or petit jury, who speaks or answers for the jury.

Person designated by employer-management to direct work of employees; superintendent, overseer.

Fore-matron /førəˈmætən/. In a jury of women this word corresponds to the foreman of a jury.

Forensic. Belonging to courts of justice.

Forensic medicine. That science which teaches the application of every branch of medical knowledge to the purposes of the law; hence its limits are, on the one hand, the requirements of the law, and, on the other, the whole range of medicine. Anatomy, physiology, medicine, surgery, chemistry, physics, and botany lend their aid as necessity arises; and in some cases all these branches of science are required to enable a court of law to arrive at a proper conclusion on a contested question affecting life or property.

Forensic pathology. That branch of medicine dealing with diseases and disorders of the mind in relation to legal principles and cases.

Forensic psychiatry. That branch of medicine dealing with disorders of the mind in relation to legal principles and cases.

Forensis /fərəˈnɪs/. In Civil law, belonging to or connected with a court; forensic. Forensis homo, an advocate; a pleader of causes; one who practices in court.

Fore-oath /fɔːˈrəθ/. Before the Norman Conquest, an oath required of the complainant in the first instance (in the absence of manifest facts) as a security against frivolous suits.
The act of the buying or contracting for any merchandise or provision on its way to the market, with the intention of selling it again at a higher price; or dissuading of persons from bringing their goods or provisions there; or persuading them to enhance the price when there. This was formerly an indictable offense in England, but is now abolished by St. 7 & 8 Vict., c. 24.

Forestarius /fōhrstrē'riyas/. In English law, a forester. An officer who takes care of the woods and forests. De forestario apponendo, a writ which lay to appoint a forester to prevent further commission of waste when a tenant in dower had committed waste.

Forest courts. In English law, courts instituted for the government of the king's forest in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the king's deer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which such deer were lodged. They consisted of the courts of attachments, of regard, of swine-mote, and of justice-seat. Such courts are now obsolete. 3 Bl.Comm. 71.

Forester. In old English law, a sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailliff or walk. These letters patent were generally granted during good behavior; but sometimes they held the office in fee.

Person trained in forestry; employee of U.S. Forest Service.

Forest law. The system or body of old law relating to the royal forests. The last of the forest laws were repealed by the Wild Creatures and Forest Laws Act of 1971.

Forfang /för'fæng/. In old English law, the taking of provisions from any person in fairs or markets before the royal purveyors were served with necessaries for the sovereign. Also the seizing and rescuing of stolen or strayed cattle from the hands of a thief, or of those having illegal possession of them; also the reward fixed for such rescue.

Forfeit /för'fælt/. To lose, or lose the right to, by some error, fault, offense, or crime; or to subject, as property, to forfeiture or confiscation. To lose, in consequence of breach of contract, neglect of duty, or offense, some right, privilege, or property to another or to the State. United States v. Chavez, C.C.A. N.M., 87 F.2d 16, 19. To incur a penalty; to become liable to the payment of a sum of money, as the consequence of a certain act.

To lose an estate, a franchise, or other property belonging to one, by the act of the law, and as a consequence of some misfeasance, negligence, or omission. It is a deprivation (that is, against the will of the losing party), with the property either transferred to another or resumed by the original grantor.

See also Forfeiture; Seizure.

Forfeitable. Liable to be forfeited; subject to forfeiture for non-user, neglect, crime, etc.

Forfeiture /för'fækhar/. Something to which the right is lost by the commission of a crime or fault or the losing of something by way of penalty. Ridgeway v. City of Akron, Ohio App., 42 N.E.2d 724, 726. A deprivation or destruction of a right in consequence of the nonperformance of some obligation or condition. Loss of some right or property as a penalty for some illegal act. Loss of property or money because of breach of a legal obligation.

A punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of land, tenements, or hereditaments whereby he loses all interest therein. Hammond v. Johnson, 94 Utah 20, 66 P.2d 894, 900.

The loss of a corporate franchise or charter in consequence of some illegal act, or of malfeasance or nonfeasance.

In old English law, the loss of land by a tenant to his lord, as the consequence of some breach of fidelity. The loss of goods or chattels, as a punishment for some crime or misdemeanor in the party forfeiting, and as a compensation for the offense and injury committed against him to whom they are forfeited.

See also Default; Foreclosure; Forfeit; Seizure. For Criminal forfeiture, see Criminal.

Forfeiture of bond. A failure to perform the condition upon which obligor was to be excused from the penalty in the bond. Hall v. Browning, 71 Ga.App. 835, 32 S.E.2d 424, 427. With respect to a bail bond, occurs when the accused fails to appear for trial.

Forfeiture of marriage. A penalty incurred by a ward in chivalry who married without the consent or against the will of the guardian.

Forgabulum, or forgavel (/fɔrgæbəl/). A quit-rent; a small reserved rent in money.

Forge. To fabricate by false imitation. Carter v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 457, 116 S.W.2d 371, 377. To fabricate, construct, or prepare one thing in imitation of another thing, with the intention of substituting the false for the genuine, or otherwise deceiving and defrauding by the use of the spurious article. To counterfeit or make falsely. Especially, to make a spurious written instrument with the intention of fraudulently substituting it for another, or of passing it off as genuine; or to fraudulently alter a genuine instrument to another's prejudice; or to sign another person's name to a document, with a deceitful and fraudulent intent. See Counterfeiting; Forgery; Fraud.

Forgery. A person is guilty of forgery if, with purpose to defraud or injure anyone, or with knowledge that he is facilitating a fraud or injury to be perpetrated by anyone, the actor: (a) alters any writing of another without his authority; or (b) makes, completes, executes, authenticates, issues or transfers any writing so that it purports to be the act of another who did not authorize that act, or to have been executed at a time or place or in a numbered sequence other than was in fact the case, or to be a copy of an original when no such original existed; or (c) utters any writing which he knows to be forged in a manner specified in paragraph (a) or (b). Model Penal Code, § 224.1.

Crime includes both act of forging handwriting of another and act of uttering as true and genuine any forged writing knowing same to be forged with intent to prejudice, damage or defraud any person. State v. May, 93 Idaho 343, 461 P.2d 126, 129. Crime is committed when one makes or passes a false instrument with intent to defraud, and the element of loss or detriment is immaterial. People v. McCaffery, 182 Cal.App.2d 486, 6 Cal.Rptr. 333, 337. The false making of an instrument, which purports on face of it to be good and valid for purposes for which it was created, with a design to defraud any person or persons. State v. Goranson, 67 Wash.2d 456, 408 P.2d 7, 9. The fraudulent making of a false writing having apparent legal significance. Nelson v. State, 224 Md. 374, 167 A.2d 871, 873.

See also Alteration; Counterfeit; False making; Falsify; Fraud; Imitation; Raised check.

Evidence. The fabrication or counterfeiting of evidence. The artful and fraudulent manipulation of physical objects, or the deceitful arrangement of genuine facts or things, in such a manner as to create an erroneous impression or a false inference in the minds of those who may observe them.

Forherda (/fɔhrəd/). In old English records, a herdland, headland, or foreland.

For hire or reward. To transport passengers or property for a fare, charge, or rate to be paid by such passengers, or persons for whom such property is transported, to owner or operator. Michigan Consol. Gas Co. v. Sohio Petroleum Co., 321 Mich. 102, 32 N.W.2d 353, 356. See also Carrier.

Fori disputationes (/fɔr̩i dysputaˈtiʃənɪz/). In the civil law, discussions or arguments before a court.

Forinsecus (/fɔrɪnˈsɛkəs/). Lat. Foreign; exterior; outside; extraordinary.

Servitium forinsecum, the payment of aid, scutage, and other extraordinary military services. Forinsecum manerium, the manor, or that part of it which lies outside the bars or town, and is not included within the liberties of it.

Forinsic (/fɔrɪnˈsɪk/). In old English law, exterior; foreign; extraordinary. In feudal law, the term “forinsic services” comprehended the payment of extraordinary aids or the rendition of extraordinary military services, and in this sense was opposed to “intrinsic services.”

Foris (/fɔrɪs/). Lat. Abroad; out of doors; on the outside of a place; without; extrinsic.

Forisbanitus (/fɔrɪsbəˈnɪtəs/). In old English law, banished.

Forisfacere (/fɔrɪsˈfɛsrəri/). Lat. To forfeit; to lose an estate or other property on account of some criminal or illegal act. To confiscate.

To act beyond the law, i.e., to transgress or infringe the law; to commit an offense or wrong; to do any act against or beyond the law.

Forisfacere, i.e., extra legem seu consuetudinem facere (/fɔrɪsˈfɛsrəri, ɪd ˈɛst, ˈɛkstra liˈjas siwʊ̆ kɒnˈswɛtjuˈdɛnəm ˈfɛsrəri/). Forisfacere, i.e., to do something beyond law or custom.

Forisfactura /fôrəsfæktʃûra/. A crime or offense through which property is forfeited. A fine or punishment in money.

Forfeiture; the loss of property or life in consequence of crime.

Forisfactura plena /fôrəsfæktʃûra plîyna/. A forfeiture of all a man's property. Things which were forfeited.

Forma. Lat. Form; the prescribed form of judicial proceedings.

Forma dat esse /fôrma dät ēsiy/. Form gives being. Called "the old physical maxim."

Forma et figura judicii /fôrma èt figyûra juwdìshiyay/. The form and shape of judgment or judicial action. 3 Bl.Comm. 271.

Formal. Relating to matters of form; as, "formal defects"; inserted, added, or joined pro forma. See Form; Parties.

Formal contract. A written contract or agreement as contrasted with an oral or informal contract or agreement. Historically, a formal contract was under seal; though this is generally no longer required. See also Contract.

Forma legalis forma essentials /fôrma lagêylas fôrma æshênìshyêylas/. Legal form is essential form.

Formalities. In England, robes worn by the magistrates of a city or corporation, etc., on solemn occasions.

Formality. The conditions, in regard to method, order, arrangement, use of technical expressions, performance of specific acts, etc., which are required by the law in the making of contracts or conveyances, or in the taking of legal proceedings, to insure their validity and regularity. Term generally refers to "procedure" in contrast to "substance".

Formal parties. See Parties.

Forma non observata, infertur adnulatiactus /fôrma nôn óbzervezêyda, infêrdär ædnalêysh(iy)ow âktâs/. Where form is not observed, a nullity of the act is inferred. Where the law prescribes a form, the non-observance of it is fatal to the proceeding, and the whole becomes a nullity.

Forma pauperis /fôrma pôparas/. See Appeal in forma pauperis; In forma pauperis.
Forma /förmyd/. In canon law, canonical letters.

Formata brevia /förmyda bríviv/. Formed writs; writs of form. See Brevia formata.

Formed action. An action for which a set form of words is prescribed, which must be strictly adhered to. Such actions are now generally obsolete.

Formed design. In criminal law, and particularly with reference to homicide, this term means a deliberate and fixed intention to kill, whether directed against a particular person or not. See also Premeditation.

Formedon /förmdmn/. An ancient writ in English law which was available for one who had a right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. It was in the nature of a writ of right, and was the highest action that a tenant in tail could have; for he could not have an absolute writ of right, that being confined to such as claimed in fee-simple, and for that reason this writ of formedon was granted to him by statute and was emphatically called "his" writ of right. The writ was distinguished into three species, viz.: Formedon in the descender, in the remainder, and in the reverter. It was abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27. 3 Bl.Comm. 191.

Formedon in the descender /förmdmn in Ḵa daśénard/. A writ of formedon which lay where a gift was made in tail, and the tenant in tail aliened the lands or was disseised of them and died, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Formedon in the remainder /förmdmn in Ḵa raméyn-dar/. A writ of formedon which lay where a man gave lands to another for life or in tail, with remainder to a third person in tail or in fee, and he who had the particular estate died without issue inheritable, and a stranger intruded upon him in remainder, and kept him out of possession. In this case he in remainder, or his heir, was entitled to this writ. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Formedon in the reverter /förmdmn in Ḵa ravoár-dar/. A writ of formedon which lay where there was a gift in tail, and afterwards, by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion fell in upon the donor, his heirs or assigns. In such case, the reversioner had this writ to recover the lands. 3 Bl.Comm. 192.

Former acquittal /förmar akwíyda/. See Autrefois.

Former jeopardy. Also called "double jeopardy." Plea of "former jeopardy," that a man cannot be tried for the offense more than once, is fundamental common law and constitutional right of defendant, affording protection against his being again tried for the same offense, and not against the peril of second punishment. Fifth Amendment of U.S.Const. However, prosecution by both the state and federal government is not barred by the constitutional protection against double jeopardy. Bartkus v. Illinois, 359 U.S. 121, 79 S.Ct. 676, 3 L.Ed.2d 684.

Former proceedings. Term used in reference to action taken earlier and its result in determining whether present proceeding is barred by res judicata.

Former statements. As used in evidence, declarations made by a party or witness at an earlier time. Fed. Evid.R. 613.

Former testimony. In evidence, testimony given by a party or witness at an earlier trial or hearing and which, under certain conditions, may be used in present proceeding. Fed.Evid.R. 613.

Forms of action. Forms of action governed common law pleading and were the procedural devices used to give expression to the theories of liability recognized by the common law. Failure to analyze the cause of action properly, to select the proper theory of liability and to choose the appropriate procedural mechanism or forms of action could easily result in being thrown out of court. A plaintiff had to elect his remedy in advance and could not subsequently amend his pleadings to conform to his proof or to the court's choice of another theory of liability. According to the relief sought, actions have been divided into three categories: real actions were brought for the recovery of real property; mixed actions were brought to recover real property and damages for injury to it; personal actions were brought to recover debts or personal property, or for injuries to personal, property, or contractual rights. The common law actions are usually considered to be eleven in number: trespass, trespass on the case, trover, ejectment, detinue, replevin, debt, covenant, account, special assumpsit, and general assumpsit.

Under the Rules of Civil Procedure (applicable in the federal and most state courts) there is now only one form of action known as a "civil action". Fed.R. Civil P., Rule 2.

Formula. In common-law practice, a set form of words used in judicial proceedings. In the civil law, an action.

Formula deal. An agreement between motion picture distributors and independent or affiliated circuits to exhibit a feature in all theatres at specified percentage of national gross receipts realized from such feature by all theatres in the United States. U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, D.C. N.Y., 66 F.Supp. 323, 333, 347.

Formula /förmyali/. In Roman law, when the legis actions were proved to be inconvenient, a mode of procedure called "per formulas" (i.e., by means of formula), was gradually introduced, and eventually the legis actions were abolished by the Lex Aedutia, B.C. 164, excepting in a very few exceptional matters. The formulæ were four in number, namely: (1) The Demonstratio, wherein the plaintiff stated, i.e., showed, the facts out of which his claim arose; (2) the Intentio, where he made his claim against the defendant; (3) the Adjudicatio, wherein the judex was directed to assign or adjudicate the property or any portion or portions thereof according to the rights of the parties; and (4) the \textit{Condemnatio}, in which the judex was authorized and directed to condemn or to acquit according as the facts were or were not proved. These \textit{formulae} were obtained from the magistrate (\textit{in iure}), and were thereafter proceeded with before the judex (\textit{in judicio}).

\textbf{Formula instruction.} A jury instruction intended to be complete statement of law upon which jury may base verdict. Harvey v. Aceves, 115 Cal.App. 333, 1 P.2d 1043, 1045. An instruction which advises the jury that under certain facts therein hypothesized their verdict should be for one of the parties. McFatridge v. Harlem Globe Trotters, 69 N.M. 271, 365 P.2d 918, 922. See \textit{Jury instructions}.

\textbf{Formulae} /\textit{förmälériyiz}/. \textit{Collections of formulæ}, or forms of forensic proceedings and instruments used among the Franks, and other early continental nations of Europe.

\textbf{Fornagium} /\textit{fornéyjyam}/. The fee taken by a lord of his tenant, who was bound to bake in the lord's common oven (\textit{in forno domini}), or for a commission to use his own.

\textbf{Fornication}. Unlawful sexual intercourse between two unmarried persons. Further, if one of the persons be married and the other not, it is fornication on the part of the latter, though adultery for the former. In some jurisdictions, however, by statute, it is adultery on the part of both persons if the woman is married, to use his own. In other jurisdictions, however, it is fornication if one of the persons be married and the other not, it is fornication on the part of the latter, though adultery for the former. In some jurisdictions, however, by statute, it is adultery on the part of both persons if the woman is married, whether the man is married or not. This offense is very seldom enforced. See also \textit{illicit cohabitation}.

\textbf{Foro} /\textit{fórow}/. In Spanish law, the place where tribunals hear and determine causes, —\textit{exercendarum liti­um locus}.

\textbf{Foros} /\textit{fórows}/. In Spanish law, emphyteutic rents.

\textbf{Forprise} /\textit{fórpázyz}/. An exception; reservation; excepted; reserved. Anciently, a term of frequent use in leases and conveyances. In another sense, the word is taken for any exaction.

\textbf{For purpose of}. With the intention of.

\textbf{Forschel}. A strip of land lying next to the highway.

\textbf{Forspeaker} /\textit{förspiykar}/. An attorney or advocate in a cause.

\textbf{Forspeca} /\textit{förspiyka}/. In old English law, proctor; paranyphus.

\textbf{Forstal} /\textit{förstöl}/. See \textit{Forestall}.

\textbf{Forstellarius est pauperum depressor et totius commun­litatis et patrie publicus inimicus} /\textit{forstalérijas ést pópara doprésar et tósh(i)yas kamýýmsteydas et pótriyiy piblákas inamáykas}/. A forestaller is an oppressor of the poor, and a public enemy of the whole community and country.

\textbf{Forswear} /\textit{förswré}/. In criminal law, to make oath to that which the deponent knows to be untrue. This term is wider in its scope than "perjury," for the latter, as a technical term, includes the idea of the oath being taken before a competent court or officer, and relating to a material issue, which is not implied by the word "forswear."

\textbf{Fort}. This term means something more than a mere military camp, post, or station. The term implies a fortification, or a place protected from attack by some such means as a moat, wall, or parapet.

\textbf{Fortalice}, or \textit{fortelace} /\textit{fördálaz}/. A fortress or place of strength, which anciently did not pass without a special grant.

\textbf{Fortaxed} /\textit{förtaekszt}/. Wrongly or extortionately taxed.

\textbf{For that}. In pleading, words used to introduce the allegations of a declaration. "For that" is a positive allegation; "For that whereas" is a recital. Such words are not required in federal court pleadings nor in the majority of states that have adopted \textit{Rules of Civil Procedure}.

\textbf{For that whereas}. In pleading, formal words introducing the statement of the plaintiff's case, by way of recital, in his declaration, in all actions except trespass. In trespass, where there was no recital, the expression used was, "For that." Such words are not required in federal court pleadings nor in the majority of states that have adopted \textit{Rules of Civil Procedure}.

\textbf{Forthcoming bond}. A bond conditioned on the forthcoming of property to answer such judgment as may be entered. If the property be forthcoming, no liability ensues. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Sabath, 286 Ill.App. 320, 3 N.E.2d 330, 335. A bond given to a sheriff who has levied on property, conditioned that the property shall be forthcoming, \textit{i.e.}, produced, when required. On the giving of such bond, the goods are allowed to remain in the possession of the debtor.

\textbf{Forthwith}. Immediately; without delay; directly; within a reasonable time under the circumstances of the case; promptly and with reasonable dispatch. U. S. ex rel. Carter v. Jennings, D.C.Pa., 333 F.Supp. 1392, 1397. Within such time as to permit that which is to be done, to be done lawfully and according to the practical and ordinary course of things to be performed or accomplished. The first opportunity offered.

\textbf{Fortia} /\textit{förs(i)y)ar}/. Force. In old English law, force used by an accessory, to enable the principal to commit a crime, as by binding or holding a person while another killed him, or by aiding or counseling in any way, or commanding the act to be done.

\textbf{Fortia frisca} /\textit{förs(i)y)ar friska}/. Fresh force (\textit{q.v.}).

\textbf{Fortility} /\textit{förtilády}/. In old English law, a fortified place; a castle; a bulwark.

\textbf{Fortior}. Stronger. A term applied, in old English law, to that species of presumption, arising from facts shown in evidence, which is strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party.

\textbf{Fortior est custodia legis quam hominis} /\textit{förs(i)yar est kástówdiya liyjas kwæm hómanas}/. The custody of the law is stronger than that of man.
Fortior et potior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The law in some cases overrides the will of the individual, and renders ineffective or futile his expressed intention or contract.

Fortior /fôrshiyôr/. See A fortiori.

Fortis /fôrdas/. Lat. Strong. Fortis et sana, strong and sound; staunch and strong; as a vessel.

Fortiess /fôrtiat/. A place or port of some strength; a little fort.

Fortuit /fôrtwyô/. In French law, accidental; fortuitous. Cas fortuit, a fortuitous event. Fortuitement, accidentally; by chance; casually.

Fortuitous /fôrchuwôdas/. Happening by chance or accident. Occurring unexpectedly, or without known cause. Accidental; undesigned; adventitious. Resulting from unavoidable physical causes.

Fortuitous collision /fôrchuwôdas kalizhan/. In maritime law, the accidental running foul of vessels.

Fortuitous event /fôrchuwôdas avênt/. An event happening by chance or accident. That which happens by a cause which cannot be resisted. An unforeseen occurrence, not caused by either of the parties, nor such as they could prevent.

Fortuna /fôrchuwôna/. Lat. Fortune; also treasure-trove.

Fortunam faciunt judicem /fôrchuwônam féys(h)iyant jûwdasam/. They make fortune the judge. Spoken of the process of making partition among co-parceners by drawing lots for the several purparts.

Fortune teller. One who professes to tell future events in the life of another.

In English law, persons pretending or professing to tell fortunes, and punishable as rogues and vagabonds or disorderly persons. 4 Bl.Comm. 62.

Fortunam /fôrchuwônym/. In old English law, a tournament or fighting with spears, and an appeal to fortune therein.

Forty. In land laws and conveyancing, in those regions where grants, transfers, and deeds are made with reference to the subdivisions of the government survey, this term means forty acres of land in the form of a square, being the tract obtained by quartering a section of land (640 acres) and again quartering one of the quarters.

Forty-days court. In old English forest law, the court of attachment in forests, or woodmote court.

Forum /fôrûm/. Lat. A court of justice, or judicial tribunal; a place of jurisdiction; a place of litigation. Place where remedy is pursued. See also Venue.

In Roman law, the market place, or public paved court, in the city of Rome, where such public business was transacted as the assemblies of the people and the judicial trial of causes and where also elections, markets, and the public exchange were held.

Forum actus /fôrûm ẑêktas/. The forum of the act. The forum of the place where the act was done which is now called in question.

Forum conscientiae /fôrûm kôns(h)iyênhšiyîyî/. The forum or tribunal of conscience.

Forum contentiosum /fôrûm kantênhšiyôwzâm/. A contentious forum or court; a place of litigation; the ordinary court of justice, as distinguished from the tribunal of conscience. 3 Bl.Comm. 211.

Forum contractus /fôrûm kôntrâktsâs/. The forum of the contract; the court of the place where a contract is made; the place where a contract is made, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum conveniens /fôrûm kâvviyên(i)yêñ(d)z/. The state or judicial district in which an action may be most appropriately brought, considering the best interest of the parties and the public. See, in contradistinction, Forum non conveniens.

Forum domesticum /fôrûm dâmêstâkam/. A domestic forum or tribunal. The visitatorial power is called a "forum domesticum," calculated to determine, sine strepitu, all disputes that arise within themselves.

Forum domicilii /fôrûm dô(w)mâsliyîyay/. The forum or court of the domicile; the domicile of a defendant, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum ecclesiasticum /fôrûm șkîliyizyêstakam/. An ecclesiastical court. The spiritual jurisdiction, as distinguished from the secular.

Forum ligeantiae rei /fôrûm lîjiyênhšiyîyî rîyay/. The forum of defendant's allegiance. The court or jurisdiction of the country to which he owes allegiance.

Forum non conveniens /fôrûm nôn kâvviyên(i)yêñ(d)z/. Term refers to discretionary power of court to decline jurisdiction when convenience of parties and ends of justice would be better served if action were brought and tried in another forum. Johnson v. Spider Staging Corp., 87 Wash.2d 577, 555 P.2d 997, 999, 1000. See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1404.

The doctrine is patterned upon the right of the court in the exercise of its powers to refuse the imposition upon its jurisdiction of the trial of cases even though the venue is properly laid if it appears that for the convenience of litigants and witnesses and in the interest of justice the action should be instituted in another forum where the action might have been brought. Hayes v. Chicago, R. I., & P. R. Co., D.C.Min., 79 F.Supp. 821, 824. The doctrine presupposes at least two forums in which the defendant is amenable to process and furnishes criteria for choice between such forums. Wilson v. Seas Shipping Co., D.C.Pa., 78 F.Supp. 464, 465; Neal v. Pennsylvania R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 77 F.Supp. 423, 424. The application of the doctrine rests in the sound discretion of the court and the factors to be considered in the doctrine are the private interests of the litigant and the interest of the public. Cullinan v. New York Cent. R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 83 F.Supp. 870, 871. And a court, either state or federal, will generally decline to interfere with or control by injunction or otherwise the management of internal affairs of a corporation.

The rule is an equitable one embracing the discretionary power of a court to decline to exercise jurisdiction which it has over a transitory cause of action when it believes that the action may be more appropriately and justly tried elsewhere. Leet v. Union Pac. R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, 155 P.2d 42, 44. In determining whether doctrine should be applied, court should consider relative ease of access to sources of proof, availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses, cost of obtaining attendance of willing witnesses, possibility of view of premises, and all other practical problems that make trial easy, expeditious and inexpensive. Di Lella v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 7 F.R.D. 192, 193.

Forum originis /fòrum arijonas/. The court of one's nativity. The place of a person's birth, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum regium /fòrum riýy(iy)am/. The king's court.

Forum rei /fòrum riyy/. This term may mean either (1) the forum of the defendant, that is, of his residence or domicile; or (2) the forum of the res or thing in controversy, that is, of the place where the property is situated. The ambiguity springs from the fact that rei may be the genitive of either reus or res.

Forum rei gestae /fòrum riyy jéstiy/. The forum or court of a res gesta (thing done); the place where an act is done, considered as a place of jurisdiction and remedy.

Forum rei sitae /fòrum riyy sádyiy/. The court where the thing in controversy is situated. The place where the subject-matter in controversy is situated, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

Forum seculare /fòrum sêkyalériy/. A secular, as distinguished from an ecclesiastical or spiritual, court.

Forum shopping. Such occurs when a party attempts to have his action tried in a particular court or jurisdiction where he feels he will receive the most favorable judgment or verdict.

For use. For the benefit or advantage of another. Thus, where an assignee is obliged to sue in the name of his assignor, the suit is entitled “A. for use of B. v. C.” For enjoyment or employment without destruction. A loan “for use” is one in which the bailee has the right to use and enjoy the article, but without consuming or destroying it, in which respect it differs from a loan “for consumption.”

For value. See Holder.

For value received. See Value (Value received).

Forward. To send forward; to send toward the place of destination; to transmit. To ship goods by common carrier. See Forwarder.

Forwarder. Person or business whose business it is to receive goods for further handling by way of warehousing, packing, carload shipping, delivery, etc. See Forwarding agent; Freight forwarder.

Forwarding agent. Freight forwarder who assembles less than carload shipments (small shipments) into carload shipments, thus taking advantage of lower freight rates. Company or individual whose business it is to receive and ship merchandise for others. See Forwarder.

For whom it may concern. Phrase creates presumption of intention on part of named insured to cover any persons who may have an insurable interest in the property.

Fossa /fòsea/. In the civil law, a ditch; a receptacle of water, made by hand.

In old English law, a ditch. A pit full of water, in which women committing felony were drowned. A grave or sepulcher.

Fossagium /fósêy(iy)am/. In old English law, the duty of repairing a moat or ditch round a fortified town.

Fossatorum operatio /fósatórəm óparéf(y)ow/-. In old English law, fosse-work; or the service of laboring, done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants, for the repair and maintenance of the ditches round a city or town, for which some paid a contribution, called "fossagium."

Fossatum /fóséydam/. A dyke, ditch, or trench; a place inclosed by a ditch; a moat; a canal.

Fosterage /fóstərəj/-. Care of a foster child, brother, sister, parent, etc.—one considered as holding the relationship indicated in consequence of nursing and rearing, though not related by blood. In re Norman’s Estate, 209 Minn. 19, 295 N.W. 63, 66.

Foster child. Child whose care, comfort, education and upbringing has been left to persons other than his natural parents. See Foster parent.

Foster home. A home for children without parents or who have been taken from their parents.

Fostering. An ancient custom in Ireland, in which persons put away their children to fosterers. Fostering was held to be a stronger alliance than blood, and the foster children participated in the fortunes of their foster fathers.

Fosterland. Land given, assigned, or allotted to the finding of food or victuals for any person or persons; as in monasteries for the monks, etc.

Fosterleain /fóstərleyn/-. The remuneration fixed for the rearing of a foster child; also the jointure of a wife.

Foster parent. One who has performed the duties of a parent to the child of another by rearing the child as his own child. See Foster child.

Foul bill of lading. Type of bill of lading which shows on its face that the goods were damaged or that there was a shortage at the time of shipment.

Found. A person is said to be “found” within a state for purposes of service of process when actually... present therein. But only if a person is in a place voluntarily and not by reason of plaintiff's fraud, artifice, or trick for purpose of obtaining service. Shields v. Shields, 115 Mont. 146, 139 P.2d 528, 530, 531. It does not necessarily mean physical presence; e.g., defendant who, after removal of action for breach of contract to federal court, entered general appearance, defended on the merits, and filed counterclaim, was "found" in the district. Freeman v. Bee Mach. Co., Mass., 319 U.S. 448, 63 S.Ct. 1146, 1149, 87 L.Ed. 1509. As applied to a corporation it is necessary that it be doing business in such state through an officer or agent or by statutory authority in such manner as to render it liable then to suit and to constructive or substituted service of process. A corporation is "found" in a district for venue purposes if it is subject to personal jurisdiction in that district. Stith v. Manor Baking Co., D.C.Mo., 418 F.Supp. 150, 155.

Foundation. Permanent fund established and maintained by contributions for charitable, educated, religious or other benevolent purpose. An institution or association given to rendering financial aid to colleges, schools and charities and generally supported by gifts for such purposes.

The founding or building of a college or hospital. The incorporation or endowment of a college or hospital is the foundation; and he who endows it with land or other property is the founder. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 4 L.Ed. 629; Seagrave's Appeal, 125 Pa. 362, 17 A. 412; Union Baptist Ass'n v. Huhn, 7 Tex.Civ.App. 249, 26 S.W. 755.

See also Charitable foundation; Endowment.

Founded. Based upon; arising from, growing out of, or resting upon; as in the expressions "founded in fraud," "founded on a consideration," "founded on contract," and the like.

Founded on. To serve as a base or basis for.

Founder. The person who endows an eleemosynary corporation or institution, or supplies the funds for its establishment. See Foundation.

Founders' shares. In English Company Law, shares issued to the founders of (or vendors to) a public company as a part of the consideration for the business, or concession, etc., taken over, and not forming a part of, the ordinary capital. As a rule, such shares only participate in profits after the payment of a fixed minimum dividend on paid-up capital.

Foundling. A deserted or abandoned infant; a child found without a parent or guardian, its relatives being unknown.

Foundling hospitals. Charitable institutions which exist in many European countries for taking care of infants forsaken by their parents, such being generally the offspring of illegal connections.

Four /für/.

Fr. In old French law, an oven or bakehouse. Four banal, an oven, owned by the seignior of the estate, to which the tenants were obliged to bring their bread for baking. Also the proprietary right to maintain such an oven.

Fourcher /fürshé/. Fr. To fork. This was a method of delaying an action anciently resorted to by defendants when two of them were joined in the suit. Instead of appearing together, each would appear in turn and cast an essoin for the other, thus postponing the trial.

Four corners. The face of a written instrument.

Four corners rule. Under "four corners rule", intention of parties, especially that of grantor, is to be gathered from instrument as a whole and not from isolated parts thereof. Davis v. Andrews, Tex.Civ.App., 361 S.W.2d 419, 423.

Fourierism /füriariizm/ /fôr/ A form of socialism.

Four seas. The seas surrounding England. These were divided into the Western, including the Scotch and Irish; the Northern, or North sea; the Eastern, being the German ocean; the Southern, being the British channel.

Fourteenth Amendment. The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, ratified in 1868, creates or at least recognizes for the first time a citizenship of the United States, as distinct from that of the states; forbids the making or enforcement by any state of any law abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; and secures all "persons" against any state action which results in either deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or, in denial of the equal protection of the laws. This Amendment also contains provisions concerning the apportionment of representatives in Congress.

Fourth Amendment. Amendment of the U.S. Constitution guaranteeing people the right to be secure in their homes and property against unreasonable searches and seizures and providing that no warrants shall issue except upon probable cause and then only as to specific places to be searched and persons and things to be seized. See Probable cause; Search.

Fourth estate. The journalistic profession (i.e. the press). Term has its source from a reference to the reporters' gallery of the British Parliament whose influence on public policy was said to equal that of Parliament's three traditional estates, the clergy, nobility, and commons.

Fox's Libel Act. In English law, this was the statute 52 Geo. III, c. 60, which secured to juries, upon the trial of indictments for libel, the right of pronouncing a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter in issue, and no longer bound them to find a verdict of guilt upon proof of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to it in the indictment.

Foy /fóy/ /f(ł)éy/ /fwa/.

L. Fr. Faith; allegiance; fidelity.

F.P.A. In maritime insurance: "Free from particular average". See Average.

F.P.R. Federal Procurement Regulations.
FRACTIO

Fr. A Latin abbreviation for “fragmentum,” a fragment, used in citations to the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, the several extracts from juristic writings of which it is composed being so called.

Fractio /frækʃ(ɔ)yow/. Lat. A breaking; division; fraction; a portion of a thing less than the whole.

Fraction. A breaking, or breaking up; a fragment or broken part; a portion of a thing, less than the whole.

Fractional. As applied to tracts of land, particularly townships, sections, quarter sections, and other divisions according to the government survey, and also mining claims, this term means that the exterior boundary lines are laid down to include the whole of such a division or such a claim, but that the tract in question does not measure up to the full extent or include the whole acreage, because a portion of it is cut off by an overlapping survey, a river or lake, or some other external interference. Any irregular division whether containing more or less than conventional amount of acreage.

Fractional share. That part or portion of a share of stock indicated on a right or warrant as subject to purchase by the exercise of such right.

Fractional share formula. See Marital deduction.

Fractionem diei non recipit lex. The law does not take notice of a portion of a day.

Fraction of a day. A portion of a day. The dividing a day. Generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day.

Fractura navium /fræk'_chur'ə nyv(i)yəm/. Lat. The breaking or wreck of ships; the same as naufragium (q.v.).

Fragmenta /frəˈmɛntə/. Lat. Fragments. A name sometimes applied (especially in citations) to the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, as being made up of numerous extracts or “fragments” from the writings of various jurists.

Frais /fré/. Fr. Expense; charges; costs. Frais d’un procès, costs of a suit.

Frais de justice /fré də zhus’týs/. In French and Canadian law, costs incurred incidentally to the action.

Frais jusqu’à bord /fré daská bór(d)/. Fr. In French commercial law, expenses to the board; expenses incurred on a shipment of goods, in packing, cartage, commissions, etc., up to the point where they are actually put on board the vessel.

Framed. When used to describe evidence, word is generally accepted as implying that willful perjurers, suborned by and conspiring with parties in interest to litigation, are swearing or have sworn to matters without any basis in fact. Tri-State Transit Co. of Louisiana v. Westbrook, 207 Ark. 270, 180 S.W.2d 121, 125. Incrimination of person on false evidence. See also Entrapment.

Frame-up. Conspiracy or plot, especially for evil purpose, as to incriminate person on false evidence. See Entrapment.

Franc aleu /frɔŋk əˈlju/. In French feudal law, an allod; a free inheritance; or an estate held free of any services except such as were due to the sovereign.

Franchise. A special privilege conferred by government on individual or corporation, and which does not belong to citizens of country generally of common right. Artesian Water Co. v. State Dept. of Highways and Transp., Del.Super., 330 A.2d 432, 439. In England it is defined to be a royal privilege in the hands of a subject.

A privilege granted or sold, such as to use a name or to sell products or services. The right given by a manufacturer or supplier to a retailer to use his products and name on terms and conditions mutually agreed upon.

In its simplest terms, a franchise is a license from owner of a trademark or trade name permitting another to sell a product or service under that name or mark. More broadly stated, a “franchise” has evolved into an elaborate agreement under which the franchisee undertakes to conduct a business or sell a product or service in accordance with methods and procedures prescribed by the franchisor, and the franchisor undertakes to assist the franchisee through advertising, promotion and other advisory services.

H & R Block, Inc. v. Lovelace, 208 Kan. 538, 493 P.2d 205, 211.

Corporate franchise. See that title. See also Charter.

Elective franchise. The right of suffrage; the right or privilege of voting in public elections. Such right is guaranteed by Fifteenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty-fourth Amendments to U.S. Constitution.

Exclusive franchise. See Exclusive agency.

General and special. The charter of a corporation is its “general” franchise, while a “special” franchise consists in any rights granted by the public to use property for a public use but with private profit.

Sports franchise. As granted by a professional sports association, it is a privilege to field a team in a given geographic area under the auspices of the league that issues it. It is merely an incorporeal right.

Tax treatment. A franchise is an agreement which gives the transferee the right to distribute, sell, or provide goods, services, or facilities, within a specified area. The cost of obtaining a franchise may be amortized over the life of the agreement. In general, a franchise is a capital asset and results in capital gain or loss if all significant powers, rights or continuing interests are transferred pursuant to the sale of a franchise.

Franchise appurtenant to land. Usually a franchise is not regarded as real property or land and is not included in the term “tenement;” but it is sometimes characterized or classified as real property or as property of the nature of real property when exer-
Franchise clause. Provision in casualty insurance policy to the effect that the insurer will pay those claims only over a stated amount and that the insured is responsible for all damage under the agreed amount. This clause differs from a deductible provision in that the insured bears the loss in every claim up to the deductible amount whereas, under the franchise clause, once the claim exceeds the agreed amount, the insurer pays the entire claim.

Franchised dealer. A retailer who sells the product of a manufacturer or supplier under an agreement or franchise which generally protects the territory for the retailer and provides advertising and promotion support to him.

Franchise tax. A tax on the franchise of a corporation, that is, on the right and privilege of carrying on business in the character of a corporation, for the purposes for which it was created, and in the conditions which surround it. City of Poplar Bluff v. Poplar Bluff Loan and Bldg. Ass'n, Mo.App., 369 S.W.2d 764, 766.

Though the value of the franchise, for purposes of taxation, may be measured by the amount of business done, or the amount of earnings or dividends, or by the total value of the capital or stock of the corporation in excess of its tangible assets, a franchise tax is not a tax on either property, capital, stock, earnings, or dividends. Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U.S. 594, 10 S.Ct. 593, 33 L.Ed. 1025; Greene v. Louisville & I. R. Co., 244 U.S. 499, 37 S.Ct. 673, 678, 61 L.Ed. 1280.

Francia [frʌns(h)iʃa]. France.

Francigena [frʌnsɪdʒɪnə]. A man born in France. A designation formerly given to aliens in England. See Frenchman.

Franc tenancier [frʌŋk tənɔ̃səri]. In French law, a freeholder.

Francus /frʌŋkəs/. L. Lat. Free; a freeman; a Frank.

Francus bancus /frʌŋkəs bæŋkəs/. Free-bench (q.v.).

Francus homo /frʌŋkəs hɒwəʊməʊ/. In old European law, a free man.

Francus plegious /frʌŋkəs plɛʤɪʃəs/. In old English law, a frank pledge, or free pledge. See Frank-pledge.

Francus tenens /frʌŋkəs tæn(d)əns/. A freeholder. See Frank-tenement.

Frank, v. To send matter through the public mails free of postage, by a personal or official privilege. See Franking privilege.

Frank, adj. In old English law, free. Occurring in several compounds.

Frankalmoign /frʌŋkəlmoɪŋ/. In English law, free alms. A spiritual tenure whereby religious corporations, aggregate or sole, held lands of the donor to them and their successors forever. They were discharged of all other except religious services, and the trinoda necessitas. It differs from tenure by divine service, in that the latter required the performance of certain divine services, whereas the former, as its name imports, is free. Such type tenures were abolished by the Administration of Estates Act of 1925.

Frank bank. In old English law, free bench. See Free-bench.

Frank-chase. A liberty of free chase enjoyed by any one, whereby all other persons having ground within that compass are forbidden to cut down wood, etc., even in their own demesnes, to the prejudice of the owner of the liberty. See Chase.

Frank-fee. Freehold lands exempted from all services, but not from homage; lands held otherwise than in ancient demesne. That which a man holds to himself and his heirs, and not by such service as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor.

Frank ferm. In English law, a species of estate held in socage, said by Britton to be "lands and tenements whereof the nature of the fee is changed by feoffment out of chivalry for certain yearly services, and in respect whereof neither homage, ward, marriage, nor relief can be demanded." 2 Bl.Comm. 80.

Frank-fold. In old English law, free-fold; a privilege for the lord to have all the sheep of his tenants and the inhabitants within his seigniory, in his fold, in his demesnes, to manure his land.

Franking privilege. The privilege of sending certain matter through the public mails without payment of postage, in pursuance of a personal or official privilege. The privilege granted to members of Congress to send out a certain amount of mail under signature without charge. See 39 U.S.C.A. § 321 et seq.

Frank-law. An obsolete expression signifying the rights and privileges of a citizen, or the liberties and civic rights of a freeman.

Frankleyn /frʌŋkli:n/. (Spelled, also, "Francling" and "Franklin"). A freeman; a freeholder; a gentleman.

Frank-marriage. In old English law, a species of entailed estates. When tenements are given by one to another, together with a wife, who is a daughter or cousin of the donor, to hold in frank-marriage, the donees shall have the tenements to them and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, i.e., in special tail. The word "frank-marriage," ex vi termini, both creates and limits an inheritance, not only supplying words of descent, but also terms of procreation. The donees are liable to no service except fealty, and a reserved rent would be void, until the fourth degree of consanguinity be passed between the issues of the donor and donee, when they were capable by the law of the church of intermarrying. 2 Bl.Comm. 115.

Frank-pledge. In old English law, a pledge or surety for freemen; that is, the pledge, or corporate responsibility, of all the inhabitants of a tithing for the general good behavior of each free-born citizen above the age of fourteen, and for his being forthcoming to answer any infraction of the law. A pledge of surety to the sovereign for the collective good conduct of a group.
Frank-tenant. A freeholder.

Frank-tenement. In English law, a free tenement, freeholding, or freehold. 2 Bl.Comm. 61, 62, 104. Used to denote both the tenure and the estate.

Frater /fréydar/. In the civil law, a brother. Frater consanguineus, a brother having the same father, but born of a different mother. Frater uterinus, a brother born of the same mother, but by a different father. Frater nutricius, a bastard brother.

Frateria /frátrir(i)ya/. In old records, a fraternity, brotherhood, or society of religious persons, who were mutually bound to pray for the good health and life, etc., of their living brethren, and the souls of those that were dead.

Fraternal. Brotherly; relating or belonging to a fraternity or an association of persons formed for mutual aid and benefit, but not for profit. In re Mason Tire & Rubber Co., 56 App.D.C. 170, 11 F.2d 556, 557.

Fraternal benefit association or society. One whose members have adopted the same, or a very similar, calling, avocation, or profession, or who are working in unison to accomplish some worthy object, and who for that reason have banded themselves together as an association or society to aid and assist one another, and to promote the common cause. Alpha Rho Alumni Ass'n v. City of New Brunswick, 126 N.J.L. 233, 18 A.2d 68, 70. An association having a representative form of government and a lodge system with a ritualistic form of work for the meeting of its chapters, or other subordinate bodies. Fain v. Feldman, 191 Ga. 519, 13 S.E.2d 179, 181. A society or voluntary association organized and carried on for the mutual aid and benefit of its members, not for profit; which ordinarily has a lodge system, a ritualistic form of work, and a representative government, makes provision for the payment of death benefits, and (sometimes) for benefits in case of accident, sickness, or old age, the funds therefor being derived from dues paid or assessments levied on the members.

Fraternal insurance. The form of life (or accident) insurance furnished by a fraternal beneficial association, consisting in the payment to a member, or his heirs in case of death, of a stipulated sum of money, out of funds raised for that purpose by the payment of dues or assessments by all the members of the association.

Fraternal lodge. See Fraternal benefit association or society.

Fraterna /frátrir(n)iya/. A fraternity or brotherhood.

In American colleges, a student organization, either a nationally chartered society comprising many affiliated chapters or a single chapter in one institution, formed chiefly to promote friendship and welfare among the members, and usually having secret rites and a name consisting of Greek letters. Woman's Club of Little Falls v. Township of Little Falls, 20 N.J.Misc. 278, 26 A.2d 739, 741; Alpha Rho Alumni Ass'n v. City of New Brunswick, 126 N.J.L. 233, 18 A.2d 68, 71.

Fratres conjurati /frátrirýz kónjiréday/. Sworn brothers or companions for the defense of their sovereign, or for other purposes.

Fratres pyes /frátrirýz páyz/. In old English law, certain friars who wore white and black garments.

Fratriage /frátriraj/. A younger brother's inheritance.

Fraticide /frátrirásid/. One who has killed a brother or sister; also the killing of a brother or sister.

Fraud. An intentional perversion of truth for the purpose of inducing another in reliance upon it to part with some valuable thing belonging to him or to surrender a legal right. A false representation of a matter of fact, whether by words or by conduct, by false or misleading allegations, or by concealment of that which should have been disclosed, which deceives and is intended to deceive another so that he shall act upon it to his legal injury. Any kind of artifice employed by one person to deceive another. Goldstein v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 160 Misc. 364, 289 N.Y.S. 1064, 1067. A generic term, embracing all multifarious means which human ingenuity can devise, and which are resorted to by one individual to get advantage over another by false suggestions or by suppression of truth, and includes all surprise, trick, cunning, dissembling, and any unfair way by which another is cheated. Johnson v. McDonald, 170 Okl. 117, 39 P.2d 150. "Bad faith" and "fraud" are synonymous, and also synonyms of dishonesty, infidelity, faithlessness, perfidy, unfairness, etc.

Elements of a cause of action for "fraud" include false representation of a present or past fact made by defendant, action in reliance thereupon by plaintiff, and damage resulting to plaintiff from such misrepresentation. Citizens Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Gilley, Tex.Civ.App., 521 S.W.2d 354, 356.

It consists of some deceitful practice or willful device, resorted to with intent to deprive another of his right, or in some manner to do him an injury. As distinguished from negligence, it is always positive, intentional. It comprises all acts, omissions, and concealments involving a breach of a legal or equitable duty and resulting in damage to another. And includes anything calculated to deceive, whether it be a single act or combination of circumstances, whether the suppression of truth or the suggestions of what is false, whether it be by direct falsehood or by innuendo, by speech or by silence, by word of mouth, or by look or gesture. Fraud, as applied to contracts, is the cause of an error bearing on a material part of the contract, created or continued by artifice, with design to obtain some unjust advantage to the one party, or to cause an inconvenience or loss to the other.

See also Actionable fraud; Badges of fraud; Cheat; Civil fraud; Collusion; Constructive fraud; Deceit; False pretenses; False representation; Intrinsic fraud; Mail fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation; Promissory fraud; Reliance.

Actionable fraud. See Actionable.

Actual or constructive fraud. Fraud is either actual or constructive. Actual fraud consists in deceit, artifice, trick, design, some direct and active operation of the mind; it includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice used to circumvent or cheat another. It is something said, done, or omitted by a person with the design of perpetrating what he knows to be a cheat or deception. Constructive fraud consists in any act of commission or omission contrary to legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed, which is contrary to good conscience and operates to the injury of another. Or, as otherwise defined, it is an act, statement or omission which operates as a virtual evil design. Or, constructive frauds are such acts or artifice used to circumvent or cheat another. It is design of perpetrating what he knows to be a cheat or deception. Constructive fraud consists in any act of successful employment of any cunning, deception, or fraud on an individual, or which, if generally permitted, would be prejudicial to the public welfare, and yet may have been unconnected with any selfish or evil design. Or, constructive frauds are such acts or contracts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury upon other persons, are yet, by their tendency to deceive or mislead other persons, or to violate private or public confidence, or to impair or injure the public interests, deemed equally reprehensible with actual fraud. Constructive fraud consists in any breach of duty which, without an actually fraudulent intent, gains an advantage to the person in fault, or any one claiming under him, by misleading another to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of any one claiming under him; or, in any such act or omission as the law specially declares to be fraudulent, without respect to actual fraud.

Extrinsic fraud. Fraud which is collateral to the issues tried in the case where the judgment is rendered. Type of deceit that has as a valid basis for invalidating a judgment as for example a divorce granted ex parte because the plaintiff-spouse falsely tells the court he or she is ignorant of the whereabouts of the defendant-spouse. Patrick v. Patrick, 245 N.C. 195, 95 S.E.2d 585.

Fraud in fact or in law. Fraud is also classified as fraud in fact and fraud in law. The former is actual, positive, intentional fraud. Fraud disclosed by matters of fact, as distinguished from constructive fraud or fraud in law. Fraud in law is fraud in contemplation of law; fraud implied or inferred by law; fraud made out by construction of law, as distinguished from fraud found by a jury from matter of fact; constructive fraud (q.v.).

Fraud in the inducement. Fraud connected with underlying transaction and not with the nature of the contract or document signed.

Intrinsic fraud. That which pertains to issue involved in original action or where acts constituting fraud were, or could have been, litigated therein. Fahrenbruch v. People ex rel. Taber, 169 Colo. 70, 453 P.2d 601. Perjury is an example of intrinsic fraud.

Larceny. See Larceny (Larceny by fraud or deception).

Legal or positive fraud. Fraud is also said to be legal or positive. The former is fraud made out by legal construction or inference, or the same thing as constructive fraud. Positive fraud is the same thing as actual fraud. Nocatee Fruit Co. v. Fosgate, C.C.A. Fla., 12 F.2d 250, 252. See also Legal fraud.

Statute of frauds. See Frauds, Statute of.

Tax fraud. Tax fraud falls into two categories: civil and criminal. Under civil fraud, the IRS may impose as a penalty an amount equal to 50% of the underpayment. Fines and/or imprisonment are prescribed for conviction of various types of criminal tax fraud. Both civil and criminal fraud require a specific intent on the part of the taxpayer to evade the tax; mere negligence will not be enough. Criminal fraud requires the additional element of willfulness (i.e., done deliberately and with evil purpose). In actual practice, it becomes difficult to distinguish between the degree of intent necessary to support criminal, as opposed to civil, fraud. In both situations, however, the IRS has the burden of proving fraud.

Fraudare /frô'dêrid/. Lat. In the civil law, to deceive, cheat, or impose upon; to defraud.

Fraud order. A name given to orders issued by the postmaster general, for preventing the use of the mails as an agency for conducting schemes for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, etc. The fraud order is issued to the postmaster of the office through which the person affected by it receives his mail. It forbids the postmaster to pay any postal money order to the specified person, and instructs the postmaster to return all letters to the senders if practicable, or if not, to the dead letter office, stamped in either case with the word "fraudulent." The method of testing the validity of the fraud order is to apply to the federal court for an injunction to restrain the postmaster from executing it. The decision of the postmaster-general is not the exercise of a judicial function; if he exceeds his jurisdiction, the party injured may have relief in equity. Degge v. Hitchcock, 229 U.S. 162, 33 S.Ct. 639, 57 L.Ed. 1135.

Frauds, Statute of. This is the common designation of a very celebrated English statute (29 Car. II, c. 3), passed in 1677, which has been adopted, in a more or less modified form, in nearly all of the United States. Its chief characteristic is the provision that no suit or action shall be maintained on certain classes of contracts or engagements unless there shall be a note or memorandum thereof in writing signed by the party to be charged or by his authorized agent. Its object was to close the door to the numerous frauds and perjuries. It is more fully named as the "statute of frauds and perjuries."

Uniform Commercial Code. U.C.C. § 2–201 provides that a contract for the sale of goods for the price of $500 or more is not enforceable by way of action or defense unless there is some writing sufficient to indicate that a contract for sale has been made between the parties and signed by the party against whom enforcement is sought or by his authorized agent or broker.
Fraudulent. Based on fraud; proceeding from or characterized by fraud; tainted by fraud; done, made, or effected with a purpose or design to carry out a fraud. See also False and fraudulent.

A statement, or claim, or document, is “fraudulent” if it was falsely made, or caused to be made, with the intent to deceive.

To act with “intent to defraud” means to act willfully, and with the specific intent to deceive or cheat; ordinarily for the purpose of either causing some financial loss to another, or bringing about some financial gain to oneself.

Fraudulent alienation. In a general sense, the transfer of property with an intent to defraud creditors, lienors, or others. In a particular sense, the act of an administrator who wastes the assets of the estate by giving them away or selling at a gross undervalue.

Fraudulent allee /frójalˈɛn/iyəni/. One who knowingly receives from an administrator assets of the estate under circumstances which make it a fraudulent alienation on the part of the administrator.

Fraudulent banking. Receipt of deposit by banker who knows that bank is insolvent at the time.

Fraudulent claims. See False claim.

Fraudulent concealment. The hiding or suppression of a material fact or circumstance which the party is legally or morally bound to disclose. The employment of artifice planned to prevent inquiry or escape investigation and to mislead or hinder the acquisition of information disclosing a right of action; acts relied on must be of an affirmative character and fraudulent. Fundunburks v. Michigan Mut. Liability Co., 63 Mich.App. 403, 234 N.W.2d 543, 547. The test of whether failure to disclose material facts constitutes fraud is the existence of a duty, legal or equitable, arising from the relation of the parties; failure to disclose a material fact with intent to mislead or defraud under such circumstances being equivalent to an actual “fraudulent concealment.” Fraudulent concealment justifying a rescission of a contract is the intentional concealment of some fact known to the party charged, which is material for the party injured to know to prevent being defrauded; the concealment of a fact which one is bound to disclose being the equivalent of an indirect representation that such fact does not exist. See Material fact.

Fraudulent conversion. Receiving into possession money or property of another and fraudulently withholding, converting, or applying the same to or for one's own use and benefit, or to use and benefit of any person other than the one to whom the money or property belongs. See Conversion.

Fraudulent conveyance. A conveyance or transfer of property, the object of which is to defraud a creditor, or hinder or delay him, or to put such property beyond his reach. Dean v. Davis, 242 U.S. 438, 37 S.Ct. 130, 61 L.Ed. 419. Conveyance made with intent to avoid some duty or debt due by or incurred on person making transfer. As constituting an act of bankruptcy, a gift or transfer of the bankrupt's property for little or no consideration at a time when the bankrupt is insolvent, or one which renders bankrupt's capital unreasonably small, or one made by bankrupt who believes that he will not be able to meet maturing obligations, or one made with actual intent to hinder and delay his creditors. Many states have adopted the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyances Act.

Fraudulent intent. Such intent exists where one, either with a view of benefiting himself or misleading another into a course of action, makes a representation which he knows to be false or which he does not believe to be true. In re Orenduff, D.C.Okla., 226 F.Supp. 312, 314.

Fraudulent or dishonest act. One which involves bad faith, a breach of honesty, a want of integrity, or moral turpitude. Hartford Acc. & Indemn. Co. v. Singer, 185 Va. 620, 39 S.E.2d 505, 507, 508.

Fraudulent preferences. See Preference.

Fraudulent representation. A false statement as to material fact, made with intent that another rely thereon, which is believed by other party and on which he relies and by which he is induced to act and does act to his injury, and statement is fraudulent if speaker knows statement to be false or if it is made with utter disregard of its truth or falsity. Osborne v. Simmons, Mo.App., 23 S.W.2d 1102, 1104. As basis for civil action, establishment of representation, falsity, scienter, deception, and injury, are generally required. See also Deceit; Fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Fraudulent sale. See Sale.

Fraudulent transfers. See Fraudulent conveyance.

Fraunco, fraunche, fraunke /fróʃk/. See Frank.

Fraunche /fróʃk/ /fránʃe/. L. Fr. A franchise.

Fraus /fróʃ/. Lat. Fraud. More commonly called, in the civil law, “dolus,” and “dolus malus” (q.v.). A distinction, however, was sometimes made between “fraus” and “dolus”; the former being held to be of the most extensive import.

Fraus dans locum contractui /fróʃ dán lɔkəmtʃoktʃuwəy/. A misrepresentation or concealment of some fact that is material to the contract, and had the truth regarding which been known the contract would not have been made as made, is called a “fraud dans locum contractui”; i.e., a fraud occasioning the contract, or giving place or occasion for the contract.

Fraus est celare fraudem /fróʃ íst salɛriʃ fróðam/. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud.

Fraus est odiosa et non presumenda /fróʃ íst ɔdɔʃəs ët nɔn prɛzɛmjɛntə/. Fraud is odious, and not to be presumed.

Fraus et dolus nemini patrocinari debent /fróʃ ɛt dɔlus nɛmnɛm pɛtrɔzɛnɛri ɭebɛnt/. Fraud and deceit should defend or excuse no man.

Fraus et jus nunquam cohabitant /fróʃ ɛt jəs nɔŋkwam kɔwɛʃɛbdɔnt/. Fraud and justice never dwell together.

Fraus latet in generalibus /fróʃ lɛdət in ʃɛnɛɾɛlɛbəs/. Fraud lies hid in general expressions.
Fraus legis /frós līyjas/. Lat. In the civil law, fraud of law; fraud upon law. See In fraudem legis.

Fraus meritum fraudem /frós marīydar frōd'm/. Fraud merits fraud.

Fray /fréy/. See Affray.

F.R.B. Federal Reserve Board.

Frectum /frēktum/. In old English law, freight. Quoad frectum navium suarum, as to the freight of his vessels.

Freddie Mac. See Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation.

Frednite. In old English law, a liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding. To be free from fines.

Fredstole /frēstōwl/. Sanctuaries; seats of peace.

Fredum /frēydam/. A fine paid for obtaining pardon when the peace had been broken. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge.

Fredwil, or fredwite /frēwīt/. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding.

Free. Not subject to legal constraint of another.

Unconstrained; having power to follow the dictates of his own will. Not subject to the dominion of another. Not compelled to involuntary servitude. Used in this sense as opposed to "slave."

Not bound to service for a fixed term of years; in distinction to being bound as an apprentice. Enjoying full civic rights. Available to all citizens alike without charge; as a free school.

Not despotic; assuring liberty; defending individual rights against encroachment by any person or class; instituted by a free people; said of governments, institutions, etc.

Certain, and also consistent with an honorable degree in life; as free services, in the feudal law.

Confined to the person possessing, instead of being shared with others; as a free fishery.

Not engaged in a war as belligerent or ally; neutral, as in the maxim: "Free ships make free goods."

See also Freedom.

Free alms. The name of a species of tenure. See Frank almoigne.

Free alongside (FAS). In price quotations, means that the price includes all costs of transportation and delivery of the goods alongside of the ship. See U.C.C. § 2–319(2–4).

Free and clear. The title to property is said to be "free and clear" when it is not incumbered by any liens; but it is said that an agreement to convey land "free and clear" is satisfied by a conveyance passing a good (i.e. marketable) title.

Free and equal. As used in a constitutional provision that election shall be free and equal, the word "free" means that every one entitled to vote should have a reasonable opportunity to do so, a reasonable manner of doing so, etc., and the word "equal" means that every vote cast should have its decisive effect in the selection or choice to be made at the election. The term means that the voter shall not be physically restrained in the exercise of his right of franchise, by either civil or military authority, and that every voter shall have the same right as every other voter. Asher v. Arnett, 280 Ky. 347, 132 S.W.2d 772, 775. It is the essence of free elections that the right of suffrage be untrammeled and unfettered, and that the ballot represent and express the electors' own intelligent judgment and conscience, and there can be no "free election" unless there is freedom of opinion. An election to be free must be without coercion of any description or any deterrent from the elector's exercise of his free will by means of any intimidation or influence whatever, although there is no violence or physical coercion.

Free-bench. In old English law, a widow's dower out of copyholds to which she was entitled by the custom of some manors. It was regarded as an excrescence growing out of the husband's interest, and was a continuance of his estate.

Free-bord. In old records, an allowance of land over and above a certain limit or boundary, as so much beyond or without a fence. The right of claiming that quantity.

Free chapel. In English ecclesiastical law, a place of worship, so called because not liable to the visitation of the ordinary. It is always of royal foundation, or founded at least by private persons to whom the crown has granted the privilege.

Free course. In admiralty law, a vessel having the wind from a favorable quarter is said to sail on a "free course," or said to be "going free" when she has a fair (following) wind and her yards braced in.

Freedman. In Roman law, one who was set free from a state of bondage; an emancipated slave. The word was used in the same sense in the United States, respecting negroes who were formerly slaves.

Freedom. The state of being free; liberty; self-determination; absence of restraint; the opposite of slavery.

The power of acting, in the character of a moral personality, according to the dictates of the will, without other check, hindrance, or prohibition than such as may be imposed by just and necessary laws and the duties of social life. See Liberty.

The prevalence, in the government and constitution of a country, of such a system of laws and institutions as secure civil liberty to the individual citizen.

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

Freedom of expression. Right guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution; includes freedom of religion, speech, and press. See also Liberty.

Freedom of Information Act. The Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.A. § 552) provides for making information held by Federal agencies available to the public unless it comes within one of the specific categories of matters exempt from public disclosure. Virtually all agencies of the executive branch of the Federal Government have issued regulations to implement the Freedom of Information Act. These regulations inform the public where certain types of information may be readily obtained, how other information may be obtained on request, and what internal agency appeals are available if a member of the public is refused requested information. This Act is designed to prevent abuse of discretionary power of federal agencies by requiring them to make public certain information about their workings and work product.

Freedom of press. Right guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution. Such right includes freedom from prior restraint of publication. See Censor; Censorship; Gag order; Liberty; Prior restraint.

Freedom of religion. Freedom to individually believe and to practice or exercise one's belief. In re Elwell, 55 Misc.2d 252, 284 N.Y.S.2d 924, 930. This First Amendment protection embraces the concept of freedom to believe and freedom to act, the first of which is absolute, but the second of which remains subject to regulation for protection of society. Oney v. Oklahoma City, C.C.A.Okl., 130 P.2d 861, 865. Such freedom means not only that civil authorities may not intervene in affairs of church; it also prevents church from exercising its authority through state. Eastern Conference of Original Free Will Baptists of N. C. v. Piner, 267 N.C. 74, 147 S.E.2d 581, 583. See also Establishment clause; Free exercise clause.

Freedom of speech. Right guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution. See also Fighting words; Liberty; Speech or debate clause.

Freedom of the city. In English law, this phrase signifies immunity from county jurisdiction, and the privilege of corporate taxation and self-government held under a charter from the crown. This freedom is enjoyed of right, subject to the provision of the charter, and is often conferred as an honor on princes and other distinguished individuals. The freedom of a city carries the parliamentary franchise. The rights and privileges possessed by the burgesses or freemen of a municipal corporation under the old English law; now of little importance, and conferred chiefly as a mark of honor.

The phrase has no place in American law, and as frequently used in addresses of welcome made to organizations visiting an American city, particularly by mayors, has no meaning whatever except as an expression of good will.

Free election. Exists where each voter is allowed to cast his ballot as his own conscience dictates. See Free and equal, supra.

Free entry, egress, and regress. An expression used to denote that a person has the right to go on land again and again as often as may be reasonably necessary. Thus, in the case of a tenant entitled to emblements.

Free exercise clause. First Amendment to U.S. Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." See also Establishment clause; Freedom of religion; Liberty.

Free fishery. See Fishery.

Freehold. An estate for life or in fee. Intermountain Realty Co. v. Allen, 60 Idaho 228, 90 P.2d 704, 706. A "freehold estate" is a right of title to land. Cohn v. Litwin, 311 Ill.App. 55, 35 N.E.2d 410, 413. An estate in land or other real property, of uncertain duration; that is, either of inheritance or which may possibly last for the life of the tenant at the least (as distinguished from a leasehold); and held by a free tenure (as distinguished from copyhold or villeinage).

An estate to be a freehold must possess these two qualities: (1) Immobility, that is, the property must be either land or some interest issuing out of or annexed to land; and (2) indeterminate duration, for, if the utmost period of time to which an estate can endure be fixed and determined, it cannot be a freehold.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of land or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right to such tenements before entry. The term has also been applied to those offices which a man holds in fee or for life.

Determinable freeholds are estates for life, which may determine upon future contingencies before the life for which they are created expires, as if an estate were granted to a woman during her widowhood, or to a man until he be promoted to a benefice. In these and similar cases, whenever the contingency happens,—when the widow marries, or when the grantee obtains the benefice,—the respective estates are absolutely determined and gone. Yet, while they subsist, they are reckoned estates for life; because they may by possibility last for life, if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen. 2 B.Bl.Comm. 121.

Freehold in law is a freehold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on.

Freeholder. One having title to realty; either of inheritance or for life; either legal or equitable title. A person who possesses a freeholder estate; i.e. the owner of a freehold.

Freehold land societies. Societies in England designed for the purpose of enabling mechanics, artisans, and other workingmen to purchase at the least possible price a piece of freehold land of a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the elective franchise for the county in which the land is situated.

Free ice. All ice in navigable streams not included within that authorized to be appropriated is sometimes called "free" ice, and does not belong to the adjacent riparian owners, but to the person who first appropriates it. Hudson River Ice Co. v. Brady, 158 App.Div. 142, 142 N.Y.S. 819, 821.
Free law. A term formerly used in England to designate the freedom of civil rights enjoyed by freemen. It was liable to forfeiture on conviction of treason or an infamous crime.

Freeman. A person in the possession and enjoyment of all the civil and political rights accorded to the people under a free government.

In the Roman law, it denoted one who was either born free or emancipated, and was the opposite of "slave." In feudal law, it designated an alodial proprietor, as distinguished from a vassal or feudal tenant. (And so in Pennsylvania colonial law.) In old English law, the word described a freeholder or tenant by free services; one who was not a villein. The term later referred to a member of a city or borough having the right of suffrage, or a member of any municipal corporation invested with full civic rights.

Freeman's roll. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the municipal corporation act. Distinguished from the Burgess Roll. The term was used, in early colonial history, in some of the American colonies.

Free men. Before the Norman Conquest, a free man might be a man of small estate dependent on a lord. Every man, not himself a lord, was bound to have a lord or be treated as unworthy of a free man's right. Among free men there was a difference in their estimation for Wergild. See Homo liber.

Free on board (FOB). In sales price quotation, means generally that the seller assumes all responsibilities and costs up to the point of delivery, including insurance, transportation, etc. See U.C.C. § 2–319.

The term "F.O.B." is an abbreviation for "free on board" and means that seller will deliver subject matter contracted for, on certain conveyance, without expense to buyer. Tyson v. Seaport Grain, Inc., Tex. Civ.App., 388 S.W.2d 731, 735.

Free port. An area or section of a port set aside for handling of foreign goods without entering customs.

Free services. In feudal and old English law, such feudal services as were not unbecoming the character of a soldier or a freeman to perform; as to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like.

Free shareholders. The free shareholders of a building and loan association are subscribers to its capital stock who are not borrowers from the association.

Free ships. In international law, ships of a neutral nation. The phrase "free ships shall make free goods" is often inserted in treaties, meaning that goods, even though belonging to an enemy, shall not be seized or confiscated, if found in neutral ships.

Free socage. See Sogacce.

Free tenure. Tenure by free services; freehold tenure.

Free time. Period that railroad car or vessel may remain unloaded before demurrage charges begin.

Free trade zone. See Foreign trade zone.

Free warren. See Warren.

Freeze-out. Action taken by persons in control of corporation resulting in termination of a shareholder's interest, and term implies a purpose to enforce a liquidation or sale of other stockholder's shares, not incident to some other wholesome business goal. Miller v. Steinbach, D.C.N.Y., 268 F.Supp. 255, 270. The use of corporate control vested in the statutory majority of shareholders or the board of directors to eliminate minority shareholders from the enterprise or to reduce to relevant insignificance their voting power or claims on corporate assets. It implies a purpose to force upon the minority shareholder a change which is not incident to any other business goal of the corporation. Gabhart v. Gabhart, Ind., 370 N.E.2d 345, 353. See also Squeeze-out.

Freight. The price or compensation paid for the transportation of goods by a carrier. Name also applied to goods transported by such carriers. See also Freight rate.

Dead freight. Money payable by a person who has chartered a ship and only partly loaded her, in respect of the loss of freight caused to the ship-owner by the deficiency of cargo.

Freight booking. Making of specific arrangements for the transportation of goods in advance. See Forwarding agent; Freight forwarder.

Freighter. One who charters a ship to transport cargo; also, the vessel so chartered. The party by whom a vessel is engaged or chartered; otherwise called the "charterer." In French law, the owner of a vessel is called the "freighter" (freteur); the merchant who hires it is called the "affreighter" (affreiteur).

Freight forwarder. One who in the ordinary course of business assembles and consolidates small shipments into a single lot and assumes responsibility for transportation of such property from point of receipt to point of destination. Mercury Motor Express, Inc. v. Brinke, C.A.Fla., 475 F.2d 1086, 1090. Freight forwarders collect and consolidate less than carload or less than truckload shipments and secure common carrier transportation for the long haul movement of property owned by individual shippers by carload or truckload. National Motor Freight Traffic Ass'n v. U. S., D.C.D.C., 253 F.Supp. 661, 663.

Freight mile. The equivalent of one ton of goods (i.e. freight) carried one mile.

Freight rate. The transportation charge for goods carried based on number of pieces carried, or the weight, or the mileage, or the value of the goods, or a combination thereof.

Frenchman. In early times, in English law, this term was applied to every stranger or "outlandish" man.

French pool. A system of gambling, especially on horse races, now generally known as "pari mutuel" (q.v.).

Frendlesman /frɛndəlɪsman/. Sax. An outlaw. So called because of his outlawry he was denied all help of friends after certain days.
Frendwite /frenďwáyt/. In old English law, a mulct or fine exacted from him who harbored an outlawed friend.

Freneticus /frénetık/ . In old English law, a madman, or person in a frenzy.

Froborg /fríybörg/. A free-surety, or free-pledge. See Frank-pledge.

Freming /friyîng/. In old English law, a madman, plus ling, progeny. A freeman born. See Friling.

Frequent /frékwønt/. v. To visit often; to resort to often or habitually.

Frequentier /frékwøntər/. Any person not an employee who may go in or be in place of employment or public building under circumstances which render him other than trespasser.

Frequentia actus multum operatur /frakwénsi(sh)i(a) aktas máltam òpardýard/. The frequency of an act effects much. A continual usage is of great effect to establish a right.

Fresca /fréska/. In old records, fresh water, or rain and land flood.

Fresh. Immediate; recent; following without any material interval.

Fresh complaint rule. The fresh complaint rule provides that in certain sexual assault cases proof that the alleged victim complained of the criminal act within a reasonable time after it occurred to a person she would ordinarily turn to for help or advice is admissible to bolster the credibility of the victim. State v. Tirone, 64 N.J. 222, 314 A.2d 601.

Fresh disseisin /frésh dasyiζən/. By the ancient common law, where a man had been disseised, he was allowed to right himself by force, by ejecting the disseisor from the premises, without resort to law, provided this was done forthwith, while the disseisin was fresh (flagrante disseisin).

Freshet /fréshet/. A flood, or overflowing of a river, by means of rains or melted snow; an inundation.

Fresh fine. In old English law, a fine that had been levied within a year past.

Fresh pursuit. Refers to common-law right of police officer to cross jurisdictional lines in order to arrest a felon. Carson v. Pape, 15 Wis.2d 300, 112 N.W.2d 693, 697. Several states have adopted the Uniform Extra-Territorial Arrest on Fresh Pursuit Act. Basically, the law permits a police officer, of a State which has enacted the Act, to enter a State, which has enacted a similar Act, if he is in fresh pursuit and he can continue in fresh pursuit, of a person in order to arrest him on the ground that he had committed a felony in the State of the pursuing officer. The officer has the same powers of arrest and to hold in custody as the law enforcement officials of the State that he has entered.

One from whom property has been taken may use reasonable force to retake it if such force is used immediately after the taking. Sometimes referred to as hot pursuit.

Fresh start adjustment. For persons dying after 1976, normally the decedent's income tax basis in property will carry over to the estate of heirs. The "fresh start" adjustment, however, permits an addition to basis for the appreciation attributable to the period from the date the property was acquired by the decedent to December 31, 1976. The "fresh start" adjustment is only allowed for purposes of determining income tax gain on the later disposition of the property by the estate or heirs. I.R.S. § 1023.

Fresh suit. In old English law, immediate and unremitting pursuit of an escaping thief. "Such a present and earnest following of a robber as never ceases from the time of the robbery until apprehension."

Fret. Fr. In French marine law, freight.

Fréter /fretý/. Fr. In French marine law, to freight a ship; to let it.

Fréteur /fretýur/. Fr. In French marine law, freighter. The owner of a ship, who lets it to the merchant.

Frettum, frectum /fré(k)təm/. In Old English law, the freight of a ship; freight money.

Frettum /friydam/. Lat. A strait.

Friars /fráyarzh/. An order of religious persons, of whom there were four principal branches, viz.: (1) Minors, Grey Friars, or Franciscans; (2) Augustines; (3) Dominicans, or Black Friars; (4) White Friars, or Carmelites, from whom the rest descend.

Fribusculum /frábaskyəlam/. In the civil law, a temporary separation between husband and wife, caused by a quarrel or estrangement, but not amounting to a divorce, because not accompanied with an intention to dissolve the marriage.

Fridhburgus /frióðgəs/. In Old English law, a kind of frank-pledge, by which the lords or principal men were made responsible for their dependents or servants.

Friendless man. In Old English law, an outlaw; so called because he was denied all help of friends.

Friendly fire. Fire burning in place where it was intended to burn, although damages may result. Progress Laundry & Cleaning Co. v. Reciprocal Exchange, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 226, 227.
Friendly societies. In English law, associations supported by subscription, for the relief and maintenance of the members, or their wives, children, relatives, and nominees, in sickness, infancy, advanced age, widowhood, etc. The statutes regulating these societies were consolidated and amended by St. 38 & 39 Vict., c. 60.

Friendly suit. A suit brought by a creditor against an executor or administrator, being really a suit by the executor or administrator, in the name of a creditor, against himself, in order to compel the creditors to take an equal distribution of the assets. Also any suit instituted by agreement between the parties to obtain the opinion of the court upon some doubtful question in which they are interested. See also Amicable action.

Friend of the court. See Amicus curiae.

Frilingi /fralinjai/. Persons of free descent, or freemen born; the middle class of persons among the Saxons. See Freeling.

Fringe benefits. Side benefits which accompany or are in addition to a person's employment such as paid insurance, recreational facilities, profit-sharing plans, paid holidays and vacations, etc. Such benefits are in addition to regular salary or wages and are a matter of bargaining in union contracts. See also Cafeteria plan; Perquisites.

Frisk. A pat-down search of a suspect by police, designed to discover weapons, not to recover contraband. The scope of a frisk has been limited by the courts to be less than a full-scale search. In determining whether a police officer had a basis for initiating a frisk, there are two matters to be considered. One concerns whether the officer had a sufficient degree of suspicion that the party frisked was armed and dangerous, and the other whether the officer was rightfully in the presence of the party frisked so as to be endangered if that person was armed. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889. The running of hands rapidly over another's person, as distinguished from "search," which is to strip and examine contents more particularly. Kalvin Business Men's Ass'n v. McLaughlin, 126 Misc. 698, 214 N.Y.S. 99, 102. See also Stop.

Frith. Sax. Peace, security, or protection. This word occurs in many compound terms used in Anglo-Saxon law.

Frithborg /frithbørg/. Frank-pledge.

Frithbote /frithbøwt/. A satisfaction or fine, for a breach of the peace.

Frithbreach /frithbrívych/. The breaking of the peace.

Frithgar /frithgær/. The year of jubilee, or of meeting for peace and friendship.

Frithgilda /frithgilds/. Guildhall; a company or fraternity for the maintenance of peace and security; also a fine for breach of the peace.

Frithman /frithmæn/. A member of a company or fraternity.

Frithsocne /frithsökunan/. Surety of defense. Jurisdiction of the peace. The franchise of preserving the peace. Also spelled "frithsoken."

Frithspolt /frithsploth/. A spot or plot of land, encircling some stone, tree, or well, considered sacred, and therefore affording sanctuary to criminals.

Frithstool /frithstúwl/. The stool of peace. A stool or chair placed in a church or cathedral, and which was the symbol and place of sanctuary to those who fled to it and reached it.

Frivolous. Of little weight or importance. A pleading is "frivolous" when it is clearly insufficient on its face, and does not controvert the material points of the opposite pleading, and is presumably interposed for mere purposes of delay or to embarrass the opponent. Frivolous pleadings may be amended to proper form, or ordered stricken, under federal and state Rules of Civil Procedure.

Frivolous appeal. One in which no justicable question has been presented and appeal is readily recognizable as devoid of merit in that there is little prospect that it can ever succeed. Brooks v. General Motors Assembly Division, Mo.App., 527 S.W.2d 50, 53.

From. As used as a function word, implies a starting point, whether it be of time, place, or condition; and meaning having a starting point of motion, noting the point of departure, origin, withdrawal, etc., as he traveled "from" New York to Chicago. Silva v. MacAuley, 135 Cal.App. 249, 26 P.2d 887. One meaning of "from" is "out of". Word "from" or "after" an event or day does not have an absolute and invariable meaning, but each should receive an inclusion or exclusion construction according to intention with which such word is used. Acme Life Ins. Co. v. White, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 1059, 1060. Words "from" and "to," used in contract, may be given meaning to which reason and sense entitles them, under circumstances of case. Woodruff v. Adams, 134 Cal.App. 490, 25 P.2d 529.

From one place to another. From premises owned by one person to premises owned by another person in some legal subdivision or from one legal subdivision to another.

From person. Includes taking from presence of person assaulted as well as taking of property in actual contact with person of one robbed.

From, through, or under. The term refers to origin of devolution of property, and unless some title to or interest therein has been derived by assignment or otherwise from party adverse to decedent's estate, statute barring testimony is inapplicable.

From time to time. Occasionally, at intervals, now and then. See From.

Front. Forepart, as opposed to the back or rear. Any side or face of a building is a front, although the word is more commonly used to denote the entrance side. In re McInerney, 47 Wyo. 258, 34 P.2d 35, 43. As applied to a bare lot, it is that side of lot which, in ordinary circumstances, house, when built, will most likely face, and very general usage of building houses with their main entrance toward shorter street line results in common understanding that this is side intended when front of lot is referred to.

Frontage. Frontage denotes line of property on street. Jagendorf v. City of Memphis, Tenn., 520 S.W.2d 333, 335. Extent of front along road or street. Tzeses v. Barbabenh, 125 N.J.L. 643, 17 A.2d 539, 540. Space available for erection of buildings, and does not include cross streets or space occupied by sidewalk or any ornamental spaces in plat between sidewalks and curb. The expense of local improvements made by municipal corporations (such as paving, curbing, and sewering) is generally assessed on abutting property owners in proportion to the "frontage" of their lots on the street or highway, and an assessment so levied being called a "frontage assessment."

Front foot. Measurement used in assessing and apportioning cost of public improvements; e.g. curbs, sewers, sidewalks, streets. As respects assessment, synonymous with "abutting foot." See also Frontage. Front-foot rule. One by which cost of improvement is to be apportioned among several properties in proportion to their frontage on improvement and without regard to benefits conferred.

Frontier. In international law, that portion of the territory of any country which lies close along the border line of another country, and so "fronts" or faces it. Border between two countries. The term means something more than the boundary line itself, and includes a tract or strip of country, of indefinite extent, contiguous to the line.

Fronting and abutting. Very often, "fronting" signifies abutting, adjoining, or bordering on, depending largely on the context. Rombauer v. Compton Heights Christian Church, 328 Mo. 1, 40 S.W.2d 545, 551. As used in statutes relating to assessment for improvements, property between which and the improvement there is no intervening land.

Front wages. Type of prospective compensation paid to a victim of job discrimination without harm to incumbent employees until the victim achieves the position that he would have attained but for the illegal and discriminatory act. See also Back pay award.

Frozen account. An account in which no activity is permitted until a court order is lifted.

Frozen assets. Those assets of a business which cannot be readily sold without injuring the capital structure of the business in contrast to liquid assets which are readily convertible into cash.

Frozen snake. A term used to impute ingratitude and held libelous, the court taking judicial notice of its meaning without an innuendo.

Fructarius /frûkšhuwréyías/. Lat. In the civil law, one who had the usufruct of a thing; i.e., the use of the fruits, profits, or increase, as of land or animals. Bracton applies it to a lessee, fermor, or farmer of land, or one who held lands ad firmam, for a farm or term.

Fructus /frûktas/. Lat. In the civil law, fruit, fruits; produce; profit or increase; the organic productions of a thing. The right to the fruits of a thing belonging to another. The compensation which a man receives from another for the use or enjoyment of a thing, such as interest or rent.

Fructus augent hereditatem /frûktas ógant hárédátyéldam/. The yearly increase goes to enhance the inheritance.

Fructus civiles /frûktas sívalíyz/. All revenues and compenses which, though not fruits, properly speaking, are recognized as such by the law. The term includes such things as the rents and income of real property, interest on money loaned, and annuities.

Fructus fundi /frûktas fánday/. The fruits (produce or yield) of land.

Fructus industriales /frûktas andástríréyélyíyz/. Industrial fruits, or fruits of industry. Those fruits of a thing, as of land, which are produced by the labor and industry of the occupant, as crops of grain; as distinguished from such as are produced solely by the powers of nature. Emblements are so called in the common law. Annual crops obtained by yearly labor and cultivation. Term includes those plants which are sown annually and grown primarily by manual labor such as wheat, corn and vegetables. Key v. Loder, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 60, 61.

Fructus legis /frûktas liýjás/. The fruit of the law, i.e. execution.

Fructus naturales /frûktas nákharéyélyíyz/. Those products which are produced by the powers of nature alone, as wool, metals, milk, the young of animals. Term includes any plant which has perennial roots, such as trees, shrubs and grasses. Key v. Loder, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 60, 61.

Fructus pecudum /frûktas pékýsáyam/. The produce of flocks or herds.

Fructus pendentes /frûktas pendéntíyz/. Hanging fruits; those not severed. The fruits united with the thing which produces them. These form a part of the principal thing.

Fructus pendentes pars fundi videntur /frûktas pen­dentíyz pář fánday vydéntar/. Hanging fruits make part of the land.

Fructus perceptos villæ non esse constat /frûktas parséptows villy nón ésiy köntstá/. Gathered fruits do not make a part of the farm.

Fructus rel alíenum /frûktas riýay aüliýýinyiy/. The fruits of another’s property; fruits taken from another’s estate.

Fructus separati /frûktas sêpéraydday/. Separate fruits; the fruits of a thing when they are separated from it.

Fructus stantes /frûktas stántíyey/. Standing fruits; those not yet severed from the stalk or stem.

Fruges /frújyjy/. In the civil law, anything produced from vines, underwood, chalk-pits, stone-quarries.

Grains and leguminous vegetables. In a more restricted sense, any esculent growing in pods.

Fruit. The produce of a tree or plant which contains the seed or is used for food. The edible reproductive body of a seed plant. The effect or consequence of an act or operation.
Civil fruits. In the civil law (fructus civiles) are such things as the rents and income of real property, the interest on money loaned, and annuities. Rents and revenues of an immovable.

Fruit fallen. In old English law, the produce of any possession detached therefrom, and capable of being enjoyed by itself. Thus, a next presentation, when a vacancy has occurred, is a fruit fallen from the ad- vowson.

Natural fruits. In the civil law, the produce of the soil, or of fruit-trees, bushes, vines, etc., which are edible or otherwise useful or serve for the reproduction of their species. The term is used in contradistinction to "artificial fruits," i.e., such as by metaphor or analogy are likened to the fruits of the earth. Of the latter, interest on money is an example.

Fruit and the tree doctrine. The courts have held that an individual who earns income from his property or services cannot assign that income to another. For example, a father cannot assign his earnings from commissions to his son and escape income tax on such amount.

Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine. Evidence which is spawned by or directly derived from an illegal search or illegal interrogation is generally inadmissible against the defendant because of its original taint, though knowledge of facts gained independently of the original and tainted search is admissible. Wong Sun v. U. S., 371 U.S. 473, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441. This doctrine is to the effect that an unlawful search taints not only evidence obtained at the search, but facts discovered by process initiated by the unlawful search. This doctrine is generally applied to cases involving searches in violation of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution right against unlawful searches and seizures, but it can be applied to searches in violation of a statutory right. Duncan v. State, 278 Ala. 145, 176 So.2d 840, 865.

Fruits of crime. In the law of evidence, material objects acquired by means and in consequence of the commission of crime, and sometimes constituting the subject-matter of the crime. See also Fruit of poisonous tree doctrine.

Fru menta que sata sunt solo cedere intelliguntur /frâ mentâ kwâi sêyda sânt sôollow siyôdary intêlêjântar/. Grain which is sown is understood to form a part of the soil.

Frumentum /frâmëntam/. In the civil law, grain. That which grows in an ear.

Frumygld /frâmgîld/. Sax. The first payment made to the kindred of a slain person in recompense for his murder.

Frumstoll /frâms tôl/. Sax. In Saxon law, a chief seat, or mansion house.

Frusca terra /frâskâ téhra/. In old records, uncultivated and desert ground.

Frussura /frashûra/. A breaking; plowing.

Frustra /frâstrâ/. Lat. Without effect, in vain, to no purpose, uselessly; without reason or cause, ground­ lessly; in error.

Frustra agit qui judicium prosequi nequit cum effectu /frâstrâ éyijâ kwâi jadîsh(y)am prôsakway nêkwat kâm afêkchuâ/-. He sues to no purpose who cannot prosecute his judgment with effect [who cannot have the fruits of his judgment].

Frustra [vana] est potentia que nunquam venit in actum /frâstrâ éyâ paténišiya kwâi nôk kwam viynâd in âktam/véyna/-. That power is to no purpose which never comes into act, or which is never exercised.

Frustra expectatur eventus cujus effectus nullus sequitur /frâstrâ ékspek’tëydar sévántas kyûwûsaz afâktas nîlaz sêkwâdar/. An event is vainly expected from which no effect follows.

Frustra feruntur leges nisi subditibus et obediéntibus /frâstrâ färântar lijîjyz nîsâs azsîdazad az abîdyâjéntazâs/. Laws are made to no purpose, except for those that are subject and obedient.

Frustra fit per plura, quod fieri potest per pauciora /frâstrâ fit pîr pîl(y)ûra, kwôd faye rîw pôdast pîr pôsiyôra/-. That is done to no purpose by many things which can be done by fewer. The employment of more means or instruments for effecting a thing than are necessary is to no purpose.

Frustra legis auxilium invocat [querit] qui in legem committit /frâstrâ liyjas ozgil(y)îm invôwkat kwâi ju liyjäm kâmidat/"kwi rât/-. He vainly invokes the aid of the law who transgresses the law.

Frustra petis quod mox es restiturus /frâstrâ péâs kwôd móks ɛs rëstât(y)ûrâs/-. In vain you ask that which you will have immediately to restore.

Frustra petis quod statim alteri reddere cogeris /frâstrâ péâs kwôd sûdâm ôltaray rëdâri kôjâras/-. You ask in vain that which you might immediately be compelled to restore to another.

Frustra probatur quod probatum non relevat /frâstrâ prabêydar kwôd prabêydam nôn rélavat/-. That is proved to no purpose which, when proved, does not help.

Frustration of contract. Where, from nature of contract and surrounding circumstances, parties from beginning must have known it could not be fulfilled unless, when time thereof arrived, some particular condition continued to exist, under doctrine of "frustration", in absence of warranty that such condition of things shall exist, contract is to be construed as subject to implied condition that parties shall be excused in case, before breach, performance becomes impossible or purpose frustrated from such condition ceasing to exist without default of either. Johnson v. Atkins, 53 Cal.App.2d 430, 127 P.2d 1027, 1028, 1029, 1030. This doctrine provides, generally, that where existence of a specific thing is, either by terms of contract or in contemplation of parties, necessary for performance of a promise in the contract, duty to perform promise is discharged if thing is no longer in existence at time for performance. Glidden Co. v. Hellenic Lines, Limited, C.A.N.Y., 275 F.2d 253, 255. See U.C.C. § 2–615; see also Commercial impractica­bility.

Frustration of purpose doctrine. This doctrine excuses a promisor in certain situations when the objectives of contract have been utterly defeated by circumstances arising after formation of agreement, and performance is excused under this rule even though there is no impediment to actual performance. Hess v. Dumouchel Paper Co., 154 Conn. 343, 225 A.2d 797, 801.
FRUSTRATION OF PURPOSE DOCTRINE

Frusement terre /fr̩stram t̩hri/. A piece or parcel of land lying by itself.

Frymith /fr̩ymθ/. In old English law, the affording harbor and entertainment to any one.

Frythe. Sax. In old English law, a plain between woods. An arm of the sea, or a strait between two lands.

F.T.C. Federal Trade Commission.

Fugation, feuage, or feuage /fy̪uwa/. Hearth money. A tax laid upon each fireplace or hearth. An imposition of a shilling for every hearth, levied by Edward III in the dukedom of Aquitaine. 1 Bl.Comm. 324.

Fuer /fy̪uwə/. In old English law, flight. It was of two kinds: (1) Fuer in fait, or in facto, where a person did apparently and corporally flee; (2) fuer in ley, or in lege, when, being called in the county court, he did not appear, which legal interpretation makes flight.

Fuero /fwəro/. In Spanish law, a law; a code.

A general usage or custom of a province, having the force of law. Ir contra fuero, to violate a received custom.

A grant of privileges and immunities. Conceder fúeros, to grant exemptions.

A charter granted to a city or town. Also designated as "cartas pueblas."

An act of donation made to an individual, a church, or convent, on certain conditions.

A declaration of a magistrate, in relation to taxation, fines, etc.

A charter granted by the sovereign, or those having authority from him, establishing the franchises of towns, cities, etc.

A place where justice is administered. A peculiar forum, before which a party is amenable.

The jurisdiction of a tribunal, which is entitled to take cognizance of a cause; as fuero ecclesiastico, fuero militar.

Fuero de castilla /fwəro də kastiy(ly)ə/. The body of laws and customs which formerly governed the Castilians.

Fuero de correos y caminos /fwəro də korəywos iy kaminationos/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the post office and roads.

Fuero de guerra /fwəro də gəra/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters in relation to persons serving in the army.

Fuero de marina /fwəro də mariyna/. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the navy and to the persons employed therein.

Fuero municipal /fwəro muvn̩liσiyp̩əl/. The body of laws granted to a city or town for its government and the administration of justice.

Fuero viejo /fwəro v(i)yəyho/. The title of a compilation of Spanish law, published about A.D. 992.

Fugacía /fyug̩̭iysh(iy)ə/. A chase.

Fugam fecit /fy̪uwɡam fiysat/. Lat. He has made flight; he fled. A clause inserted in an inquisition, in old English law, meaning that a person indicted for treason or felony had fled. The effect of this was to make the party forfeit his goods absolutely, and the profits of his lands until he had been pardoned or acquitted.

Fugator /fyug̩̭ydar/. In old English law, a privilege to hunt.

A driver. Fugatores carrucarum, drivers of wagons.

Fugitation /fy̪uw̩jat̩əyshən/. When a criminal does not obey the citation to answer, the court pronounces sentence of fugitation against him, which induces a forfeiture of goods and chattels to the crown.

Fugitive. One who flees; used in criminal law with the implication of a flight, evasion, or escape from arrest, prosecution, or imprisonment. See Extradition; Fugitive from justice; Rendition.

Fugitive Felon Act. A federal statute which makes it a felony to flee across the state line for the purpose of avoiding prosecution or confinement for a state felony or attempted felony, or to avoid giving testimony in a state felony case. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1073. See Extrádition. See also Extradition; Rendition.

Fugitive from justice. A person who, having committed a crime, flees from jurisdiction of court where crime was committed or departs from his usual place of abode and conceals himself within the district. A person who, having committed or been charged with crime in one state, has left its jurisdiction and is found within territory of another state when it is sought to subject him to criminal process of former state. King v. Noe, 244 S.C. 344, 137 S.E.2d 102, 103. See also Extradition; Rendition.

Fugitive's goods. Under the old English law, where a man fled for felony, and escaped, his own goods were not forfeited as bona fugitivorum until it was found by proceedings of record (e.g. before the coroner in the case of death) that he fled for the felony.

Fugitive slave law. Acts of Congress passed in 1793 and 1850 (prior to abolition of slavery) providing for the surrender and deportation of slaves who escaped from their masters and fled into the territory of another state, generally a "free" state.

Fugitivus /fy̪uw̩jat̩iəvəs/. In the civil law, a fugitive; a runaway slave.

Fugue /fy̪uw̩g/. Period of memory loss during which subject functions almost as if normal, but concerning which he has no subsequent recollection. See Automatism.

Full. Abundantly provided, sufficient in quantity or degree, complete, entire, and detailed. Having no open space. Ample, perfect, mature, not wanting in any essential quality.

Full age. The age of legal majority; legal age.

Full blood. Relations of the "full blood," "whole blood," or "entire blood" are those derived not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors.

Full cash value. See Fair market value.

Full copy. In equity practice, a complete and unabridged transcript of a bill or other pleading, with all indorsements, and including a copy of all exhibits.

Full cousin. Son or daughter of one's uncle or aunt.

Full covenants. See Covenant.

Full coverage. Type of insurance protection which covers all losses with no deductible amount and which covers to the full amount.

Full crew laws. Laws which regulate the number of railroad employees who are required to man trains.

Full defense. In common law pleading, the formula of defense in a plea, stated at length and without abbreviation, thus: "And the said C.D., by E.F., his attorney, comes and defends the force (or wrong) and injury when and where it shall behoove him, and the damages, and whatsoever else he ought to defend, and says," etc. Such technical pleading is no longer required under federal or state Rules of Civil Procedure.

Full disclosure. Term used in variety of legal contexts, e.g. a fiduciary who participates in a transaction for his own benefit is required to fully reveal the details of such. In consumer law, the obligation to reveal all details of a transaction to the consumer; e.g. federal and state Truth-in-Lending Acts. Also, federal election laws require candidates to make full disclosure of the extent and source of their campaign contributions. See also Compulsory disclosure.

Full faith and credit clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution (Art. IV, Sec. 1) which provides that the various states must recognize legislative acts, public records, and judicial decisions of the other states within the United States. There are exceptions to this, a major one being that a state need not recognize a divorce decree of a state where neither spouse was a legal resident. Doctrine means that a state must accord the judgment of a court of another state the same credit that it is entitled to in the courts of that state. Morphet v. Morphet, 263 Or. 311, 502 P.2d 255, 260. A judgment or record shall have the same faith, credit, conclusive effect, and obligatory force in other states as it has by law or usage in the state from whence taken. Christmas v. Russell, 72 U.S. (5 Wall.) 290, 18 L.Ed. 475; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 58 U.S. (13 Pet.) 312, 10 L.Ed. 177; Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Gold Issue Min. & Mill. Co., 243 U.S. 93, 37 S.Ct. 344, 61 L.Ed. 610. See also Comity; Fauntleroy doctrine.

Full hearing. Embraces not only the right to present evidence, but also a reasonable opportunity to know the claims of the opposing party, and to meet them. Morgan v. U.S., 304 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 773, 776, 777, 82 L.Ed. 1129. One in which ample opportunity is afforded to all parties to make, by evidence and argument, a showing fairly adequate to establish the propriety or improbity from the standpoint of justice and law of the step asked to be taken. Akron, C. & Y. Ry. Co. v. U.S., 261 U.S. 184, 43 S.Ct. 270, 67 L.Ed. 605; Boston & M. R. R. v. U.S., D.C.Mass., 208 F.Supp. 661, 669.

Fumage /fu:ma/ or smoke farthings. In old English law, the same as fuage, or smoke farthings. 1 Bl.Comm. 324. See Fuage.

Function. Derived from Latin "function" which means to perform, execute, administer. The nature and proper action of anything; activity appropriate to any business or profession. Rosenblum v. Anglim, D.C.Cal., 43 F.Supp. 889, 892. Office; duty; fulfillment of a definite end or set of ends by the correct adjustment of means. The occupation of an office. By the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. The proper activities or duties of municipality. Bean v. City of Knoxville, 180 Tenn. 448, 175 S.W.2d 954, 955.

Functional depreciation. Such results from necessary replacement of equipment before it is worn out, by reason of invention and improved machinery, equipment, etc. which render more efficient and satisfactory service. See Functional obsolescence.

Functional disease. One which prevents, obstructs, or interferes with the due performance of its special functions by any organ of the body, without anatomical defect or abnormality in the organ itself. Distinguished from "organic" disease, which is due to some injury to, or lesion or malformation in, the organ in question.

Functional obsolescence. The need for replacement because a structure or equipment has become inefficient or out-moded because of improvements developed since its original construction or production. The loss of value due to inherent deficiencies within the property. Fisher-New Center Co. v. Michigan State Tax Commission, 380 Mich. 340, 157 N.W.2d 271, 279.

Functionary. A public officer or employee. An officer of a private corporation is also sometimes so called.

Functus officio /fänktəs afish(ə)´ow/. Lat. A task performed. Board of School Trustees of Washington City Administrative Unit v. Benner, 222 N.C. 566, 24 S.E.2d 259, 263. Having fulfilled the function, discharged the office, or accomplished the purpose, and therefore of no further force or authority. Applied to an officer whose term has expired and who has consequently no further official authority; and also to an instrument, power, agency, etc., which has fulfilled the purpose of its creation, and is therefore of no further virtue or effect. Holmes v. Birmingham Transit Co., 270 Ala. 215, 116 So.2d 912, 919.

Fund. To capitalize with a view to the production of interest. Also, to put into the form of bonds, stocks, or other securities, bearing regular interest, and to provide or appropriate a fund or permanent revenue for the payment thereof. An asset or group of assets set aside for a specific purpose. To fund a debt is to pledge a specific fund to keep down the interest and reduce the principal. A generic term and all-embracing as compared with term "money," etc., which is specific. A sum of money or other liquid assets set apart for a specific purpose, or available for the payment of debts or claims.

In the plural, this word has a variety of slightly different meanings, as follows: moneys and much more, such as notes, bills, checks, drafts, stocks and bonds, and in broader meaning may include property of every kind. State v. Finney, 141 Kan. 12, 40 P.2d 411, 421. Money in hand, assets, cash, money available for the payment of a debt, legacy, etc. Corporate stocks or government securities; in this sense usually spoken of as the "funds." Assets, securities, bonds, or revenue of a state or government appropriated for the discharge of its debts. Generally, working capital; sometimes used to refer to cash or to cash and marketable securities.

See also Contingent fund; Current funds; Funded; Funding; General fund; Mutual fund; Revolving fund.

Funded debt. As applied to states or municipal corporations, a funded debt is one for the payment of which (interest and principal) some fund is appropriated, either specifically, or by provision made for future taxation and the quasi pledging in advance of the public revenue. As applied to the financial management of corporations (and sometimes of estates in course of administration or properties under receivership) funding means the borrowing of a sufficient sum of money to discharge a variety of floating or unsecured debts, or debts evidenced by notes or secured by bonds but maturing within a short time, and creating a new debt in lieu thereof, secured by a general mortgage, a series of bonds, or an issue of stock, generally maturing at a more remote period, and often at a lower rate of interest. The new debt thus substituted for the pre-existing debts is called the "funded debt." This term is very seldom applied to the debts of a private individual; but when so used it must be understood as referring to a debt embodied in securities of a permanent character and to the payment of which certain property has been applied or pledged. See also Funded.

Funding system. The practice of borrowing money to defray the expenses of government, and creating a "sinking fund," designed to keep down interest, and to effect the gradual reduction of the principal debt. See Sinking fund, infra.

General fund. This phrase, in many states, is a collective designation of all the assets of the state which furnish the means for the support of government and for defraying the discretionary appropriations of the legislature. Such are distinguished from assets of a special character, such as the school fund. See also General fund.

General revenue fund. As used in connection with municipal finances, term refers to the fund out of which the usual, ordinary, running, and incidental expenses of a municipality are paid.

No funds. This term denotes a lack of assets or money for a specific use. It is the return made by a bank to a check drawn upon it by a person who has no deposit to his credit there; also by an executor, trustee, etc., who has no assets for the specific purpose.

Public funds. An untechnical name for (1) the revenue or money of a government, state, or municipal corporation; (2) the bonds, stocks, or other securities of a national or state government. Money, warrants, or bonds, or other paper having a money value, and belonging to the state, or to any county, city, incorporated town or school district. The term applies to funds of every political subdivision of state wherein Revolving fund. Usually, a renewable credit over a defined period. In simple parlance it relates usually to a situation where a banker or merchant extends credit for a certain amount which can be paid off from time to time and then credit is again given not to exceed the same amount. It may also mean a fund, which, when reduced, is replenished by new funds from specified sources. Term may refer to a revolving charge account.

Sinking fund. The aggregate of sums of money (as those arising from particular taxes or sources of revenue) set apart and invested, usually at fixed intervals, for the extinguishment of the debt of a government or corporation, by the accumulation of interest. A fund arising from particular taxes, imposts, or duties, which is appropriated towards the payment of the interest due on a public loan and for the gradual payment of the principal. A fund created for extinguishing or paying a funded debt.

Sinking fund tax. A tax raised to be applied to the payment of interest on, and principal of public loan.

Fundamental error. See Error; Plain error rule.

Fundamental fairness doctrine. Due process of law as applied to judicial procedure. See Due process of law.

Fundamental law. The law which determines the constitution of government in a nation or state, and prescribes and regulates the manner of its exercise. The organic law of a nation or state; its constitution.

Fundamental rights. Those which have their origin in the express terms of the Constitution or which are necessarily to be implied from those terms. Sidle v. Majors, 264 Ind. 206, 341 N.E.2d 763, 769. See e.g. Bill of rights.

Fundamus /fandéýmas/. We found. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England. 1 Bl.Comm. 473.

Fundatio /fandéðýsh(uy)ow/. Lat. A founding or foundation. Particularly applied to the creation and endowment of corporations. As applied to eleemosynary corporations such as colleges and hospitals, it is said that "fundatio incipiens" is the incorporation or grant of corporate powers, while "fundatio perficiens" is the endowment or grant or gift of funds or revenues. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 4 L.Ed. 629.

Fundator /fandéydar/. A founder (q.v.).

Funded. Said of a pension plan or other obligation when funds have been set aside for meeting the obligation when it becomes due. See also Fund (Funded debt).

Funded pension plan. One containing sufficient funds as contributed by corporation to meet current and future retirement benefit obligations. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) regulates funding of pension plans.

Funding. Process of financing capital expenditures by issuing long term debt obligations or by converting short term obligations into long term obligations to finance current expenses. See also Fund.

Fund patrimoniales /fânday pätraðmáníýélyíyiz/. Lands of inheritance.

Fund publici /fânday páblassay/. Public lands.

Fundus /fándas/. In the civil and old English law, land; land or ground generally; land, without considering its specific use; land, including buildings generally; a farm.

Funeral expenses. Money expended in procuring the interment, cremation, or other disposition of a corpse, including suitable monument, perpetual care of burial lot and entertainment of those participating in wake.

Fungibles /fânjibályíyiz/. Lat. In the civil law, fungible things. See that title.

Fungibles. Goods of which each particle is identical with every other particle, such as grain and oil. Mississippi State Tax Commission v. Columbia Gulf Transmission Co., 249 Miss. 88, 161 So.2d 173, 178. With respect to goods or securities, those of which any unit is, by nature or usage of trade, the equivalent of any other like unit. U.C.C. § 1-201(17); e.g., a bushel of wheat or other grain. Movable goods which may be estimated and replaced according to weight, measure, and number. Things belonging to a class, which do not have to be dealt with in specie.

Where a thing which is the subject of an obligation (which one man is bound to deliver to another) must be delivered in specie, the thing is not fungible; that very individual thing, and not another thing of the same or another class, in lieu of it, must be delivered. Where the subject of the obligation is a thing of a given class, the thing is said to be fungible; i.e., the delivery of any object which answers to the generic description will satisfy the terms of the obligation.

Fur /fár/. Lat. A thief. One who stole secretly or without force or weapons, as opposed to robber.

Furandí animus /fyarëndándy ánumas/. Lat. An intention of stealing.

Furca /fárka/. In old English law, a fork. A gallow or gibbet.

Furca et flagellum /fárka ét fákélyáma/. Gallows and whip. Tenure ad furcam et flagellum, tenure by gallows and whip. The meanest of servile tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of his lord for life and limb.

Furca et fossa /fárka ét fósa/. Gallows and pit, or pit and gallows. A term used in ancient charters to signify a jurisdiction of punishing thieves, viz., men by hanging, women by drowning.

Furor manifestus. In the civil law, a manifest thief. A thief who is taken in the very act of stealing.

Furnage. See Fornagium; Four.

Future. Not a word of strict legal or technical import, and may be used to introduce negation or qualification of some precedent matter, but generally when used as an adverb it is word of comparison, and means “additional,” and is equivalent to “moreover, or furthermore, something beyond what has been said or likewise, or also.” Wider, or fuller, or something new. Occasionally it may mean any, future, or other.

Future advance. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagee by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on a mortgage security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. See also Future advance clause; Future advances.

Further assurance, covenant for. See Covenant.

Further hearing, or further proceedings. Hearing at another time; additional hearing; new trial; or other proceedings directed by appellate court. Not a new proceeding but rather a continuation of an existing proceeding.

Further instructions. Additional instructions given to jury after they have once been instructed and have retired. Such may be requested by jury during course of deliberations when, for example, the jury is uncertain as to the applicable law.

Further maintenance of action, plea to. A plea grounded upon some fact or facts which have arisen since the commencement of the suit, and which the defendant puts forward for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff should not further maintain his action. Such plea is obsolete under federal and state Rules of Civil Procedure.

Furtive. Stealthily; by secret or stealth.

Furtum. Lat. Theft. The fraudulent appropriation to one’s self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft without the consent of the owner. The thing which has been stolen.

Furtum conceptum. In Roman law, the theft which was disclosed where, upon searching any one in the presence of witnesses in due form, the thing stolen was discovered in his possession.

Furtum est contractatio rei alienae fraudulenta, cum animo furandi, invit0 illo domino cujus res illa fuerat /fardam eam contractenths (h)owy riya: aliyinyi froyduyulenta, kam anamow f(y)rardanay, anavydow ilow domanow kywujs riyz ilo fywuwarat!. Theft is the fraudulent handling of another’s property, with an intention of stealing, against the will of the proprietor, whose property it was.

Furtum manifestum. Open theft. Theft where a thief is caught with the property in his possession.

Furtum non est ubi initium habet detentionis per dominiun rei /fardam n6n est yuwbay anish(i)am heybat datenshiy6wns pär dam(i)am riya: /. There is no theft where the foundation of the detention is based upon ownership of the thing.

Furtum oblatum. In the civil law, offered theft. Oblatum furtem dicitur cum res furtiva ab aliqua tibi oblat a sit, eaque apud te concepta sit. Theft is called “oblatum” when a thing stolen is offered to you by any one, and found upon you.

Fust. See Fuz.
Fustigatio /fæstigəˈʃə(ɪ)əʊ/. In old English law, a beating with stick or clubs; one of the ancient kinds of punishment of malefactors.

Fustis /fʌstɪs/. In old English law, a staff, used in making livery of seisin. A baton, club, or cudgel.

Futhwite, or fythwite. A fine for fighting or breaking the peace.

Future acquired property. See After acquired property.

Future advance clause. A clause in an open-end mortgage or deed of trust which allows the borrower to borrow additional sums at a future time, secured under the same instrument and by the same real property security.

Future advances. Money lent after a security interest has attached and secured by the original security agreement. U.C.C. § 9–204(5). See also Further advance.

Future damages. Those sums awarded to an injured party for, among other things, residuals or future effects of an injury which have reduced the capability of an individual to function as a whole man, future pain and suffering, loss or impairment of earning capacity, and future medical expenses. Jordan v. Bero, W.Va., 210 S.E.2d 618, 631.

Future earnings. Earnings which, if it had not been for injury, could have been made in future, but which were lost as result of injury. Nowlin v. Kansas City Public Service Co., Mo.App., 58 S.W.2d 324.

Future estate. See Estate.

Future goods. Goods which are not both existing and identified. A purported present sale of such goods operates as a contract to sell. U.C.C. § 2–105(2).

Future interests. Interests in land or other things in which the privilege of possession or of enjoyment is future and not present. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Wells, C.C.A.6, 132 F.2d 405, 407. An interest that will come into being at some future point in time. It is distinguished from a present interest which is already in existence. Assume, for example, that D transfers securities to a newly created trust. Under the terms of the trust instrument, income from the securities is to be paid each year to W for her life, with the securities passing to S upon her death. W has a present interest in the trust since she is currently entitled to receive the income from the securities. S has a future interest since he must wait for W's death to benefit from the trust.

Future performance. In contracts, execution which is due in the future; deferred performance.

Futures contract. A present right to receive at future date a specific quantity of given commodity for fixed price. Clayton Brokerage Co. of St. Louis, Inc. v. Moer, Tex.Civ.App., 520 S.W.2d 802, 804. Commodity futures contracts are commitments to buy or sell commodities at a specified time and place in the future. The price is established when the contract is made in open auction on a futures exchange. Only a small percentage of futures trading actually leads to delivery of a commodity, for a contract may change hands or be liquidated before the delivery date. Participants fall into two categories: commercial hedgers who use futures to minimize price risks inherent in their marketing operations and speculators who, employing venture capital, seek profits through price changes. Both purchase contracts with only a small margin payment. Futures prices are an indication of the direction of prices based on current market conditions. Such exchanges and transactions are regulated by the federal Commodity Futures Trading Commission. See also Option.

Futures trading. The buying and selling of futures contracts, commonly in commodities. See Futures contract.

Futuri /frʊˈtʃərə/. Lat. Those who are to be. Part of the commencement of old deeds. “Sciant præsentes et futuri, quod ego talis, dedi et concessi,” etc. (Let all men now living and to come know that I, A. B., have, etc.).

Gag order. An unruly defendant at trial may constitutionally be bound and gagged to prevent further interruptions in the trial. Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337, 90 S.Ct. 1057, 25 L.Ed.2d 353. Term may also refer to an order by the court, in a trial with a great deal of notoriety, directed to attorneys and witnesses, to not discuss the case with reporters—such order being felt necessary to assure the defendant of a fair trial. Term may also refer to orders of the court directed to reporters to not report court proceedings, or certain aspects thereof. Such latter type orders have been struck down by the Supreme Court as being an unconstititional obstruction of freedom of the press. See Nebraska Press Ass'n. v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539, 96 S.Ct. 2791.

Gain. Profits; winnings; increment of value. Difference between receipts and expenditures; pecuniary gain. Difference between cost and sale price. Appreciation in value or worth of securities or property.

Excess of revenues over expenses from a specific transaction. Frequently used in the context of describing a transaction not part of a firm's typical, day-to-day operations.

"Gain derived from capital" is a gain, profit, or something of exchangeable value proceeding from the property, severed from the capital however invested, and received or drawn by claimant for his separate use, benefit, and disposal. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Simmons Gin Co., C.C.A.10, 43 F.2d 327, 328.

See also Acquire; Acquisition; Capital (Capital gains); Income; Profit; Return.

Gainage. At common law, the gain or profit of tilled or planted land, raised by cultivating it; and the draught, plow, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage by the baser kind of sokemen or villeins.

Gainery. At common law, tillage, or the profit arising from it, or from the beasts employed therein.

Gainful. Profitable, advantageous, or lucrative.

Gainful employment or occupation. In general, any calling, occupation, profession or work which one may profitably pursue. Within disability clause of policy, term means ordinary employment of particular insured, or such other employment, if any, as insured may fairly be expected to follow. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Barron, 198 Ga. 1, 30 S.E.2d 879, 882.
Ganor. In old English law, a sokeman; one who occupied or cultivated arable land.

Galus, institutes of /instatyũwts ov géýas/. See Institutes.

Gale. In English law, the payment of rent, tax, duty, or annuity. The right is a license or interest in the nature of real estate, conditional on the due payment of rent and observance of the obligations imposed on the galee. It follows the ordinary rules as to the devolution and conveyance of real estate. The galee pays the crown a rent known as a "galeage rent," "royalty," or some similar name, proportionate to the quantity of minerals taken from the mine or quarry.

Galea /gáeþa/. In old records, a piratical vessel; a galley.

Gallagher agreement. See Mary Carter agreement.

Gallon. A liquid measure containing 231 cubic inches, or four quarts; the standard gallon of the United States. The imperial gallon contains about 277, and the ale gallon 282, cubic inches. The metric equivalent is 3.785 liters.

General average bond. Type of bond required by master of ship as security for general average contribution before master delivers the cargo.

General average contribution. Contribution by all parties in sea adventure to make good loss sustained by one of their number on account of sacrifices voluntarily made of part of ship or cargo to save residue, or for extraordinary expenses necessarily incurred by one or more of parties for general benefit of all interests embarked in general enterprise. S.C. Love-land Co. v. U. S., D.C. Pa., 207 F.Supp. 450, 451.

General average loss. Loss at sea commonly sustained when cargo is thrown overboard to save ship. Such loss is generally shared by shipowner and owners of cargo. See General average contribution; Jettison.

General average statement. Statement of account and admission on shipowner's part as to amount due cargo owner.

General benefits. Such benefits in a condemnation case are those produced by the improvement which a property owner may enjoy in the future in common with all other property owners in the area, which benefits may not be considered to reduce the compensation due. State, by Com'r of Transp. v. Intercourse Corp., 130 N.J. Super. 322, 327 A.2d 225, 229.

General bequest. One not segregated or withdrawn from estate under terms of will but to be paid in money or property as latter directs. Gift payable out of general assets of estate, not amounting to a bequest of particular thing or money. Feder v. Weissman, 81 Nev. 668, 409 P.2d 251, 252.

General building scheme. One under which owner of large tract of land divides it into building lots, to be sold to different persons for separate occupancy by deeds which contain uniform covenants restricting the use which the several grantees may make of their premises. Besch v. Hyman, 221 App.Div. 455, 223 N.Y.S. 231, 233.

General circulation. That of a general newspaper only, as distinguished from one of a special or limited character. It is not determined by number of subscribers but by the diversity of subscribers and general nature of subject matter.

General contractor. One who contracts for the construction of an entire building or project, rather than for a portion of the work. The general contractor hires subcontractors (e.g. plumbing, electrical, etc.), coordinates all work, and is responsible for payment to subcontractors. Also called “prime” contractor.

General Court. The name given to the legislature of Massachusetts and of New Hampshire, in colonial times, and subsequently by their constitutions; so called because the colonial legislature of Massachusetts grew out of the general court or meeting of the Massachusetts Company.

General court martial. See Court-Martial.

General credit. The character of a witness as one generally worthy of credit. A distinction is sometimes made between this and “particular credit,” which may be affected by proof of particular facts relating to the particular action. See also General reputation.

General debt. Debt of a governmental unit legally payable from general revenues and backed by the full faith and credit of the governmental unit.

General denial. See General plea.

Generale /jénaréyli/. The usual commons in a religious house, distinguished from pietantice, which on extraordinary occasions were allowed beyond the commons.

Generale dictum generaliter est interpretandum /jénaréyliy diktàm jénaréyliadar èst intèrprètàndum/. A general expression is to be interpreted generally.

General election. An election held in the state at large. A regularly recurring election to select officers to serve after the expiration of the full terms of their predecessors. See also Election.

Generale nihil certum implicat /jénaréyliy ná(h)ol sàrdam implikàt/. A general expression implies nothing certain. A general recital in a deed has not the effect of an estoppel.

General estate. Customarily, the entire estate held by a person in his individual capacity.

Generale tantum valet in generalibus, quantum singulare in singulis /jénaréyliy tàntàm vèylàd in jénaréyliobas, kwóntàm sìnggùleri in sìnggyàlas/. What is general is of as much force among general things as what is particular is among things particular.

General exception. General exception is an objection to a pleading, or any part thereof, for want of substance, while a special exception is an objection to the form in which a cause of action is stated. Exception taken at trial of case in which the exception does not specify the grounds or limitations of his objection. See also Demurrer.

General execution. A writ commanding an officer to satisfy a judgment out of any personal property of the defendant. If authorizing him to levy only on certain specified property, the writ is sometimes called a “special” execution.

General executor. One whose power is not limited either territorially or as to the duration or subject of his trust. One who is to have charge of the whole estate, wherever found, and administer it to a final settlement.

General fee conditional. A grant to a person and heirs of his body. Blume v. Pearly, 204 S.C. 409, 29 S.E.2d 673, 674.

General field. Several distinct lots or pieces of land inclosed and fenced in as one common field.

General fund. Assets and liabilities of a nonprofit entity not specifically earmarked for other purposes. The primary operating fund of a governmental unit. See also Fund.

Generalla præcendent, specialia sequuntur /jénaréyliya príysiïýdant spéshiyéyliya sakwántar/. Things general precede, things special follow.
General improvement. Exists where primary purpose and effect of improvement is to benefit public generally, though it may incidentally benefit property owners in particular locality.

General Inclosure Act. The English statute, 41 Geo. III, c. 109, which consolidated a number of regulations as to the inclosure of common fields and waste lands.

General indorsement. See Indorsement.

General intangibles. Any personal property (including things in action) other than goods, accounts, contract rights, chattel paper, documents and instruments. U.C.C. § 9–106.

General interest. In regard to admissibility of hearsay evidence, a distinction is sometimes made between "public" and "general" interest, the term "public" being strictly applied to that which concerns every member of the state, and the term "general" being confined to a lesser, though still a considerable, portion of the community.

Generalis clausula non porrigitur ad ea quae antea specialiter sunt comprehensa /jēnārēyliyas klōzyala nōn parjadar ād ēyā kwīly āntīya spēšīyēyīyādār sānt kōnōrhēyādār jēnārēyliyas jēnēryādār ēst jēntāyēyādār/. A general clause does not extend to those things which are previously provided for specially. Therefore, where a deed at the first contains special words, and afterwards concludes in general words, both words, as well general as special, shall stand.

Generalis regula generaliter est intelligenda /jēnārēyliyas régyalas jēnēryālas jēnārēyliyas êst intēljēyandā/. A general rule is to be understood generally.

General jurisdiction. Such as extends to all controversies that may be brought before a court within the legal bounds of rights and remedies; as opposed to special or limited jurisdiction, which covers only a particular class of cases, or cases where the amount in controversy is below a prescribed sum, or which is subject to specific exceptions. The terms "general" and "special," applied to jurisdiction, indicate the difference between a legal authority extending to the whole of a particular subject and one limited to a part; and, when applied to the terms of court, the occasion upon which these powers can be respectively exercised. See also Jurisdiction.

General Land Office. Formerly an office of the United States government, being a division of the Department of the Interior, having charge of all executive action relating to the public lands, including their survey, sale or other disposition, and patenting; originally constituted by Act of Congress in 1812. The General Land Office and the U.S. Grazing Service were consolidated into the Bureau of Land Management under the Department of the Interior by 1946 Reorganization Plan No. 3, § 403. See Bureau of Land Management.

General law. A law that affects the community at large. A general law as contradistinguished from one that is special or local, is a law that embraces a class of subjects or places, and does not omit any subject or place naturally belonging to such class. A law, framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects, which, having regard to the purposes of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves, is not a special or local law, but a general law. A law that relates to a subject of a general nature, or that affects all people of state, or all of a particular class, while one relating to particular persons or things of a class is a "special law". Albuquerque Metropolitan Arroyo Flood Control Authority v. Swinburne, 74 N.M. 487, 394 P.2d 998, 1000.

General lien. A general lien is a right to detain a chattel, etc., until payment be made, not only of any debt due in respect of the particular chattel, but of any balance that may be due on general account in the same line of business.

Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP). The conventions, rules and procedures necessary to define accepted accounting practices at a particular time; includes both broad and specific guidelines. The source of such principles is the Financial Accounting Standards Board.

Generally Accepted Auditing Standards. The standards, as opposed to particular procedures, promulgated by the AICPA which concern the auditor's professional qualities and the judgment exercised by him in the performance of his examination and in his report.

General manager. One having general direction and control of corporation's affairs, and who may do everything which corporation could do in transaction of its business. Continental Supply Co. v. Forrest E. Gilmore Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 622. A manager for all general purposes of the corporation.

General partner. One of two or more persons who associate to carry on business as co-owners for profit and who are personally liable for all debts of the partnership. Uniform Partnership Act, § 6(1), (15). To be contrasted with "limited" partner. See Partner.

General plea. Type of pleading such as a general denial which controverts all of the averments of the preceding pleading (e.g. of the complaint). See Fed.R. Civil P. 8(b).

General power of appointment. One exercisable in favor of any person the donee may select. Johnstone v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 76 F.2d 55, 57.
General reputation. In evidence, testimony concerning the repute in which a person is held in the community; e.g. peaceable, law abiding citizen.

Criminal defendant may show his good character by proof of his "real character", that is, those peculiar qualities which individual is supposed to possess and which distinguish him from others and denote what a man really is, not what he is reputed to be, or by proof of his "general reputation" which is based on speech of his associates and is sum of opinions generally entertained concerning what is reputed or understood to be the estimate of person's character in community in which he moves or resides. State v. Hobbs, Iowa, 172 N.W.2d 268, 271.

See Character; Reputation.

General Services Administration. Federal agency created to manage government property and records. The GSA supervises construction and operation of buildings, procurement and distribution of supplies, disposal of surplus property, traffic and communications facilities, stockpiling of strategic and critical materials, and management of automatic data processing resources program.

General taxes. Those imposed by and paid to state which return taxpayer no special benefit other than the protection afforded him and his property by government, and promotion of programs which have for their benefit the welfare of all. A tax, imposed solely or primarily for purpose of raising revenue and merely granting person taxed right to conduct business or profession.

General welfare. General term used to describe the government's concern for the health, peace, morals, and safety of its citizens.

General welfare clause. The provision of the U.S. Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 1) which declares that Congress may tax and pay debts in order to provide for the "general welfare of the United States."

General words. Such words of a descriptive character as are used in conveyances in order to convey, not only the specific property described but also all kinds of easements, privileges, and appurtenances which may possibly belong to the property conveyed. Such words are in general unnecessary; but are properly used when there are any easements or privileges reputed to belong to the property not legally appurtenant to it.

Generatio /jénáréysh(iy)ow/. The issue or offspring of a mother-monastery.

Generation. May mean either a degree of removal in computing descents, or a single succession of living beings in natural descent. Average span of time between birth of parents and that of their offspring. Group of people born and living contemporaneously.

Generation-skipping tax. The transfer tax imposed upon a generation-skipping trust. A transfer which bypasses a generation younger than the transferor and, therefore, avoids the imposition of one transfer tax. For example, a grandmother gives property to her grandchildren. By by-passing the children, a transfer tax is avoided. If the property had been given to the children and they later pass it (by gift or death) to the grandchildren, no generation skipping takes place. A generation-skipping tax may be imposed if the generation-skipping approach utilizes the trust device. See Generation-skipping trust.

Generation-skipping trust. A trust which skips a transfer tax on a generation of beneficiaries younger than the grantor of the trust. In the classic situation, D creates a trust with income payable to his children for life and remainder to the grandchildren upon the death of the children. Until the Tax Reform Act of 1976 enacted new Code §§ 2601–2603 and 2611–2614, there was no transfer tax imposed upon the death of D's children. Thus, one generation (i.e., D's children) was able to avoid both the gift and death tax when the trust property passed to the grandchildren. Under the new law, barring certain exceptions, the trust must pay a transfer tax on the death of the children as if the trust corpus had been included in their gross estates. See Deemed transferror.

Generic. Relating to or characteristic of a whole group or class; general, as opposed to specific or special. Generic name. The "established name" of a drug; its chemical name, a common name, or an official name used in an official compendium. Abbott Laboratories v. Celebrezze, C.A.Del., 352 F.2d 286, 287. See also Name.

Generosa /jénárówswa/. Gentlewoman.

Generosi filius /jénárówsway filiyas/. The son of a gentleman. Generally abbreviated "gen. fil."

Generosus /jénárówswsas/. Lat. Gentleman; a gentleman.

Geneva Convention. An international agreement for the conduct of nations at war drafted in 1864 and ratified by nearly every country. It provides, among other things, that a belligerent shall give proper care to enemy sick or wounded, that the Red Cross shall be the emblem of the sanitary service; and that hospitals and ambulances with their personnel shall be respected and protected. Revisions have brought the convention into accord with newer scientific discoveries and methods of warfare.

Genericulum /janikyolam/. A degree of consanguinity.

Genoese lottery /jénoviyz lódarivy/. Also known as the "numerical" lottery. As distinguished from the "class" lottery (see the title Dutch lottery), it is a scheme by which, out of 90 consecutive numbers, five are to be selected or drawn by lot. The players have fixed on certain numbers, wagering that one, two, or more of them will be drawn among the five, or that they will appear in a certain order.

Gens /jén(d)z/. Lat. In Roman law, a tribe or clan; a group of families, connected by common descent and bearing the same name, being all free-born and of free ancestors, and in possession of full civic rights.

Gentes /jéntiyzi/. Lat. People. Contra omnes gentes, against all people. Words used in the clause of warranty in old deed.
Gentiles /jɛntəˈlɪlz/. In Roman law, the members of a gens or common tribe.

Gentleman. In its English origin, this term formerly referred to a man of noble or gentle birth; one belonging to the landed gentry; a man of independent means; all above the rank of Yeomen.

Gentlemen’s agreement. Generally an unsigned and unenforceable agreement made between parties who expect its performance because of good faith.

Genuine. As applied to notes, bonds, and other written instruments, this term means that they are truly what they purport to be, and that they are not false, forged, fictitious, simulated, spurious, or counterfeit. V.C.C. 24. A genuine issue of fact precluding summary judgment exists whenever there is slightest doubt as to facts. Seliga Shoe Stores, Inc. v. City of Maplewood, Mo.App., 558 S.W.2d 328, 331. See Fed. R.Civ. P. 56(c).

Genuine issue. Genuine issues which will preclude entry of summary judgment are issues which can be sustained by substantial evidence. Riss v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 103 Mont. 576, 64 P.2d 115, 119.

German /jərməˈn/. In close relationship, appropriate, relative, pertinent. State ex rel. Riley v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 103 Mont. 576, 64 P.2d 115, 119.

Germanus /jərməˈnəs/. Lat. Descended of the same stock, or from the same couple of ancestors; of the whole or full blood.

Gerontocomi /jɛrəntɔˈkʌmə/ In the civil law, officers appointed to manage hospitals for the aged poor.

Gerontocomium /jɛrəntɔˈkʌmjuːm/ In the civil law, an institution or hospital for taking care of the old.

Gerrymander /jɛrɪˈmændər/ A name given to the process of dividing a state or other territory into the authorized civil or political divisions, but with such a geographical arrangement as to accomplish an ulterior or unlawful purpose, as, for instance, to secure a majority for a given political party in districts where the result would be otherwise if they were divided according to obvious natural lines.

Gersumarius /jərˈsəməriəs/. In old English law, finable; liable to be amerced at the discretion of the lord of a manor.

Gersum /gərˈzəm/. In old English law, expense; reward; compensation; wealth. It is also used for a fine or compensation for an offense.

Gest. In Saxon law, a guest. A name given to a stranger on the second night of his entertainment in another’s house. Twelfth gest.

Gestation. The time during which a woman carries a fetus in her womb, from conception to birth. But, as used in medical authorities, this phrase does not mean the actual number of days from conception to birth. Dazey v. Dazey, 50 Cal.App.2d 15, 122 P.2d 308, 309.

Gestio /jɛs(h)ˈʃi(ʃ)əʊ/ In the civil law, behavior or conduct. Management or transaction. Negotiorum gestio, the doing of another’s business; an interference in the affairs of another in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority.

Gestio pro hærede /jɛs(h)ˈʃi(ʃ)əʊ prɒ hærɪˈdiʃ/. Behavior as heir. This expression was used in the Roman law, and adopted in the civil law and Scotch law, to denote conduct on the part of a person appointed heir to a deceased person, or otherwise entitled to succeed as heir, which indicates an intention to enter upon the inheritance, and to hold himself out as heir to creditors of the deceased; as by receiving the rents due to the deceased, or by taking possession of his title-deeds, etc. Such acts will render the heir liable to the debts of his ancestor.

Gestor /jɛstər/. In the civil law, one who acts for another, or transacts another’s business.

Gestu et fama /jɛst(ʊ)ʃʊ et fɛˈmaː/. An ancient and obsolete writ resorted to when a person’s good behavior was impeached.

Gestum /jɛstəm/. Lat. In Roman law, a deed or act; a thing done. Some writers affected to make a distinction between “gestum” and “factum.” But the best authorities pronounced this subtitle and indefensible.
Gesture. Motion of the body calculated to express a thought or used for emphasis. An act used as a sign of feeling, such as a gesture of friendship.

Get. To receive; gain possession of; obtain; to prevail or have influence on.

Under Hebraic law, evidence of the granting of a divorce. A bill of divorce among the Jews which is drawn in the Aramaic language, uniformly worded and carefully written by a proper scribe, and after proper ceremonies and questionings by the rabbi, especially as to whether both parties agree to the divorce, the husband hands to the wife in the presence of ten witnesses.

Gewineda /gawineda/. In Saxon law, the ancient convention of the people to decide a cause.

Gewitnessa /gswitnisa/. In Saxon and old English law, the giving of evidence.

Gewrite /garäydi/. In Saxon law, deeds or charters; writings.

Gibbet. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their bodies are exposed. It differs from a common gallows, in that it consists of one perpendicular post, from the top of which proceeds one arm, except it be a double gibbet, which is formed in the shape of the Roman capital T.

Gibbet law. Lynch law; in particular a custom anciently prevailing in the parish of Halifax, England, by which the free burgurers held a summary trial of any one accused of petit larceny, and, if they found him guilty, ordered him to be decapitated.

Gideon v. Wainwright. Landmark Supreme Court decision which held that provision guaranteeing a criminal defendant the assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment, U.S.Const., is binding on the states in state proceedings through the due process provision of the Fourteenth Amendment. 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792, 9 L.Ed.2d 799. See also Counsel, right to.

Gift. A voluntary transfer of property to another made gratuitously and without consideration. Bradley v. Bradley, Tex.Civ.App., 540 S.W.2d 504, 511. Essential requisites of "gift" are capacity of donor, intention of donor to make gift, completed delivery to or for donee, and acceptance of gift by donee.

In tax law, a payment is a gift if it is made without conditions, from detached and disinterested generosity, out of affection, respect, charity or like impulses, and not from the constraining force of any moral or legal duty or from the incentive of anticipated benefits of an economic nature.

An absolute gift, or gift inter vivos, as distinguished from a testamentary gift, or one made in contemplation of death, is one by which the donee becomes in the lifetime of the donor the absolute owner of the thing given, whereas a donatio mortis causa leaves the whole title in the donor, unless the event occurs (the death of the donor) which is to divest him.

The only important difference between a "gift" and a "voluntary trust" is that in the case of a gift the thing itself passes to the donee, while in the case of a trust the actual, beneficial, or equitable title passes to the cestui que trust, while the legal title is transferred to a third person, or retained by the person creating it. In re Alberts' Estate, 38 Cal.App.2d 42, 100 P.2d 538, 540.

In old English law, a conveyance of lands in tail; a conveyance of an estate tail in which the operative words are "I give," or "I have given." 2 Bl.Comm. 316.

See also Anatomical gift; Annual exclusion; Endowment; Symbolic delivery; Taxable gift; Vested gift.

Antenuptial gift. Voluntary transfer of property before a marriage from one spouse to another, commonly made in exchange for a waiver of rights to property after the marriage.

Gift causa mortis. See Gift to a class.

Gift in contemplation of death. In taxation, a gift made by donor within three years of his death is considered part of his gross estate for estate tax purposes. I.R.C. § 2035(b). More broadly, a gift by a donor immediately before his death while he has knowledge of his impending death. See also Gift causa mortis.

Testamentary gift. Voluntary transfer of property to take effect upon the death of the donor.

Gift causa mortis /gift köza mörðs/. A gift of personal property made in expectation of donor's death and on condition that donor die as anticipated. Antos v. Bocek, 9 Ariz.App. 368, 452 P.2d 533, 534. A "gift causa mortis" is effected only if the following conditions are met: the donor must be stricken with some disorder which makes death imminent, death of donor must ensue as a result of the disorder existing at time the gift was made without any intervening perfect recovery, gift must have been made to take effect only in event of donor's death by his existing disorder, and there must have been an actual delivery of the subject of the donation to the donee. In re Vardalos' Estate, 24 Ill.App.3d 520, 320 N.E.2d 568, 571. See also Gift (Gift in contemplation of death), supra.

Gift enterprise. A scheme for the division or distribution of articles to be determined by chance amongst those who have taken shares in the scheme. A sporting artifice by which, for example, a merchant or tradesman sells his wares for their market value, but, by way of inducement, gives to such purchaser a ticket which entitles him to a chance to win certain prizes to be determined after the manner of a lottery.

Gift inter vivos /gift íntar váyvows/. Gifts between the living, which are perfected and become absolute during lifetime of donor and donee. Neal v. Neal, 194 Ark. 226, 106 S.W.2d 595, 600. An immediate, voluntary, and gratuitous transfer of personality by one to another. Tilton v. Mullen, 101 Ohio App. 129, 137 N.E.2d 125, 128, 130. The essentials of an inter vivos gift are; (1) donative intention; (2) delivery to donee; in the case of a chose in action not capable of delivery, the donor must during his lifetime strip himself of all dominion over the thing taken; (3) acceptance by donee. In re Posey's Estate, 89 N.J. Super. 293, 214 A.2d 713, 719.
GIFT IN TRUST

Gift in trust. Gift made in such manner that the donee acquires legal title for the beneficial enjoyment of the cestui que trust.

Gift over. A gift to one for life, and from and after his death to another. Broadly, any transfer of property to take effect after the termination of an intermediate estate or estates such as a life estate, e.g. to A for life, remainder to B.

Gift splitting. Under this tax provision when a married man gives away his property, he may, if his spouse consents, treat the gift as though he had given away half of the property and his spouse had given away the other half. The net effect of the privilege of splitting gifts, which is optional and not mandatory, is to double the gift tax exclusions and exemptions, and by treating the gift as a gift by each spouse of half of the amount actually given away to cause the gift to be taxed in a lower bracket. I.R.C. § 2513.

Gifts to Minors Act. A Uniform Act adopted by most states providing for a means of transferring property (usually stocks and bonds) to a minor. The designated custodian of the property has the legal right to act on behalf of the minor without the necessity of a guardianship. Generally, the custodian possesses the right to change investments (e.g., sell one type of stock and buy another), apply the income from the custodial property to the minor's support, and even terminate the custodianship. In this regard, however, the custodian is acting in a fiduciary capacity on behalf of the minor. The custodian could not, for example, appropriate the property for his or her own use because it belongs to the minor. During the period of the custodianship, the income from the property is taxed to the minor. The custodianship terminates when the minor reaches legal age. One of the primary reasons for making gifts to minors pursuant to the requirements of the Uniform Act is to receive favorable tax treatment.

Gift tax. A tax imposed on the transfer of property by gift. Such tax is imposed upon the donor of a gift and is based on the fair market value of the property on the date of the gift. See also Tax.

Gift to a class. A gift of aggregate sum to body of persons uncertain in number at time of gift, to be ascertained at future time, who are all to take in equal shares, or some other definite proportion; share of each being dependent for its amount upon ultimate number taking. See also Class gift.

Gild. In Saxon law, a tax or tribute.

A fine, mulct, or amerciament; a satisfaction or compensation for an injury.

In old English law, a fraternity, society, or company of persons combined together, under certain regulations, and with the king's license, and so called because its expenses were defrayed by the contributions (geld, gild) of its members. In other words, a corporation; called, in Latin, "societas," "collegium," "frat­ria," "fraternitas," "sodalitium," "adunatio;" and, in foreign law, "gildonia." There were various kinds of these gilds, as merchant or commercial gilds, religious gilds, and others. See Gilda mercatoria; Guild.

A friborg, or decennary; called, by the Saxons, "gylbuttes," and its members, "gildones" and "con­gildones."
Give color. To admit an apparent or colorable right in the opposite party. In common law pleading, a plea of confession and avoidance had to give color to the affirmative averments of the complaint, or it would be fatally defective. The “giving color” was simply the absence of any denials, and the express or silent admission that the declaration, as far as it went, told the truth. See Color.

Give judgment. To render, pronounce, or declare the judgment of the court in an action at law; not spoken of a judgment obtained by confession.

Give notice. To communicate to another, in any proper or permissible legal manner, information or warning of an existing fact or state of facts or (more usually) of some intended future action; e.g. tenant giving landlord thirty day notice of termination of tenancy; employee giving employer two weeks notice of intention to quit; to give notice of appeal to appellee. See Notice.

Giver. A donor; he who makes a gift.

Give time. Extending the period at which, by the contract between them, the principal debtor was originally liable to pay the creditor. Buffalo Forge Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 142 Misc. 647, 256 N.Y.S. 329, 334.

Give way. In the rules of navigation, one vessel is said to “give way” to another when she deviates from her course in such a manner and to such an extent as to allow the other to pass without altering her course.

Giving in payment. In Louisiana law, a phrase (translating the Fr. “dation en paiement”) which signifies the delivery and acceptance of real or personal property in satisfaction of a debt, instead of a payment in money. Civil Code La. art. 265.

Gladius /gla:diy�s/. Lat. A sword. An ancient emblem of defense. Hence the ancient earls or tenants giving in payment.

Glean. The gathering of grain after reapers, or of grain left ungathered by reapers. Held not to be a right at common law.

Glebe /gleyb/. In Ecclesiastical law, the land possessed as part of the endowment or revenue of a church or ecclesiastical benefice.

In Roman law, a clod; turf; soil. Hence, the soil of an inheritance; an agrarian estate. Servi addiciti glebe were serfs attached to and passing with the estate.
God-bote. An ecclesiastical or church fine paid for crimes and offenses committed against God.

God-gild. That which is offered to God or his service.

God's penny. In old English law, earnest-money; money given as evidence of the completion of a bargain. This name is probably derived from the fact that such money was given to the church or distributed in alms.

Go hence. To depart from the court; with the further implication that a suitor who is directed to "go hence" is dismissed from further attendance upon the court in respect to the suit or proceeding which brought him there, and that he is finally denied the relief which he sought, or, as the case may be, absolved from the liability sought to be imposed upon him.

Going. In various compound phrases (as those which follow) this term implies either motion, progress, active operation, or present and continuous validity and efficacy.

Going and coming rule. Under this rule, employees who suffer injuries while going to and returning from work are generally excluded from the benefits of the Worker's Compensation Act. Wiley Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, 30 Md.App. 87, 351 A.2d 487, 490. Under the "going and coming" rule, an employee who is going to or coming from work is generally not, during such times, considered to be acting in the course or scope of his employment for purpose of applying the doctrine of respondeat superior. Sherar v. B and E Convalescent Center, 49 C.A.3d 227, 122 Cal.Rptr. 505, 506.

Going before the wind. In the language of mariners and in the rules of navigation, a vessel is said to be going "before the wind" when the wind is free as respects her course, that is, comes from behind the vessel or over the stern, so that her yards may be braced square across. She is said to be "going off large" when she has the wind free on either tack, that is, when it blows from some point abaft the beam or from the quarter.

Going concern. An enterprise which is being carried on as a whole, and with some particular object in view. The term refers to an existing solvent business, which is being conducted in the usual and ordinary way for which it was organized. When applied to a corporation, it means that it continues to transact its ordinary business. A firm or corporation which, though financially embarrassed, continues to transact its ordinary business. City and County of Denver v. Denver Union Water Co., 246 U.S. 178, 38 S.Ct. 278, 62 L.Ed. 649.

Going concern value. The value which inheres in a plant where its business is established, as distinguished from one which has yet to establish its business. East Bay Water Co. v. McLaughlin, D.C.Cal., 24 F.Supp. 222, 226. The value of the assets of a business as a going, active concern, rather than merely as items of property which would be the case in a liquidation sale. Such value includes goodwill.

Going off large. See Going before the wind.

Going price. The prevalent market price; the current market value of the article in question at the time and place of sale. See Fair market value.

Going private. Causing of a class of equity securities to be delisted from a national securities exchange or the causing of a class of equity securities which is authorized to be quoted in an inter-dealer quotation system of a registered national securities exchange to cease to be so authorized. Nearly all attempts to go private utilize variations of one or more of a limited number of basic techniques. These include (in probable order of frequency): (1) A cash tender offer by the issuer, its management or an affiliated entity; (2) a merger or consolidation of the issuer with, or the sale of its assets to, another corporation controlled by management of the issuer; (3) an exchange offer (almost always involving a debt security) by the issuer, its management or an affiliated entity; and (4) a reverse stock split.

Going public. Term used to describe the process by which a corporation issues its first stock for public purchase. Also, when a private corporation becomes a public corporation. Said of a business when its shares become traded to the general public, rather than being closely held by relatively few stockholders.

Going through the bar. The act of the chief of an English common-law court in demanding of every member of the bar, in order of seniority, if he has anything to move. This was done at the sitting of the court each day in term, except special paper days, crown paper days in the queen's bench, and revenue paper days in the exchequer. On the last day of term this order is reversed, the first and second time round. In the exchequer the postman and tubman are first called on.

Going to the country. When a party, under the common-law system of pleading, finished his pleading by the words "and of this he puts himself upon the country," this was called "going to the country." It was the essential termination of a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading.

Going value. See Going concern value.

Going witness. One who is about to take his departure from the jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the general sovereignty; as from one to another of the United States.

Gold bond. One payable in gold coin or its equivalent, which means any money acceptable to United States government in payment of debts due it.

Golden Rule argument. "Golden Rule" type of argument, by which jurors are urged to place themselves or members of their families or friends in place of person who has been offended and to render verdict as if they or either of them or member of their families or friends was similarly situated, is improper in both civil and criminal cases. Lycans v. Com., Ky., 562 S.W.2d 303.

Goldsmiths' notes. Bankers' cash notes (i.e., promissory notes given by a banker to his customers as acknowledgments of the receipt of money) were originally called in London "goldsmiths' notes," from the circumstance that all the banking business in England was originally transacted by goldsmiths.

Gold standard. A monetary system in which every form of currency is convertible on demand into its legal equivalent in gold or gold coin. The United States adopted the gold standard in 1900 and terminated it in 1934.

Goldwit. A mulct or fine in gold.

Gomashtah /gəˈmɑːʃtə/. In Hindu law, an agent; a steward; a confidential factor; a representative.

Good. Valid; sufficient in law; effectual; unobjectionable; sound; responsible; solvent; able to pay an amount specified.

Of a value corresponding with its terms; collectible. A note is said to be "good" when the payment of it at maturity may be relied on.

Good abearing. See Abearance.

Good and clear record title, free from all incumbrances. A title which on the record itself can be again sold as free from obvious defects and substantial doubts, and differs from a "good, marketable title," which is an actual title, but which may be established by evidence independently of the record.

Good and valid. Reliable, sufficient, and unimpeachable in law; adequate; responsible.

Good and workmanlike manner. In a manner generally considered skillful by those capable of judging such work in the community of the performance.

Good behavior. Orderly and lawful conduct; behavior such as is proper for a peaceable and law-abiding citizen. "Good behavior," as used in an order suspending sentence upon a defendant during good behavior, means merely conduct conformable to law, or to the particular law theretofore breached.

Under some state penal systems, each day of "good behavior" by a prisoner reduces his or her sentence by one day. See also Goodtime allowance.

Good cause. Substantial reason, one that affords a legal excuse. Legally sufficient ground or reason. Phrase "good cause" depends upon circumstances of individual case, and finding of its existence lies largely in discretion of officer or court to which decision is committed. Wilson v. Morris, Mo., 369 S.W.2d 402, 407. "Good cause" is a relative and highly abstract term, and its meaning must be determined not only by verbal context of statute in which term is employed but also by context of action and procedures involved in type of case presented. Wray v. Folsom, D.C.Ark., 166 F.Supp. 390, 394, 395. See also Probable cause.

Discovery. "Good cause" for discovery is present if information sought is material to moving party's trial preparation. Daniels v. Allen Industries, Inc., 391 Mich. 398, 216 N.W.2d 762, 766. "Good cause" requirement for discovery and production of documents is ordinarily satisfied by a factual allegation showing that requested documents are necessary to establishment of the movant's claim or that denial of production would cause moving party hardship or injustice. Black v. Sheraton Corp. of America, D.D.C., 47 F.R.D. 263, 273. Under a 1970 amendment to Fed.R.Civ.P. 34, however, "good cause" is no longer required to be shown for production of documents and things. Federal Rule 35(a) does, however, require that "good cause" be shown for order requiring physical or mental examination, as does Rule 26(c) for protective orders to restrict scope of discovery.

Quitting employment. "Good cause" for leaving one's employment is such good cause as would compel a reasonably prudent person to quit under similar circumstances. Chamblee v. Employment Division, Or.App., 541 P.2d 165, 167.

Unemployment compensation. "Good cause" within statute denying unemployment compensation benefits if claimant has refused without good cause to accept an offer of suitable work is that cause that to an ordinary intelligent man is a justifiable reason for doing or not doing a certain particular thing. Wallace v. Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, Ohio Com.Pl., 160 N.E.2d 580, 582.

Good character. Sum or totality of virtues of a person which generally forms the basis for one's reputation in the community, though his reputation is distinct from his character. See Character; Reputation.

Good conduct. See Certificate of good conduct.

Good consideration. Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise. That consideration or detriment which the law considers valid and to this extent "good" does not refer to moral goodness. See Consideration.

Good faith. Good faith is an intangible and abstract quality with no technical meaning or statutory definition, and it encompasses, among other things, an honest belief, the absence of malice and the absence of design to defraud or to seek an unconscionable advantage, and an individual's personal good faith is concept of his own mind and inner spirit and, therefore, may not conclusively be determined by his pretensions alone. Doyle v. Gordon, 158 N.Y.S.2d 248, 259, 260. Honesty of intention, and freedom from knowledge of circumstances which ought to put the holder upon inquiry. An honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through technicalities of law, together with absence of all information, notice, or benefit or belief of facts which render transaction unconscientious. In common usage this term is ordinarily used to...
GOOD FAITH

describe that state of mind denoting honesty of purpose, freedom from intention to defraud, and, generally speaking, means being faithful to one's duty or obligation. Efron v. Kalmanovitz, 249 Cal.App. 187, 57 Cal.Rptr. 248, 251. See Bona fide.

Commercial law. Honesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned. U.C.C. § 1–201(19). In the case of a merchant, honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in the trade. U.C.C. § 2–103(1)(b).

Good faith purchaser. Those who buy without notice of circumstances which would put a person of ordinary prudence on inquiry as to the title of seller.

Good health. Good health, as employed in insurance contract, ordinarily means a reasonably good state of health. It means that the applicant has no grave, important, or serious disease, and is free from any ailment which seriously affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system. A mere temporary indisposition not tending to weaken or undermine constitution does not render a person in "bad health". It does not mean a condition of perfect health.

Good jury. A jury of which the members are selected from the list of special jurors.

Good, merchantable abstract of title. An abstract showing a good title, clear from incumbrances, and not merely an abstract of matters of record affecting the title, made by one engaged in the business of making abstracts in such form as is customary, as passing current among persons buying and selling real estate and examining titles. See also Marketable title.

Good order. Goods or property are in "good order" when they are in acceptable condition under all the circumstances. See Merchantability.

Good record title. A "good record title," without words of limitation, means that the proper records shall show an unincumbered, fee-simple title, the legal estate in free, fee and clear of all valid claims, liens, and incumbrances. See also Marketable title.

Good repute. An expression, synonymous with and meaning only "of good reputation." See Reputation.

Goodright, goodtitle. The fictitious plaintiff in the old action of ejectment, most frequently called "John Doe," was sometimes called "Goodright" or "Goodtitle."

Goods. A term of variable content and meaning. It may include every species of personal property or it may be given a very restricted meaning.

Items of merchandise, supplies, raw materials, or finished goods. Sometimes the meaning of "goods" is extended to include all tangible items, as in the phrase "goods and services."

All things (including specially manufactured goods) which are movable at the time of identification to the contract for sale other than the money in which the price is to be paid, investment securities and things in action. Also includes the unborn of animals and growing crops and other identified things attached to realty as fixtures. U.C.C. § 2–105(1). All things treated as movable for the purposes of a contract of storage or transportation. U.C.C. § 7–102(1)(f).

As used with reference to collateral for security interest, goods include all things which are movable at the time the security interest attaches or which are fixtures (for definition, see Sections 9–105(1)(b) of the 1972 U.C.C.; § 9–105(1)(f) of the 1962 U.C.C.

See also Confusion of goods; Future goods; Identification of goods.

Capital goods. The equipment and machinery used in production of other goods or services.

Consumer goods. Goods which are used or bought for use primarily for personal, family or household purposes. U.C.C. § 9–109(1). See also Consumer goods.

Durable goods. Goods which have a reasonably long life and which are not generally consumed in use; e.g. refrigerator.

Fungible goods. Goods, every unit of which is similar to every other unit in the mass; e.g. uniform goods such as coffee, grain, etc. U.C.C. § 1–201.

Hard goods. Consumer durable goods. See Durable goods, supra.

Soft goods. Generally consumer goods such as wearing apparel, curtains, etc., in contrast to hard goods.

Good Samaritan doctrine. One who sees a person in imminent and serious peril through negligence of another cannot be charged with contributory negligence as a matter of law, in risking his own life or serious injury in attempting to effect a rescue, provided the attempt is not recklessly or rashly made. Jobst v. Butler Well Servicing, Inc., 190 Kan. 86, 372 P.2d 55, 59. Under doctrine, negligence of a volunteer rescuer must worsen position of person in distress before liability will be imposed. U. S. v. DeVane, C.A.Fla., 306 F.2d 182, 186. This protection from liability is provided by statute in most states.

Goods and chattels. This phrase is a general denomination of personal property, as distinguished from real property. In the law of wills, the term "goods and chattels" will, unless restrained by the context, pass all the personal estate.

Goods sold and delivered. A phrase frequently used in the action of assumpsit, when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

Goods, wares, and merchandise. A general and comprehensive designation of such chattels and goods as are ordinarily the subject of traffic and sale. The phrase is used in the statute of frauds, and is sometimes found in pleadings and other instruments.

Goodtime allowance. "Good time" is awarded for good conduct and reduces period of sentence which prisoner must spend in prison although it does not reduce the period of the sentence itself. Carothers v. Follette, D.C.N.Y., 314 F.Supp. 1014, 1026, 1027. Credit allowed on the sentence which is given for satisfactorily conduct in prison. Introduced as an incentive for inmates, it has become practically automatically awarded. It may reduce the minimum or maximum sentence or both. See also Good behavior.

Good title. One free from reasonable doubt, that is, not only a valid title in fact, but one that can again be sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a Good will. The favor which the management of a business wins from the public. Seneca Hotel Co. v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 42 F.2d 343, 344. The fixed and favorable consideration of customers arising from established and well-conducted business. Colton v. Duvall, 254 Mich. 346, 237 N.W. 48, 49. The favorable consideration shown by the purchasing public to goods known to emanate from a particular source. White Tower System v. White Castle System of Eating Houses Corporation, C.C.A.Mich., 90 F.2d 67, 69. Good will is an intangible asset. Something in business which gives reasonable expectancy of preference in race of competition. In re Wikkind's Estate, 167 Misc. 885, 4 N.Y.S.2d 933, 947. The custom or patronage of any established trade or business; the benefit or advantage of having established a business and secured its patronage by the public. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices. And as property incident to business sold, favor vendor has won from public, and probability that all customers will continue their patronage. It means every advantage, every positive advantage, that has been acquired by a proprietor in carrying on his business, whether connected with the premises in which the business is conducted, or with the name under which it is managed, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the business.

The excess of cost of an acquired firm or operating unit over the current or fair market value of net assets of the acquired unit. Informally used to indicate the value of good customer relations, high employee morale, a well-respected business name, etc. which are expected to result in greater than normal earning power.

The ability of a business to generate income in excess of a normal rate on assets due to superior managerial skills, market position, new product technology, etc. In the purchase of a business, good will represents the difference between the purchase price and the value of the net assets. Good will is an intangible asset which possesses an indefinite life and cannot, therefore, be amortized for Federal income tax purposes.

Gore. In old English law, a small, narrow slip of ground. In modern land law, a small triangular piece of land, such as may be left between surveys which do not close. In some of the New England states (as Maine and Vermont) the term is applied to a subdivision of a county, having a scanty population and for that reason not organized as a town.

Gossipred /gósapréd/. In canon law, comaternity; spiritual affinity.

Go to. In a statute, will, or other instrument, a direction that property shall “go to” a designated person means that it shall pass or proceed to such person, vest in and belong to him.

Go to protest. Commercial paper is said to “go to protest” when it is dishonored by non-payment or non-acceptance. See also Protest.

Govern. To direct and control the actions or conduct of, either by established laws or by arbitrary will; to direct and control, rule, or regulate, by authority. To be a rule, precedent, law or deciding principle for.

Governing body. Governing body of institution, organization or territory means that body which has ultimate power to determine its policies and control its activities. Student Bar Ass'n Bd. of Governors of School of Law, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill v. Byrd, N.C., 239 S.E.2d 415, 421.

Government. From the Latin gubernaculum. Signifies the instrument, the helm, whereby the ship to which the state was compared, was guided on its course by the “gubernator” or helmsman, and in that view, the government is but an agency of the state, distinguished as it must be in accurate thought from its scheme and machinery of government.

In the United States, government consists of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches in addition to administrative agencies. In a broader sense, includes the federal government and all its agencies and bureaus, state and county governments, and city and township governments.

The system of polity in a state; that form of fundamental rules and principles by which a nation or state is governed, or by which individual members of a body politic are to regulate their social actions. A constitution, either written or unwritten, by which the rights and duties of citizens and public officers are prescribed and defined, as a monarchical government, a republican government, etc. The sovereign or supreme power in a state or nation. The machinery by which the sovereign power in a state expresses its will and exercises its functions; or the framework of political institutions, departments, and offices, by means of which the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state is carried on.

The whole class or body of officeholders or functionaries considered in the aggregate, upon whom devolves the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state.

In a colloquial sense, the United States or its representatives, considered as the prosecutor in a criminal action; as in the phrase, “the government objects to the witness.”

The regulation, restraint, supervision, or control which is exercised upon the individual members of an organized jural society by those invested with authority; or the act of exercising supreme political power or control.

See also De facto government; Federal government; Judiciary; Legislature; Seat of government.

Federal government. The government of the United States of America, as distinguished from the governments of the several states.
Local government. The government or administration of a particular locality; especially, the governmental authority of a municipal corporation, as a city or county, over its local and individual affairs, exercised in virtue of power delegated to it for that purpose by the general government of the state or nation.

Mixed government. A form of government combining some of the features of two or all of the three primary forms, viz., monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy.

Republican government. One in which the powers of sovereignty are vested in the people and are exercised by the people, either directly, or through representatives chosen by the people, to whom those powers are specially delegated. In re Duncan, 139 U.S. 449, 11 S.Ct. 573, 35 L.Ed. 219; Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 162, 22 L.Ed. 627.

Governmental. Of, pertaining to, or proceeding from government.

Governmental activity. A function of government in providing for its own support or in providing services to the public; e.g. taxation and the collection of taxes. Gobie v. Zolot, 144 Neb. 70, 12 N.W.2d 311, 312. Generally, when a municipality's activity is for advantage of state as a whole, or is in performance of a duty imposed by sovereign power, activity is "public" and "governmental." Department of Treasury v. City of Evansville, Ind., 223 Ind. 435, 60 N.E.2d 952, 955. See Governmental act; Governmental functions.

Governmental agency. A subordinate creature of federal, state or local government created to carry out a governmental function or to implement a statute or statutes. For example, the Federal Trade Commission was created and functions to implement and enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act and various other federal antitrust and consumer protection laws. See also Administrative agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental agents. Those performing services and duties of a public character for benefit of all citizens of community. The term includes firemen and policemen. Miller v. City of Albany, 158 Misc. 720, 287 N.Y.S. 889, 891.

Governmental body. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental duties. Those duties of a municipality that have reference to some part or element of the state's sovereignty granted it to be exercised for the benefit of the public, and all other duties are "proprietary". Those duties that the framers of the Constitution intended each member of the union of states would assume in order adequately to function under the form of government guaranteed by the Constitution. First State Bank of Gainesville v. Thomas, D.C.Tex., 38 F.Supp. 849, 851. See also Governmental functions.

Governmental enterprise. A project or undertaking by the government of a more or less permanent nature, such as a drainage district. Ronick v. United States Sugar Corporation, C.C.A.Fla., 120 F.2d 418, 421.

Governmental facility. A building or institution provided by the government to care for a specified need, such as a courthouse or county jail. Haney v. Town of Rainelle, 125 W.Va. 397, 25 S.E.2d 207, 211.

Governmental functions. The functions of a municipality which are essential to its existence, in sense of serving public at large, and are to be distinguished from those which are private, which are not necessary to its existence, and which enure to advantage of its inhabitants. City of New Rochelle v. State, 34 Misc.2d 454, 228 N.Y.S.2d 279, 282. Activities which are carried on by city, pursuant to state requirement, in discharge of state's obligation for health, safety or general welfare of public generally, or which are voluntarily assumed by city for benefit of public generally rather than for its own citizens, are performed in governmental capacity and as "governmental function". Sarmiento v. City of Corpus Christi, Tex.Civ.App., 465 S.W.2d 813, 816, 818.

Governmental immunity. The federal, state and local governments are not amenable to actions in tort except in cases in which they have consented to be sued. The federal government under the Federal Tort Claims Act has waived its immunity in certain cases "in the same manner and to the same extent as a private individual under like circumstances." 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1346(b), 2674. Most states have also waived governmental immunity to various degrees at both the state and municipal government levels. See Federal Tort Claims Act.

Governmental instrumentality. Any agency constitutionally or legislatively created. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency; Governmental subdivision.

Governmental interests. In conflicts of law, term used to describe the particular governmental policies of a jurisdiction in terms of whether its law or another law should be applied in a choice of law issue.

Governmental powers. The totality of power which reposes in a government enabling it to carry out its proper functions as a sovereign. General powers of federal government are enumerated in U.S. Constitution; powers of state governments in state constitutions; municipal governments in charters.

Governmental privileges. See Governmental secrets.

Governmental purpose. One which has for its objective the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, general welfare, security, prosperity and contentment of the inhabitants of a given political division. See also Governmental functions.

Governmental secrets. In evidence, a privilege exists which protects the government from revealing military or diplomatic secrets or other information the disclosure of which would be contrary to the public interest. U. S. v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 1, 73 S.Ct. 528, 97 L.Ed. 727. See also Executive privilege.

Governmental subdivision. An agency created to carry out a governmental purpose or function. See Administrative agency; Governmental agency.

Governmental survey. General mapping out by government of towns, sections, quarter sections, etc.; sometimes known as congressional survey. See also Government survey system.

Governmental trusts. Type of charitable trust used for erection and maintenance of public buildings and for the promotion of purposes which are of a character sufficiently beneficial to the community to justify permitting property to be devoted forever to their accomplishment. Restatement, Second, Trusts, §§ 373, 374.

Government annuities societies. Societies formed in England under 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 14, 7 & 8 Vict., c. 83, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 45, and 27 & 28 Vict., c. 43, to enable the industrious classes to make provisions for themselves by purchasing, on advantageous terms, a government annuity for life or term of years.

Government bonds. See Bond.

Government contract. See Procurement contract.

Government de facto. A government of fact. A government actually exercising power and control, as opposed to the true and lawful government; a government not established according to the constitution of the nation, or not lawfully entitled to recognition or supremacy, but which has nevertheless supplanted or displaced the government de jure. A government deemed unlawful, or deemed wrongful or unjust, which, nevertheless, receives presently habitual obedience from the bulk of the community.

There are several degrees of what is called "de facto government." Such a government, in its highest degree, assumes a character very closely resembling that of a lawful government. This is when the usurping government expels the regular authorities from their customary seats and functions, and establishes itself in their place, and so becomes the actual government of a country. The distinguishing characteristic of such a government is that adherents to it in war against the government de jure do not incur the penalties of treason; and, under certain limitations, obligations assumed by it in behalf of the country or otherwise will, in general, be respected by the government de jure when restored. Such a government might be more aptly denominated a "government of paramount force," being maintained by active military power against the rightful authority of an established and lawful government, and obeyed in civil matters by private citizens. They are usually administered directly by military authority, but they may be administered, also, by civil authority, supported more or less by military force. Thorington v. Smith, 75 U.S. (4 Wall.) 1, 19 L.Ed. 361.

Government de jure (government dij juri/.) A government of right; the true and lawful government; a government established according to the constitution of the nation, and lawfully entitled to recognition and supremacy and the administration of the nation, but which is actually cut off from power or control. A government deemed lawful, or deemed rightful or just, which, nevertheless, has been supplanted or displaced; that is to say, which receives not presently (although it received formerly) habitual obedience from the bulk of the community.

Government immunity. See Governmental immunity.

Government instrumentality doctrine. The doctrine that government instrumentalities are tax exempt.

Government National Mortgage Association. Agency of Federal government (division of HUD) which, among its other functions, makes a market for higher risk loans by acquiring such from lenders who would otherwise not make such mortgage loans. Referred to as "Ginnie Mae."

Government of laws. Fundamental principle of American jurisprudence which requires decisions of courts to be based on laws, statutory and common law, irrespective of the character of the litigants and the personal predilections of the judges.

Government survey system. A type of legal description whereby the United States is generally divided into checks or tracts of ground. These are further broken down by smaller descriptions, such as metes and bounds. See also Governmental survey; Metes and bounds.

Government tort. A wrong perpetrated by the government through an employee or agent or instrumentality under its control which may or may not be actionable depending upon whether there is governmental tort immunity. Tort actions against the federal government are governed by the Federal Tort Claims Act; many states also have Tort Claims Acts. See Governmental immunity.

Governor. The chief executive official of a state in the United States, and territories of the United States; and also of the chief magistrate of some colonies, provinces, and dependencies of other nations. Governors serve terms ranging from two to four years; are usually restricted to two terms in office; possess veto powers, powers to call special sessions of legislature, powers to pardon and reprieve, and many other appointive, administrative, and financial powers. See also Lieutenant governor.

Go without day. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed by the court. He is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for him to appear again.
Grades. A favor or indulgence as distinguished from a right. See also Days of grace; Grace, days of; Grace period; Of grace.

Grace period. In insurance law, a period beyond the due date of premium (usually 30 or 31 days) during which insurance is continued in force and during which payment may be made to keep policy in good standing. The grace period for payment of premium does not contemplate free insurance or operate to continue the policy in force after it expires by agreement of the parties. Miller v. Travelers Ins. Co., 143 Pa.Super. 270, 17 A.2d 907, 909.

Gradatim /gradéydam/. In old English law, by degrees or steps; step by step; from one degree to another.

Grade, v. To establish a level by mathematical points and lines, and then to bring the surface of the street or highway to the level by the elevation or depression of the natural surface to the line fixed. To bring property to the level of an abutting highway. Nassau County v. O'Connell, Sup., 37 N.Y.S.2d 1009, 1012.

Grade, n. Used in reference to streets: (1) The line of the street's inclination from the horizontal; (2) a part of a street inclined from the horizontal. The hypothetical line to which the work is to be constructed. Musto-Keenan Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 139 Cal. App. 506, 34 P.2d 506, 509. The street wrought to the line.

"Grades of crime" in legal parlance are understood as higher or lower in grade or degree, according to the measure of punishment attached and meted out on conviction and the consequences resulting to the party convicted; e.g. first, second or, third degree murder.

Quality, value, relative position, rank, status, or standing. Mossman v. Chicago & Southern Air Lines, 236 Mo.App. 282, 153 S.W.2d 799, 801, 802.

Grade crossing. A place where a railroad is crossed at grade by a public or private road, or by another railroad, or where one highway crosses another.

Graded offense. One for which offender is subject to a more severe penalty for a higher grade than for a lower grade of offense according to terms of statute; e.g. first degree murder, as opposed to second or third degree; aggravated as opposed to simple assault.

Graduate. One who has received a degree, or other evidence of completion, from a grade school, high school, trade or vocational school, college, university, graduate or professional school, or the like.

Graduated lease. A type of lease arrangement which provides that rent will vary depending upon future contingencies, such as the amount of traffic or gross income produced.

Graduated tax. Tax structured so that the rate increases as the amount of income of taxpayer increases. For example, the federal income tax is a graduated tax.

Gradus /gréyas/. In the civil and old English law, a measure of space. A degree of relationship.

A step or degree generally; e.g., gradus honorum, degrees of honor. A pulpit; a year; a generation.

A port; any place where a vessel can be brought to land.

Gradus parentelas /gréyas pàrərantiyli/. A pedigree; a table of relationship.

Graffarius /grafréiyas/. In old English law, a graffer, notary, or scrivener.

Graffer /gréfar/. A notary or scrivener. The word is a corruption of the French "greffier" (q.v.).

Grafo /gréff(i)yow/. A baron, inferior to a count. A fiscal judge. An advocate.

Graft. The popular meaning is the fraudulent obtaining of public money unlawfully by the corruption of public officers. Smith v. Pure Oil Co., 278 Ky. 430, 128 S.W.2d 931, 933. Advantage or personal gain received because of peculiar position or superior influence of one holding position of trust and confidence without rendering compensatory services, or dishonest transaction in relation to public or official acts, and sometimes implies theft, corruption, dishonesty, fraud, or swindle, and always want of integrity. See also Bribery.

A term used in equity to denote the confirmation, by relation back, of the right of a mortgagee in premises to which, at the making of the mortgage, the mortgagor had only an imperfect title, but to which the latter has since acquired a good title.

Grain. In Troy weight, the twenty-fourth part of a pennyweight. Any kind of corn sown in the ground.

Grainage. An ancient duty in London under which the twentieth part of salt imported by aliens was taken.

Grain rent. A payment for the use of land in grain or other crops; the return to the landlord paid by sharecroppers or persons working the land on shares.

Grammar school. In England, this term designates a school in which such instruction is given as will prepare the student to enter a college or university, and in this sense the phrase was used in the Massachusetts Colonial Act of 1647, requiring every town containing a hundred households to set up a "grammar school." But in American usage the term usually denotes a school, intermediate between the primary school and the high school.

Grammatica falsa non vitiat chartam /gramádaká fólssə nón višiyat kárdam/. False grammar does not vitiate a deed.

Grammatophylacium /grámatsfálésh(y)iəm/. In the civil law, a place for keeping writings or records.
Gramme /ˌɡræm/. The unit of weight in the metric system. The gramme is the weight of a cubic centimeter of distilled water at the temperature of 4°C. It is equal to 15.4341 grains troy, or 5.6481 drachms avoirdupois.

Granatarius /ˌɡreɪnəˈtɪəriəs/. In old English law, an officer having charge of a granary.

Grand, n. Jargon term for one thousand dollars.

As to grand Assize; Bill of sale; Cape; Distress; Jury; Larceny; Serjeanty, see those titles.

Grand coutumier /ˌɡrɒn kʌtwɪˈmɛr/. A collection of customs, laws, and forms of procedure in use in early times in France. See Coutumier.

Grand days. In English practice, certain days in the terms, which are solemnly kept in the inns of court and chancery, viz., Candlemas day in Hilary term, Ascension day in Easter, St. John the Baptist day in Trinity, and All Saints in Michaelmas; which are dies non juridici. They are days set apart for peculiar festivity; the members of the respective inns being on such occasions regaled at their dinner in the hall, with more than usual sumptuousness.

Grandfather. The father of either of one's parents.

Grandfather clause. Provision in a new law or regulation exempting those already in or a part of the existing system which is being regulated. An exception to a restriction that allows all those already doing something to continue doing it even if they would be stopped by the new restriction. A clause introduced into several of the constitutions of the southern states, limiting the right to vote to those who can read and write any article of the constitution of the United States, and have worked or been regularly employed in some lawful employment for the greater part of the year next preceding the time they offer to register unless prevented from labor or ability to read or write by physical disability, or who own property assessed at three hundred dollars upon which the taxes have been paid; but excepting those who have served in the army or navy of the United States or in the Confederate States in time of war, their lawful descendants in every degree, and persons of good character who understand the duties and obligations of citizenship under a republican form of government.

One of the original purposes of the "grandfather" clause of the Motor Carrier Act was to permit the continued operation of carrier businesses already established prior to passage of the Act. Transamerican Freight Lines v. United States, D.C.Del., 51 F.Supp. 405, 409.

Grand jury. See Jury.

Grand jury investigation. Investigations conducted by a grand jury into possible wrongdoing. Generally, such are conducted under the aegis of the prosecuting official and they may or may not result in indictments. See Jury (Grand jury).

Grandmother. The mother of either of one's parents.

Grand remonstrance. A constitutional document passed by the British House of Commons in November, 1641. It was in the nature of an appeal to the country, setting forth political grievances. It consisted of a preamble of 20 clauses and the body of the remonstrance with 206 clauses, each of which was voted separately. Its first remedial measure was against papists; its second demanded that all illegal grievances and exactions should be presented and punished at the sessions and assizes and that judges and justices should be sworn to the due execution of the Petition of Rights and other laws. The third was a series of precautions to prevent the employment of evil councillors.

Grange. A farm furnished with barns, granaries, stables, and all conveniences for husbandry.

Grange cases. A name applied to six cases decided by the supreme court of the United States in 1876, which are reported in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L.Ed. 77; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U.S. 155, 24 L.Ed. 94; Peik v. Ry. Co., 94 U.S. 164, 24 L.Ed. 97; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ackley, 94 U.S. 179, 24 L.Ed. 99; Winona & St. Peter R. Co. v. Blake, 94 U.S. 180, 24 L.Ed. 99; those most frequently cited being Munn v. Illinois, and C., B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa. They are so called because they arose out of an agitation commenced by the grangers which resulted in the enactment of statutes for the regulation of the tolls and charges of common carriers, warehousemen, and the proprietors of elevators. The enforcement of these acts was resisted and their constitutionality questioned. The supreme court affirmed the common-law doctrine that private property appropriated by the owner to a public use is thereby subjected to public regulation. They also held that the right of regulation was not restrained by the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution against the taking by the states of private property without due process of law.

Grangia /ˌɡrænˈdʒiə/. A grange.

Grant. To bestow; to confer upon some one other than the person or entity which makes the grant. Porto Rico Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Colom, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 106 F.2d 345, 354. To bestow or confer, without compensation, a gift or bestowal by one having control or authority over it, as of land or money. Palmer v. U. S. Civil Service Commission, D.C.Ill., 191 F.Supp. 495, 537.

A conveyance; i.e., transfer of title by deed or other instrument. Dearing v. Brush Creek Coal Co., 182 Tenn. 302, 186 S.W.2d 329, 331. Transfer of property real or personal by deed or writing. Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Plestcheeff, C.C.A.9, 100 F.2d 62, 64, 65. A generic term applicable to all transfers of real property, including transfers by operation of law as well as voluntary transfers. White v. Rosenthal, 140 Cal.App. 184, 35 P.2d 154, 155. A technical term made use of in deeds of conveyance of lands to import a transfer. A deed for an incorporeal interest such as a reversion.

As distinguished from a mere license, a grant passes some estate or interest, corporeal or incorporeal, in the lands which it embraces.
Grant

To give or permit as a right or privilege; e.g., grant of route authority to a public carrier.

By the word "grant," in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, whether written or parol, express, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by a patent pursuant to a law. Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U.S. 179, 5 S.Ct. 407, 28 L.Ed. 908.

In England, an act evidenced by letters patent under the great seal, granting something from the king to a subject.

Gratis dictum /gréydas dik.təm/. A voluntary assertion; a statement which a party is not legally bound to make, or in which he is not held to precise accuracy.

Gratuitous. Given or granted without valuable or legal consideration. A term applied to deeds of conveyance and to bailments and other contracts.

In old English law, voluntary; without force, fear, or favor.

As to gratuitous Bailment; Contract; Deposit, see those titles. See also Gratis.

Gratuitous bailee. Person to whom possession of personal property is transferred and who furnishes no consideration for such transfer and hence is required to use great care to avoid liability for negligence. One responsible for goods entrusted to him when goods are damaged or lost through his gross negligence. Christensen v. Dady, 238 Ark. 577, 383 S.W.2d 283, 285.
Gratuitous guest. In automobile law, a person riding at invitation of owner or authorized agent without payment of a consideration or fare. Hart v. Hogan, 173 Wash. 598, 24 P.2d 99. See Guest.

Gratuitous licensee. See Gratuitous guest; Guest.

Gratuitous passenger. See Gratuitous guest; Guest.

Gratuity. Something given freely or without recompense; a gift. Something voluntarily given in return for a favor or especially a service, hence, a bounty; a tip; a compensation for a privilege or immunity. See Care; Pond; Seal; Tithes; see those titles.

Grave. An excavation in earth in which a dead body is or is to be buried, or place for interment of a corpse, such as a tomb, or a sepulcher.

Graveyard. A cemetery; a place for the interment of dead bodies; sometimes defined in statutes as a place where a minimum number of persons (as "six or more") are buried.

Graveyard insurance. A term applied to insurances fraudulently obtained (as, by false personation or other means) on the lives of infants, very aged persons, or those in the last stages of disease. Also occasionally applied to an insurance company which writes wager policies, takes extra-hazardous risks, or otherwise exceeds the limits of prudent and legitimate business.

Gravis /greyviyas/; Gravius /greyviyas/. A graf; a chief magistrate or officer. A term derived from the more ancient words, as an official title in Germany; as Rheingravius, Landgravius, etc.

Gravius est divinam quam temporalem iedere majestatem /greyviyas est davaynam kwem tempereytam. It is more serious to hurt divine than temporal majesty.

Gray’s inn. An inn of court. See Inns of court.

Great. Considerable in magnitude, power, importance, intensity or degree. Thompson v. Anderson, 107 Utah 331, 153 P.2d 665, 666. As used in various compound legal terms, this word generally means extraordinary, that is, exceeding the common or ordinary measure or standard, in respect to physical size, or importance, dignity, etc.

For presumption great, see Proof. As to great Care; Pond; Seal; Tithes; see those titles.

Great bodily injury. The term "great bodily injury" as used in statute stating when an assault and battery becomes aggravated, is not susceptible of precise definition, but implies an injury of a graver and more serious character than ordinary battery. Herrington v. State, Okl.Cr., 352 P.2d 931, 933.

Great charter. Magna Charta (q.v.).

Great-grandchildren. Children of one’s grandchildren.

Great Law, The. "The Body of Laws of the Province of Pennsylvania and Territories thereunto belonging. Past at an Assembly held at Chester alias Upland, the 7th day of the tenth month, called ‘December,’ 1682.” This was the first code of laws established in Pennsylvania, and is justly celebrated for the provision in its first chapter for liberty of conscience.

Great tithes. In ecclesiastical law, the more valuable tithes: as, corn, hay, and wood. See Tithes.

Great writ of liberty. The writ of "habeas corpus and subjiciendum", issuing at common law out of courts of Chancery, King’s Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer. See Habeas corpus.

Gree. Satisfaction for an offense committed or injury done.

Grog-shop. A liquor saloon, bar, liquor store, or drapery shop; a place where intoxicating liquor is sold.

Gross. Great; culpable; general; absolute. A thing in gross exists in its own right, and not as an appendage to another thing. Before or without diminution or deduction. Whole; entire; total; as the gross sum, amount, weight—opposed to net. State v. Hallenberg-Wagner Motor Co., 341 Mo. 771, 108 S.W.2d 398, 401. Not adjusted or reduced by deductions or subtractions. Contrast with Net.

Out of all measure; beyond allowance; flagrant; shameful; as a gross dereliction of duty, a gross injustice, gross carelessness or negligence. State Board of Dental Examiners v. Savelle, 90 Colo. 177, 8 P.2d 693, 697. Such conduct as is not to be excused.

As to gross Adventure; Average; Fault; Weight, see those titles.

Gross alimony. The terms "alimony in gross" and "gross alimony" are applied to an amount agreed upon or determined in full or in lieu of all alimony, and such amount is frequently payable in installments. Whitney v. Whitney, 15 Ill.App.2d 425, 146 N.E.2d 800, 804. See also Alimony.

Grosse aventure /grøws avontyur/. Fr. In French marine law, the contract of bottomry.

Gross estate. The property owned or previously transferred by a decedent that will be subject to the Federal death tax. It can be distinguished from the probate estate which is property actually subject to administration by the administrator or executor of an estate. I.R.C. §§ 2031–2044. See also Adjusted gross estate.

Gross income. Under I.R.C. Section 61(a) gross income means all income from whatever source derived, including (but not limited to) the following items: (1) Compensation for services, including fees, commissions, and similar items; (2) Gross income derived from business; (3) Gains derived from dealings in property; (4) Interest; (5) Rents; (6) Royalties; (7) Dividends; (8) Alimony and separate maintenance payments; (9) Annuities; (10) Income from life insurance and endowment contracts; (11) Pensions; (12) Income from discharge of indebtedness; (13) Distributions of partnership gross income; (14) Income in respect of a decedent; and (15) Income from an interest in an estate or trust. See Hear v. C. I. R., C.A.Mo., 326 F.2d 962, 966.

In the case of a manufacturing or merchandising business, gross income means gross profit (i.e., gross sales or gross receipts less cost of goods sold). Adjusted gross income. A determination peculiar to individual taxpayers. Generally, it represents gross income less business expenses, expenses attributable to the production of rent or royalty income and the long-term capital gain deduction.

Gross income multiplier. Valuation technique used to estimate the valuation of real property. For example, the gross income times a given gross income multiplier to produce the estimated value.

Gross income tax. Levy on total receipts of business without allowance for expenses and deductions.

Any tax imposed on gross receipts; may include retail sales tax and general sales tax.

Gross interest. Total interest payment by borrower including administrative, service, and insurance charges.
Gross National Product (GNP). The market value within a nation for a year of all goods and services produced as measured by final sales of goods and services to individuals, corporations, and governments plus the excess of exports over imports. The total market value of the output of all goods and services of a country without doublecounting, divided into four main categories: consumption, gross private domestic investment, government purchases of goods and services, and net exports (exports minus imports).

Gross negligence. Type of serious nonfeasance or failure to attend to one's duties, either public or private. See Desertion; Non-support.

Ground. Soil; earth; the earth's surface appropriated to private use and under cultivation or susceptible of cultivation.

A foundation or basis; points relied on; e.g., "ground" for bringing civil action, or charging criminal defendant, or foundation for admissibility of evidence. See also Ground of action.

Groundage. Old custom or tribute paid for the standing of shipping in port. See also Demurrage.

Ground landlord. The grantor of an estate on which a ground-rent is reserved.

Ground lease. A lease of vacant land, or land exclusive of any buildings on it, or unimproved real property. Usually a net lease. See also Ground rent; Lease.

Ground of action. The basis of a suit; the foundation or fundamental state of facts on which an action rests (e.g., negligence; breach of contract); the real object of the plaintiff in bringing his suit. See also Cause of action.

Ground rent. Rent paid to owner of land for use of property; normally to construct building on such. Generally, rent is paid for a long-term lease (e.g. 99 year lease) with lessor retaining title to land. Such long-term lease is commonly renewable. Office buildings, hotels, and similar large structures in cities are commonly built on land under such types of ground leases. A perpetual rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land in fee-simple, out of the land conveyed. It is in the nature of an emphyteutic rent. Also, in English law, rent paid on a building lease.

Ground water. Water in the subsoil or of a spring or shallow well.

Ground writ. Prior to the English common-law procedure act, 1852, c. 121 a ca. sa. or fi. fa. could not be issued into a county different from that in which the venue in the action was laid, without first issuing a writ, called a "ground writ," into the latter county, and then another, writ, which was called a "testatum writ," into the former.

Group annuity. Type of pension plan for employees under a master plan or contract in which employer each year buys a deferred annuity for each qualified employee.

Group boycott. A concerted refusal by traders to deal with other traders. Such is unlawful per se because it restrains freedom of parties to the boycott independently to decide whether to deal with boycotted party. A single trader's refusal to deal with another does not constitute a group boycott. Arzee Supply Corp. of Conn., v. Ruberoid Co., D.C.Conn., 222 F.Supp. 237, 242.

A group action to coerce third parties to conform to pattern of conduct desired by group or to secure third property on the appropriate death tax valuation date. Thus, the gift property is "grossed-up" for any such gift tax. I.R.C. § 2035. Process by which U.S. corporations add pre-foreign tax income in federal income tax returns in order to acquire credit against federal taxes for foreign income taxes paid.

Group lease. A lease of vacant land, or land exclusive of any buildings on it, or unimproved real property. Usually a net lease. See also Ground rent; Lease.

Gross lease. See Lease.

Gross margin. The difference between the amount of sales after returns and allowances and the cost of goods sold.

Gross misdemeanor. Classification of a type of crime which, while not a felony, is ranked as a serious misdemeanor.

Gross National Product (GNP). The market value within a nation for a year of all goods and services produced as measured by final sales of goods and services to individuals, corporations, and governments plus the excess of exports over imports. The total market value of the output of all goods and services of a country without doublecounting, divided into four main categories: consumption, gross private domestic investment, government purchases of goods and services, and net exports (exports minus imports).

Gross neglect of duty. Type of serious nonfeasance or failure to attend to one's duties, either public or private. See Desertion; Non-support.

Gross negligence. See Negligence.

Grossome /grówsm/. In old English law, a fine, or sum of money paid for a lease. Supposed to be a corruption of gersuma (q.v.). See Gressome.

Gross profit. The difference between sales and the cost of goods sold before allowance for operating expenses and income taxes. See also Gross income.

Gross receipts. Term refers to the total amount of money or the value of other considerations received from selling property or from performing services. New Mexico Enterprises, Inc. v. Bureau of Revenue, App., 86 N.M. 799, 528 P.2d 212, 213. See also Gross income.

Gross receipts tax. See Gross income tax.

Gross sales. Total of all sales at invoice prices, not reduced by discounts, allowances, returns, or other adjustments.

Gross spread. In finance the difference between the price paid by an investment banker for an issue and the price paid by the buying public.

Gross stress reaction. A term employed for an acute emotional reaction incident to severe environmental stress.

Gross up. To add back to the value of the property or income received the amount of the tax that has been deducted. In the case of gifts made after 1976 and included in the gross estate when the donor dies within three years of the gift, any gift tax paid on the transfer is added to the fair market value of the property on the appropriate death tax valuation date. Thus, the gift property is "grossed-up" for any such gift tax. I.R.C. § 2035. Process by which U.S. corporations add pre-foreign tax income in federal income tax returns in order to acquire credit against federal taxes for foreign income taxes paid.

GROUP BOYCOTT

Growing crop. A crop in the process of growth; though decisions differ as to whether such must be above the surface of the soil, and as to whether matured crops are "growing" crops. The cases as well differ as to whether pasturage grass is a growing crop. Growing crops are personal property. Estate of Ruwe v. Ruwe, 190 Neb. 663, 211 N.W.2d 610, 613.

Growth half-penny. In old English law, a rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle.

Growth stock. Type of security characterized by the prospect of increase in market value, but not necessarily with a good dividend return.

Guaranty. v. To undertake collaterally to answer for the payment of another's debt or the performance of another's duty, liability, or obligation; to assume the responsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

Guarantor. He who makes a guaranty. One who becomes secondarily liable for another's debt or performance in contrast to a strict surety who is primarily liable with the principal debtor. See also Surety.

Guaranty, n. A collateral agreement for performance of another's undertaking. An undertaking or promise that is collateral to primary or principal obligation and that binds guarantor to performance in event of nonperformance by the principal obligor. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Chisholm Bros. Farm Equipment Co., 96 Idaho 194, 525 P.2d 976, 978.

A promise to answer for payment of debt or performance of obligation if person liable in instance fails to make payment or perform obligation. An undertaking by one person to be answerable for the payment of some debt, or the due performance of some contract or duty, by another person, who himself remains liable to pay or perform the same. A promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person.

A guaranty is a contract that some particular thing shall be done exactly as it is agreed to be done, whether it is to be done by one person or another, and whether there be a prior or principal contractor or not. An undertaking by one person that another shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation, or that, if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him. A guarantor of a bill or note is said to be one who engages that the note shall be paid, but is not an indorser or surety.

The contract of a guarantor is his own separate contract. In the nature of a warranty by him that the thing guarantied to be done by the principal shall be done, not merely an engagement jointly with the principal to do the thing. The original contract of the principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. See Suretyship, contract of; also Collateral guaranty, below.

Guarantees to every state a republican form of government thus acquired inuring to the benefit of both parties by which one undertakes to furnish the necessary provisions, tools, and other supplies, and the other to prospect for and locate mineral lands and stake out mining claims thereon, the interest in the property thus acquired inuring to the benefit of both parties, either equally or in such proportion as their agreement may fix.

G.S.A. General Services Administration.

Guadalupe Hidalgo, Treaty of /tri'di ığ av gwâdalûwpey hî(y)dâlîg0w/ / gri'ädaw/. A treaty between the United States and Mexico, terminating the Mexican War, dated February 2, 1848. See Gadsden Purchase.

Guadia /gri'ëd0ya/. In old European law, a pledge. A custom. Spelled also "wadia."

Guarantee. One to whom a guaranty is made. This word is also used, as a noun, to denote the contract of guaranty or the obligation of a guarantor, and, as a verb, to denote the action of assuming the responsibilities of a guarantor.

Guarantee clause. That provision in a contract, deed, mortgage, etc. by which one person promises to pay the obligation of another. Also, the provision in Art. IV, § 4, U.S.Const., in which the federal government guarantees to every state a republican form of government and the protection of the federal government in the event of domestic violence.

Guaranteed payment. See Payment guaranteed.

Guaranteed stock. See Stock.

Guarantee stock. Guarantee stock of a building and loan association is a fixed non-withdrawal investment which guarantees to all other investors in the association a fixed rate of dividend or interest. Stumph v. Wheat Belt Building & Loan Ass'n of Pratt, 148 Kan. 25, 79 P.2d 896, 899.

Guarantor. He who makes a guaranty. One who becomes secondarily liable for another's debt or performance in contrast to a strict surety who is primarily liable with the principal debtor. See also Surety.

Guaranty, v. To undertake collaterally to answer for the payment of another's debt or the performance of another's duty, liability, or obligation; to assume the responsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

Guaranty, n. A collateral agreement for performance of another's undertaking. An undertaking or promise that is collateral to primary or principal obligation and that binds guarantor to performance in event of nonperformance by the principal obligor. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Chisholm Bros. Farm Equipment Co., 96 Idaho 194, 525 P.2d 976, 978.

A promise to answer for payment of debt or performance of obligation if person liable in instance fails to make payment or perform obligation. An undertaking by one person to be answerable for the payment of some debt, or the due performance of some contract or duty, by another person, who himself remains liable to pay or perform the same. A promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person.

A guaranty is a contract that some particular thing shall be done exactly as it is agreed to be done, whether it is to be done by one person or another, and whether there be a prior or principal contractor or not. The original contract of the principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. See Suretyship, contract of; also Collateral guaranty, below.
Guaranty and warranty are derived from the same root, and are in fact etymologically the same word, the "g" of the Norman French being interchangeable with the English "w." They are often used colloquially and in commercial transactions as having the same signification, as when a piece of machinery or the produce of an estate is "guaranteed" for a term of years, "warranted" being the more appropriate term in such a case. A distinction is also sometimes made in commercial usage, by which the term "guaranty" is understood as a collateral warranty (often a conditional one) against some default or event in the future, while the term "warranty" is taken as meaning an absolute undertaking in praesenti, against the defect, or for the quantity or quality contemplated by the parties in the subject-matter of the contract. But in strict legal usage the two terms are widely distinguished in this, that a warranty is an absolute undertaking or liability on the part of the warrantor, and the contract is void unless it is strictly and literally performed, while a guaranty is a promise, entirely collateral to the original contract, and not imposing any primary liability on the guarantor, but binding him to be answerable for the failure or default of another. See Warranty.

Absolute guaranty. An unconditional undertaking by a guarantor that debtor will pay debt or perform the obligation. An unconditional promise of payment or performance of principal contract on default of principal debtor or obligor. Robey v. Walton Lumber Co., 17 Wash.2d 242, 135 P.2d 95, 102.

Collateral guaranty. A contract by which the guarantor undertakes, in case the principal fails to do what he has promised or undertaken to do, to pay damages for such failure; distinguished from an engagement of suretyship in this respect, that a surety undertakes to do the very thing which the principal has promised to do, in case the latter defaults.

Conditional guaranty. One which depends upon some extraneous event, beyond the mere default of the principal, and generally upon notice of the guaranty, notice of the principal's default, and reasonable diligence in exhausting proper remedies against the principal.

Continuing guaranty. One relating to a future liability of the principal, under successive transactions, which either continue his liability or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied.

Special guaranty. A guaranty which is available only to the particular person to whom it is offered or addressed; as distinguished from a general guaranty, which will operate in favor of any person who may accept it.

Guaranty company. A corporation authorized to transact the business of entering into contracts of guaranty and suretyship; as one which, for fixed premiums, becomes surety on judicial bonds, fidelity bonds, and the like.

Guaranty bond. See Bond.

Guaranty clause. See Guarantee clause.

Guaranty fund. Statutes have made provision for depositors' guaranty funds to be raised, in whole or in part, by assessments on banks and to be used to pay the depositors of an insolvent bank. Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U.S. 104, 31 S.Ct. 186, 55 L.Ed. 112; Shallenberger v. Bank, 219 U.S. 114, 31 S.Ct. 189, 55 L.Ed. 117; Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U.S. 121, 31 S.Ct. 189, 55 L.Ed. 123; Abilene Nat. Bank v. Dolley, 228 U.S. 1, 33 S.Ct. 409, 57 L.Ed. 707. Most bank deposits are insured to a specified limit by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (q.v.).

Guaranty insurance. See Insurance.

Guardage. A state of wardship.

Guardian. A person lawfully invested with the power, and charged with the duty, of taking care of the person and managing the property and rights of another person, who, for defect of age, understanding, or self-control, is considered incapable of administering his own affairs. One who legally has the care and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority.

Classification

A testamentary guardian is one appointed by the deed or last will of the child's father or mother; while a guardian by election is one chosen by the infant himself in a case where he would otherwise be without one.

A general guardian is one who has the general care and control of the person and estate of his ward; while a special guardian is one who has special or limited powers and duties with respect to his ward, e.g., a guardian who has the custody of the estate but not of the person, or vice versa, or a guardian ad litem.

A domestic guardian is one appointed at the place where the ward is legally domiciled; while a foreign guardian derives his authority from appointment by the courts of another state, and generally has charge only of such property as may be located within the jurisdiction of the power appointing him.

A guardian ad litem is a special guardian appointed by the court to prosecute or defend, in behalf of an infant or incompetent, a suit to which he is a party, and such guardian is considered an officer of the court to represent the interests of the infant or incompetent in the litigation. Kossar v. State, 13 Misc.2d 941, 179 N.Y.S.2d 71, 73, 76, 79.

A guardian by estoppel is one who assumes to act as guardian without legal authority; similar to a guardian de son tort.

A guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother, of a child. Daniels v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 135 Pa.Super. 450, 5 A.2d 608, 611. This guardianship extends only to the custody of the person of the child to the age of majority. Sometimes called "natural guardian".

A guardian by statute or testamentary guardian is a guardian appointed for a child by the deed or last will of the father, and who has the custody both of his person and estate until the attainment of full age. This kind of guardianship is founded on the statute of 12 Car. II, c. 24, and has been extensively adopted in this country. 1 BI. Comm. 462.

A guardian for nurture is the father, or, at his decease, the mother, of a child. This kind of guardianship at common law extended only to the person, and determined when the infant arrived at the age of fourteen. 1 Bl.Comm. 461.

Guardian in chivalry. In the tenure by knight's service, in the feudal law, if the heir of the feud was under the age of twenty-one, being a male, or fourteen, being a female, the lord was entitled to the wardship (and marriage) of the heir, and was called the "guardian in chivalry." This wardship consisted in having the custody of the body and lands of such heir, without any account of the profits. 2 Bl.Comm. 67.

Guardian in socage. At the common law, this was a species of guardian who had the custody of lands coming to the infant by descent, as also of the infant's person, until the latter reached the age of fourteen. Such guardian was always "the next of kin to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend." 1 Bl.Comm. 461.

Natural guardian. The father of a child, or the mother if the father be dead.

Guardian de son tort, sometimes described as "quasi guardian" or "guardian by estoppel," is one who assumes to act as guardian without valid authority. Similar to guardian by estoppel.

Guardian of the peace /gárd(i)yan av ðo piýs/. A warden or conservator of the peace.

Guardian of the poor. In English law, a person elected by the ratepayers of a parish to have the charge and management of the parish work-house or union.

Guardian of the spiritualities /gárd(i)yan av ðo spiri-chuwiːdījı̂/. In England, the person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see.

Guardian of the temporalities /gárd(i)yan av ðo tępɔрамiːdījı̂/. The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the crown.

Guardian or warden of the cinque ports /gárd(i)yan av ðo sîŋk pórts/wórdan/-. A magistrate who has the jurisdiction of the ports or havens which are called the "Cinque Ports" (q.v.). This office was first created in England, in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea-coasts against enemies, etc.

Guardianship. The office, duty, or authority of a guardian. Also the relation subsisting between guardian and ward. See Guardian; Ward.

Guardianus /gárdiːjı̂nəs/. A guardian, warden, or keeper.

Guarentigio /gárentiːjı̂wı̂/-. In Spanish law, a written authorization to a court to enforce the performance of an agreement in the same manner as if it had been decreed upon regular legal proceedings.

Guarnimentum /gárnmęntı̂m/-. In old European law, a provision of necessary things. A furnishing or garnishment.

Guastald. In old English law, one who had the custody of the royal mansions.

Gubernator /gṳ̄wɔrnɛ́ydər/-. Lat. In Roman law, the pilot or steersman of a ship.

Guerra, guerre /gér(ə)/. War.

Guest. A person receiving lodging for pay at inn, motel, or hotel on general undertaking of keeper thereof. A traveler who lodges with the consent of the keeper or owner.

Guest is a person who is received and entertained at one's home, club, etc., and who is not a regular member. Stadelmann v. Glen Falls Ins. Co. of Glen Falls, 5 Mich.App. 536, 147 N.W.2d 460, 463.

A "guest" in an automobile is one who takes ride in automobile driven by another person, merely for his own pleasure or on his own business, and without making any return or conferring any benefit on automobile driver. Guest is used to denote one whom owner or possessor of vehicle invites or permits to ride with him as gratuity, without any financial return except such slight benefits as are customarily extended as part of ordinary courtesies of road. Rothwell v. Transmeier, 206 Kan. 199, 477 P.2d 960, 963, 966. See Guest statute.

Business guest. See Business.

Guest statute. A "guest," under provisions of guest statute, is a recipient of the voluntary hospitality of the driver or owner, that is, one who is invited or permitted by owner or possessor of automobile to ride with owner-possessor as a gratuity. Walker v. Bounds, Tex.Civ.App., 510 S.W.2d 392, 394.

Many states have statutes referred to as "automobile guest statutes," which provide that operators of automobiles shall only be liable for injuries to guests carried gratuitously for gross or willful negligence, willful or wanton misconduct, or the like, with a further provision in some statutes continuing liability for want of ordinary care in case of hosts operating automobiles while intoxicated. In recent years however there has been a trend towards repealing or delimiting such statutes.

While a typical guest statute excludes all non-paying guests from suing the host-driver or owner for damages arising out of the host-driver's ordinary negligence, certain statutes are more narrow in their scope; e.g. precluding only those guests without payment who are related within the second degree of consanguinity or affinity to the owner or operator from suing.

Guldage /gáydaʒ/-. In old English law, that which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another's territory. The office of guiding of travelers through dangerous and unknown ways.

Guldon de la mer /gı̂ydón dǝ là mɛ̃r/-. The name of a treaty on maritime law, by an unknown author, supposed to have been written about 1671 at Rouen, and considered, in continental Europe, as a work of high authority.

Guld. A voluntary association of persons, pursuing the same trade, art, profession or business, such as printers, goldsmiths, artists, wool merchants, etc., united under a distinct organization of their own, analogous to that of a corporation, regulating the affairs of their trade or business by their own laws and rules, and aiming, by cooperation and organization, to protect and promote the interests of their common vocation. Goodman v. Federal Trade Commission, C.A.9, 244 F.2d 584, 594.

In medieval history these fraternities or guilds played an important part in the government of some states; as at Florence, in the thirteenth and following centuries, where they chose the council of government of the city. The word is said to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon “gild” or “geld,” a tax or tribute, because each member of the society was required to pay a tax towards its support.

Guildhall. The hall or place of meeting of a guild, or gild.

The place of meeting of a municipal corporation. The mercantile or commercial gilds of the Saxons are supposed to have given rise to the present municipal corporations of England, whose place of meeting is still called the “Guildhall.”

Guildhall sittings. The sittings held in the Guildhall of the city of London for city of London causes.

GUILD RENTS. In England, rents payable to the crown by any guild, or such as formerly belonged to religious guilds, and came to the crown at the general dissolution of the monasteries.

GUILLOTINE /giɔliˈtiːn/ /ˈɡɪlətiːn/. An instrument for decapitation, used in France for the infliction of the death penalty on convicted criminals, consisting, essentially, of a heavy and weighted knife-blade moving perpendicularly between grooved posts, which is made to fall from a considerable height upon the neck of the sufferer, immovably fixed in position to receive the impact.

Guilt. In criminal law, that quality which imparts criminality to a motive or act, and renders the person amenable to punishment by the law. Responsibility for offense. That disposition to violate the law which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence.

Guilty. Having committed a crime or tort; the word used by an accused in pleading to an indictment when he confesses the crime of which he is charged, and by the jury in convicting. Responsible for a delinquency, crime, or other offense, and the connotation of such word is “evil”, “wrongdoing”, or “culpability”. Hilkert v. Canning, 58 Ariz. 290, 119 P.2d 233, 236.

Guilty plea. Formal admission in court as to guilt which a defendant may make if he or she does so intelligently and voluntarily; i.e. accused can only make such plea after he or she has been fully advised of rights and court has determined that accused understands such rights and is making plea voluntarily. Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 89 S.Ct. 1709, 23 L.Ed.2d 274. See also Plea bargaining.

Guilty verdict. Formal pronouncement by jury that they adjudge the defendant guilty of the offense charged.

Guinea /ˈɡɪnɪə/. A coin formerly issued by the English mint, but all these coins were called in the time of Wm. IV. The word now means only the sum of £1 1 s., in which denomination the fees of counsel are always given.

Gun. Portable firearm such as a rifle, pistol, revolver, shotgun, carbine, etc.

Gwalstow. A place of execution.

Gwayf /ˈɡwɛɪf/. In old English law, waif, or waived; that which has been stolen and afterwards dropped in the highway for fear of a discovery.

Gyltwite, or guiltwit /ˈɡɪltwɪt/. Sax. Compensation for fraud or trespass.

Gynecocracy. Government by a woman; a state in which women are legally capable of the supreme command; e.g. in Great Britain (Queen).

Gyves /ˈjævz/. Fetters or shackles for the legs.
Habeas corpus, as an abbreviation, stands for Henry (a king of that name) in the citation of English statutes. In the Year Books, it is used as an abbreviation for Hilary term. In tax assessments and other such official records, “h” may be used as an abbreviation for “house”.

H.A. An abbreviation for hoc anno, this year, in this year.

Habe, or have. Lat. A form of the salutatory expression “Ave” (hail) in the titles of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes.

Habeas corpora juratorum /hёbybiyas kорпа jуra­торам/. In old English law, a writ commanding the sheriff to bring up the persons of jurors, and, if need were, to distrain them of their lands and goods, in order to insure or compel their attendance in court on the day of trial of a cause. It issued from the Common Pleas, and served the same purpose as a distringas juratores in the King’s Bench. Such writ was abolished by the C.L.P. Act, 1852, § 104.

Habeas corpus /hёbybiyas kорпа/. Lat. (You have the body.) The name given to a variety of writs (of which these were anciently the emphatic words), having for their object to bring a party before a court or judge. In common usage, and whenever these words are used alone, they are usually understood to mean the habeas corpus ad subjiciendum (see infra). U. S. v. Tod, 263 U.S. 149, 44 S.Ct. 54, 57, 68 L.Ed. 221. The primary function of the writ is to release from unlawful imprisonment. People ex rel. Luciano v. Murphy, 160 Misc. 573, 290 N.Y.S. 1011. The office of the writ is not to determine prisoner’s guilt or innocence, and only issue which it presents is whether prisoner is restrained of his liberty by due process. Ex parte Presnell, 58 Okl.Cr. 50, 49 P.2d 232.

Initially, the writ only permitted a prisoner to challenge a state conviction on constitutional grounds that related to the jurisdiction of the state court. But the scope of the inquiry was gradually expanded, and Fay v. Noia, 372 U.S. 391, 83 S.Ct. 822, 9 L.Ed.2d 837, concluded that the writ now extends to all constitutional challenges.

See also Post-conviction remedies with respect to review of sentence of federal prisoner.

Habeas corpus acts. The English statute of 31 Car. II, c. 2, is the original and prominent habeas corpus act. It was amended and supplemented by St. 56 Geo. III, c. 100. Similar statutes have been enacted in all the United States. This act is regarded as the great constitutional guaranty of personal liberty. See Art. I, § 9, U.S.Const.; 28 U.S.C.A. § 2241 et seq.

Habeas corpus ad deliberandum et recipiendum /hёbybiyas kорпа эд дэлбээрэцэм эд рэсипийэцэм/. A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offense of which he is accused was committed. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county.

Habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum /hёbybiyas kорпа эд фэс(в)йэцэм эд рэсипийэцэм/. A writ issuing in civil cases to remove the cause, as also the body of the defendant, from an inferior court to a superior court having jurisdiction, there to be disposed of. It is also called “habeas corpus cum causa.”

Habeas corpus ad prosecuendum /hёbybiyas корпа эд прэсоквэндэм/. A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. State ex rel. Deeb v. Fabisinski, 111 Fla. 454, 152 So. 207, 210.

Habeas corpus ad respondendum /hёbybiyas корпа эд рэспэндэндэм/. A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter.

Habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum /hёbybiyas корпа эд сэдасфэс(в)йэцэм/. In English practice, a writ which issues when a prisoner has had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court, to charge him with process of execution.

Habeas corpus ad subjiciendum /hёbybiyas корпа эд сэбяйэцэм/. A writ directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, or person detained. This is the most common form of habeas corpus writ, the purpose of which is to test the legality of the detention or imprisonment; not whether he is guilty or innocent. This writ is guaranteed by U.S.Const. Art. I, § 9, and by state constitutions. See also 28 U.S.C.A. § 2241 et seq.

This is the well-known remedy in England and the United States for deliverance from illegal confinement, called by Sir William Blackstone the most cele-berated writ in the English law, and the great and efficacious writ in all manner of illegal confinement.
3 Bl.Comm. 129. The “great writ of liberty,” issuing at common law out of courts of Chancery, King’s Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer.

Habeas corpus ad testificandum /həˈbiːəs kɔrˈpəs əd tɛstəˈfɪkəndəm/. The writ, meaning “you have the body to testify,” used to bring up a prisoner detained in a jail or prison to give evidence before the court.

Habeas corpus cum causa /həˈbiːəs kɔrˈpəs kɔm kəʊˈza/.
(You have the body, with the cause.) Another name for the writ of habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum (q.v.).

Habemus optimum testem, confitentem reum /ˈhæbɪməs əʊˈptəməm ˈtɛstəm, kənˈfɛntəm rɪˈjʌm/. We have the best witness,—a confessing defendant.

Habendum clause /ˈhæbəndəm ˈkloʊz/. Portion of deed beginning with the words “To have and to hold”.

Habentia Habilis /ˈhæbɛntɪə ˈhæbɪlɪs/. The legal capacity to own, hold and control a thing or property.

Habitable /ˈhæbɪtəbəl/. Fit; suitable; active; useful
(of a servant). Proved; authentic (of Book of Saints).

Habitability. Condition of premises which permits inhabitant to live free of serious defects to health and safety.

Warranty of habitability. In most states, either by statute or case law, every landlord is held to impledly warrant that the residential premises rented are fit for human habitation (i.e. free of violations of building and sanitary codes) at the time of the inception of the tenancy, and will continue as such during the term. Boston Housing Authority v. Hemingway et al., 363 Mass. 184, 293 N.E.2d 831; Hinson v. Delis, 26 Cal.App.3d 62, 102 Cal.Rptr. 661; Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Law, § 2.104. See also Home Owners Warranty.

Habitability. A covenant by a lessee to “put the premises into habitable repair” binds him to put them into such a state that they may be occupied, not only with safety, but with reasonable comfort, for the purposes for which they are taken. See Habitability.

Habitancy. That fixed place of abode to which a person intends to return habitually when absent.

Habitant. In French and Canadian law, a resident tenant; a settler; a tenant who kept hearth and home on the seigniory. A native of Canada of French descent, particularly of the peasant or farming class.
Habitatio /hæbətɛ́́y(ɪ)əʊ/.

In the civil law, the right of dwelling; the right of free residence in another's house.

Habitation. Place of abode; dwelling place; residence.

In the civil law, the right of a person to live in the house of another without prejudice to the property. It differed from a usufruct, in this: that the usufructuary might apply the house to any purpose, as of a store or manufactory; whereas the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family.

See Domicile; Habitancy; Residence.

Habitual. Customary, usual, of the nature of a habit. Synonyms are customary, common, regular; while its antonyms are unusual, unwonted, extraordinary, rare. Illinois Bankers Life Ass'n v. Theodore, 47 Ariz. 314, 55 P.2d 806, 811. Formed or acquired by or resulting from habit; frequent use or custom. See also Habit.

Habitual criminal. A recidivist (q.v.). A legal category created by statute in many states by which severe penalties ranging up to life imprisonment can be imposed on criminals convicted of any crime the third or fourth time. In general, habitual offender statutes impose greater sentences on offender for repeated crimes, with life imprisonment being imposed upon commission of several felonies.

Habitual drunkenness or intoxication. One who frequently and repeatedly becomes intoxicated by excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquor so as to acquire a fixed habit and an involuntary tendency to become intoxicated as often as the temptation is presented, even though he remains sober for days or even weeks at a time. A person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. The custom or habit of getting drunk; or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. The custom or habit of getting drunk; or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it.

Habitually. Customarily; by frequent practice or use. It does not mean entirely or exclusively.

Hable. L. Fr. In old English law, a port or harbor; a station for ships.

Hacienda /hɑːs(ɪ)yɛndə/hɔsɪˈɛndə/.

In Spanish law, the public domain; the royal estate; the aggregate wealth of the state. The science of administering the national wealth; public economy.

Also an estate or farm belonging to a private person. A royal estate.

Had. As used in a statute providing that no suit, action or proceeding to foreclose a mortgage or trust deed shall be had or maintained, "had" means commenced or begun.

Hadbote /hædbɔt/. In Saxon law, a recompense or satisfaction for the violation of holy orders, or violence offered to persons in holy orders.

Hadd. In Hindu law, a boundary or limit. A statutory punishment defined by law, and not arbitrary.

Haderunga /hædərɑːɡə/.

In old English law, hatred; ill will; prejudice, or partiality.

Respect or distinction of persons.

Hadgonel. In old English law, a tax or mulct.

Hec est conventio /hiːk ɛst kənˈvɛntʃ(ə)ʊ/.

L. This is an agreement. Words with which agreements anciently commenced.

Hec est finalis concordia /hiːk ɛst ˈfɪnlɪs kənˈkɔrdɪa/.

L. This is the final agreement. The words with which the foot of a fine commenced.

Hereda /hɛˈrɪdɑː/.

In Gothic law, a tribunal answering to the English court-leet or hundred court.

Herede abducto /hɛˈrɪdiə ðəˈbʌktəʊ/.

An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain his person, the same being carried away by another person.

Herede deliberando alteri qui habet custodium terre /hɛˈrɪdiə ðəˈlɛrəndəʊ ðəˈter/.

An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain his person, the same being carried away by another person.

Heredem deus facit, non homo /hɛˈrɪdɛm ˈdiːs ˈfəsɪt, nɒn ˈhəʊməʊ/.

God makes the heir, not man.

Herede rapto /hɛˈrɪdiə ˈræptəʊ/.

An ancient writ that lay for the ravishment of the lord's ward.

Heredes /hɛˈrɪdiəs/.

In the civil law, heirs. The plural of heres (q.v.).

Heredes proximi /hɛˈrɪdiəz prɒksɪməˈsi/.

Nearest or next heirs. The children or descendants of the deceased.

Heredes remotiores /hɛˈrɪdiəs ˈrəmətwɪˈʃɪɔrɪz/.

More remote heirs. The kinsmen other than children or descendants.

Heredes sui et necessarii /hɛˈrɪdiəs ˈsuː ət ˈnɛsəsəriː/.

In Roman law, own and necessary heirs; i.e., the lineal descendants of the estate-leaver. They were called "necessary" heirs, because it was the law that made them heirs, and not the choice of either the decedent or themselves. But since this was also true of slaves (when named "heirs" in the will) the former class was designated "sui et necessarii," by way of distinction, the word "sui" denoting that the necessity arose from their relationship to the decedent.

Heredipeta /hɛˈrɪdɪpətə/.

Lat. In old English law, a seeker of an inheritance; hence, the next heir to lands.

Heredipete suo propinquuo vel extraneo periculoso sancti custodi nullus committatur /hɛˈrɪdɪpətə s(y)ʊˈwɔw prɒˈpɪŋkwɔw vɛl ekstrɛnɪˈjoʊwɔw sɛˈniːni kəstɔwˈdeɪ nələʊ ˈkɒmɪtətər/.

To the next heir, whether a relation or a stranger certainly a dangerous guardian, let no one be committed.

_Hereditas_ (harēdātēs). In _Roman law_, the _hereditas_ was a universal succession by law to any deceased person, whether such person had died testate or in testate, and whether in trust (_ex fideicommissō_) for another or not. The like succession according to _Praetorian law_ was _bonusūm possessio_.

In _old English law_, an estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance.

_Hereditas_, _alia corporallis_, _alia incorporallis_; _corporallis_ est, _que tangi potest et videri_; _incorporallis_ _que tangi_ non potest nec videri_ (harēdātēs ēyīliya kōrpārēylas ēyīliya ĭnkorparēylas; kōrpārēylas ēst, kwīvī tānjay pōwdast ēt vādīray; ĭnkorparēylas kwīvī tānjay nōn pōwdast nēk vādīray/). An inheritance is either cor-poralear or incorporeal. Corporeal is that which can be touched and seen; incorporeal, that which can nei-er be touched nor seen.

_Hereditas damnosa_ (harēdātēs dāmnōwysa/). A burdensome inheritance; one which would be a burden instead of a benefit, that is, the debts to be paid by the heir would exceed the assets.

_Hereditas est successio in universum_ _jus quod defunctus habuerit_ (harēdātēs ēst sōksēs(h)iyo in yūvōnvasām ās kwōd ēst ēst ēbabūyūwarat/). _Inheritance_ is the succession to every right which the deceased had.

_Hereditas jacens_ (harēdātēs jēysan(d)zi/). In _civil law_, a prostrate or vacant inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called so long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance. So long as no one had acquired the inheritance, it was termed "_hereditas jacens"_; and this, by a legal fiction, represented the person of the decedent. The estate of a person deceased, where the owner left no heirs or legatee to take it, called also "_caducu"_; an escheated estate. The term has also been used in _English law_ to signify an estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor's death, and before assumption of heir. An inherance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant.

_Hereditas legitima_ (harēdātēs lajīdāma/). A succession or inheritance devolving by operation of law (_intestate succession_) rather than by the will of the decedent.

_Hereditas luctuosa_ (harēdātēs lākJchūwōwysa/). A sad or mournful inheritance or succession; as that of a parent to the estate of a child, which was regarded as disturbing the natural order of mortality (_turbato or-dine mortalitatis_). It was sometimes termed _tristis_ successio.

_Hereditas nihil aliud est_, _quam successio in universum_ _jus_, _quod defunctus habuerit_ (harēdātēs nāy(h)i ālīyād ēst, kwēm sōksēshiyōjow in yūvōnvasām jās, kwōd dāfāṅkąs ēbabūyūwarat/). The right of inheritance is nothing else than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased.

_Hereditas nunquam ascendit_ (harēdātēs nāŋkwām āsēndāt/). An inheritance never ascends. _2 Bl.Comm._
211. A maxim of feudal origin, and which invariably prevailed in the law of England down to the passage down of the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 106, § 6, by which it was abrogated.

_Hereditas testamentaria_ (harēdātēs tēstamentēriya/).
Testamentary inheritance, that is, succession to an estate under and according to the last will and testament of the decedent.

_Heredom appellacione veniunt heredes heredum in Infinitum_ (harēdēm āpōlēshiyōwmys ēn ēnānāyām/). By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity.

_Heres_ (hīrizi/). In _Roman law_, the heir, or universal successor in the event of death. The heir is he who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property of the estate-leaver. He is not only the successor to the rights and claims, but also to the estate-leaver's debts, and in relation to his estate is to be regarded as the identical person of the estate-leaver, inasmuch as he represents him in all his active and passive relations to his estate.

The institution of the _heres_ was the essential characteristic of a _testament_: if this was not done, the instrument was called a _codicillus_. The office, powers, and duties of the _heres_ in _Roman law_, were much more closely assimilated to those of a modern _executor_ than to those of an heir at law. Hence "_heir" is not at all an accurate translation of "_heres," unless it be understood in a special technical sense.

In _Common law_, an heir; he to whom lands, tenemments, or hereditaments by the act of God and right of blood to descend, of some estate of inheritance.

_Heres astrarius_ (hīrizi āstrēriyas/). In _old English law_, an heir in actual possession of the house of his ancestor.

_Heres de facto_ (hīrizi diy fēkōtow/). In _old English law_, heir from fact; that is, from the disseisin or other act of his ancestor, without or against right. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an _heir de jure_, or by law.

_Heres est alter ipse_, et _filius est pars patris_ (hīrizi ēst ōltār īptisī ēt ēfilīyas, ēst pārzs pātrzs/). _Heir_ is another self, and a son is part of the father.

_Heres est aut jure proprietatis aut jure representationis_ (hīrizi ēst ōt jūriy praprayēstēydas ōt jūriy rēprazantēshiyōwnas/). An heir is either by right of property, or right of representation.

_Heres est eadem persona cum antecessore_ (hīrizi ēst īyēydam pārsōwn kām ĕntassāsorīy/). An heir is the same person with his ancestor.

_Heres est nomen collectivum_ (hīrizi ēst nōmwan kōlēktāyvam/). "_Heir" is a collective name or noun.

_Heres est nomen juris_, _filius est nomen nature_ (hīrizi ēst nōmwan juras, ēfilīyas ēst nōmwan nacrehīry/
"_Heir" is a name or term of law; "_son" is a name of nature.

_Heres est pars antecessoris_ (hīrizi ēst pārz ĕntassāsorās/). An heir is a part of the ancestor. So said because the ancestor, during his life, bears in his body (in judgment of law) all his heirs.

_Heres ex asse_ (hīrizi ēks ēsēiy/). In _civil law_, an heir to the whole estate; a sole heir.
Haeres extraneus /hiːrɪəz ɛkstrəˈniːəs/. In the civil law, a strange or foreign heir; one who was not subject to the power of the testator, or person who made him heir. Qui testatoris juris subjecti non sunt, extranei heredes appellantur.

Haeres factus /hiːrɪəz ˈfæktəs/. In the civil law, an heir made by will; a testamentary heir; the person created universal successor by will. Otherwise called "haeres ex testamento," and "haeres institutus."

Haeres fideicommissarius /hiːrɪəz fɪdɪˈkɒmɪsəriəs/. In the civil law, the person for whose benefit an estate was given to another (termed "haeres fiduciarius," q.v.) by will. Answering nearly to the cestui que trust of the English law.

Haeres fiduciarius /hiːrɪəz ˈfɪduːsəriəs/. A fiduciary heir, or heir in trust; a person constituted heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another, called the "fideicommissarius."

Haeres heredis mei est meus haeres /hiːrɪəz ˈhɛrədɪs mɛi ɛs mɪs ˈhɛrəs/. The heir of my heir is my heir.

Haeres institutus /hiːrɪəs ɪnˈstɪtjuːtəs/. A testamentary heir; one by the will of the decedent.

Haeres legitimus /hiːrɪəz ˈlɛdʒɪməs/. A lawful heir; one pointed out as such by the marriage of his parents.

Haeres legitimus est quem nuptiae demonstrant /hiːrɪəz ˈlɛdʒɪməs ɛst kwɛm ˈnæptʃeɪi ˈdæmənstrænt/. He is a lawful heir whom marriage points out as such; who is born in wedlock.

Haeres minor uno et viginti annis non respondit, nisi in casu dotis /hiːrɪəz ˈmɪnər ˈwʊnəʊ ˈvɪɡɪnti ˈænɪs nɒn ˈrɪspəndɪt ˈnɪsi ɪn ˈkæsʊ ˈdɒtɪs/. An heir under twenty-one years of age is not answerable, except in the matter of dower.

Haeres natus /hiːrɪəz ˈnætəs/. In the civil law, an heir born; one born heir, as distinguished from one made heir (haeres factus, q.v.); an heir at law, or by intestacy (ab intestato); the next of kin by blood, in cases of intestacy.

Haeres necessarius /hiːrɪəs ˈnɛsəsəriəs/. In the civil law, a necessary or compulsory heir. This name was given to the heir when, being a slave, he was named "heir" in the testament, because on the death of the testator but became sui juris is now liable.

Haeres non tenetur in Anglia ad debita antecessoris reddenda, nisi per antecessorem ad hoc fuerit obligatus, praeterquam debita regis tantum /hiːrɪəz nɒn ˈtenətər ɪn æŋˈɡлɪə əd ˈdɛbitə əntɛksetəˈrɔrəs ˈrɛdənda, nɪsɪ ˈpər əntɛksetəˈrɔrəm əd ˈhɔk ˈfjuərɪt ˈɔbliɡætəs ˈprætəˈkwæm ˈdɛbitə ˈrɪgəs ˈtæntəm/. In England, the heir is not bound to pay his ancestor's debts, unless he be bound to it by the ancestor, except debts due to the king. However, by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 104, he is now liable.

Haeres rectus /hiːrɪəs ˈrɛktəs/. In old English law, a right heir.

Haeres suus /hiːrɪəs ˈsuːs/. In the civil law, a man's own heir; a decedent's proper or natural heir. This name was given to the lineal descendants of the deceased. Persons who were in the power of the testator but became sui juris at his death. Those descendants who were under the power of the deceased at the time of his death, and who are most nearly related to him.

Haaretare /heərəˈteɪri/. In old English law, to give a right of inheritance, or make the donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs.

Haaretico comburendo /heəˈretɪkəʊ kəmˈbʊrəndəʊ/. The English statute 2 Hen. IV, c. 15, de haaretico comburendo, was the first penal law enacted against heresy, and imposed the penalty of death by burning against all heretics who relapsed or who refused to abjure their opinions. This statute was repealed by the statute 29 Car. II, c. 9. This was also the name of a writ for the purpose indicated.

Hafne /hæfni/. A haven or port.

Hafne courts /hæfni kɔːrts/. Haven courts; courts anciently held in certain ports in England.

Hagnebut /hæktət/hægət/. A handgun of a larger description than the hagne.

Hague Tribunal /hægə ˈtræbjuːnəl/. The Court of Arbitration established by the Hague Peace Conference of 1899. The object of the establishment was to facilitate the immediate recourse to arbitration for the settlement of international differences by providing a permanent court, "accessible at all times, and acting, in default of agreement to the contrary between the parties, in accordance with the rules of procedure inserted in the present convention." The court was given jurisdiction over all arbitration cases, provided the parties did not agree to institute a special tribunal. An international Bureau was likewise established to serve as a registry for the court and to be the channel of communications relative to the meetings of the court. The court, although called "permanent," is really so only in the fact that there is a permanent list of members from among whom the arbitrators in a given case are selected. At the Second Hague Conference of 1907, apart from minor changes made in the court, it was provided that, of the two arbitrators appointed by each of the parties, only one should be a national of the appointing state.

Hala /hæλə/. In old English law, a park inclosed. A hedge.

Compensation for services which a pilot has put himself in readiness to perform, by labor, risk, and cost, and has offered to perform, at half the rate he would have received if the services had actually been performed. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U.S. 196, 5 S.Ct. 826, 29 L.Ed. 158.

Half-proof. In the civil law, proof by one witness, or a private instrument. Or prima facie proof, which yet was not sufficient to found a sentence or decree.

Half-seal. That which was formerly used in the English chancery for sealing of commissions to delegates, upon any appeal to the court of delegates, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes.

Half section. The half of a section of land according to the divisions of the government survey, laid off either by a north-and-south or by an east-and-west line, and containing 320 acres.

Half-timer. A child who, by the operation of the English factory and education acts, was employed for less than the full time in a factory or workshop, in order that he might attend some "recognized efficient school."

Half-tongue. A jury half of one tongue or nationality and half of another.

Halfway house. Loosely structured institution designed to rehabilitate persons who have left a hospital or prison or who, for personal reasons, need help in readjusting. Such houses, for example, assist a recently discharged prisoner in making the often difficult transition from prison to civilian life.

Half year. In legal computation, the period of one hundred and eighty-two days; the odd hours being rejected.

Halifax law /ˈhɔːlɪfɛks ˈlɔː/. A synonym for lynch law, or the summary (and unauthorized) trial of a person accused of crime and the infliction of death upon him; from the name of the parish of Halifax, in England, where anciently this form of private justice was practised by the freeburghers in the case of persons accused of stealing; also called "gibbet law."

Haligemot, or halimote /ˈhælɪmət/. In Saxon law, the meeting of a hall (conventus aule), that is, a lord's court; a court of a manor, or court-baron. So called from the hall, where the tenants or freemen met, and justice was administered. It was sometimes used to designate a convention of citizens in their public hall and was also called folkmote and hallmote. The word halimote rather signifies the lord's court or a court baron held in a manor in which the differences between the tenants were determined. Furthermore, it seems to have been a common practice for a wealthy abbey to keep a court, known as a halimote, on each of its manors, while in addition to these manorial courts it kept a central court, a libera curia for all its greater freehold tenants.

Halimas /hælɪməs/. In English law, the feast of All Saints, on the 1st of November; one of the cross-quarters of the year, was computed from Halimas to Candlemas.

Hall. A building or room of considerable size, used as a place for the meeting of public assemblies, conventions, courts, etc.; as, the city hall, the town hall.

In old English law, a name given to many manor-houses because the magistrate's court was held in the hall of his mansion; a chief mansion-house.

Hence, hall day, a court day.

Hillage /ˈhɒlj/. In old English law, a fee or toll due for goods or merchandise vended in a hall. A toll due to the lord of a fair or market, for such commodities as were vended in the common hall of the place.

Hallazco /ˈhɒlezkw/. In Spanish law, the finding and taking possession of something which previously had no owner, and which thus becomes the property of the first occupant.

Halle-gemote /hɑːlɪɡəˈmɔːt/. In Saxon law, haligemot (q.v.).

Hallmark. An official stamp affixed by the goldsmiths upon articles made of gold or silver as an evidence of genuineness, and hence used to signify any mark of genuineness.

Hallmoot /ˈhɔlmʊt/. See Haligemot.

Hallucination /ˈhɔlɪkəˈneɪʃən/. An apparently real sensory perception (auditory or visual) without any real external stimuli to cause it; commonly experienced by psychotics. It may occur with relation to any of the special senses, e.g. hearing sounds or seeing things that do not exist. The perception by any of the senses of an object which has no existence. The conscious recognition of a sensation of sight, hearing, feeling, taste, or smell which is not due to any impulse received by the perceptive apparatus from without, but arises within the perceptive apparatus itself.

Hallucinogenic drug. Drugs that induce hallucinations, such as mescaline, LSD, and the like.
Halmote. See Haligemot.

Halved notes. Payment notes which are torn in half, one half of each note being given to seller when order is placed, the other half, when the goods are delivered.

Halmyote. A holy or ecclesiastical court. It was anciently held on Sunday next before St. Thomas' day, and therefore called the "holmyote", or holy court.

Halywercfolk. Sax. In old English law, tenants who held land by the service of repairing or defending a church or monument, whereby they were exempt from feudal and military services. Especially in the county of Durham, those who held by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert.

Ham. In England, a place of dwelling; a homestead; a little narrow meadow. A house or little village.

Hama. In English law, a piece of land.

Hamel, hameleta, or hamleta. A hamlet.

Hamesecken. In old English law, the crime of housebreaking or burglary. See also Hamsocne.

Hamfare. (Sax. From ham, a house.) In Saxon law, an assault made in a house; a breach of the peace in a private house. This word by some is said to signify the freedom of a man's house. See also Hamsocne.

Hamlet. A small village; a part or member of a vill. It is the diminutive of "ham", a village. A "village" or "hamlet" in a rural community may be no more than a store, a school, a church, and a few residences.

Hammer. Metaphorically, a forced sale or sale at public auction. "To bring to the hammer", i.e. to put up for sale at auction. "Sold under the hammer", i.e. sold by an officer of the law or by an auctioneer. See also Forced sale.

Hamsocne. In Saxon law, the word is variously spelled hamsoca, hamsocna, haimsuken, hamesaken, hamsocn. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace.

Hamlet. A holy or ecclesiastical court. It was anciently held on Sunday next before St. Thomas' day, and therefore called the "holmyote", or holy court.

Hand. A measure of length equal to four inches, used in measuring the height of horses.

Hand. A person's signature.

Hand. In anatomical usage the hand, or manus, includes the phalanges, or fingers and thumb; the metacarpus, or hand proper; and the carpus, or wrist; but in popular usage the wrist is often excluded.

Hand. An instrumental part; e.g. "he had a hand in the crime". One who performs some work or labor; e.g. a "hired hand". To give assistance; e.g. to lend a "hand".

Hand. In the plural, the term may be synonymous with "possession"; as, the "hands" of an executor, garnishee, etc.

Hansold. In old English law, an oath. For the meaning of the terms "strong hand" and "clean hands," see those titles.

Handbill. A written or printed notice displayed, handed out, or posted, to inform those concerned of something to be done or some event. Posting and distribution of handbills is regulated by ordinance or statute in most localities.

Handborow. In Saxon law, a hand pledge; a name given to the nine pledges in a decennary or friborg; the tenth or chief, being called "headborow" (q.v.). So called as being an inferior pledge to the chief.

Handcuffs. See Fetters.

Hand down. To announce or file an opinion in a cause. Used originally and properly of the opinions of appellate courts transmitted to the court below; but in later usage the term is employed more generally with reference to any decision by a court upon a case or point reserved for consideration.

Hand-fasting. In old English law, betrothment.

Hand-grith. Peace or protection given by the king with his own hand; used in the laws of Henry I.

Handhabend, or hand-habende. In Saxon law, one having a thing in his hand, that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his possession. Jurisdiction to try such thief.

Handhandle. To control, direct, to deal with, to act upon, to perform some function with regard to or to have passed through one's hands, to buy and sell, or to deal or trade in. State ex rel. Bell v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 349 Mo. 360, 160 S.W.2d 764, 769. To manage or operate.

Hand money. Money paid in hand to bind a bargain; earnest money, when it is in cash.

Handsale. Anciently, among the northern European nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,—a custom still retained in verbal contracts. A sale thus made was called "handsale" (venditio per mutuam manum complexionem). In process of time the same word was used to signify the price or earnest money which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. 2 Bl.Comm. 448.

Hanseld. Handsale, or earnest money.
Handwriting. The chirography of a person; the cast or form of writing peculiar to a person, including the size, shape, and style of letters, tricks of penmanship, and whatever gives individuality to his writing, distinguishing it from that of other persons. Anything written by hand; an instrument written by the hand of a person, or a specimen of his writing.

Handwriting, considered under the law of evidence, includes not only the ordinary writing of one able to write, but also writing done in a disguised hand, or in cipher, and a mark made by one able or unable to write. For nonexpert opinion as to genuineness of handwriting, as based on familiarity not required for purposes of litigation, see Fed.Evid. R. 901(b)(2).

Handwriting exemplars. Samples of one's handwriting required in criminal cases involving forgery, kidnaping, etc., for comparison purposes.

Compelling grand jury witness to produce handwriting and printing exemplars, to be used solely as standard of comparison in order to determine whether witness was author of certain writings, does not violate Fifth Amendment privilege although privilege might be asserted if government should seek more than physical characteristics of handwriting as by seeking to obtain written answers to incriminating questions or a signature on incriminating statement. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5. U. S. v. Mara, 410 U.S. 19, 93 S.Ct. 774, 35 L.Ed.2d 99.

Hang. In old practice, to remain undetermined. Thus, the present participle means pending; during the pendency. Remaining undetermined.

Hanged, drawn and quartered. A method of executing traitors in England, said to have been introduced in 1241. The traitor was carried on a sled, or hurdle to traitors in England, said to have been introduced in 1241. The traitor was carried on a sled, or hurdle to cutoff the blood (formerly dragged there tied to the tail of a horse); hanged till half dead and then cut down; his entrails cut out and burnt; his head cut off and his body to be divided into quarters, which, with his head, were hung in some public place. In practice the executioner usually cut out the heart and held it up to view.

Hanging. As a form of capital punishment, means suspension by neck until dead. Such means of capital punishment is seldom used in United States.

Hanging in chains. In atrocious cases it was at one time usual, in England, for the court to direct a murderer, after execution, to be hanged upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the murder was committed. Its legality was declared by acts in 1751 and 1828, and abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. IV, c. 26.

Hangman. An executioner. One who executes condemned criminals by hanging.

Hangwrit /hænwri/. In Saxon law, a fine for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immunity from such fine.

Hanse /hæns/. In Germany, formerly an alliance or confederation among merchants or cities, for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members. An imposition upon merchandise.

Hanseatic /hænsiˈædik/. Pertaining to a hance or commercial alliance; but, generally, the union of the Hanse Towns is the one referred to, as in the expression the "Hanseatic League."

Hanse Towns /hæns(t)ə təʊnz/. The collective name of certain German cities, including Lübeck, Hamburg, and Bremen, which formed an alliance for the mutual protection and furtherance of their commercial interests, in the twelfth century. The powerful confederation thus formed was called the "Hanseatic League." The league framed and promulgated a code of maritime law, which was known as the "Laws of the Hanse Towns," or Jus Hanseaticum Maritimum.

The years 1356 to 1377 marked the zenith of the league's power. The league gradually declined till, in 1669, the last general assembly was held and Lübeck, Hamburg and Bremen were left alone to preserve the name and small inheritance of the "Hansa."

Hanse Towns, laws of the /ˈloʊz əv ə hæns(t)ə təʊnz/. The maritime ordinances of the Hanseatic towns, first published in German at Lübeck, in 1597, and in May, 1614, revised and enlarged.

Hanteled, or hantelede /ˈhɑntələd/. In old European law, an arrest, or attachment.

Hap. To catch. Thus, "hap the rent," "hap the deed-poll," were formerly used.

Happiness. Comfort, consolation, contentment, ease, enjoyment, pleasure, satisfaction. The constitutional right of men to pursue their "happiness" means the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity, or develop their faculties, so as to give to them their highest enjoyment. Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U.S. 746, 4 S.Ct. 652, 28 L.Ed. 585.

Harassment. Used in variety of legal contexts to describe words, gestures and actions which tend to annoy, alarm and abuse (verbally) another person. A person commits a petty misdemeanor if, with purpose to harass another, he: (1) makes a telephone call without purpose of legitimate communication; or (2) insults, taunts or challenges another in a manner likely to provoke violent or disorderly response; or (3) makes repeated communications anonymously or at extremely inconvenient hours, or in offensively coarse language; or (4) subjects another to an offensive touching; or (5) engages in any other course of alarming conduct serving no legitimate purpose of the actor. Model Penal Code, § 250.4.

Harbinger /ˈhɑrbiŋər/. In England, an officer of the royal household.

Harbor, n. A haven, or a space of deep water so sheltered by the adjacent land as to afford a safe anchorage for ships. A port or haven for ships; a sheltered place, natural or artificial, on the coast of a sea, lake, or other body of water. A place of security and comfort; a refuge. See also Haven.
Harbor, v. To afford lodging to, to shelter, or to give a refuge to. To clandestinely shelter, succor, and protect improperly admitted aliens. Susnar v. U. S., C.C.A.Ohio, 27 F.2d 223, 224. To receive clandestinely and without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same. Or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly. It may be aptly used to describe the furnishing of shelter, lodging, or food clandestinely or with concealment, and under certain circumstances, may be equally applicable to those acts divested of any accompanying secrecy. Harboring a criminal is a crime under both federal and state statutes.

Harbor line. A line marking the boundary of a certain part of a public water which is reserved for a harbor. The line beyond which wharves and other structures cannot be extended.

Hard cases. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which, to meet a case of hardship to a party, are not entirely consonant with the true principle of the law. It is said of such: "Hard cases make bad law."

Hard labor. A punishment, additional to mere imprisonment, sometimes imposed upon convicts sentenced to a penitentiary for serious crimes, or for misconduct while in prison.

Hard money. Lawful coined money.

Hardship. In general, privation, suffering, adversity. As used in zoning statutes as grounds for variance, it refers to fact that zoning ordinance or restriction as applied to a particular property is unduly oppressive, arbitrary or confiscatory. St. Onge v. City of Concord, 95 N.H. 306, 63 A.2d 221.

The severity with which a proposed construction of the law would bear upon a particular case, founding, sometimes, an argument against such construction, which is otherwise termed the "argument ab inconvenienti." See Hard cases.

Harm. The existence of loss or detriment in fact of any kind to a person resulting from any cause. See also Damages; Injury; Physical injury.

Harmful. As used in connection with foods, means noxious, hurtful, pernicious, likely to cause illness or damage. See also Adulteration.

As used in connection with errors committed at trial, it means that rights were seriously affected; an appellate court will consider harmful error but not harmless error. See also Error; Harmless error; Plain error rule.

Harmless error. An error which is trivial or formal or merely academic and was not prejudicial to the substantial rights of the party assigning it, and in no way affected the final outcome of the case. State v. Johnson, 1 Wash.App. 553, 463 P.2d 205, 206. Doctrine which permits an appellate court to affirm a conviction in spite of error appearing in record. State v. Michelli, La., 301 So.2d 577, 579.

Harmless error is not a ground for granting a new trial or for setting aside a verdict or for vacating, modifying or otherwise disturbing a judgment or order, unless such refusal appears to the court inconsistent with substantial justice. Fed.R.Civ.P. 61. Any error, defect, irregularity or variance which does not affect substantial rights will be disregarded by court. Fed.R.Crim.P. 52.

See also Error.

Harmonic plane. The zero adopted by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey of the Department of Commerce upon which its tidal tables, charts, and maps are based. It is an arbitrary plane, and, in Puget Sound, is the lowest plane of the tide recognized by that department.

Harmonize. See Harmony.

Harmony. The phrase "in harmony with" is synonymous with "in agreement, conformity, or accordance with."

Haro, harron /härən/. Fr. In Norman and early English law, an outcry, or hue and cry after felons and malefactors.

Harter Act. A name commonly applied to the act of Congress of February 13, 1893, c. 105, providing: (§ 1) that agreements in a bill of lading relieving the owner, etc., of a vessel sailing between the United States and foreign ports, from liability for negligence or fault in proper loading, storage, custody, care, or delivery of merchandise, are void (46 U.S.C.A. § 190); (§ 2) that no bill of lading shall contain any agreement whereby the obligations of the owner to exercise due diligence, properly equip, man, provision and outfit a vessel and make it seaworthy, and whereby the obligations of the master, etc., carefully to handle, store, care for and deliver the cargo, are in any way lessened, weakened or avoided (46 U.S.C.A. § 191); (§ 3) that if the owner shall exercise due diligence to make such vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped and supplied, neither the vessel nor her owners, etc., shall be liable for loss resulting from faults or errors in navigation or management, nor for losses arising from dangers of the sea, acts of God, or public enemies, or the inherent defect of the thing carried, or insufficiency of package, or seizure under legal process, or any act or omission of the shipper of the goods, or from saving or attempting to save life at sea, or deviation in rendering such service (46 U.S.C.A. § 192).

Harvesting. The act or process of gathering of crops of any kind. Also the quantity or yield of a crop.

Hashish. Drug which is formed of resin scraped from the flowering top of the cannabis plant, as distinguished from marijuana which consists of the chopped leaves and stems of the cannabis plant.

Haspa /hæspə/. In old English law, the hasp of a door; by which livery of seisin might anciently be made, where there was a house on the premises.

Hasta /hæstə/. Lat. A spear. In the Roman law, a spear was the sign of a public sale of goods or sale by auction. Hence the phrase "hastæ subjiciere" (to put under the spear) meant to put up at auction.

In feudal law, a spear, the symbol used in making investiture of a fief.

Hatch Act. Federal statute which prohibits federal, state, and local employees from partaking in certain types of political activities.
Hat money. In maritime law, primage; a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship.

Hauber /háuber/. O. Fr. A high lord; a great baron.

Haul. To pull or draw with force; to drag; to transport by hauling.

Haula. See Aula.

Haulage royalty /hólás róyalίtι/. Damages at a certain amount per ton for coal from adjacent lands hauled through subterranean passageways of lessor's land. Quality Excelsior Coal Co. v. Reeves, 206 Ark. 713, 177 S.W.2d 728, 732.

Haustus /hóstus/. Lat. In the civil law, a species of servitude, consisting in the right to draw water from another's well or spring, in which the iter (right of way to the well or spring), so far as it is necessary, is tacitly included.

Have. Lat. A form of the salutatory expression "Ave," used in the titles of some of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes.

Have. Imports ownership, and has been defined to mean "to keep," "to hold in possession," "to own." To bear (children).

Have and hold. A common phrase in conveyancing, derived from the habendum et tenendum of the old common law. See Habendum et tenendum.

Haven. A place of a large receipt and safe riding of ships, so situate and secured by the land circumjacent that the vessels thereby ride and anchor safely, and are protected by the adjacent land from dangerous or violent winds; as Milford Haven, Plymouth Haven, and the like. Lowndes v. Board of Trustees, 153 U.S. 1, 14 S.Ct. 758, 38 L.Ed. 615. A place of refuge. See also Harbor.

Hawker. An itinerant or traveling salesman who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place of business. A hawker or peddler usually sells his goods in the public streets, or from door-to-door, and commonly is required to have a license.

Formerly, a peddler who used beast of burden to carry wares and who cried out merits of wares in street. City of Washington v. Reed, 229 Mo.App. 1195, 70 S.W.2d 121, 122. See Hawking; Peddler.

Hawking. The act of offering goods for sale from door-to-door, or on the streets by outcry or by placards, labels, or signals. The business of peddling or hawking is distinct from that of a manufacturer selling his own products, and those who raise or produce what they sell, such as farmers and butchers, are not peddlers or hawkers.

Hay-bote /hėybọwt/. In old English law, another name for "hedge-bote," being one of the estovers allowed to a tenant for life or years, namely, material for repairing the necessary hedges or fences of his grounds, or for making necessary farming utensils. 2 Bl.Comm. 35.

Hayward. In old English law, an officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town; so called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed grounds. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against poundbreaches.

In insurance law, the risk, danger, or probability that the event insured against may happen, varying with the circumstances of the particular case.

In old English law, an unlawful game at dice, those who play at it being called "hazardors."

See also Dangerous; Extraordinary hazard; Risk.

Moral hazard. In fire insurance, the risk or danger of the destruction of the insured property by fire, as measured by the character and interest of the insured owner, his habits as a prudent and careful man or the reverse, his known integrity or his bad reputation, and the amount of loss he would suffer by the destruction of the property or the gain he would make by suffering it to bum and collecting the insurance.

Hazardor /házar dor/. In old English law, one who played at a hazard, i.e., an unlawful game of dice.

The terms "hazardous", "extra-hazardous", "especially hazardous", and "not hazardous" are well-understood technical terms in the business of insurance, having distinct and separate meanings. See Extraordinary hazard.

Hazardous contract. See Contract.

Hazardous employment. High risk and extra perilous work. When used in context of worker's compensation, it refers to employment which requires employer to carry worker's compensation coverage or its equivalent regardless of the number of employees.

Hazardous insurance. Insurance effected on property which is in unusual or peculiar danger of destruction by fire, or on the life of a man whose occupation exposes him to special or unusual perils.

Hazardous negligence. See Negligence.

Hazar- zamów. A bail or surety for the personal attendance of another.

H.B. House Bill; a bill in the process of going through the House of Representatives on its way to becoming a law.

H.B.M. An abbreviation for His (or Her) Britannic Majesty.
H.C. An abbreviation for house of commons, or for habeas corpus.

He. Properly a pronoun of the masculine gender, but usually used and construed in status to include both sexes as well as corporations. May be read "they". Buono v. Yankee Maid Dress Corporation, C.C.A. N.Y., 77 F.2d 274, 278.

Head. Chief; leading; principal; the upper part or principal source of a stream.

The principal person or chief of any agency, bureau, organization, corporation, or firm.

Headborough. In Saxon law, the head or chief officer of a borough; chief of the frank-pledge tithing or decennary. This office was afterwards, when the petty constableship was created, united with that office.

Head money. A sum of money reckoned at a fixed amount for each head (person) in a designated class. Particularly (1) a capitation or poll tax. (2) A bounty offered by the laws of the United States for each person on board an enemy's ship or vessel, at the commencement of a naval engagement, which shall be sunk or destroyed by a ship or vessel of the United States of equal or inferior force, the same to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money. A similar reward is offered by the British statutes. (3) The tax or duty imposed by act of congress of Aug. 3, 1882, on owners of steamships and sailing vessels for every immigrant brought into the United States. Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580, 5 S.Ct. 247, 28 L.Ed. 798. (4) A bounty or reward formerly paid to one who pursued and killed a bandit or outlaw and produced his head as evidence; the offer of such a reward being popularly called "putting a price on his head". See Bounty; Reward.

Headnote. A brief summary of a legal rule or significant facts in a case, which, among other headnotes applicable to the case, precedes the printed opinion in reports. A syllabus to a reported case; a summary of the points decided in the case, which is placed at the head or beginning of the opinion. See also Syllabus.

Head of family or household. An individual who actually supports and maintains in one household one or more individuals who are closely connected with him by blood relationship, relationship by marriage, or by adoption, and whose right to exercise family control and provide for the dependent individuals is based upon some moral or legal obligation. Miller v. Glenn, D.C.Ky., 47 F.Supp. 794, 796, 797.

The Internal Revenue Code gives preferential tax rates to heads of family or household if they meet the criteria of the statute (e.g. if he be or she contributed over half the cost of maintaining the household during the taxable year). An unmarried individual who maintains a household for another and satisfies certain conditions set forth in I.R.C. § 2(b). Such status enables the taxpayer to use a set of income tax rates that are lower than those applicable to other unmarried individuals but higher than those applicable to surviving spouses and married persons filing a joint return.

A term used in homestead and exemption laws to designate a person who maintains a family; a householder. Not necessarily a husband or father, but any person who has charge of, supervises, supports, maintains, and manages the affairs of the household or the collective body of persons residing together and constituting the family. The term may thus include an abandoned wife maintaining minor children or a bachelor supporting his parents.

Head of stream. The highest point on the stream which furnishes a continuous stream of water, not necessarily the longest fork or prong. The source of a stream. See also Headstream.

Headright. Under the Allotment Act (Act Cong. June 28, 1906 [34 Stat. 539]), creating a trust fund from all tribal funds which included funds from sale of tribal lands, funds allowed on claims against the United States and received from tribal oil, gas, and mineral rights, each allottee owned his pro rata share of the trust fund, and this pro rata beneficial interest is commonly called a "headright."

Headright certificate. In the laws of the republic of Texas, a certificate issued under authority of an act of 1839, which provided that every person immigrating to the republic between October 1, 1837, and January 1, 1840, who was the head of a family and actually resided within the government with his or her family should be entitled to a grant of 640 acres of land, to be held under such a certificate for three years, and then conveyed by absolute deed to the settler, if in the meantime he had resided permanently within the republic and performed all the duties required of citizens.

Head-silver. In old English law, a name sometimes given to a Common Fine (q.v.). By a payment of a certain sum of money to the lord, litigants might try their suits nearer home.

Headstream. Stream that is the source of a river. See also Head of stream.

Head tax. Tax of flat amount per person.

Headofwards. In old English law, one of the services to be rendered by a thane, or a geneath or villein, the precise nature of which is unknown.

Healer. One who heals or cures; specifically, one who professes to cure bodily diseases without medicine or any material means, according to the tenets and practices of so-called "Christian Science," whose beliefs and practices are founded on their religious convictions.

Healgemote /heylgəməwt/. In Saxon law, a court-baron; an ecclesiastical court; Haligemot (q.v.).

Healing act. Another name for a curative act or statute.

Healsfang /heylsfɑːŋ/. In Saxon law, a sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks. It was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon Kings.

Health. State of being hale, sound, or whole in body, mind or soul, well being. Freedom from pain or sickness. See Healthy.
Hearing. Proceeding of relative formality (though generally less formal than a trial), generally public, with definite issues of fact or of law to be tried, in which witnesses are heard and parties proceed against have right to be heard, and is much the same as a trial and may terminate in final order. It is frequently used in a broader and more popular significance to describe whatever takes place before magistrates clothed with judicial functions and sitting without jury at any stage of the proceedings subsequent to its inception, and to hearings before administrative agencies as conducted by a hearing examiner or Administrative Law Judge.

The introduction and admissibility of evidence is usually more lax in a hearing than in a civil or criminal trial.

An adversary hearing exists when both parties are present at the hearing arguing their respective positions. An ex parte hearing exists when only one party is present at the hearing.

Hearings are extensively employed by both legislative and administrative agencies and can be adjudicative or merely investigatory. Adjudicative hearings can be appealed in a court of law. Congressional committees often hold hearings prior to enactment of legislation; these hearings are then important sources of legislative history.

See also Detention hearing; Fair hearing; Full hearing; Omnibus hearing.

Ex parte hearing. See Ex parte.

Final hearing. See Final.

In criminal law. The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for the accused. See Preliminary hearing, infra.

Preliminary examination. The examination of a person charged with crime, before a magistrate or judge. See Preliminary hearing, infra.

Preliminary hearing. In criminal law, synonymous with “preliminary examination”. The hearing given to a person accused of crime, by a magistrate or judge, exercising the functions of a committing magistrate, to ascertain whether there is evidence to warrant and require the commitment and holding to bail of the persons accused. It is in no sense a trial for the determination of accused’s guilt or innocence, but simply a course of procedure whereby a possible abuse of power may be prevented, and accused discharged or held to answer, as the facts warrant. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.1.

Unfair hearing. See that title.

Hearing de novo /hiri'di dowyv/. Generally, a new hearing or a hearing for the second time, contemplating an entire trial in same manner in which matter was originally heard and a review of previous hearing. On hearing "de novo" court hears matter as court of original and not appellate jurisdiction. Collier & Wallis v. Astor, 9 Cal.2d 202, 70 P.2d 171, 173.

Hearing examiner. Generally, a civil service employee of an administrative agency whose responsibility is to conduct hearings on matters within the agency’s jurisdiction. Now called “Administrative Law Judge” (q.v.) in the federal government.

Hearing officer. See Administrative law judge.

Hearsay. A statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Fed.R.Evid. 801(c). “Hearsay evidence” is evidence of a statement that was made other than by a witness while testifying at the hearing and that is offered to prove the truth of the matter stated. Calif. Evid. Code.

Hearsay evidence is testimony in court of a statement made out of the court, the statement being offered as an assertion to show the truth of matters asserted therein, and thus resting for its value upon the credibility of the out-of-court asserter. Mutambibi v. State, 33 Md.App. 55, 363 A.2d 511, 518. Evidence not proceeding from the personal knowledge of the witness, but from the mere repetition of what he has heard others say. That which does not derive its value solely from the credit of the witness, but rests mainly on the veracity and competency of other persons. The very nature of the evidence shows its weakness, and it is admitted only in specified cases from necessity.

There are numerous exceptions to the hearsay exclusion; see e.g. Fed.R.Evid. 803, 804.

See also Double hearsay.

Heart balm statutes. State statutes abolishing right of action for alienation of affections, breach of promise to marry, criminal conversation, and seduction of person over legal age of consent.

Hearth money. A tax levied in England by St. 14 Car. II, c. 10, consisting of two shillings on every hearth or stove in the kingdom. It was extremely unpopular, and was abolished by 1 W. & M., St. 1, c. 10. This tax was otherwise called “chimney money.”
Hearth silver. In old English law, a species of modus or composition for tithes; viz.: a prescription for cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood.

Heat of passion. In criminal law, a state of violent and uncontrollable rage engendered by a blow or certain provocation given, which will reduce a homicide from the grade of murder to that of manslaughter. Passion or anger suddenly aroused at the time by some immediate and reasonable provocation, by words or acts of one at the time. The term includes an emotional state of mind characterized by anger, rage, hatred, furious resentment or terror. State v. Lott, 207 Kan. 602, 485 P.2d 1314, 1317.

Heave to. In maritime parlance and admiralty law, to stop a sailing vessel's headway by bringing her head "into the wind," that is, in the direction from which the wind blows. A steamer is said to be "hove to" when held in such a position that she takes the heaviest seas upon her quarter.

Hebberthef /hébberthef/. In Saxon law, the privilege of having the goods of a thief, and the trial of him, within a certain liberty.

Hebdomad /hébdomad/. A week; a space of seven days.

Hebephrenia /hiˈbɛfriːniə/. Psychotic form of schizophrenia featuring regression into silly, deteriorated, or infantile behavior and mannerisms.

Hebote. The king's edict commanding his subjects into the field.

Heda. A small haven, wharf, or landing place. See Harbor; Haven.

Hedagium /həˈdæjiəm/. In old English law, a toll or customary dues at the hithe or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which exemption was granted by the crown to some particular persons and societies.

Hedging. A means by which traders and exporters of grain or other products, and manufacturers who make contracts in advance for the sale of their goods, secure themselves against the fluctuations of the market by counter-contracts for the purchase or sale of an equal quantity of the product or of the material of manufacture. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 5 P.2d 210, 214. A means by which a party who deals in the purchase of commodities in large quantities for actual delivery within a future time insures itself against unfavorable changes in the price of such commodities by entering into compensatory arrangements or counterbalancing transactions on the other side. Ralston Purina Co. v. McFarland, C.A.N.C., 550 F.2d 967, 970.

Safeguarding one's self from loss on a bet or speculation by making compensatory arrangements on the other side. Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 5 P.2d 210, 214.

Heedless. Term is almost as strong as word "reckless" and includes the element of disregard of the rights or safety of others. Thoughtless; inconsiderate.

Hegemony /hɛˈgəməni/ or /hɛˈjæmənəˌni/. The leadership of one among several independent confederate states.

Heir /ˈɛr/. See Heirs.

Heir apparent. An heir whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlive the ancestor; as in England the eldest son, or his issue, who must, by the course of the common law, be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. One who, before the death of the ancestor, is next in the line of succession, provided he be heir to the ancestor whenever he happens to die. See also Apparent heir.

Heir at law. At common law, he who, after his ancestor dies intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as "heir general."

A deceased person's "heirs at law" are those who succeed to his estate of inheritance under statutes of descent and distribution, in absence of testamentary disposition, and not necessarily his heirs at common law, who are persons succeeding to deceased's realty in case of his intestacy. In re Towndrow's Will, 47 N.M. 173, 138 P.2d 1001, 1003.

See also Heir, legal.

Heir beneficiary. In the civil law, one who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made.

Heirs are divided into two classes, according to the manner in which they accept the successions left to them, to-wit, unconditional and beneficiary heirs. Unconditional heirs are those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. Beneficiary heirs are those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ.Code La. art. 883. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession. See Beneficiary.

Heir by adoption. By statute in most all jurisdictions, an adopted child takes all the rights of succession to intestate property as those of a natural born child unless a contrary intention is clearly expressed. Statutes differ however as to whether such adopted child may in addition inherit from its natural parents or family.

Heir by custom. In old English law, one whose right of inheritance depends upon a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind, or borough English.

Heir by devise. One to whom lands are devised by will; a devisee of lands. Answering to the heres factus (q.v.) of the civil law.

Heir collateral. One who is not lineally related to the decedent, but is of collateral kin; e.g., his uncle, cousin, brother, nephew.

Heir conventional. In the civil law, one who takes a succession by virtue of a contract or settlement entitling him thereto.

Heirdom /ˈɛrdəm/. Succession by inheritance.
Heiress (Éras/). A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called “co-heiresses,” or “co-heirs.”

Heir expectant. See Heir apparent.

Heir, forced. One who cannot be disinherited. See Forced heirs.

Heir general. An heir at law. The ordinary heir by blood, succeeding to all the lands.

Heir hunter. Those whose business or occupation consists in tracking down missing heirs.

Heir, irregular. In Louisiana, irregular heirs are those who are neither testamentary nor legal, and who have been established by law to take the succession. See Civ.Code La. art. 878. When there are no direct or collateral relatives surviving the decedent, and the succession consequently devolves upon the surviving husband or wife, or illegitimate children, or the state, it is called an “irregular succession.”

Heir, legal. In the civil law, a legal heir is one who takes the succession by relationship to the decedent and by force of law. This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See Civ.Code La. arts. 877, 879. The term is also used in American law in substantially the same sense, that is, the person to whom the law would give the decedent’s property, real and personal, if he should die intestate. In legal strictness, the term signifies one who would inherit real estate, but it is also used to indicate one who would take under the statute of distribution. See also Heir at law.

Heirless estate. The property of one who dies intestate leaving no heirs in which case there generally is escheat (q.v.).

Heirlooms (Érlúwmz/). In general, valued possessions of great sentimental value passed down through generations within a family.

In old English law, such goods and chattels as, contrary to the nature of chattels, shall go by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the executor. The termination “loom” (Sax.) signifies a limb or member; so that an heirloom is nothing else but a limb or member of the inheritance. They are generally such things as cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering the freehold; such as deer in a park, doves in a cote, deeds and charters, etc.

Heir, male. In English law, the nearest male blood relation of the decedent, unless further limited by the words “of his body,” which restrict the inheritance to sons, grandsons, and other male descendants in the right line.

Heir of the blood. An heir who succeeds to the estate by virtue of consanguinity with the decedent, either in the ascending or descending line, including illegitimate children, but excluding husbands, wives, and adopted children.

Heir of the body. An heir begotten or borne by the person referred to, or a child of such heir; any lineal descendant of the decedent, excluding a surviving husband or wife, adopted children, and collateral relations; bodily heir. May be used in either of two senses: In their unrestricted sense, as meaning the persons who from generation to generation become entitled by descent under the entail; and in the sense of heirs at law, or those persons who are descendants of him whom the statute of descent appoints to take intestate estate.

Heir presumptive. The person who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as a brother or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child.

In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relation of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the decease of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, until he has accepted or renounced it. La.Civ.Code, art. 880.

Heir, pretermitted. One who, except for an unambiguous act of the ancestor, would take his property on his death. See also Pretermitted heir.

Heirs (Érz/). At common law, the person appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. One who inherits property, whether real or personal. A person who succeeds, by the rules of law, to an estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, upon the death of his ancestor, by descent and right of relationship. One who would receive his estate under statute of descent and distribution. Faulkner’s Guardian v. Faulkner, 237 Ky. 147, 35 S.W.2d 6, 7. Moreover, the term is frequently used in a popular sense to designate a successor to property either by will or by law. Word “heirs” is no longer limited to designated character of estate as at common law. Jay v. Dollarhide, 3 Cal.App.3d 1001, 84 Cal.Rptr. 538, 547.

Word “heirs” is a technical term and is used to designate persons who would, by statute, succeed to an estate in case of intestacy. Wells Fargo Bank v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 22 Cal.App.3d 295, 99 Cal.Rptr. 464, 466.

Bodily laws. See Heir of the body.

Civil law. A universal successor in the event of death. He who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property or estate, rights and obligations, of a decedent, and occupies his place.

The term is indiscriminately applied to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the “testamentary heir”; and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestacy, called the “heir at law,” or “heir by intestacy.” The executor of the common law in many respects corresponds to the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. The term “heir” has several significations. Sometimes it refers to one who has formally accepted a succession and taken possession thereof; sometimes to one who is called to succeed, but still retains the faculty of accepting or renouncing, and it is frequently used as applied to one who has formally renounced.

Collateral heir. See that title.

Joint heirs. Co-heirs. The term is also applied to those who are or will be heirs to both of two designated persons at the death of the survivor of them, the word “joint” being here applied to the ancestors rather than the heirs.

Known heirs. See that title.

Lawful heirs. See Heir at law; Heir, legal.

Legitimate heirs. Children born in lawful wedlock and their descendants, not including collateral heirs or issue in indefinite succession.

Lineal heir. See Lineal heir.

Natural heirs. Heirs by consanguinity as distinguished from heirs by adoption, and also as distinguished from collateral heirs.

Right heir. This term was formerly used, in the case of estates tail, to distinguish the preferred heir, to whom the estate was limited, from the heirs in general, to whom, on the failure of the preferred heir and his line, the remainder over was usually finally limited. With the abolition of estates tail, the term has fallen into disuse, but when still used, in modern law, it has no other meaning than “heir at law.”

Heirs and assigns. Ordinarily words of limitation and not of purchase. At common law, the words were essential to conveyance granting title in fee simple, and though they are unnecessary for that or any purpose under statute when used in wills or deeds, words still have that meaning.

Heirs at law shall not be disinherited by conjecture, but only by express words or necessary implication. Maxim which means that ancestor must clearly cut off heir and that such disinheritance is not lightly inferred.

Heirship. The quality or condition of being heir, or the relation between the heir and his ancestor. It is a legal right, regulated by law, to be enjoyed subject to the provisions of the statute.

Heir special. In English law, the issue in tail, who claims per formam doni; by the form of the gift.

Heirs per stirpes. See Per stirpes.

Heir testamentary. In the civil law, one who is named and appointed heir in the testament of the decedent. This name distinguishes him from a legal heir (one upon whom the law casts the succession), and from a conventional heir (one who takes it by virtue of a previous contract or settlement).

Heir unconditional. In the civil law and in Louisiana, one who inherits without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether his acceptance be express or tacit. Distinguished from heir beneficiary, La.Civ.Code, art. 882.

Held. In reference to the decision of a court, decided. See also Hold.

Hell. The name formerly given in England to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king’s debtors were confined.

Helsing. A Saxon brass coin, of the value of a half-penny.

Hemiplegia /hɛmˈplɪdʒə/. Unilateral paralysis; paralysis of one side of the body, commonly due to a lesion in the brain, but sometimes originating from the spinal cord, as in “Brown-Sequard’s paralysis,” unilateral paralysis with crossed anesthesia. In the cerebral form, the hemiplegia is sometimes “alternate” or crossed, that is, occurring on the opposite side of the body from the initial lesion. Paralysis of half the body, as of both legs or of both arms, or an arm and leg. Gray v. United States, C.C.A.Ark., 109 F.2d 728, 729.

Henceforth /ˈhɛns(ɔ)θɔːr/. A word of futurity, which, as employed in legal documents, statutes, and the like, always imports a continuity of action or condition from the present time forward, but excludes all the past.

Henchman. A page; an attendant; servant; a herald. A loyal and trusted follower. A footman; one who holds himself at the bidding of another. It has come to mean here a political follower; used in a rather bad sense. Gates v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 228, 143 S.W.2d 780, 783, 784. Member of criminal gang.

Henfare. In old English law, a fine for flight on account of murder.

Hengen /ˈhɛŋən/. In Saxon law, a prison, a gaol, or house of correction.

Hengyte /ˈhɛŋjət/. Sax. In old English law, an acquaintance from a fine for hanging a thief.

Henricus Vetus /hɛnˈrɪkəs ˈvɛtəs/. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry I is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name.

Heordfete, or Hedefest. In Saxon law, a master of a family, keeping house, distinguished from a lower class of freemen, viz., folgeras (folgarii), who had no habitations of their own, but were house-retainers of their lords.

Heordpenny /ˈhɔrdpɛnri/. Peter-pence (q.v.).

Heordwerch /ˈhɔrdwɜːr/. In Saxon law, the service of herdsmen, done at the will of their lord.

Hepburn Act. The name commonly given to an act of Congress (1906), amending §§ 1, 6, 14, 15, 16 and 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Such Act increased the jurisdiction of the I.C.C. to include pipelines; prohibited free passes except to employees; prohibited common carriers from transporting any products, except timber, in which they had an interest; required joint tariffs and uniform system of accounts.

Heptarchy /hɛptəˈrɪki/. A government exercised by seven persons, or a nation divided into seven governments. In the year 560, seven different monarchies had been formed in England by the German tribes, namely, that of Kent by the Jutes; those of Sussex, Wessex, and Essex by the Saxons; and those of East...
Anglia, Bernicia, and Deira by the Angles. To these were added, about the year 586, an eighth, called the "Kingdom of Mercia," also founded by the Angles, and comprehending nearly the whole of the heart of the kingdom. These states formed what has been designated the "Anglo-Saxon Octarchy," or more commonly, though not so correctly, the "Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy," from the custom of speaking of Deira and Bernicia under the single appellation of the "Kingdom of Northumberland."

Herald. In ancient law, a herald was a diplomatic messenger who carried messages between kings or states, and especially proclamations of war, peace, or truce. In English law, a herald is an officer whose duty is to keep genealogical lists and tables, adjust armorial bearings, and regulate the ceremonies at royal coronations and funerals.

Heraldry /hɛrˈɔːldrɪ/. The art, office, or science of heralds. Also an old and obsolete abuse of buying and selling precedence in the paper of causes for hearing.

Heralds' College. In England, an ancient royal corporation, first instituted by Richard III, in 1483. It comprised three kings of arms, six heralds, and four marshals or pursuivants of arms, together with the earl marshal and a secretary. The heralds' books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. The heralds' office is still allowed to make grants of arms and to permit change of names.

Herbage /ˈhɜr.bɑːʒ/. In English law, an easement or liberty, which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground.

Hercliscunda /hɑːrˈskəndə/. In the civil law, to be divided. Familia herciscunda, an inheritance to be divided. Actio familae herciscundae, an action for dividing an inheritance. Erciscunda is more commonly used in the civil law.

Herd, n. An indefinite number, more than a few, of cattle, sheep, horses, or other animals of the larger sorts, assembled and kept together as one drove and under one care and management. Boland v. Cecil, 65 Cal.App.2d Supp. 832, 150 P.2d 819, 822.

Herd, v. To tend, take care of, manage, and control a herd of cattle or other animals, implying something more than merely driving them from place to place.

Herder. One who herds or has charge of a herd of cattle, in the senses above defined.

Herdwerch, heordwerch /hɑːrdwɜːrk/. In old English law, herdsmen's work, or customary labor, done by shepherds and inferior tenants, at the will of the lord.

Hereafter. A word of futurity, always used in statutes and legal documents as indicative of future time, excluding both the present and the past.

Herebannum /hɛrˈbænəm/. In old English law, a proclamation summoning the army into the field. A mulct or fine for not joining the army when summoned. A tax or tribute for the support of the army.
Herefare /hérfêr/. Sax. A going into or with an army; a going out to war (profectio militaris); an expedition.

Heregeat /hériyat/. A heriot (q.v.).

Heregeld /héragêld/. Sax. In old English law, a tribute or tax levied for the maintenance of an army.

Heremones /hêrômônîyz/. Followers of an army.

Herenach /hêrânêk/. An archdeacon.

Heres /hêriz/. Heir; an heir. A form of hæres, very common in the civil law. See Hæres.

Heresilta, heressa, heressiz. A hired soldier who departs without license.

Heresy /hêhræsiy/. In English law, an offense against religion, consisting not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed. Opinion or doctrine contrary to church dogma. An opinion on divine subjects devised by human reason, openly taught, and obstinately maintained. This offense is now subject only to ecclesiastical correction, and is no longer punishable by the secular law.

Heretoch /hêrtôk/. A general, leader, or commander; also a baron of the realm.

Heretofores. This word simply denotes time past, in distinction from time present or time future, and has no definite and precise signification beyond this.

Hereunder. A word of reference in a document or law, directing attention to matter therein which follows in such document or is contained therein.

Herge. In Saxon law, offenders who joined in a body of more than thirty-five to commit depredations.

Heriot /hêriyat/. In English law, a customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land. Heriots are divided into heriot service and heriot custom. The former expression denotes such as are due upon a special reservation in a grant or lease of lands, and therefore amount to little more than a mere rent; the latter arise upon no special reservation whatever, but depend solely upon immemorial usage and custom.

Herischild /hêrashîld/. In old English law, a species of military service, or knight's fee.

Herscindium /hêrasticindiyam/. A division of household goods.

Herslît /hêrâslîyt/. Laying down of arms. Desertion from the army.

Heristal /hêristôl/. The station of an army; the place where a camp is pitched.

Heritable bond /hêhradabal bónd/. A bond for a sum of money to which is added, for further security of the creditor, a conveyance of land or heritage to be held by the creditor as pledge.

Heritable obligation /hêhradabal oblâgêysihan/. In Louisiana, an obligation is heritable when the heirs and assigns of one party may enforce the performance against the heirs of the other. Civ.Code La. art. 1997.

Heritable security /hêhradabal sakyûrâdiy/. Security constituted by heritable property.

Heritage /hêhradaj/. In the civil law, every species of immovable which can be the subject of property; such as lands, houses, orchards, woods, marshes, ponds, etc., in whatever mode they may have been acquired, either by descent or purchase.

Hermandad /érmandâd/. In Spanish law, a fraternity formed among different towns and villages to prevent the commission of crimes, and to prevent the abuses and vexations to which they were subjected by men in power.

Hermaphroditus tam masculo quam feminine comparatur, secundum prevalentiam sexus incalcentis /harmâfrâditudos têm mâskyalow kwêm fêmonily kômpêrêydar, sâkândam prêvalêns(iy)am sêkss inkêlasëntsas/. An hermaphrodite is to be considered male or female according to the predominance of the exciting sex.

Hermeneutics /harmân(y)ûwdaks/. The science or art of construction and interpretation. By the phrase "legal hermeneutics" is understood the systematic body of rules which are recognized as applicable to the construction and interpretation of legal writings.

Hermer /hûrmar/. A great lord.

Hernescus /harnêskas/. A heron.

Heroin. Narcotic drug which is a derivative of opium and whose technical name is diacetyl-morphine. It is classified as a Class A substance for criminal purposes and the penalty for its possession is severe.

Heroud, heraud /hûrâ(l)d/. L. Fr. A herald.

Hurus /hûras/. Lat. A master. Servus facit ut herus det, the servant does [the work] in order that the master may give [him the wages agreed on]. Herus dat ut servus facit, the master gives [or agrees to give, the wages], in consideration of, or with a view to, the servant's doing [the work]. 2 Bl.Comm. 445.

Hesia /hîyz(h)îya/. An easement.

Heterarcha /hêdarárka/. The head of a religious house; the head of a college; the warden of a corporation.

Heteria /hâtiyâ/. In Roman law, a company, society, or college.

Heuelborh /hyûwvalbor(k)/. Sax. In old English law, a surety (warrantus).

HEW. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

He who comes into a court of equity must come with clean hands. See Clean hands doctrine.

He who has committed iniquity shall not have equity. See Clean hands doctrine.

He who is silent when conscience requires him to speak shall be debarred from speaking when conscience requires him to be silent. A maxim of equity invoked when a person who has a duty to speak and to disclose a matter is silent so as to conceal that which should be revealed but who seeks equitable relief against him to whom it should have been disclosed.

He who seeks equity must do equity. This expression means that the party asking the aid of a court for equitable relief must stand in a conscientious relation toward his adversary and the transaction from which his claim arises must be fair and just and the relief must not be harsh and oppressive upon defendant. Jacklich v. Baer, 57 Cal.App.2d 684, 135 P.2d 179, 184. This maxim provides that court will not confer equitable relief on party seeking its aid, unless he has acknowledged and conceded or will admit and provide for all equitable rights, claims, and demands justly belonging to adverse party and growing out of or necessarily involved in subject matter of controversy. Bates v. Dana, 345 Mo. 311, 133 S.W.2d 326, 329. It is in pursuance of this maxim that equity enforces the right of the wife's equity to a settlement.

He who will have equity done to him must do equity to the same person. This maxim of equity provides that conduct which, by itself, is not illegal or even morally reprehensible but which is contrary to principles of equity will bar one who seeks equitable relief from one against whom such conduct is directed.

Hidage /hīdaj/. In old English law, a sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from a whipping.

Hidalgos /hīdalgos/. In Spanish law, a noble; a person entitled to the rights of nobility. By hidalgos are understood men chosen from good situations in life (de buenos lugares), and possessed of property (algo).

Hidalguía /hīdalgůyə/. In Spanish law, nobility by descent or lineage.

Hidden asset. Asset carried on books at a substantially reduced value; its market value being greater than its book value.

Hidden defect. Type of deficiency in property which is not discoverable by reasonable inspection and for which a lessor or seller is generally liable if such defect causes harm to a user. See also Defect; Latent defect.

Hide. In old English law, a measure of land, being as much as could be worked with one plow. It is variously estimated at from 60 to 100 acres, but was probably determined by local usage. Another meaning was as much land as would support one family or the dwellers in a mansion-house. Also a house; a dwelling-house. A hide was anciently employed as a unit of taxation.

Hidel /hīdal/. In old English law, a place of protection; a sanctuary.

Hidgild /hīdɡild/. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from a whipping.

Hierarchy /hīsərkər/iy/. Originally, government by a body of priests. Now, the body of officers in any church or ecclesiastical institution, considered as forming an ascending series of ranks or degrees of power and authority, with the correlative subjection, each to the one next above. Derivatively, any body of persons organized or classified according to authority, position, rank, or capacity.

High. This term, as used in various compound legal phrases, is sometimes merely an addition of dignity, not importing a comparison; but more generally it means exalted, either in rank or location, or occupying a position of superiority, and in a few instances it implies superiority in respect to importance, size, or frequency or publicity of use, e.g., "high seas," "highway."

9. To keep; to retain; to maintain possession of or authority over.

See also Ownership; Possession.

Hold over. To retain possession as tenant of property leased, after the end of the term. To continue in possession of an office and continue to exercise its functions, after the end of the officer's lawful term.

Hold pleas. To hear or try causes. 3 BL.Comm. 35, 298.

Hold, n. In old English law, tenure. A word constantly occurring in conjunction with others, as freehold, leasehold, copyhold, etc., but rarely met with in the separate form.

Holder. The holder of a bill of exchange, promissory note, check, or other commercial paper, is the person who has legally acquired possession of the same, by indorsement or delivery, and who is entitled to receive payment of the instrument. Person who is in possession of a document of title or an instrument or an investment security drawn, issued or endorsed to him or to his order, or to bearer or in blank. U.C.C. § 1–201(20).

Holder for value. A holder who has given a valuable consideration for the document of title, instrument or investment security which he has in his possession. A holder takes an instrument for value: (a) to the extent that the agreed consideration has been performed or that he acquires a security interest in, or a lien on, the instrument otherwise than by legal process; or (b) when he takes the instrument in payment of, or as security for, an antecedent claim against any person whether or not the claim is due; or (c) when he gives a negotiable instrument for it or makes an irrevocable commitment to a third person. U.C.C. § 3–303.

Holder in due course. A holder who takes an instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice that it is overdue or has been dishonored or of any defense against or claim to it on the part of any person. A payee may be a holder in due course. A holder does not become a holder in due course of an instrument by purchase of it at a judicial sale or by taking it under legal process, or by acquiring it in taking over an estate, or by purchasing it as part of a bulk transaction not in regular course of business of the transferor. A purchaser of a limited interest can be a holder in due course only to the extent of the interest purchased. U.C.C. § 3–302. Kaw Valley State Bank & Trust Co. v. Riddle, 219 Kan. 550, 549 P.2d 927, 933.

A holder in due course of a consumer credit contract (i.e. consumer paper) is subject to all claims and defenses which the debtor (buyer) could assert against the seller of the goods or services obtained pursuant to the credit contract or with the proceeds thereof. 16 CFR § 433.1 et seq.

Holder in good faith. One who takes property or an instrument without knowledge of any defect in its title.

Hold harmless agreement. A contractual arrangement whereby one party assumes the liability inherent in a situation, thereby relieving the other party of responsibility. Such agreements are typically found in leases, and easements. Agreement or contract in which one party agrees to hold the other without responsibility for damage or other liability arising out of the transaction involved. See also Guaranty; Indemnity; Surety.

Holding. The legal principle to be drawn from the opinion (decision) of the court. Opposite of dictum (q.v.). Also, general term for property, securities, etc. owned by person or corporation. See also Dicta.

In English law, a piece of land held under a lease or similar tenancy for agricultural, pastoral, or similar purposes.

Holding company. A company that confines its activities to owning stock in, and supervising management of, other companies. A holding company usually owns a controlling interest in (more than 50 percent of the voting stock) the companies whose stock it holds. A corporation that controls the voting power of other individual corporations for the purpose of united action.

Personal holding company. One formed (usually for tax reasons) by an individual or small group of individuals for the purpose of holding investments and receiving the income therefrom. See also Holding company tax; Personal holding company.

Holdings. Extent of ownership of investments (real estate, securities, etc.).

Holdover tenant. A tenant who retains possession after the expiration of a lease, or after a tenancy at will has been terminated.
Holiday. A religious festival; a day set apart for commemorating some important event in history; a day of exemption from labor. A day upon which the usual operations of business are suspended and the courts closed, and, generally, no legal process is served. In addition to national holidays (e.g. Fourth of July), there are also state holidays (e.g. "Bunker Hill" holiday in Massachusetts).

Legal holiday. See Legal holiday.

Public holiday. A legal holiday (q.v.).

Statutory holidays. Most states observe the same holidays as those observed by the federal government (see 5 U.S.C.A. § 6103). There are variations however, e.g., several states do not celebrate Columbus Day, several states do not observe the National Memorial Day, while many other states have special holidays commemorating historical events, the birthdays of state or regional heroes, religious festival days, or other occasions deemed worthy of celebration. See also Legal holiday.

Holograph /həˈɡrɑːf/. In Spanish law, a holograph. An instrument (particularly a will) wholly in the handwriting of the person executing it; or which, to be valid, must be so written by his own hand.

Holograph /ˈhɒləɡrɑːf/. A will or deed written entirely by the testator or grantor with his own hand and not witnessed (attested). State laws vary widely with respect to the status of self-written "holographic" wills. Some states categorically refuse to recognize any will not meeting the formal statutory requirements relating to attestation clause, witnesses, etc. Others will recognize a holographic will if all or certain portions are in the handwriting of the testator. And many states that do not recognize holographic wills executed by their own citizens within their borders will nevertheless recognize such wills if valid under other jurisdictions. Under the Uniform Probate Code (as adopted by several states), such will, whether or not witnessed, if the signature and the material provisions are in the handwriting of the testator. § 2–503.

Holy Orders. In ecclesiastical law, the orders of bishops (including archbishops), priests, and deacons in the Church of England. The Roman canonists had the orders of bishop (in which the pope and archbishops were included), priest, deacon, subdeacon, psalmist, acolyte, exorcist, reader, ostiarius. One of the seven sacraments of the Roman Catholic Church.

Homage /ˈhɒməj/. In feudal law, a service (or the ceremony of rendering it) which a tenant was bound to perform to his lord on receiving investiture of a fee, or succeeding to it as heir, in acknowledgment of the tenure. It is described as the most honorable service of reverence that a free tenant might do to his lord. The ceremony was as follows: The tenant, being ungirt and with bare head, knelt before the lord, the latter sitting, and held his hands extended and joined between the hands of the lord, and said: "I become your man [homo] from this day forward, of life and limb and earthly honor, and to you will be faithful and loyal, and bear you faith, for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the king, so help me God." The tenant then received a kiss from the lord. Homage could be done only to the lord himself. "Homage" is to be distinguished from "fealty," another incident of feudalism, and which consisted of the solemn oath of fidelity made by the vassal to the lord, whereas homage was merely an acknowledgment of tenure. If the homage was intended to include fealty, it was called "liege homage," but otherwise it was called "simple homage."

Homage ancestral. In feudal law, homage was called by this name where a man and his ancestors had immemorially held of another and his ancestors by the service of homage, which bound the lord to warrant the title, and also to hold the tenant clear of all services to superior lords. If the tenant aliened in fee, his alienee was a tenant by homage, but not by homage ancestral. 2 Bl.Comm. 300.

Homage jury. In feudal law, a jury in a court-baron, consisting of tenants that do homage, who are to inquire and make presentments of the death of tenants, surrenders, admittances, and the like.

Homage liege /ˈhɒməj lɪj/. In feudal law, that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords.

Homager /ˈhɒmər/. In feudal law, one who does or is bound to do homage.

Homaggio respectando /həˈmɛj̄yoʊ ˈriːsəpˌkɔntoʊdəʊ/. A writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the king's tenant, notwithstanding his homage not done.

Homagium /ˈhɛmədʒiˌʌm/. L. Lat. Homage (q.v.).

Homagium ligium /həˈmɛdʒiˌʌm liˈjɪəm/. In feudal law, liege homage; that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. So called from ligando (binding), because it could not be renounced like other kinds of homage.

Homagium, non per procuratores nec per literas fieri potuit, sed in præsenti persona tam domini quam tenantis capi debet et fieri /həˈmɛdʒiˌʌm ˈnɒn pər prəkˈyʊrətorɪz nɪk pər lɪˈdərəs fəˈjɑrəri pədʊvət, sɛd ɪn prəʊˈpripriə prəˈsovəm tæm ˈdəmnæn kvəm ˈtænɛntəs kæˈpædi dɛd æt fəˈjɑrəri/. Homage cannot be done by proxy, nor by letters, but must be paid and received in the proper person, as well of the lord as the tenant.

Homagium planum /həˈmɛdʒiˌʌm ˈplɛɪnˌʌm/. In feudal law, plain homage; a species of homage which bound him who did it to nothing more than fidelity, without any obligation either of military service or attendance in the courts of his superior.

Homagium reddere /həˈmɛdʒiˌʌm ˈrɛdəriə/. In feudal law, to renounce homage. This was when a vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning and defying his lord; for which there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal laws.

Homagium simplex /həˈmɛdʒiˌʌm ˈsɪmpləˈks/. In feudal law, simple homage; that kind of homage which was merely an acknowledgment of tenure, with a saving of the rights of other lords.
Hombre bueno /hombrey bwyñow/. In Spanish law, the judge of a district. Also an arbitrator chosen by the parties to a suit. Also a man in good standing; one who is competent to testify in a suit.

Home. One's own dwelling place; the house in which one lives; especially the house in which one lives with his family; the habitual abode of one's family; a dwelling house. Mann v. Haines, 146 Kan. 988, 73 P.2d 1066, 1072. That place in which one in fact resides with the intention of residence, or in which he has so resided, and with regard to which he retains residence or to which he intends to return. Place where a person dwells and which is the center of his domestic, social and civil life. Restatement of Conflicts, Second, § 12. “Home”, within statute permitting deduction for income tax purposes of amounts expended for meals and lodging while away from home, means “tax home”, which is person's principal place of business or employment. Egan v. U. S., D.C.Del., 325 F.Supp. 1227, 1230. See also Domicile; Residence; Tax home.

Home brew. An intoxicating beverage made at home or on general premises. Moonshine.

Home Loan Bank Board. See Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Home ne sera puny pur suer des briefes en court le roy, soit il a droit ou a tort. A man shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king's court, whether he be right or wrong.

Home office. The department of state through which the English sovereign administers most of the internal affairs of the kingdom, especially the police, and communicates with the judicial functionaries. As applied to a corporation, its principal office or corporate headquarters.

Homeowner's association. An association of people who own homes in a given area, formed for the purpose of improving or maintaining the quality of the area. An association formed by a land developer or the builder of condominiums or planned unit developments. The builder's participation as well as the duties of the association are controlled by statute in certain states. Such non-profit associations are commonly formed pursuant to a restrictive covenant or a declaration of restrictions.

Homeowners policy. In insurance, multi-peril type policy available to homeowners, combining coverage for fire, water, burglary, liability, etc.

Home Owners Warranty (HOW). A warranty and insurance protection program offered by many home builders in the United States. The program was developed by the Home Owners Warranty Corporation, a subsidiary of the National Association of Home Builders. The major provisions of the program are that a new home is protected for ten years against major structural defects. Similar warranty protection is provided by statute in many states.

Home port. In maritime law, the home port of a vessel is either the port where she is registered or enrolled, or the port at or nearest to which her owner usually resides, or, if there be more than one owner, the port at or nearest to which the husband, or acting and managing owner resides. But for some purposes any port where the owner happens at the time to be with his vessel is its home port.

Under the shipping laws, every vessel has what is called her "home port," to which she belongs, and which constitutes her legal abiding place or residence, regardless of her actual absence therefrom. 46 U.S.C.A. § 17, provides that "every vessel, except as hereinafter provided, shall be registered by the collector of the collection district which includes the port to which such vessel shall belong at the time of her registry, which port shall be deemed to be that at or nearest to which the owner if there be but one or, if more than one, the husband or acting and managing owner of such vessel usually resides."

See also Port.

Home port doctrine. Under "home-port" doctrine vessels engaged in interstate and foreign commerce are taxable at their home port only. Scandinavian Airlines System, Inc. v. Los Angeles County, 56 Cal.2d 11, 14 Cal. Rptr. 25, 29, 363 P.2d 25. Under "home port doctrine" a vessel plying the high seas may be taxed at its full value in its home port or in true domicile of its owner, and no other jurisdiction, including those ports visited by the vessel during its voyages, has power to tax it. Star-Kist Foods, Inc. v. Byram, 241 C.A.2d 313, 50 Cal.Rptr. 381, 382, 385.

Where repairs have been made, or necessary furnishes to a foreign ship, or to a ship in a port of the State to which she does not belong, the general maritime law, following the civil law, gives the party a lien on the ship itself for his security; and he may well maintain a suit in rem in the Admiralty to enforce his right. But in respect to repairs and necessary repairs in the port or State to which the ship belongs, the case is governed altogether by the municipal law of that State; and no lien is implied, unless it is recognized by that law. The General Smith, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 438, 442, 4 L.Ed. 609.

Home rule. Constitutional provision or type of legislative action which results in providing local cities and towns with a measure of self government if such local government accepts terms of the state legislation. See also Local option.

Home rule charter. The organizational plan or framework of a municipal corporation, analogous to a constitution of a state or nation, drawn by the municipality itself and adopted by popular vote of its people.

Homestead. The dwelling house and the adjoining land where the head of the family dwells; the home farm. The fixed residence of the head of a family, with the land and buildings surrounding the main house.

Technically, and under the modern homestead laws, an artificial estate in land, devised to protect the possession and enjoyment of the owner against the claims of his creditors, by withdrawing the property from execution and forced sale, so long as the land is occupied as a home. See Homestead exemption laws, infra.

Homestead corporations. Corporations organized for the purpose of acquiring lands in large tracts, paying off incumbrances thereon, improving and subdividing them into homestead lots or parcels, and distributing them among the shareholders, and for the accumulation of a fund for such purposes.

Homestead entry. See Entry.

Homestead exemption laws. Laws passed in most of the states allowing a householder or head of a family to designate a house and land as his homestead, and exempting the same homestead from execution for his general debts. Property tax exemptions (for all or part of the tax) are also available in some states for homesteaded property. Statutory requirements to establish a homestead may include a formal declaration to be recorded.

Homestead right. The personal right to the beneficial, peaceful and uninterrupted use of the home property free from claims of creditors.

Probate homestead. A homestead set apart by the court for the use of a surviving husband or wife and the minor children out of the common property, or out of the real estate belonging to the deceased.

Homicidal. Pertaining, relating, or impelling to homicide, as a homicidal mania.

Homicide. The killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or omission of another. The act of a human being in taking away the life of another human being. A person is guilty of criminal homicide if he purposely, knowingly, recklessly or negligently causes the death of another human being. Criminal homicide is murder, manslaughter or negligent homicide. Model Penal Code, § 210.1. See Manslaughter; Murder. Homicide is not necessarily a crime. It is a necessary ingredient of the crimes of murder and manslaughter, but there are other cases in which homicide may be committed without criminal intent and without criminal consequences, as, where it is done in the lawful execution of a judicial sentence, in self-defense, or as the only possible means of arresting an escaping felon. The term "homicide" is neutral; while it describes the act, it pronounces no judgment on its moral or legal quality. People v. Connors, 13 Misc. 582, 35 N.Y.S. 472. See Excusable homicide; Justifiable homicide, infra.

Classification

Homicide is ordinarily classified as "justifiable," "excusable," and "felonious." For the definitions of these terms, and of some other compound terms, see infra.

Culpable homicide. Described as a crime varying from the very lowest culpability, up to the very verge of murder.

Excusable homicide. The killing of a human being, either by misadventure or in self-defense. "Excusable homicide" consists of a perpetrator's acting in a manner which the law does not prohibit, such as self-defense or accidental homicide. Law v. State, 21 Md.App. 13, 318 A.2d 859, 869. The name itself imports some fault, error, or omission, so trivial, however, that the law excuses it from guilt of felony, though in strictness it judges it deserving of some little degree of punishment. It is of two sorts,—either per infortunium, by misadventure, or se defendo, upon a sudden affray. Homicide per infortunium is where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another; but, if death ensue from any unlawful act, the offense is manslaughter, and not misadventure. Homicide se defendendo is where a man kills another upon a sudden affray, merely in his own defense, or in defense of his wife, child, parent, or servant, and not from any vindictive feeling. See Self-defense.

Felonious homicide. The wrongful killing of a human being, of any age or either sex, without justification or excuse in law; of which offense there are two degrees, manslaughter and murder.

Homicide by misadventure. The accidental killing of another, where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminally careless or reckless conduct. The same as "homicide per infortunium."

Homicide by necessity. A species of justifiable homicide, because it arises from some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing, and therefore without any shadow of blame. See Self-defense.

Homicide per infortunium. Homicide by misfortune, or accidental homicide; as where a man doing a lawful act without any intention of hurt, accidentally kills another; a species of excusable homicide.

Homicide se defendendo. Homicide in self-defense; the killing of a person in self-defense upon a sudden affray, where the slayer had no other possible (or, at least, probable) means of escaping from his assailant. A species of excusable homicide.

Justifiable homicide. Such as is committed intentionally, but without any evil design, and under such circumstances of necessity or duty as render the act proper, and relieve the party from any shadow of blame; as where a sheriff lawfully executes a sentence of death upon a malefactor, or where the killing takes place in the endeavor to prevent the commission of felony which could not be otherwise avoided, or, as a matter of right, such as self-defense or other causes provided for by statute. See Self-defense.

Negligent homicide. Criminal homicide constitutes negligent homicide when it is committed negligently. Model Penal Code, § 210.4. See Self-defense.

Reckless homicide. See that title.

Vehicular homicide. Vehicular homicide is the killing of a human being by the operation of an automobile, airplane, motorboat or other motor vehicle in a manner which creates an unreasonable risk of injury to the person or property of another and which constitutes a material deviation from the standard of care which a reasonable person would observe under the same circumstances.

Homicidium /hómásádiyam/. Lat. Homicide (q.v.).

Homicidium ex causu, homicide by accident.

Homicidium ex justitia, homicide in the administration of justice, or in the execution of the sentence of the law.

Homicidium ex necessitate, homicide from inevitable necessity, as for the protection of one's person or property.
Homicidium, ex voluntate, voluntary or willful homicide.

Honor, v. To accept a bill of exchange, or to pay a note, check, or accepted bill, at maturity and according to its tenor. To pay or to accept and pay, or where a credit so engages to purchase or discount a draft complying with the terms of the draft. V.C.C. § 1-201(21). See also Dishonor.

Honor, n. In old English law, a seigniory of several manors held under one baron or lord paramount. Also those dignities or privileges, degrees of nobility, knighthood, and other titles, which flow from the crown as the fountain of honor.

In America, the customary title of courtesy given to judges, and occasionally to some other officers; as, “his honor,” “your honor,” “honorable.”

Act of honor. When a bill has been protested, and a third person wishes to take it up, or accept it, for the “honor” (credit) of one or more of the parties, the notary draws up an instrument, evidencing the transaction, which is called by this name. Such acts of honor have been eliminated by the U.C.C.

Honor courts. In old English law, tribunals held within honors or seignories.

Office of honor. As used in constitutional and statutory provisions, this term denotes a public office of considerable dignity and importance, to which important public trusts or interests are confided, but which is not compensated by any salary or fees, being thus contrasted with an “office of profit.”

Honorable. A title of courtesy given in England to the younger children of earls, and the children of viscounts and barons; and, collectively, to the house of commons. In America, the word is used as a title of courtesy for various classes of officials and judges, but without any clear lines of distinction.

Honorable discharge. A formal final judgment passed by the government upon the entire military record of a soldier, and an authoritative declaration by the government that he has left the service in a status of honor. Zearing v. Johnson, 10 Cal.App.2d 654, 52 P.2d 1019, 1020. Full veterans benefits are only given to those with an “honorable discharge” status.

Honorarium /ˌɒnərəriəm/. In the civil law, an honorary or free gift; a gratuitous payment, as distinguished from hire or compensation for service; a lawyer’s or counsellor’s fee.

A voluntary reward for that for which no remuneration could be collected by law. Cunningham v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A., 67 F.2d 205. A voluntary donation, in consideration of services which admit of no compensation in money.

Honorarium jus /ˌɒnərəriəm jəs/. Lat. In Roman law, the law of the prætors and the edicts of the ædiles.

Honorary. As applied to public offices and other positions of responsibility or trust, this term means either that the office or title is bestowed upon the incumbent as a mark of honor or compliment, without intending to charge him with the active discharge of the duties of the place, or else that he is to receive no salary or other compensation in money, the honor conferred by the incumbency of the office being his only reward. In other contents or usages, it means attached to or growing out of some honor or dignity or honorable office, or else it imports an obligation or duty growing out of honor or trust only, as distinguished from legal accountability.

Honorary canons. Those without emolument.

Honorary fees. In old English law, titles of nobility, descendible to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest. 2 Bl.Comm. 56.

Honorary services. In feudal law, special services to be rendered to the king in person, characteristic of the tenure by grand serjeanty; such as to carry his banner, his sword, or the like or to be his butler, champion, or other officer, at his coronation.

Honorary trust. See Trust.

Honorary trustees. Trustees to preserve contingent remainders, so called because they are bound, in honor only, to decide on the most proper and prudent course.

Honoris respectum /ˈɒnɔrɪs rɛspɛktəm/. By reason of honor or privilege. See Challenge.

Hontfongeneth /hɒntfɔŋˈɛnɛθ/. In Saxon law, a gallows; the punishment of hanging.

Hooch. Slang for intoxicating liquor illicitly distilled for beverage purposes. State v. Cook, 318 Mo. 1233, 3 S.W.2d 365, 369. Also called “moonshine.”

Hope, v. A desire or expectation. As used in a will, this term is a precatory word, rather than mandatory or dispositive, but it is sufficient, in proper cases, to create a trust in or in respect to the property spoken of.

Hoppo. A Chinese term for a collector; an overseer of commerce.

Hore juridice or judicale /ˈɔrɪ dʒɪkələ/. Hours during which the judges sat in court to attend to judicial business.

Hora non est multum de substantia negotii, licet in appello de ea aliquando fiat mentio /hɔrə nɔn ɛst məltəm dıə səbstənˈʃiə naˈɡɒwˌʃiəjˌaɪ/. Hours of business, although in appeal it is sometimes mentioned.

Horka /hɔrəkə/. In Spanish law, a gallows; the punishment of hanging.

Hospitium /hôspish(i)əm/. An inn; a household.

Host. L. Fr. An army. A military expedition; war.

Hostage. An innocent person held captive by one who threatens to kill or harm him if his demands are not met. A person who is given into the possession of the enemy, in time of war, his freedom (or life) to stand as security for the performance of some contract or promise made by the belligerent power giving the hostage with the other.

Hostagelium /hôstäləj(i)əm/. A right to receive lodging and entertainment, anciently reserved by lords in the houses of their tenants.

Hosteler. An innkeeper. See also Hostler.

Hostes /hôstijə/. Lat. Enemies. Hostes humani generis, enemies of the human race; i.e., pirates.

Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; cæteri proditores vel prédones sunt /hôstijə sânt kwâi nówbəs vəl kwəbs nóws béləm dəsərmənas; sėdəray pɾəwdətorijə vəl pɾədəwniə sânt/. Enemies are those with whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates.

Hosticide /hôstəsəyd/. One who kills an enemy.

Hostiliaria, hospitalaria /hôš(pə)taləriə/. A place or room in religious houses used for the reception of guests and strangers.

Hostile. Having the character of an enemy; standing in the relation of an enemy. Feeling or displaying enmity or antagonism such as a hostile witness. See Hostile or adverse witness.

Within requirement for adverse possession that possession be asserted in hostile manner, “hostile” means that it is asserted against claim of ownership of all others, including record owner, but does not mean that adverse possessor display a subjective evil intent or emotion against title owner. Steller v. David, Del.Super., 257 A.2d 391, 395.

Hostile embargo. One laid upon the vessels of an actual or prospective enemy.

Hostile fire. In fire insurance law, a fire which breaks out in place not anticipated; fire which escapes into area not expected. One which becomes uncontrollable or breaks out from where it was intended to be and becomes hostile element. Reliance Ins. Co. v. Naman, 118 Tex. 21, 6 S.W.2d 743, 744.
Hostile or adverse witness. A witness who manifests so much hostility or prejudice under examination in chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him, i.e., to treat him as though he had been called by the opposite party. When a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions. Fed.Evid. R. 611.

Hostile possession. See Possession.

Hostler /hóstlr/. In Norman and old English law, this was the title of the officer in a monastery charged with the entertainment of guests. It was also applied (until about the time of Queen Elizabeth) to an innkeeper, and afterwards, when the keeping of horses at livery became a distinct occupation, to the keeper of a livery stable, and then (under the modern form "ostler") to the groom in charge of the stables of an inn.

Hot blood. In criminal law, condition of one whose passions have been aroused to an uncontrollable degree and whose homicide may be reduced, therefore, from murder to manslaughter. See also Heat of passion.

Hot cargo. In labor law, goods produced or handled by employer with whom union has dispute.

Hot cargo agreement. Voluntary agreement between union and neutral employer by which latter agrees to exert pressure on another employer with whom union has a dispute. N. L. R. B. v. Amalgamated Lithographers of America, C.C.A.Ind., 309 F.2d 31. See Landrum-Griffin Act.

Hotchpot. The blending and mixing property belonging to different persons, in order to divide it equally. Anciently applied to the mixing and blending of lands given to one daughter in frank marriage, with those descending to her and her sisters in fee-simple, for the purpose of dividing the whole equally among them; without which the daughter who held in frank marriage could have no share in the lands in fee-simple. 2 Bl.Comm. 190.

Hotchpot, or the putting in hotchpot, is applied in modern law to the throwing the amount of an advancement made to a particular child, in real or personal estate, into the common stock, for the purpose of a more equal division, or of equalizing the shares of all the children. This answers to or resembles the collatio bonorum, or collation of the civil law.

Hotel. A "hotel" is a building held out to the public as a place where all transient persons who come will be received and entertained as guests for compensation and it opens its facilities to the public as a whole rather than limited accessibility to a well-defined private group. Ambassador Athletic Club v. Utah State Tax Commission, 27 Utah 2d 377, 496 P.2d 883.

Hotel divorce. Form of collusive divorce in which by agreement of both spouses, one spouse stages a fake adultery scene.

Hot issue. See Issue (Securities).

Hot pursuit. See Fresh pursuit.

Hot-water ordeal. In old English law, this was a test, in cases of accusation, by hot water; the party accused and suspected being appointed by the judge to put his arms up to the elbows in seething hot water, which, after sundry prayers and invocations, he did, and was, by the effect which followed, judged guilty or innocent.

Hour. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; sixty minutes of time.

Office hours. See Office.

Hours of labor. Time period in which employees work and which is governed in part by state and federal (e.g. Adamson Act; Fair Labor Standards Act) laws enacted under police power insofar as such legislation deals with the safety and welfare of laborers and the public.

House. Structure that serves as living quarters for one or more persons or families. See also Curtilage; Domicile; Home; Residence.

A legislative assembly, or (where the bicameral system obtains) one of the two branches of the legislature; as the "house of lords" or "house of representatives". Also a quorum of a legislative body.

The name "house" is also given to some collections of men other than legislative bodies, to some public institutions, and (colloquially) to mercantile firms or joint-stock companies.

Ancient house. In old English law, one which has stood long enough to acquire an easement of support against the adjoining land or building.

Bawdy house. A brothel; a house maintained for purposes of prostitution.

Disorderly house. See that title.

Duplex house. A double house.

 Dwelling house. See Dwelling.

House-bote. In old English law, a species of estovers, belonging to a tenant for life or years, consisting in the right to take from the woods of the lessor or owner such timber as may be necessary for making repairs upon the house.

House-burning. See Arson.

House-duty. In England, a tax on inhabited houses imposed by 14 & 15 Vict., c. 36, in lieu of window-duty, which was abolished.

House of Commons. One of the constituent houses of the British parliament, composed of representatives of the counties, cities, and boroughs. The lower house, so called because the commons of the realm, that is, the knights, citizens, and burgesses returned to parliament, representing the whole body of the commons, sit there. See also House of Lords, infra.

House of correction. A reformatory. A place for the confinement of juvenile offenders, or those who have committed crimes of lesser magnitude.
House of Delegates. The official title of the lower branch of the legislative assembly of several of the states, e.g., Maryland and Virginia.

House of ill fame. A bawdy house; house of prostitution; a brothel; a dwelling allowed by its chief occupant to be used by persons desiring unlawful sexual intercourse. People v. Lee, 307 Mich. 743, 12 N.W.2d 418, 421. See Bawdy-house.

House of Lords. The upper chamber of the British parliament. It comprises the lords spiritual and the lords temporal, and a certain number of Scotch peers. The House of Lords is also the court of final appeal in most civil cases and has jurisdiction over impeachment. See also House of Commons, supra.

Public house. An inn or tavern; a house for the entertainment of the public, or for the entertainment of all who come lawfully and pay regularly. A place of public resort, particularly for purposes of drinking or gaming. In a more general sense, any house made public by the occupation carried on in it and the implied invitation to the public to enter, such as inns, taverns, drinking saloons, gambling houses, and perhaps also shops and stores. This term is now generally obsolete.

Tipping house. A place where intoxicating liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises.

Houseage. A fee paid for housing goods by a carrier, or at a wharf, etc.

Under some statutes housebreaking may consist in "breaking out" of a house after access had been gained without breaking.

House counsel. Lawyer who acts as attorney for business though carried as an employee of that business and not as an independent lawyer. Generally, such lawyer advises business on day to day matters. Larger businesses have legal departments with attorneys assigned to specialized areas of law affecting their particular business; e.g. labor law, taxes, personal injury litigation, corporate law, etc.

Household, adj. Belonging to the house and family; domestic.

Household, n. A family living together. Schurler v. Industrial Commission, 86 Utah 284, 43 P.2d 696, 699. Those who dwell under the same roof and compose a family. A man's family living together constitutes his household, though he may have gone to another state.

Term "household" is generally synonymous with "family" for insurance purposes, and includes those who dwell together as a family under the same roof. Van Overbeke v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 303 Minn. 387, 227 N.W.2d 807, 810. Generally, the term "household" as used in automobile policies is synonymous with "home" and "family." Bartholet v. Berkness, 291 Minn. 123, 189 N.W.2d 410, 412.

For "Family," see that title.

Householder. The occupier of a house. More correctly, one who keeps house with his or her family; the head or master of a family. Berghaen v. Berghaen, 113 Ind.App. 412, 48 N.E.2d 1001, 1003. One who has a household; the head of a household. See also Head of family or household.

House law. A peculiar type of regulatory code, now largely obsolete, promulgated by the head of a royal or noble family, or of a prominent private family, governing intra-family relationships and acts with respect to policies of marriage, disposition of property, inheritance and the like. Usually these codes had no legal authority but were enforced within the family by sufficient personal and economic sanctions.

House of prostitution. See Bawdy-house.

House of Representatives. The House of Representatives of Congress comprises 435 representatives. The number representing each State is determined by population but every State is entitled to at least one representative. Members are elected by the people by district for 2-year terms, all terms running for the same period. Representatives must be at least 25 years of age, citizens of United States for at least seven years, and live in the state they represent. Art. I, § 2 of U.S.Const.

Housing code. See Building code.

HUD. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Hude-geld /hʌð(ə)n)gɛld/. In old English law, an acquittance for an assault upon a trespassing servant. Also, the price on one's skin, or the money paid by a servant to save himself from a whipping.
Hue and cry. In old English law, a loud outcry with which felons (such as robbers, burglars, and murderers) were anciently pursued, and which all who heard it were bound to take up, and join in the pursuit, until the malefactor was taken. 4 Bl.Comm. 293. A written proclamation issued on the escape of a felon from prison, requiring all officers and police to assist in retaking him.

Hughes doctrine. Name is derived from case of Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Hughes, C.A.N.Y., 449 F.2d 51, reversed on other grounds, 409 U.S. 363, 93 S.Ct. 647, 34 L.Ed.2d 577, in which court held that defendant's default had the effect of admitting that the conduct described in complaint violated antitrust laws and caused damage, though not necessarily in the amount alleged.

Hulks. A place of punishment for convicts in England, abandoned with the reform in the punishment of convicts which began in England about 1840.

Humanitarian doctrine. Doctrine evolved from Minnesota to Missou­ra (Wonnack v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 337 Mo. 1160, 88 S.W.2d 368) in which a plaintiff is relieved of responsibility for his negligence if he can show that the defendant (generally one operating a train or motor vehicle while plaintiff is pedestrian) had last opportunity to avoid the accident. It is only when plaintiff comes into a position of imminent, impending and immediate danger in which injury to plaintiff is reasonably certain if the existing circumstances remain unchanged that the "humanitarian doctrine" seizes upon the situation and imposes upon defendant a duty to thereafter exercise proper care to avoid the threatened injury. Finch v. Kegevic, Mo.App., 486 S.W.2d 515, 518, 519, 521. Only a very few states follow this doctrine.

See also Imminent peril; Last clear chance doctrine.

Hundred. Under the Saxon organization of England, each county or shire comprised of an indefinite number of hundreds, each containing ten tithings, or groups of ten families of freeholders or frank­pledges. The hundred was governed by a high constable, and had its own court; but its most remarkable feature was the corporate responsibility of the whole for the crimes or defaults of the individual members. The introduction of this plan of organization into England is commonly ascribed to Alfred, but the idea, as well of the collective liability as of the division, was probably known to the ancient German peoples, as we find the same thing established in the Frankish kingdom under Clothaire, and in Denmark. 1 Bl.Comm. 115; 4 Bl.Comm. 411.

Hundredarius /hündradériaus/. In old English law, a hundredary or hundredor. A name given to the chief officer of a hundred, as well as to the freeholders who composed it.

Hundredary /hündradéria/. The chief or presiding officer of a hundred.

Hundred Court. In English law, a larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred, instead of a manor. The free suitors were the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It was not a court of record, and resembled a court-baron in all respects except that in point of territory it was of greater jurisdiction. These courts no longer exist. 3 Bl.Comm. 34, 35.

Hundredes eardor, or hundredes man /hündradz árdar/ hündradzman/. The presiding officer in the hundred court.

Hundred-fecta /hündrad féktä/. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

Hundred geomote /hündrad gamówt/. Among the Sax­ons, a meeting or court of the freeholders of a hundred, which assembled, originally, twelve times a year, and possessed civil and criminal jurisdiction and ecclesiastical powers.

Hundred lagh /hündrad lô/. The law of the hundred, or hundred court; liability to attend the hundred court.

Hundredors /hündradarz/. In English law, the inhabit­ants or freeholders of a hundred, anciently the suitors or judges of the hundred court. Persons impaneled or fit to be impaneled upon juries, dwelling within the hundred where the cause of action arose. It was formerly necessary to have some of these upon every panel of jurors. 3 Bl.Comm. 359, 360. The term "hundredor" was also used to signify the officer who had the jurisdiction of a hundred, and held the hundred court, and sometimes the bailiff of a hundred.

Hundred penny. In old English law, a tax collected from the hundred, by the sheriff or lord of the hundred.

Hundred rolls. In England, rolls embodying the result of investigations made by the commissioners in 1274 as to usurpations of the royal rights.

Hundred secta /hündrad sëktä/. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

Hundred setena /hündrad satyyna/. In Saxon law, the dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred.

Hundredweight. A denomination of weight containing, according to the English system, 112 pounds; but in this country, generally, it consists of 100 pounds avoirdupois.

Hung jury. A jury so irreconcilably divided in opinion that they cannot agree upon any verdict. See Dynamite instruction.

Huntley hearing. In New York, a separate proceeding in a criminal case wherein the admissibility of an accused's extrajudicial statements is determined. People v. Huntley, 15 N.Y.2d 72, 255 N.Y.S.2d 838, 204 N.E.2d 179.

Hurdereferst /húrdarfeöst/. A domestic; one of a family.
Hurt. In such phrases as “to the hurt or annoyance of another,” or “hurt, molested, or restrained in his person or estate,” this word is not restricted to physical injuries, but includes also mental pain, as well as discomfort or annoyance. See also Damage; Injury.

Hurto /h(ô)örtow/. In Spanish law, theft.

Husband. A married man; one who has a lawful wife living. The correlative of “wife.”

Etymologically, the word signified the “house bond;” the man who, according to Saxon ideas and institutions, held around him the family, for whom he was in law responsible.

Husbandman. A farmer, a cultivator or tiller of the ground. The word “farmer” is colloquially used as synonymous with “husbandman”, but originally meant a tenant who cultivates leased ground.

Husband of a ship. See Ship (Ship’s husband).

Husband-wife privilege. Term refers to privilege extended to confidential marital communications. While state statutes vary, in general such provide that a spouse has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent the other from disclosing, a confidential communication made while spouses were married. There are certain exceptions to this privilege, the major one being where one spouse is the victim of a crime by the other.

Husband-wife tort actions. The common law rule, carried forward by statute in many states, prohibits tort actions between spouses. The current trend however is to abolish this interspousal immunity doctrine, thus permitting such suits between spouses. Some states have abolished the doctrine only insofar as automobile tort actions.

Husbrec /hûwsbréyk/. In Saxon law, the crime of housebreaking or burglary.

Huscarle /hûwskârl/. In old English law, a house servant or domestic; a man of the household. A king’s vassal, thane, or baron; an earl’s man or vassal.

Husfastne /hûwsfês(t)on/. He who holds house and land.

Husgablium /hûwsgâblam/. In old English law, house rent; or a tax or tribute laid upon a house.

Hush-money. A colloquial expression to designate a bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

Hustings. Council; court; tribunal. Apparently so called from being held within a building, at a time when other courts were held in the open air. It was a local court. The county court in the city of London bore this name. There were hustings at York, Winchester, Lincoln, and in other places similar to the London hustings. Also the raised place from which candidates for seats in parliament address the constituency, on the occasion of their nomination. Courts of Hustig in England no longer exist.

Hutesium et clamor /hyatîyz(h)(i)yam êt klêmar/. Hue and cry.

H.V. An abbreviation for hoc verbo or hac voce, this word, under this word; used references to dictionaries and other works alphabetically arranged.

Hybrid class action. Term refers to type of actions where the right to be enforced is several but the object of the action is the adjudication of claims which do or may affect specific property in the action. Eastham v. Public Emp. Retirement Ass’n Bd., 89 N.M. 399, 553 P.2d 679, 682.

Hypnotism. The act of inducing artificially a state of sleep or trance in a subject by means of verbal suggestion by the hypnotist or by the subject's concentration upon some object. It is generally characterized by extreme responsiveness to suggestions from the hypnotist.

Hypobolum /hapôbalam/. In the civil law, the name of the bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, at his death, above her dowry.

Hypochondriasis; hypomania /hâypskôndriya, hîpos’/hâyp-skômë(n)i/ya, hîpos’/. See Insanity.

Hypothec /hâypœîyka, hîpos’/. “Hypothec” was a term of the Roman law, and denoted a pledge or mortgage. As distinguished from the term “pignus,” in the same law, it denoted a mortgage, whether of lands or of goods, in which the subject in pledge remained in the possession of the mortgagor or debtor; whereas in the pignus the mortgagee or creditor was in the possession. Such an hypotheca might be either express or implied; express, where the parties upon the occasion of a loan entered into express agreement to that effect; or implied, as, e.g., in the case of the stock and utensils of a farmer, which were subject to the landlord’s right as a creditor for rent; whence the Scotch law of hypothec.

The word has suggested the term “hypotheicate,” as used in the mercantile and maritime law of England. Thus, under the factor’s act, goods are frequently said to be “hypothecated;” and a captain is said to have a right to hypothecate his vessel for necessary repairs.

Hypothecaria action /hapôthekiriya âksh(i)yaw/. Lat. In the civil law, an hypothecaria action; an action for the enforcement of an hypotheca, or right of mortgage; or to obtain the surrender of the thing mortgaged.

Hypothecarium creditores /hapôthekiriya krêdâtôriz/. Lat. In the civil law, hypothecaria creditors; those who loaned money on the security of an hypotheca (q.v.).

Hypothecary action /hapôthekiri yâ âkshan/. The name of an action allowed under the civil law for the enforcement of the claims of a creditor by the contract of hypotheca. Lovell v. Cragin, 136 U.S. 130, 10 S.Ct. 1024, 34 L.Ed. 372.

An hypothecary action is a real action, which the creditor brings against the property which has been hypothecated to him by his debtor, in order to have it seized and sold for the payment of his debt. La. Code of Civil Procedure, Arts. 2378, 3721 et seq. In the hypothecary action proper, there is no pursuit of the person; the thing mortgaged is the debtor, and the action is directed against it. In this sense, the action is real.

Hypothecate /hapō̞ːskéyt/. To pledge property as security or collateral for a debt. Generally, there is no physical transfer of the pledged property to the lender; nor is the lender given title to the property; though he has the right to sell the pledged property upon default. Moore v. Wardlaw, C.C.A.Tex., 522 S.W.2d 552, 554. See also Pledge; Rehypothecation.

Hypothecation bond /hapō̞ːskéyʃən bōnd/. A bond given in the contract of bottomry or respondentia.

Hypothéque /hypoːtwék/. In French law, hypothecation; a mortgage on real property; the right vested in a creditor by the assignment to him of real estate as security for the payment of his debt, whether or not it be accompanied by possession.

It corresponds to the mortgage of real property in English law, and is a real charge, following the property into whosesoever hands it comes. It may be légale, as in the case of the charge which the state has over the lands of its accountants, or which a married woman has over those of her husband; judiciaire, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of justice; and conventionelle, when it is the result of an agreement of the parties.

Hypothesis /hapō̞ːsses/. A supposition, assumption, or theory; a theory set up by the prosecution, on a criminal trial, or by the defense, as an explanation of the facts in evidence, and a ground for inferring guilt or innocence, as the case may be, or as indicating a probable or possible motive for the crime.

Hypothetical question. A combination of assumed or proved facts and circumstances, stated in such form as to constitute a coherent and specific situation or state of facts, upon which the opinion of an expert is asked, by way of evidence on a trial. A hypothetical question is a form of question framed in such a manner as to call for an opinion from an expert based on a series of assumptions claimed to have been established as fact by the evidence in a case. It should be so framed as to recite all the facts in evidence which are relevant to the formation of an opinion and then, assuming the facts recited to be true, the witness should be asked whether he is able to form an opinion therefrom and if so to state his opinion. McMurrey v. State, 145 Tex.Cr.R. 439, 168 S.W.2d 858, 860; Fed.Evid. R. 703, 705.

Hypothetical yearly tenancy. The basis, in England, of rating lands and hereditaments to the poor-rate, and to other rates and taxes that are expressed to be leviable or assessable in like manner as the poor-rate.

Hystéria. Disorder of the psychoneurotic system characterized by disturbances of the psychic, sensory, motor, and visceral functions. Extreme emotionalism, commonly characterized by attention-seeking, impulsive demonstrations.

Hysteropotmoi. Those who, having been thought dead, had, after a long absence in foreign countries, returned safely home; or those who, having been thought dead in battle, had afterwards unexpectedly escaped from their enemies and returned home. These, among the Romans, were not permitted to enter their own houses at the door, but were received at a passage opened in the roof.

Hystérotomy /histsərɔ̈dəməı̈/. The Cæsarean operation. See Cæsarean operation.

Ibidem /ibädam/ /bäydam/. Lat. In the same place; in the same book; on the same page, etc. Abbreviated to "ibid." or "ib.

Ibl semper debet fieri triatio ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam /ibay sëmpar débat fäyaray triyësh(y)ow yúwbay jüratóryz pösant hâbiriy natish(y)am/. A trial should always be had where the jurors can be the best informed.

I.C.C. Interstate Commerce Commission.

I—citus. An abbreviation for "jurisconsultus," one learned in the law; a jurisconsult. See Jurisconsultus.

Ictus orbis /iktas órbas/. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin. When the skin is cut, the injury is called a "wound."

Id. See Idem.

I.D. Identification.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest /id särđam ét kwôd särđam réday pôwôdas/. That is certain which can be made certain. 2 Bl.Comm. 143; 1 Bl.Comm. 78.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest, sed id magis certum est quod semetipsum est certum /id särđam ét kwôd särđam réday pôwôdas, sëd id mëyjà särđam ét kwôd dëy slymadipso ét särđam/. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself.

Idem /âydam/. Lat. The same; used to indicate a reference previously made. According to Lord Coke, "idem" has two significations, sc., idem syllabis seu verbis (the same in syllabus or words), and idem re et sensu (the same in substance and in sense).

Idem agens et patiens esse non potest /âydam éyjan(d)z ét pëysh(y)an(d)z ésiy nôn prôwôdas/. The same person cannot be both agent and patient; i.e., the doer and person to whom the thing is done.

Idem est facere, et non prohibere cum possis; et qui non prohibit, cum prohibere possit, in cuipea est (aut jubet) /âydam ét fëysaryi éti nôn prôwhabiriy, kâm pôsas, ét kwây nôn prów(h)obat kâm prôwhabiriy pösat in kâlpa ét/. To commit, and not to prohibit when in your power, is the same thing; and he who does not prohibit when he can prohibit is in fault, or does the same as ordering it to be done.

Idem est nihil dicere, et insufficienter dicere /âydam ét náy(h)al disarî ét insafls(h)iyentar disarî/. It is the same thing to say nothing, and to say a thing insufficiently. To say a thing in an insufficient manner is the same as not to say it at all. Applied to the plea of a prisoner.

Idem est non esse, et non apparere /âydam ét nôn ésiy ét nôn appairiy/. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. Not to appear is the same thing as not to be.

Idem est non probari et non esse; non deficit jus, sed probatio /âydam ét nôn prôbaray ét nôn ésiy, nôn défasat jäs sëd prôbëys(h)iyow/. What is not proved and what does not exist are the same; it is not a defect of the law, but of proof.

Idem est scire aut scire debere aut potuisse /âydam ét sêyriy öt sêyriy däbiriy öt pódwisisy/. To be bound to know or to be able to know is the same as to know.

Idem per idem /âydam par âydam/. The same for the same. An illustration of a kind that really adds no additional element to the consideration of the question.

Idem semper antecedenti proximo refertur /âydam sëmpar äntasdentay prôksomaw rôfârdar/. "The same" is always referred to its next antecedent.

Idem sonantes /âydam sôwnän(d)z/. Sounding the same or alike; having the same sound. A term applied to names which are substantially the same, though slightly varied in the spelling, as "Lawrence" and "Lawrance," and the like. State v. Culbertson, 6 N.C.App. 327, 170 S.E.2d 125, 127. Under the rule of "idem sonantes," variance between allegation and proof of a given name is not material if the names sound the same or the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced. Martin v. State, Tex.Cr.App., 541 S.W.2d 605, 606.

Two names are said to be "idem sonantes" if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing them when pronounced, or if common and long-continued usage has by corruption or abbreviation made them identical in pronunciation. The rule of "idem sonantes" is that absolute accuracy in spelling names is not required in a legal document or proceedings either civil or criminal; that if the name, as spelled in the document, though different from the correct spelling thereof, conveys to the ear, when pronounced according to the commonly accepted methods, a sound practically identical with the correct name as commonly pronounced, the name thus given is a sufficient identification of the individual referred to, and no advantage can be taken of the clerical error. The doctrine of "idem sonans" has been much enlarged by decisions, to conform to the growing rule that a variance, to be material, must be such as has misled the opposite party to his prejudice.

Identical. Exactly the same for all practical purposes.

Identification. Proof of identity. The proving that a person, subject, or article before the court is the very same that he or it is alleged, charged, or reputed to be; as where a witness recognizes the prisoner as the same person whom he saw committing the crime; or where handwriting, stolen goods, counterfeit coin, etc., are recognized as the same which once passed under the observation of the person identifying them. See also Authentication; Line-up; Mug book.

The requirement of identification as a condition precedent to admissability is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims. Fed.Evid.R. 901.

See also Authentication; Eyewitness identification; Label; Lineup; Voiceprint.

Identification of goods. The buyer obtains a special property and an insurable interest in goods by identification of existing goods as goods to which the contract refers even though the goods so identified are non-conforming and he has an option to return or reject them. Such identification can be made at any time and in any manner explicitly agreed to by the parties. U.C.C. § 2-501.

Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum /adéntatæs virs kalijarðar èks mälstþýwðaniy sag­nòram/. True identity is collected from a multitude of signs.

Identitate nominis /adéntatédiy nómànas/. In English law, an ancient writ (now obsolete) which lay for one taken and arrested in any personal action, and committed to prison, by mistake for another man of the same name.

Identity. Evidence. Sameness; the fact that a subject, person, or thing before a court is the same as it is represented, claimed, or charged to be. See Authentication; Identification.

Patent Law. Such sameness between two designs, inventions, combinations, etc., as will constitute the one an infringement of the patent granted for the other. To constitute "identity of invention," and therefore infringement, not only must the result obtained be the same, but, in case the means used for its attainment is a combination of known elements, the elements combined in both cases must be the same, and combined in the same way, so that each element shall perform the same function; provided that the differences alleged are not merely colorable according to the rule forbidding the use of known equivalents. Electric Railroad Signal Co. v. Hall Railroad Signal Co., 114 U.S. 87, 5 S.Ct. 1069, 29 L.Ed. 96. "Identity of design" means sameness of appearance, or, in other words, sameness of effect upon the eye,—not the eye of an expert, but of an ordinary intelligent observer. Smith v. Whitman Saddle Co., 148 U.S. 674, 13 S.Ct. 768, 37 L.Ed. 606.

Identity of interests. In civil procedure, an amendment (addition) of a party will be allowed if the party sought to be joined is so closely related in business or other activities that the institution of an action against one serves as notice of litigation to the other, and hence the amendment will relate back. Grooms v. Greyhound Corp., C.A.Ohio, 287 F.2d 95; Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(c). See also Identity of parties; Privity.

Identity of parties. Refers to condition of persons in relation to each other so that a former judgment against one bars action against others because of res judicata; hence, same parties and those in privity are so barred. See Res (Res judicata).

Idée /ádyiow/. Lat. Therefore.

Idée consideratum est /ádyiow kannísáréydam êst/. Lat. Therefore it is considered. These were the words used at the beginning of the entry of judgment in an action, when the forms were in Latin. They are also used as a name for that portion of the record.

Ides /áydz/. A division of time among the Romans. In March, May, July, and October, the Ides were on the 15th of the month; in the remaining months, on the 13th. This method of reckoning is still retained in the chancery of Rome, and in the calendar of the breviary.

Id est /id êst/. Lat. That is. Commonly abbreviated "i.e."

Idlochira /ídiyokáyra/. Græco-Lat. In the civil law, an instrument privately executed, as distinguished from such as were executed before a public officer.

Idlocy, idiopathic insanity /id(i)yasiy, idiyowpásak insánadiy/. See Insanity.

Idiota /ídiyôwa/. In the civil law, an unlearned, illiterate, or simple person. A private man; one not in office.

Idiota inquirendo, writ de /rit diy idiyôwa igkwâren­dow/. This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to inquire whether a man be an idiot or not. The inquiry is to be made by a jury of twelve men. And, if the man were found an idiot, the profits of his lands and the custody of his person might be granted by the king to any subject who had interest enough to obtain them. 1 Bl.Comm. 303.

Idonetas /ídañiyatæs/. In old English law, ability or fitness (of a person).

Idoneum se facere; idoneare se /ídóñiyám siy féy­saryi/ídâñeriy siy/. To purge one's self by oath of a crime of which one is accused.

Idoneus /ídóñiyás/. Lat. In the civil and common law, sufficient; competent; fit or proper; responsible; unimpeachable. Idoneus homo, a responsible or solvent person; a good and lawful man. Sufficient; adequate; Satisfactory. Idonea cautio, sufficient security.

Ignorantia juris quod quique tenetur scire, neminem excusat /ignaréns(h(i)y) júras kwó kwískwiw tanýyda sáyriy, némanam akskyúywát/. Ignorance of the [or a] law, which every one is bound to know, excuses no man. A mistake in point of law is, in criminal cases, no sort of defense. And, in civil cases, ignorance of the law, with a full knowledge of the facts, furnishes no ground, either in law or equity, to rescind agreements, or reclaim money paid, or set aside solemn acts of the parties.

Ignorantia juris sui non prejudicat juris /ignaréns(h(i)y)á yúvay nón prajúwsak júray/. Ignorance of Ignoratio elenchii /ignaréysh(i)y)ow ølégkay=. Lat. A term of logic, sometimes applied to pleadings and to arguments on appeal, which signifies a mistake of the question, that is, the mistake of one who, failing to discern the real question which he is to meet and answer, addresses his allegations or arguments to a collateral matter or something beside the point.

Ignoratis terminis artis, ignoratur et ars /ignaréydas Ignore. To be ignorant of, or unacquainted with. To disregard willfully; to refuse to recognize; to decline to take notice of.

To reject as groundless, false or unsupported by

Ignoscitur ei qui sanguinem suum qualiter redemptum held binding upon him in law. 1 Bl.Comm. 131.

Ikbal. Acceptance (of a bond, etc.).

Ikbal dawa. Confession of judgment.

Ikrah. Compulsion; especially constraint exercised by one person over another to do an illegal act, or to act to his contrary to his inclination.

Ikrar. Agreement, assent, or ratification.

Ikrar nama. A deed of assent and acknowledgment.

III. In old pleading, bad; defective in law; null; naught; the opposite of good or valid.

Illegal. Against or not authorized by law.

Illegal entry. An alien is guilty of illegal entry if: (1) he enters at the wrong time or place in the country, or
(2) eludes an examination by immigration officers, or
(3) obtains entry by fraud. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1325.

Illegal interest. Usury; interest at a higher rate than the law allows.

Illegality /illegáldiy=. That which is contrary to the principles of law, as contradistinguished from mere rules of procedure.

Illegally obtained evidence. Evidence which is obtained in violation of defendant’s rights because officers had no warrant and no probable cause to arrest or because the warrant was defective and no valid grounds existed for seizure without a warrant. Evidence secured in violation of statutes or constitutional guarantee against unreasonable searches, U.S. Constitution, 4th Amendment. Such evidence is inadmissible in criminal trial of victim of such search. Mapp v.
Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081.
See Exclusionary Rule; Fruit of poisonous tree.

Illegal per se. Unlawful in and of itself and not because of some extraneous circumstance, e.g. a contract to assassinate a public official.

Illegal trade. Such traffic or commerce as carried on its violation of federal, state, or local laws; e.g. trade in violation of antitrust laws; trade in stolen goods.

Legitimacy /ilajdámasi=. The condition before the law, or the social status, of an illegitimate child; condition of one whose parents were not intermarried at the time of his or her birth.

Illegitimate /ilajdámat=. That which is contrary to law; term is usually applied to children born out of lawful wedlock. See Illegitimate child.

Illegitimate child. Child who is born at a time when his parents, though alive, are not married to each other.
Such child however is legitimate if they were married after his conception and before his birth. Home of Holy Infancy v. Kaska, Tex., 397 S.W.2d 208. While the laws with respect to inheritance are changing, the majority of states still provide that while the illegitimate child has a right to inherit from its mother, such illegitimate child does not have a similar right to inherit from its natural father. Trimble v. Gordon, 430 U.S. 762, 97 S.Ct. 1459, 52 L.Ed.2d 31. See also Person.

Ill fame. Evil repute; notorious bad character. Houses of prostitution, gaming houses, and other such disor-erly places are called “houses of ill fame,” and a person who frequents them is a person of ill fame.

Illicencatus /ilasénsiyéydas=. In old English law, without license.

Illicit /ilíts/. Not permitted or allowed; prohibited;
unlawful; as an illicit trade; illicit intercourse.

Illicit cohabitation. The living together as man and wife of two persons who are not lawfully married, with the implication that they habitually practice fornication. Thomas v. United States, D.C.Mass., 14 F.2d 228, 229. At common law and by statutes in many states, living together either in adultery or fornication is a crime, though at common law such cohabitation had to be open and notorious so as to cause a public scandal. Such statutes are seldom enforced.

Illicit connection. Unlawful sexual intercourse. See Illicit relations.

Illicit distillery. One carried on without a compliance with the provisions of the laws of the United States relating to the distribution and taxation of spirituous liquor.

Illicit relations. Any form of unlawful sexual intercourse such as fornication or adultery. See Illicit cohabitation.

Illicit trade. Policies of marine insurance usually contain a covenant of warranty against "illicit trade", meaning thereby trade which is forbidden, or declared unlawful, by the laws of the country where the cargo is to be delivered.

Illicitum collegium /alísádám kálíyíj(i)yán/. Lat. An illegal corporation.

Illinois land trust. See Land trust.

Illiteracy. The condition of one who cannot read or write and, in general, of one who is unlettered or unlearned.

Illness. Sickness, disease or disorder of body or mind. In insurance law, a disease or ailment of such a character as to affect the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously, and not a mere temporary indisposition which does not tend to undermine or weaken the constitution of the insured. Zogg v. Bankers' Life Co. of Des Moines, Iowa, C.C. A.W.Va., 62 F.2d 575, 578. For mental illness, see Insanity. See also Serious Illness.

Illocable /iíló(w)kabál/. Incapable of being placed out or hired.

Illud /ílíd/. Lat. That.

Illud, quod alias licitum non est, necessitas facit licitum; et necessitas inducit privilegium quoad jura privata /ílíd kvód éýliyas lísádám nón ést nasésztás féýsát lísádám; ét nasésztás and(y)úwsát prívalíyíj(i)yán kwówǎd júra právéýda/. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

Illud, quod alteri unitur, extinguitur, neque amplius per se vacare licet /ílíd, kvód ó̄tarár yûwówǎdr, akstégwǎdr, ně́kwìwi ā̄mpliýas pàr siý vákěríý láýsát/. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

Illusion /aI(y)uwsɛn/. Distorted or misinterpreted sensory impression which, in contrast to hallucinations, arises from an actual stimulus, i.e., shadow is taken to be a man, specks on window are seen as a swarm of mosquitos. Prevalent in delirious states. The misinterpretation of a real, external sensory experience.

An image or impression in the mind, excited by some external object addressing itself to one or more of the senses, but which, instead of corresponding with the reality, is perverted, distorted, or wholly mistaken, the error being attributable to the imagination of the observer, not to any defect in the organs of sense. See Hallucination.

Illusory /al(y)uwsɛri/"uwsɔ/. Deceiving by false appearances; nominal, as distinguished from substantial; fallacious; illusive. Bolles v. Toledo Trust Co., 144 Ohio St. 195, 58 N.E.2d 381, 390.

Illusory appointment. Nominal, overly restrictive or conditional transfer of property under power of appointment; lacking in substantial existence.

Formerly the appointment of a merely nominal share of the property to one of the objects of a power, in order to escape the rule that an exclusive appointment could not be made unless it was authorized by the instrument creating the power, was considered illusory and void in equity. This rule has been abolished in England. Brown v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 126 N.J.Eq. 406, 9 A.2d 311. See Illusory Appointment Act.

Illusory Appointment Act. This English statute provided that no appointment made after its passing (July 16, 1830), in exercise of a power to appoint property, real or personal, among several objects, shall be invalid, or impeached in equity, on the ground that an unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal share only was thereby appointed, or left unappointed, to devolve upon any one or more of the objects of such power; but that the appointment shall be valid in equity, as at law. See now Law of Property Act (1925), § 158.

Illusory promise. A purported promise that actually promises nothing because it leaves to speaker the choice of performance or nonperformance. When promise is illusory, there is no actual requirement upon promisor that anything be done because promisor has an alternative which, if taken, will render promissee nothing. When provisions of supposed promise leave promisor's performance optional or entirely within discretion, pleasure and control of promisor, the promise is illusory. Interchange Associates v. Interchange, Inc., 16 Wash.App. 359, 557 P.2d 357, 358.

An illusory promise is an expression cloaked in promissory terms, but which, upon closer examination, reveals that the promisor has really not committed himself to anything. If performance of an apparent promise is entirely optional with the provisor, the promise is illusory.

Illusory trust. Where a settlor in form either declares himself trustee of, or transfers to a third party, property in trust, but by the terms of the trust, or by his dealings with the trust property, in substance exercises so much control over the trust property that it is clear that he did not intend to relinquish any of his rights in the trust property, the trust is invalid as illusory. An "illusory trust" is a trust arrangement which takes the form of a trust, but because of powers retained in the settlor has no real substance and in reality is not a completed trust. In re Herron's Estate, Fla.App., 237 So.2d 563, 566.

Ilustrious /aIstɾiəs/. The prefix to the title of a prince of the blood in England.
Imagine. In old English law, in cases of treason the law made it a crime to imagine the death of the king. But, in order to complete the crime, this act of the mind must have been demonstrated by some overt act. The terms "imagining" and "compassing" are in this connection synonymous. 4 Bl.Comm. 78.

Imbargo. An old form of "embargo" (q.v.).

Imbecility. See Insanity.

Imbezzle. An occasional or obsolete form of "embezzle" (q.v.).

Imbracery. See Embracery.

Imitation. The making of one thing in the similitude or likeness of another; as, counterfeit coin is said to be made "in imitation" of the genuine.

An imitation of a trademark is that which so far resembles the genuine trademark as to be likely to induce the belief that it is genuine, whether by the use of words or letters similar in appearance or in sound, or by any sign, device, or other means.

The test of "colorable imitation" is, not whether a difference may be recognized between the names of two competing articles when placed side by side, but whether the difference will be recognized by the purchaser with no opportunity for comparison. The Best Foods v. Hemphill Packing Co., D.C.Del., 5 F.2d 355, 357.

See Counterfeit; Forgery.

Immaterial. Not material, essential, or necessary; not important or pertinent; not decisive; of no substantial consequence; without weight; of no material significance. See also Impertinence; Irrelevancy; Irrelevant allegation. Compare Material; Material fact; Relevant.

Immaterial averment. In pleading, an averment alleging with needless particularity or unnecessary circumstances what is material and necessary, and which might properly have been stated more generally, and without such circumstances and particulars; or, in other words, a statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with and as descriptive of what is material. Such immaterial matter may be ordered stricken from the pleading. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f). See also Irrelevant allegation.

Immaterial evidence. Evidence which lacks probative weight and is unlikely to influence the tribunal in resolving the issue before it. Such evidence is commonly objected to by opposing counsel, and disallowed by the court. See also Irrelevancy; Irrelevant. Compare Relevant evidence.

Immaterial facts. Those which are not essential to the right of action or defense. See Immaterial averment. Compare Material fact.

Immaterial issue. In pleading, an issue taken on an immaterial point; that is, a point not proper to decide the action.

Immaterial variance. Discrepancy between the pleading and proof of a character so slight that the adverse party cannot say that he was misled thereby. See also Variance.

Immediacy. The state or quality of being immediately and directly perceived; urgency; occurring without delay.

Immediate. Present; at once; without delay; not deferred by any interval of time. In this sense, the word, without any very precise signification, denotes that action is or must be taken either instantly or without any considerable loss of time. A reasonable time in view of particular facts and circumstances of case under consideration. Next in line or relation; directly connected; not secondary or remote. Not separated in respect to place; not separated by the intervention of any intermediate object, cause, relation, or right. Thus we speak of an action as prosecuted for the "immediate benefit" of A., of a devise as made to the "immediate issue" of B., etc.

Immediate cause. The last of a series or chain of causes tending to a given result, and which, of itself, and without the intervention of any further cause, directly produces the result or event. A cause may be immediate in this sense, and yet not "proximate;" and conversely, the proximate cause (that which directly and efficiently brings about the result) may not be immediate. The familiar illustration is that of a drunken man falling into the water and drowning. His intoxication is the proximate cause of his death, if it can be said that he would not have fallen into the water when sober; but the immediate cause of death is suffocation by drowning. See also Proximate cause.

Immediate control. Such constant control as would enable driver to instantly govern vehicle's movements, including the power to stop within a distance in which such a vehicle, in good mechanical condition, driven by a reasonably skillful driver, and traveling at a lawful rate of speed, could be stopped.

Immediate danger. Definition of "immediate danger" as part of humanitarian doctrine contemplates that there be some inexorable circumstance, situation or agency bearing down on plaintiff with reasonable probability of danger prior to negligent act of defendant. Curran v. Bi-State Development Agency, Mo. App., 522 S.W.2d 98, 100. See also Imminent danger; Imminent peril.

Immediate descent. See Descent.

Immemorial. Beyond human memory; time out of mind.

Immemorial possession. In Louisiana, possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. Civ.Code La. art. 766.
IMMEMORIAL USAGE

Immortal usage. A practice which has existed time out of mind; custom; prescription.

Immoveables /imyúwblə/. Fr. These are, in French law, the immovables of English law. Things are immeubles from any one of three causes: (1) From their own nature, e.g., lands and houses; (2) from their destination, e.g., animals and instruments of agriculture when supplied by the landlord; or (3) by the object to which they are annexed, e.g., easements.

Immigrant. An alien in a country except, in United States, one within a specified class within the Immigration and Nationality Act. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101(a)(15). One who leaves a country to permanently settle in another.

Immigration. The coming into a country of foreigners for purposes of permanent residence. The correlative term “emigration” denotes the act of such persons in leaving their former country.

Immigration and Nationality Act. A comprehensive federal law which deals with immigration, naturalization and exclusion of aliens. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101 et seq.

Immigration and Naturalization Service. Such Service is responsible for administering the immigration and naturalization laws relating to the admission, exclusion, deportation, and naturalization of aliens. Specifically, the Service inspects aliens to determine their admissibility into the United States; adjudicates requests of aliens for benefits under the law; guards against illegal entry into the United States; investigates, apprehends, and removes aliens in this country in violation of the law; and examines alien applicants wishing to become citizens.

Immigration Appeals Board. The Board of Immigration Appeals, the highest administrative tribunal in the immigration field, is charged with the interpretation and administration of the immigration laws. The Board has jurisdiction, defined by regulation, to hear appeals from certain decisions of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Most of the cases reaching the Board consist of appeals from formal orders of the Service’s Immigration Judges entered in due process deportation hearings against aliens. These usually also involve applications by aliens for discretionary relief from deportation.

Imminent. Near at hand; mediate rather than immediate; close rather than touching; impending; on the point of happening; threatening; menacing; perilous.

Imminent danger. In relation to homicide in self-defense, this term means immediate danger, such as must be instantly met, such as cannot be guarded against by calling for the assistance of others or the protection of the law. Or, as otherwise defined, such an appearance of threatened and impending injury as would put a reasonable and prudent man to his instant defense. See Self-defense.

Imminently dangerous article. One that is reasonably certain to place life or limb in peril. Employers’ Liability Assur. Corporation v. Columbus McKinnon Chain Co., D.C.N.Y., 13 F.2d 128.

Imminent peril. Such peril under humanitarian doctrine means certain, immediate, and impending, and not remote, uncertain, or contingent; and likelihood or bare possibility of injury is not sufficient to create “imminent peril.” Hastings v. Coppage, Mo., 411 S.W.2d 232, 236. That position of danger to the plaintiff in which—if the existing circumstances remain unchanged—danger to him is reasonably certain. Elam v. Albee, Mo.App., 432 S.W.2d 379, 381. See also Emergency doctrine; Humanitarian doctrine.

Immiscere /imisaryə/. Lat. In the civil law, to mix or mingle with; to meddle with; to join with.

Immobilia situm sequuntur /imībilità ˈsaydəm ˈskwɒntər/. Immovable things follow their site or position; are governed by the law of the place where they are fixed. Cf. Mobilia Sequuntur Personam.

Immobils /imówbləs/. Lat. Immovable. Immobilia or res immobiles, immovable things, such as lands and buildings.

Immoderate /iməˈdərət/. Exceeding just, usual, or suitable bounds; not within reasonable limits.

Immoral. Contrary to good morals; inconsistent with the rules and principles of morality; iminal to public welfare according to the standards of a given community, as expressed in law or otherwise. Morally evil; impure; obscene; unprincipled; vicious; or dissolve. U. S. v. One Book, Entitled “Contraception,” by Marie C. Stopes, D.C.N.Y., 51 F.2d 525, 527.

Immoral act or conduct. Within rules authorizing disbarment of attorney is that conduct which is willful, flagrant, or shameless, and which shows a moral indifference to the opinions of the good and respectable members of the community. Warkentin v. Kleinwachter, 166 Okl. 218, 27 P.2d 160.

Immoral consideration. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. Contracts based upon an immoral consideration are generally void.

Immoral contracts. Contracts founded upon considerations contra bonos mores are void.

Immorality. That which is contra bonos mores. See Immoral.

Immovables. In the civil law, property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself, or be removed.

In conflicts of law, refers to land and those things so firmely attached thereto that they may be regarded as part of it and the law of the situs governs in choice of law. Restatement, Second, Conflict of Laws, § 223.

Immunity. Exemption, as from serving in an office, or performing duties which the law generally requires other citizens to perform; e.g. exemption from paying taxes. Freedom from duty or penalty. Special privilege. See also Exemption; Judicial immunity; Legislative immunity; Parent-child immunity; Privilege; Sovereign immunity.

Governmental tort immunity. The federal, and derivatively, the state and local governments are free from liability for torts committed except in cases in which they have consented by statute to be sued; e.g. Federal Tort Claims Act; state tort claims acts. Most states, either by statute or court decision, have abollished or greatly restricted the doctrine of sovereign immunity at both the state and local levels.

The Supreme Court has held that local governments can be sued directly under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 for monetary, declaratory, or injunctive relief where “the action that is alleged to be unconstitutional implements or executes a policy statement, ordinance, regulation, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by that body’s officers.” Monell v. Department of Social Services of N. Y., 429 U.S. 1071, 97 S.Ct. 807, 50 L.Ed.2d 789.

See also Governmental immunity; Sovereign immunity.

Immunity from prosecution. By state and federal statutes, a witness may be granted immunity from prosecution for his or her testimony (e.g., before grand jury). States either adopt the “use” or the “transactional” immunity approach. The federal government replaced the later with the former approach in 1970. The distinction between the two is as follows: “Use immunity” prohibits witness’ compelled testimony and its fruits from being used in any manner in connection with criminal prosecution of the witness; on the other hand, “transactional immunity” affords immunity to the witness from prosecution for offenses to which his compelled testimony relates.

Protection from prosecution must be commensurate with privilege against self-incrimination, but it need not be any greater and hence a person is entitled only to protection from prosecution based on the use and derivative use of his testimony; he is not constitutionally entitled to protection from prosecution for everything arising from the illegal transaction which his testimony concerns (transactional immunity). Kastigar v. U. S., 406 U.S. 441, 92 S.Ct. 1653, 32 L.Ed.2d 212.

Interspousal immunity. See Husband-wife tort actions.

Property law. A freedom on the part of one person against having a given legal relation altered by a given act or omission to act on the part of another person. Restatement of Property, § 4.

Immunization. The condition of being, or the act rendering one, immunized or protected, especially from communicable diseases.

Impacted area. An “impacted area” is an area whose school population has been burdened because of attendance by a large number of federal employees’ children and which may at the same time be losing school tax revenue because of the United States Government’s immunity from land taxes. Douglas Independent School Dist. v. Jorgenson, D.C.S.D., 293 F.Supp. 849, 850.

Impact rule. Rule formerly prevailing in many jurisdictions which required a blow or impact from without as a condition for recovering damages in negligence for emotional distress. Such rule has been abandoned in most jurisdictions today.

Impair. To weaken, to make worse, to lessen in power, diminish, or relax, or otherwise affect in an injurious manner.

Impaired capital. Condition of a business when the surplus account shows a negative balance and hence the capital is reduced below its value from when the stock was issued.

Impairing the obligation of contracts. A law which impairs the obligation of a contract is one which renders the contract in itself less valuable or less enforceable, whether by changing its terms and stipulations, its legal qualities and conditions, or by regulating the remedy for its enforcement.

To “impair the obligation of a contract”, within prohibition of Art. I, § 10, U.S.Const., is to weaken it, lessen its value, or make it worse in any respect or in any degree, and any law which changes the intention and legal effect of the parties, giving to one a greater and to the other a less interest or benefit, or which imposes conditions not included in the contract or dispenses with the performance of those included, impairs the obligation of the contract.

A statute “impairs the obligation of a contract” when by its terms it nullifies or materially changes existing contract obligations.

Impanel. The act of the clerk of the court in making up a list of the jurors who have been selected for the trial of a particular cause. All the steps of ascertaining who shall be the proper jurors to sit in the trial of a particular case up to the final formation.

Imparcare /imparkér/iy/. In old English law, to impound. To shut up, or confine in prison. Inducti sunt in carcerem et imparcati, they were carried to prison and shut up.

Imparl /ampár/l/. To have license to settle a litigation amicably; to obtain delay for adjustment.

Imparlan /ampárlan(t)s/. In early practice, imparlance meant time given to either of the parties to an action to answer the pleading of the other. It thus amounted to a continuance of the action to a further day. Literally the term signified leave given to the parties to talk together; i.e., with a view to settling their differences amicably. But in modern practice it denotes a time given to the defendant to plead.

A general imparlance is the entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception; so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another.

A general special imparlance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time, he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea.

A special imparlance reserves to the defendant all exceptions to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court.

Impartial. Favoring neither; disinterested; treating all alike; unbiased; equitable, fair, and just.
Impartial expert. Witness appointed by tribunal for unbiased opinion on matter addressed to the court. Commonly, Worker's Compensation Board will appoint an impartial physician to examine and report his findings to Board. Similar usage of experts is made in social security disability hearings.

Impartial jury. The provision of the Bill of Rights (Sixth Amendment to Const. of U.S.) requiring that the accused shall have a fair trial by an impartial jury, means that the jury must be not partial, not favoring one party more than another, unpajured, disinterested, equitable, and just, and that the merits of the case shall not be prejudged. Term refers to a jury which is of impartial frame of mind at beginning of trial, is influenced only by legal and competent evidence produced during trial, and bases its verdict upon evidence connecting defendant with the commission of the crime charged. Durham v. State, 182 Tenn. 577, 188 S.W.2d 555, 558.

For "Fair and impartial jury", and "Fair and impartial trial", see those titles.

Imputable feud /imˈpʌrtdəbal fjuːwrd/. See Feudum individuum.

Impeach. To accuse; to charge a liability upon; to sue. To dispute, disparage, deny, or contradict; as, to impeach a judgment or decree, or impeach a witness; or as used in the rule that a jury cannot "impeach their verdict". To proceed against a public officer for crime or misfeasance, before a proper court, by the presentation of a written accusation called "articles of impeachment." See Impeachment.

Impeachment. A criminal proceeding against a public officer, before a quasi political court, instituted by a written accusation called "articles of impeachment"; for example, a written accusation by the House of Representatives of the United States to the Senate of the United States against the President, Vice President, or an officer of the United States. Such federal power of impeachment is provided for in Art. II, § 4 of the Constitution. Under Art. I, § 2, cl. 5, the House of Representatives "shall have the sole Power of Impeachment", and under § 3, cl. 6, "The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments".

Articles of impeachment. The formal written allegation of the causes for an impeachment, answering the same purpose as an indictment in an ordinary criminal proceeding.

Collateral impeachment. See Collateral attack.

Impeachment of verdict. Attack on verdict because of alleged improprieties in the jury's deliberations or conduct.

Impeachment of witness. To call in question the veracity of a witness, by means of evidence adduced for such purpose, or the adducing of proof that a witness is unworthy of belief. McWethy v. Lee, 1 Ill.App.3d 80, 272 N.E.2d 663, 666. In general, though there are variations from state to state, a witness may be impeached with respect to prior inconsistent statements, contradiction of facts, bias, or character. A witness, once impeached, may be rehabilitated with evidence supporting credibility. State v. Peterson, Iowa, 219 N.W.2d 665, 671.

Fed.R.Civil P. 32(a)(1) permits the use at trial of a witness's prior deposition to discredit or impeach testimony of the deponent as a witness.

Fed.Evid.R. 607 provides that the "credibility of a witness may be attacked by any party, including the party calling him." Rule 608 governs impeachment by evidence of character and conduct of witness, and Rule 609 impeachment by evidence of conviction of crime.

See also Bill of address; Jenks Act or Rule; Prior inconsistent statements.

Impechiare /ɪmˈpiːtʃiərɪə/. To impeach, to accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason.

Impede. To obstruct; hinder; check; delay.

Impediens /ɪmplɪˈdiːən(d)z/. In old English practice, one who hinders; an impedient. The defendant or deforciant in a fine was sometimes so called.

Impedimento /ɪmpɛˈdɪmɛntoʊ/. In Spanish law, a prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

Impediments /ɪmpɛdəmənts/. Disabilities, or hindrances to the making of contracts, such as infancy, want of reason, etc.

Civil law. Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable. Diriment impediments are those which render a marriage void, as where one of the contracting parties is unable to marry by reason of a prior undissolved marriage. Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment. Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with respect to each other; as between two particular persons who are related within the prohibited degrees.

Impediment to marriage. Legal obstacle to contracting a valid marriage such as relationship of blood within prohibited degree of consanguinity between parties. See also Impediments.

Impeditor /ɪmplɛdədər/. In Old English law, a disturber in the action of quare impedit.

Impense /ɪmpɛnsɪə/. Lat. In the civil law, expenses; outlays. Divided into necessary (necessarie), useful (utiles), and tasteful or ornamental (voluptuariae).

Imperative. Mandatory. See Directory.

Imperator /ɪmplɛrˈɛdər/. Emperor. The title of the Roman emperors, and also of the Kings of England before the Norman conquest. 1 Bl.Comm. 242. See Emperor.

Imperfect. As used in various legal compound terms, this word means defective or incomplete; wanting in some legal or formal requisite; wanting in legal sanction or effectiveness; as in speaking of imperfect "obligations," "ownership," "rights," "title," "usufruct," or "war." See those nouns.

Imperii majestas est tutela salus /ɪmˈpɛrɪi ˈmæjɛstəs ɪst tʊˈteɪlə səˈlʊs/. The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection.
679

IMPLIED AUTHORITY

Impeachment /imprátyésh(ɪ)yə/. In old English law, the obtaining anything by petition or entreaty. Particularly, the obtaining of a benefice from Rome by solicitation, which benefice belonged to the disposal of the king or other lay patron.

Impier /impay(ə)r/. Umpire (q.v.).

Imperméant. Impairing or prejudicing.

Impignorata /ampignárøyda/. Pledged; given in pledge (pignori data); mortgaged.

Impignoration /ampignárøyshan/. The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

Impius et crudelis judicandus est qui libertati non favet /impiyas ét kradýllas júwdakándas est kwáy libértý-day nón féyvat/. He is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty.

Implicature /impliéstéréyɪ/. Lat. To implead; to sue.

Implead. To sue; to prosecute. To bring new party into action on ground that new party is, or may be, liable to party who brings him in, for all or part of the subject matter claim. Fed.R.Civil P. 14. See Third-party practice.

Impleader. Procedure by which party is imp leaded. See Implead; Third-party practice; Vouching-in.

Implements /implamants/. Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. Particularly applied to tools, utensils, instruments of labor; as the implements of trade or of farming.

Implication. Intendment or inference, as distinguished from the actual expression of a thing in words. In a will, an estate may pass by mere implication, without any express words to direct its course.
An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed. Act of implying or condition of being implied.

"Implication" is also used in the sense of "inference"; i.e., where the existence of an intention is inferred from acts not done for the sole purpose of communicating it, but for some other purpose.

See also Inference.

Implied. This word is used in law in contrast to "express"; i.e., where the intention in regard to the subject-matter is not manifested by explicit and direct words, but is gathered by implication or necessary deduction from the circumstances, the general language, or the conduct of the parties. Term differs from "inferred" to the extent that the hearer or reader "infers" while the writer or speaker "implies".

As to implied Abrogation; Agreement; Assumpsit; Condition; Confession; Consent; Consideration; Contract; Covenant; Dedication; Easement; Invitation; Malice; Notice; Obligation; Power; Trust; Use; Waiver; and Warranty, see those titles.

Implied assertions. Statements which, while not expressed, may be deduced from what is written or spoken.

Implied authority. In law of agency, power given by principal to agent which necessarily follows from the express authority given though such power is not... expressly asserted. Actual authority may be either express or implied, "implied authority" being that which is necessary, usual and proper to accomplish or perform the main authority expressly delegated to an agent. Clark v. Gneiting, 95 Idaho 10, 501 P.2d 278, 280.

Implied consent. See Consent.

Implied intent. Intent which necessarily arises from language used in an instrument or from conduct of parties.

Implied promise. Fiction which the law creates to render one liable on contract theory so as to avoid fraud or unjust enrichment. See also Equitable estoppel.

Implied reservation. Type of easement created by grantor for benefit of land retained by him and not included in conveyance. Wolek v. Di Feo, 60 N.J.Super. 324, 159 A.2d 127.

Implied reservation of water doctrine. When Federal Government withdraws its land from public domain and reserves it for a federal purpose, the government, by implication, reserves appurtenant water then unappropriated to the extent needed to accomplish the purpose of the reservation. However, it reserves only that amount of water necessary to fulfill the purpose of the reservation, and no more. Cappaert v. U. S., 426 U.S. 128, 96 S.Ct. 2062, 2071, 48 L.Ed.2d 523.

Implied warranty. See Warranty.

Import. See Importation.

Import-export clause. Provision in U.S. Constitution, Art. 1, § 10, cl. 2, to the effect that no state shall, without the consent of Congress, lay imports or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws.

Import quota. The precise quantity of specific goods which a country will permit to be imported at a given time. Such quotas are set by the government to protect domestic businesses from excessive importation of competitive goods. See also Most favored nation clause.

Imports clause. See Import-export clause.

Importunity. Pressing solicitation; urgent request; application for a claim or favor which is urged with troublesome frequency or pertinacity.

Impose. To levy or exact as by authority; to lay as a burden, tax, duty or charge.

Imposition. An impost; tax; contribution. Unreasonable request or burden. Act of imposing.

Impossibility. That which, in the constitution and course of nature or the law, no man can do or perform.

Impossibility is of the following several sorts:

An act is physically impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an impossibility may be either absolute, i.e., impossible in any case, (e.g., to stop earth rotation) or relative (sometimes called "impossibility in fact"), i.e., arising from the circumstances of the case (e.g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a deceased person). To the latter class belongs what is sometimes called "practical impossibility," which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreasonable cost. An act is legally or juridically impossible when a rule of law makes it impossible to do it; e.g., for A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confounded with those which are possible, although forbidden by law, as to commit a theft. An act is logically impossible when it is contrary to the nature of the transaction, as where A. gives property to B. expressly for his own benefit, on condition that he transfers it to C. See also Legal impossibility. Impossibility of performance of contract. As involving party from liability for nonperformance, means not only strict impossibility, but impracticability because of extreme and unreasonable difficulty, expense, injury or loss involved. Total inability of party to perform for either subjective or objective reasons and under certain circumstances, though not all, such impossibility may be a defense. Jones v. Servel, Inc., 135 Ind.App. 171, 186 N.E.2d 689.

It is now recognized that a thing is impossible in legal contemplation when it is not practicable; and a thing is impracticable when it can only be done at an excessive and unreasonable cost. Transatlantic Fin. Corp. v. United States, 363 F.2d 312, 315. When the issue is raised, the court is asked to construct a condition of performance based on changed circumstances, a process which involves at least three reasonably definable steps. First, a contingency—something unexpected—must have occurred. Second, the risk of the unexpected occurrence must not have been allocated either by agreement or by custom. Finally, occurrence of the contingency must have rendered performance commercially impracticable. Although impossibility or impracticability of performance may arise in many different ways, the tendency has been to classify the cases into several categories. These are: 1) Destruction, deterioration or unavailability of the subject matter or the tangible means of performance; 2) Failure of the contemplated mode of delivery or payment; 3) Supervening prohibition or prevention by law; 4) Failure of the intangible means of performance and 5) Death or illness. The basic U.C.C. sections dealing with impossibility of performance are §§ 2–613, 2–615. See in this regard, Commercial frustration; Commercial impracticability. Impossible contract. One which the law will not hold binding upon the parties, because of the natural or legal impossibility of the performance by one party of that which is the consideration for the promise of the other.

Impossibilium nulla obligatio est /ampòssíbili(y)nym nála oblagéysh(y)w èst/ There is no obligation to do impossible things.

Imposter. One who pretends to be somebody other than who he is, with intent to deceive; a faker, charlatan; mountebank. See also Impersonation; Personate.
Impotentia excusat legem /impoténtia lex qua akskyúwstatiyjam/. The impossibility of doing what is required by the law excuses from the performance.

Impotentiam, property propter /própotér proptari impoténtshiyjam/. A qualified property, which may subsist in animals fere naturae on account of their inability, as where hawks, herons, or other birds build in a person's trees, or conies, etc., make their nests or burrows in a person's land, and have young there, such person has a qualified property in them till they can fly or run away, and then such property expires.

Impound. To shut up stray animals or distrained goods in a pound. To seize and take into the custody of the law or of a court. Thus, a court will sometimes impound a suspicious document produced at a trial or a vehicle or other item used in commission of a crime. See also Confiscate; Seizure.

Impound account. Accumulated funds (normally collected monthly from mortgagor or trustor) held by a lender for payment of taxes, insurance, or other periodic debts against real property. The lender pays the tax bill, premium, etc. from the accumulated funds when due. See also Escrow.

Impracticability. The term "impracticability" in federal rule providing for class action if class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable does not mean "impossibility" but only the difficulty of inconvenience of joining all members of the class. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Woodahl, D.C.Mont., 308 F.Supp. 1002, 1008. See also Commercial frustration; Commercial impracticability; Impossibility.

Imprescriptibility. The state or quality of being incapable of prescription; not of such a character that a right to it can be gained by prescription.

Imprescriptible rights. Such rights as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

Impression, case of first. One without a precedent; one presenting a wholly new state of facts; one involving a question never before determined.

Impressment. A power possessed by the English crown of taking persons or property to aid in the defense of the country, with or without the consent of the persons concerned. It is usually exercised to obtain hands for the royal ships in time of war, by taking seamen engaged in merchant vessels, but in former times impressment of merchant ships was also practiced. The admiralty issues protections against impressment in certain cases, either under statutes passed in favor of certain callings or voluntarily.
IMPRISTI

Improstant. Adherents; followers. Those who side with or take the part of another, either in his defense or otherwise.

Improbable. Unlikely to be true, or to occur, not to be readily believed. Johnson v. Tregle, La.App., 8 So.2d 755, 758.

Improper. Not suitable; unfit; not suited to the character, time, and place. Godbey v. Godbey, 70 Ohio App. 455, 44 N.E.2d 810, 813. Not in accordance with fact, truth, or right procedure and not in accord with propriety, modesty, good taste, or good manners. Landry v. Daley, D.C.Ill., 280 F.Supp. 968, 970.

Improper cumulation of actions. In common law pleading, an attempt to join in one proceeding inconsistent causes of action. Toms v. Nugent, La.App., 12 So.2d 713, 715. This is permitted under Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e)(2).

Improper feuds. In old English law, these were derivative feuds; as, for instance, those that were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price, or were held upon base or less honorable services, or upon a rent in lieu of military service, or were themselves alienable, without mutual license, or descended indifferently to males or females.

Improper influence. Undue influence (q.v.).

Improperly obtained evidence. See Illegally obtained evidence.

Improprate rector. In ecclesiastical law, commonly signifies a lay rector as opposed to a spiritual rector; just as impropriate tithes are tithes in the hands of a lay owner, as opposed to appropriate tithes, which are tithes in the hands of a spiritual owner.

Impropriation. In ecclesiastical law, the annexing an ecclesiastical benefice to the use of a lay person, whether individual or corporate, in the same way as appropriation is the annexing of any such benefice to the proper and perpetual use of some spiritual corporation, whether sole or aggregate, to enjoy forever.

Improve. To meliorate, make better, to increase the value or good qualities of, mend, repair, as to "improve" a street by grading, parking, curbing, paving, etc.

Improved land. Real estrate whose value has been increased by addition of sewers, roads, utilities, and the like.

Improved value. Appraisal term encompassing the total value of land and improvements rather than the separate values of each.

Improvement. A valuable addition made to property (usually real estate) or an amelioration in its condition, amounting to more than mere repairs or replacement, costing labor or capital, and intended to enhance its value, beauty or utility or to adapt it for new or further purposes. Generally, buildings, but may also include any permanent structure or other development, such as a street, sidewalks, sewers, utilities, etc. An expenditure to extend the useful life of an asset or to improve its performance over that of the original asset. Such expenditures are capitalized as part of the asset’s cost. Contrast with Maintence and Repair. See also Betterment; Internal improvements; Leaseloop improvements.

In the law of patents, an addition to, or modification of, a previous invention or discovery, intended or claimed to increase its utility or value. Steiner Sales Co. v. Schwartz Sales Co., C.C.A.Utah, 98 F.2d 999, 1010. It includes two necessary ideas: the idea of a complete and practical operative art or instrument and the idea of some change in such art or instrument not affecting its essential character but enabling it to produce its appropriate results in a more perfect or economical manner.

Improvement bonds. See Bond.

Improvindic. As used in a statute excluding one found incompetent to execute the duties of an administrator by reason of improvidence, means that want of care and foresight in the management of property which would be likely to render the estate and effects of the intestate unsafe, and liable to be lost or diminished in value, in case the administration should be committed to the improvident person.

Improvindently. A judgment, decree, rule, injunction, etc., when given or rendered without adequate consideration by the court, or without proper information as to all the circumstances affecting it, or based upon a mistaken assumption or misleading information or advice, is sometimes said to have been "improvidently" given or issued.

Impruare. In old English law, to improve land. Impruamentum, the improvement so made of it.

Impubes. Lat. In the civil law, a minor under the age of puberty; a male under fourteen years of age; a female under twelve.

Impulse. Sudden urge or inclination; thrusting or impelling force within a person. See also Insanity; Irresistible impulse.

Impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. Impyūnataēs kantinyuwaṃ afēktām tribyuyat dēlaṅkēwēdayā. Impunity confirms the disposition to commit crime.

Impunitas semper ad deteriora invitāt. Impyūnataēs sēmpar ād datiriyōra anvāy̱at. Impunity always invites to greater crimes.

Impunity. Exemption or protection from penalty or punishment. See also Immunity.

Imputability. The state or condition rendering one chargeable for an act. Liability or responsibility for conduct or omission. See Liability.

Imputatio. Impyāteysh(i)yow. Lat. In the civil law, legal liability.

Imputation of payment. In the civil law, the application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

Imputed. As used in legal phrases, this word means attributed vicariously; that is, an act, fact, or quality is said to be "imputed" to a person when it is ascribed or charged to him, not because he is personally cognizant of it or responsible for it, but because another person is, over whom he has control or for whose acts or knowledge he is responsible. See also Estoppel.

Imputed cost. See Cost.

Imputed income. See Income.

Imputed interest. See Interest.

Imputed knowledge. This phrase is sometimes used as equivalent to "implied notice," i.e., knowledge attributed or charged to a person because the facts in question were open to his discovery and it was his duty to inform himself as to them. In law of agency, notice of facts brought to the attention of an agent within the scope of his authority or employment is chargeable to his principal in most cases. See Imputed notice.

Imputed negligence. The negligence of one person may be chargeable to another depending upon the relationship of the parties, as for example, the negligence of an agent acting within the scope of his employment is chargeable to the principal. Negligence which is not directly attributable to the person himself, but which is the negligence of a person who is in privity with him, and with whose fault he is chargeable. See also Negligence.

Imputed notice. Information as to a given fact or circumstance charged or attributed to a person, and affecting his rights or conduct on the ground that actual notice was given to some person whose duty was to report it to the person to be affected, as, his agent or his attorney of record. See also Notice.

In. In the law of real estate, this preposition is used to denote the fact of seisin, title, or possession, and serves as an elliptical expression for some such phrase as "in possession," or as an abbreviation for "intitled" or "invested with title."

An elastic preposition in other cases, expressing relation of presence, existence, situation, inclusion, action, etc.; inclosed or surrounded by limits, as in a room; also meaning for, in and about, on, within; and is synonymous with expressions "in regard to", "respecting", "with respect to", and "as is".

In action. Attainable or recoverable by action; not in possession. A term applied to property of which a party has not the possession, but only a right to recover it by action. Things in action are rights of personal things, which nevertheless are not in possession. See Chose in action.

Inadequate. Insufficient; disproportionate; lacking in effectiveness or in conformity to a prescribed standard or measure.

Inadequate consideration. One not adequate or equal in value to the thing conveyed. Farrell v. Third Nat. Bank, 20 Tenn.App. 540, 101 S.W.2d 158, 163.

Inadequate damages. See Damages.

Inadequate price. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as would ordinarily be entirely incommensurate with its intrinsic value.

Inadequate remedy at law. Within the meaning of the rule that equity will not entertain a suit if there is an adequate remedy at law, this does not mean that there must be a failure to collect money or damages at law, but the remedy is considered inadequate if it is, in its nature and character, unfitted or not adapted to the end in view, as, for instance, when the relief sought is preventive (e.g. injunction) rather than compensatory. Cruickshank v. Bidwell, 176 U.S. 73, 20 S.Ct. 280, 44 L.Ed. 377.

Inadmissible. That which, under the established rules of law, cannot be admitted or received; e.g., parol evidence to contradict a written contract; evidence obtained from illegal search and seizure; certain types of hearsay evidence.

In adversum /in advarsum/. Against an adverse, unwilling, or resisting party. "A decree not by consent, but in adversum."

Inadvertence. Needlessness; lack of attention; want of care; carelessness; failure of a person to pay careful and prudent attention to the progress of a negotiation or a proceeding in court by which his rights may be affected. Used chiefly in statutory and rule enumerations of the grounds on which a judgment or decree may be vacated or set aside; as, "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." Fed.R. Civil P. 60(b). State ex rel. Regis v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 102 Mont. 74, 55 P.2d 1295, 1298.

Inchoate dower. Inchoate dower upon his death. A contingent claim or possibility of acquiring dower by outliving husband and arises, not out of contract, but as an institution of law constituting a mere chose in action incapable of transfer by separate grant but susceptible of extinction by separate grant but susceptible of extinguishment, which is effected by wife joining with husband in deed, which operates as release or satisfaction of interest and not as conveyance.

Inchoate interest. An interest in real estate which is not a present interest, but which may ripen into a vested estate, if not barred, extinguished, or divested.

Inchoate lien. The lien of a judgment, from the day of its entry, subject to be defeated by its vacation, becoming a consummate lien if the motion for a new trial is thereafter overruled; such lien then relating back to the original entry of the judgment.

Inchoate right. In patent law, the right of an inventor to his invention while his application is pending is an inchoate right, though inseparably connected with, or inherent in, another thing, called the "principal". Also, less strictly, it denotes anything which is usually connected with another, or connected for some purposes, though not inseparably. Thus, the right of alienation is incidental to an estate in fee-simple, though separable in equity.

Incidental. Depending upon or appertaining to something else as primary; something necessary, pertaining to, or depending upon another which is termed the principal; something incidental to the main purpose. The Robin Goodfellow, D.C.Wash., 20 F.2d 924, 925.

Incidental beneficiary. A person is not a beneficiary of a trust if the settlor does not manifest an intention to give him a beneficial interest, although he may incidentally benefit from the performance of the trust. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 126.

Incidental damages. See Damages.

Incidental powers. The term "incidental powers," within the rule that a corporation possesses only those powers which its charter confers upon it, either expressly or as incidental to its existence, means such powers as are directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of the powers expressly granted and exist only to enable the corporation to carry out the purpose of its creation.

Incidental to arrest. To be "incidental to an arrest" search must be limited to premises where arrest is made, be contemporaneous with arrest, have definite object, and be reasonable in scope. People v. Davis, 231 C.A.2d 180, 41 Cal.Rptr. 617, 619, 620.

Incidental to employment. A risk is "incidental to employment" within Worker's Compensation Act, when it belongs to or is connected with what a worker has to do in fulfilling the duties of his or her employment.

Incidental use. In zoning, use of premises which is dependent on or affiliated with the principal use of such premises. Needham v. Winslow Nurseries, Inc., 330 Mass. 95, 111 N.E.2d 453.

Incident of ownership. An element of ownership or degree of control over a life insurance policy. The retention by an insured of an incident of ownership in a life insurance policy will cause the policy proceeds to be included in his or her gross estate upon death. I.R.C. § 2042(2). In estate taxation, if decedent retains control or right in property, as for example the right to change beneficiary of insurance policy, the property falls into his gross estate for estate tax purposes. In re Lumpkin's Estate, C.A.Tex., 474 F.2d 1092.

Incidere /insidari/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to fall into; to fall out; to happen; to come to pass. To fall upon or under; to become subject or liable to. Incidere in legem, to incur the penalty of a law.

Incipient /insipadar/. Lat. It is begun; it begins. In the due course of law.

Incite /insayt/. To arouse; urge; provoke; encourage; spur on; goad; stir up; instigate; set in motion; as, to "incite" a riot. Also, generally, in criminal law to instigate, persuade, or move another to commit a crime; in this sense nearly synonymous with "abet."

Inciter. In criminal law, an aider or abettor; an accessory.

Incivile /insivaly/. Lat. Irregular; improper; out of the due course of law.

Incivile est, nisi tota lege perspecta, una aliquia particula ejus proposita, judicare, vel respondere /insivally est, nágyay tówda líjjyy parşepkta, yúwna alakwa partikyla lyás prápózada, jündakéryi, vél rasándiriy/. It is improper, without looking at the whole of a law, to give judgment or advice, upon a view of any one clause of it.

Incivile est, nisi tota sententia inspecta, de aUqua parte Incivism Inclosed lands. Inclose.

In claris non est locus conjecturis Inclusa

Inclausa /inklóza/. In old records, a home close or inclosure near the house.

Inclose. To surround; to encompass; to bound; fence, or hem in, on all sides. To shut up.

Inclosed lands. Lands which are actually inclosed and surrounded with fences.

Inclosure. In old English law, act of freeing land from rights of common, commonal rights, and generally all rights which obstruct cultivation and the productive employment of labor on the soil.

Land surrounded by some visible obstruction. An artificial fence around one's estate. See Close.

Include. (Lat. Includere, to shut in, keep within.) To confine within, hold as in an inclosure, take in, attain, shut up, contain, inclose, comprise, comprehend, embrace, involve. Term may, according to context, express an enlargement and have the meaning of and or in addition to, or merely specify a particular thing already included within general words theretofore used. "Including" within statute is interpreted as a word of enlargement or of illustrative application as well as a word of limitation. Premier Products Co. v. Cameron, 240 Or. 123, 400 P.2d 227, 228.

Included offense. In criminal law, a crime which is part of another crime; e.g. included in every murder is assault and battery. One which is established by proof of the same or less than all of the facts, or a less culpable mental state, or both, than which is required to establish commission of offense charged. People v. Lyons, 26 Ill.App.3d 193, 324 N.E.2d 677, 680. To be an "included offense", all elements of the lesser offense must be contained in the greater offense, the greater containing certain elements not contained in the lesser. Gaskin v. State, 244 Ark. 541, 426 S.W.2d 407, 409.

Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius /inkluwzh(iy)ow yanýyas ést skskluwzh(iy)ow oltíryys/. The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another. The certain designation of one person is an absolute exclusion of all others. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d 321, 325.

Inclusive. Embraced; comprehended; comprehending the stated limits or extremes. Opposed to "exclusive."

Inclusive survey. In land law, one which includes within its boundaries prior claims excepted from the computation of the area within such boundaries and excepted in the grant.

Incognito. Status of person who appears or travels without disclosing his true identity.

Incola. Lat. In the civil law, an inhabitant; a dweller or resident. Properly, one who has transferred his domicile to any country.

Incolas domiciliun fact /inkas domasil(i)yam féysat/. Residence creates domicile.

Income. The return in money from one's business, labor, or capital invested; gains, profits, salary, wages, etc.

The gain derived from capital, from labor or effort, or both combined, including profit or gain through sale or conversion of capital. Income is not a gain accruing to capital or a growth in the value of the investment, but is a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value, proceeding from the property, severed from the capital, however invested or employed, and coming in, being derived, that is, received or drawn by the recipient for his separate use, benefit, and disposal. Goodrich v. Edwards, 255 U.S. 527, 41 S.Ct. 390, 65 L.Ed. 758. The true increase in amount of wealth which comes to a person during a stated period of time.

See also Allocation of income; Blocked income; Clear reflection of income; Constructive receipt of income; Deferred income; Earned income; Earnings; Fixed income; Gross income; Net income; Net operating income; Personal income; Profit; Split income; Taxable income; Unearned income.

Accrued income. Income earned during a certain accounting period but not paid or received.

Deferred income. Income received before it is earned, such as rents received in one accounting period for use of the premises in the following period. Earned income. Income derived from one's own labor or through active participation in a business as distinguished from income from, for example, dividends or investments. See also Earnings.

Fixed income. That type of income which is stable over a considerable period of time such as a pension or annuity.

Gross income. The total income of a business or individual before deductions; including salary, commissions, royalties, gains from dealings in property, interest, dividends, etc. I.R.C. § 61.

Imputed income. Value assigned to property or income, sometimes artificially for tax purposes, as in the case of a non-interest bearing or low interest bearing loan between persons or organizations related to each other. I.R.C. § 483. The value of property enjoyed by the taxpayer as part of his salary; e.g. use of home provided by employer to employee.

Net (business) income. Net profit of business arrived at by deducting operating expenses and taxes from gross profit.

Nonoperating income. Income of a business from investments and not from operations.
Operating income. Income derived from operations of business in contrast to income from investments.

Ordinary income. See Ordinary.

Personal income. In taxation, the total of income received by individuals from all sources.

Unearned income. Income derived from investments, rental property, etc., as distinguished from income derived from personal labor.

Income averaging. Method of computing income tax by an individual who has unusually large income in the current taxable year as compared with the four prior years, whereby the taxpayer may elect to have the excess taxed as if it had been received ratably over a five year period. This tax provision (I.R.C. § 1301 et seq.) benefits such taxpayers as athletes and actors whose incomes might be very high in a given year in contrast to prior years.

Income basis. Method of computing the rate of return on a security based on the dividend or interest and on the price paid rather than on its face or par value.

Income beneficiary. The party entitled to income from property. A typical example would be a trust where A is to receive the income for life with corpus or principal passing to B upon A's death. In this case, A would be the income beneficiary of the trust.

Income in respect of decedent. Income earned by a decedent at the time of death but not reportable on the final income tax return because of the method of accounting utilized. Typically it includes any accrued income to date of death for cash basis decedent/taxpayer. Estate of Rose, 465 Pa. 53, 348 A.2d 113, 116. Such income is included in the gross estate and will be taxed to the eventual recipient (i.e., either the estate or heirs). The recipient will, however, be allowed an income tax deduction for the death tax attributable to the income. I.R.C. § 691.

In estate taxation, term refers to inclusion of certain income in estate as if it had been collected by decedent in his or her lifetime, Grill v. U. S., 157 Ct.Cl. 804, 303 F.2d 922, 927, e.g. payments received toward satisfaction of a right or expectancy created almost entirely through the efforts or status of the decedent and which, except for his death and without further action on his part, the decedent would have realized as gross income.

Income property. Property which produces income; e.g. rental property. Such property can be either residential, commercial, or industrial.

Income statement. The statement of revenues, expenses, gains, and losses for the period ending with net income (or loss) for the period.

Income tax. A tax on the yearly profits arising from property, business pursuits, professions, trades, or offices. A tax on a person's income, wages, salary, commissions, emoluments, profits, and the like, or the excess thereof over a certain amount. Tax levied by the U.S. Government, and by some state governments, on taxpayer's income. Such may be either a corporate or individual income tax. See also Tax.
tual or moral fitness. County Bd. of Ed. of Clarke County v. Oliver, 270 Ala. 107, 116 So.2d 566, 567. See also Incapacity; Insanity.

Incompetent evidence. Evidence which is not admissible under the established rules of evidence; e.g. Fed. Rules of Evidence. Evidence which the law does not permit to be presented at all, or in relation to the particular matter, on account of lack of originality or of some defect in the witness, the document, or the nature of the evidence itself.

Incomplete transfer. A transfer made by a decedent during lifetime which, because of certain control or enjoyment retained by the transferor, will not be considered complete for Federal death tax purposes. Thus, some or all of the fair market value of the property transferred will be included in the transferor's gross estate. I.R.C. §§ 2036–2038.

Inconclusive. That which may be disproved or rebutted; not shutting out further proof or consideration. Applied to evidence and presumptions. See Presumption.

In conjunction with /in kanjäjkshan wíð/. In association with.

In conjunctivis, oportet utramque partem esse veram /in kónjakštíaavspa, spórdat ywuátmikwy párdam ésiy vírm/. In conjunctives it is necessary that each part be true. In a condition consisting of divers parts in the copulative, both parts must be performed.

In consideratione inde /in kansidärëshiyówni indiy/. In consideration thereof.

In consideratione legis /in kansidärëshiyówni líyjás/. In consideration or contemplation of law; in abeyance.

In consideratione premissorum /in kansidärëshiyówni prémásumóram/. In consideration of the premises.

In consimili casu /in kansimáláy kéyś(y)uw/. See Consimil casu.

In consimili casu, consimile debet esse remedium /in kansimáláy kéyś(y)uw, kansimály débd ésiy rámíyid(i)yam/. In a similar case the remedy should be similar.

Inconsistent. Mutually repugnant or contradictory; contrary, the one to the other, so that both cannot stand, but the acceptance or establishment of one implies the abrogation or abandonment of the other; as, in speaking of "inconsistent defenses," or the repeal by a statute of "all laws inconsistent here-with." Berry v. City of Fort Worth, Tex.Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 95, 103.

In conspectu ejus /in kánspékt(y)uw lýyjás/. In his sight or view.

In consuetudinibus, non diurnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda /in kónswató(y)uwóínas, nón dâyàtários témpóras sèd sôldiátários réyshiyównas ést kansidârándã/. In customs, not length of time, but solidity of reason, is to be considered. The antiquity of a custom is to be less regarded than its reasonableness.

In contemplation of death. In taxation and property law, a transaction, commonly a transfer or gift of property, made by the donor with a view towards his death. For federal estate tax purposes, a transfer made within three years of the decedent's death is deemed to be made in contemplation of death and the value of the property is included in his or her estate for such tax purposes. I.R.C. § 2035(b).

Incontestability clause. A clause in a life or health insurance policy providing that after the policy has been in force for a given length of time (e.g. two or three years) the insurer shall not be able to contest it as to statements contained in the application; and, in the case of health insurance, the provision also states that no claim shall be denied or reduced on the grounds that a condition not excluded by name at the time of issue existed prior to the effective date.

Incontinence /ínkôntántans(s)/. Want of chastity; indulgence in unlawful carnal connection.

In continenti /ínkôntánténítay/. Immediately; without any interval or intermission. Sometimes written as one word "incontinenti."

In contractibus, benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est /in kantráktbas, bániŋga, in téstaméntas, bániŋ­niyar, in réstot(y)uwshiyównbas, bániŋnisáma intár­prátyésh(y)ow fáš(h)yéndá est/. In contracts, the interpretation is to be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal.

In contractibus, rei veritas quam scriptura per­spici debet /in kantráktbas, réyá váhàrstèes pòwsh(y)as kwá́m skriptyúra pěrspsays débat/. In contracts, the truth of the matter ought to be regarded rather than the writing.

In contractibus, tacite insunt [veniunt] que sunt moris et consuetudinis /in kantráktbas, tásádiy insánt kwi­sánt mòrás ét kónswató(y)uwóndás "véýn(ly)ant/". In contracts, matters of custom and usage are tacitly implied. A contract is understood to contain the customary clauses, although they are not expressed.

In contrahenda venditione, ambiguous pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est /in kóntrahéndá vándishiyówni yambígyuwam pěktám kóntrá vándstóraym intárpratésndám ést/. In the contract of sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller.

Inconvenience. In the rule that statutes should be so construed as to avoid "inconvenience," this means, as applied to the public, the sacrifice or jeopardizing of important public interests or hampering the legitimate activities of government or the transaction of public business, and, as applied to individuals, serious hardship or injustice.

In conventionibus, contrahentium voluntas potius quam verba spectari placuit /in kánvëshiyównbas, kóntrahèns(h)yam valántrés pòwsh(y)as kwá́m várbá spektéray plék(y)uwáz/. In agreements, the intention of the contracting parties, rather than the words used, should be regarded.

Incopollitus /ínskópóídas/. A proctor or vicar.
Incorpora. To create a corporation; to confer a corporation franchise upon determinate persons. See Incorporation.

To declare that another document shall be taken as part of the document in which the declaration is made as much as if it were set out at length therein. See Incorporation by reference.

Incorporated law society. In England, a society of attorneys and solicitors whose function it is to carry out the acts of parliament and orders of court with reference to articled clerks; to keep an alphabetical roll of solicitors; to issue certificates to persons duly admitted and enrolled, and to exercise a general control over the conduct of solicitors in practice, and to bring cases of misconduct before the judges.

Incorporation. The act or process of forming or creating a corporation. The formation of a legal or political body, with the quality of perpetual existence and succession, unless limited by the act of incorporation. Abbott v. Limited Mut. Compensation Ins. Co., 30 Cal.App.2d 157, 85 P.2d 961, 964. Incorporation procedure and requisites are governed by state statutes; many of which are patterned on the Model Business Corporation Act.

In the civil law, the union of one domain to another. See also Articles of incorporation; Certificate of incorporation.

Incorporation by reference. The method of making one document of any kind become a part of another separate document by referring to the former in the latter, and declaring that the former shall be taken and considered as a part of the latter the same as if it were fully set out therein. If the one document is copied at length in the other, it is called “actual incorporation.”

Incorporator. Person who joins with others to form a corporation and the successors of those who actually sign the papers of incorporation.

In corpore /in körpari/. In body or substance; in a material thing or object.

Incorporeal /inkarpóriyal/. Without body; not of material nature; the opposite of “corporeal” (q.v.).

Incorporeal chattels. A class of incorporeal rights growing out of or incident to things personal; such as patent-rights and copyrights.

Incorporeal hereditaments. See Hereditaments.

Incorporeal property. In the civil law, that which consists in legal right merely. The same as choses in action at common law.

Incorporeal rights. Rights to intangibles, such as legal actions, rather than rights to property (rights to possession or use of land).
Incriminating admission. An acknowledgment of facts tending to establish guilt.

Incriminating circumstance. A fact or circumstance, collateral to the fact of the commission of a crime, which tends to show either that such a crime has been committed or that some particular person committed it.

Incriminating evidence. Evidence which tends to establish guilt of the accused or from which, with other evidence, his or her guilt may be inferred.

Incrimination. See Incriminate; Self-incrimination.

Incrimatory statement. A statement which tends to establish guilt of the accused or from which, with other facts, his guilt may be inferred, or which tends to disprove some defense.

Incroachment /inkrōwchmant/. An unlawful upon the right or possession of another. See Encroachment; Trespass.

In cujus rei testimonium /in kyūwjas riyay tēstamōwn(ī)yām/. In testimony whereof. The initial words of the concluding clause of ancient deeds in Latin, literally translated in the English forms.

Inculpate /inkāpleyt/ ikkalpeyt/. To impute blame or guilt; to accuse; to involve in guilt or crime. See Incriminate.

Inculpatory /inkūlpat(ō)riy/. In the law of evidence, going or tending to establish guilt; intended to establish guilt; criminative. People v. White, 35 Cal. App.2d 61, 621. See also Incriminate.

Incumbent /inkūmbnt/. A person who is in present possession of an office; one who is legally authorized to discharge the duties of an office. Hilliard v. Park, 212 Tenn. 588, 370 S.W.2d 829, 839.

In ecclesiastical law, the term signifies a clergyman who is in possession of a benefice.

Incumbent. See Encumbance.

Incumbance. See Encumbance.

Incumbances, covenant against. See Covenant.

Incur. To have liabilities cast upon one by act or operation of law, as distinguished from contract, where the party acts affirmatively. To become liable or subject to.

Incurable disease. Any disease which has reached an incurable stage in the patient afflicted therewith, according to general state of knowledge of the medical profession. Disease for which there is no known cure.

Incurramentum /inkāramēntam/. L. Lat. The liability to a fine, penalty, or amercement.

In custodia legis /in kastōwd(ī)yā liyjas/. In the custody or keeping of the law.

Inde /indy/. Lat. Thence; thenceforth; thereof; thereupon; for that cause.

Indebatus assumptit /indēbatēydas ssām(p)sāt/. Lat. Being indebted, he promised or undertook. That form of the action of assumptit in which the declaration alleges a debt or obligation to be due from the defendant, and then avers that, in consideration thereof, he promised to pay or discharge the same.

Indebiti solutio /indēbdsāy sâl(y)ūwsh(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil and Scotch law, a payment of what is not due. When made through ignorance or by mistake, the amount paid might be recovered back by an action termed "conditio indebiti."

Indebitum /indēbdsām/. In the civil law, not due or owing.

Indebtedness. The state of being in debt, without regard to the ability or inability of the party to pay the same. The owing of a sum of money upon a certain and express agreement. Obligations yet to become due constitute indebtedness, as well as those already due. And in a broad sense and in common understanding the word may mean anything that is due and owing.

Indecent. Offensive to common propriety; offending against modesty or delicacy; grossly vulgar; obscene; lewd; unseemly; unbecoming; indecorous; unfit to be seen or heard. See Obscene.

Indecent assault. The act of a male person taking indecent liberties with the person of a female, without her consent and against her will, but with no intent to commit the crime of rape.

Indecent exhibition. Any exhibition contra bonos mores, as the taking a dead body for the purpose of dissection or public exhibition.

Indecent exposure. Exposure to sight of the private parts of the body in a lewd or indecent manner in a public place. It is an indictable offense at common law, and by statute in states. Term refers to exhibition of those private parts which instinctive modesty, human decency or self-respect require shall be kept covered in presence of others; exposure of person becomes indecent when it occurs at such time and place where reasonable man knows or should know his act will be open to observation of others. State v. Borchard, 24 Ohio App.2d 95, 264 N.E.2d 646, 650.

A person commits a misdemeanor if, for the purpose of arousing or gratifying sexual desire of himself or of any person other than his spouse, he exposes his genitals under circumstances in which he knows his conduct is likely to cause affront or alarm. Model Penal Code, § 213.5.

Indecent liberties. In the statutory offense of "taking indecent liberties with the person of a female child," this phrase means such liberties as the common sense of society would regard as indecent and improper. According to some authorities, it involves an assault or attempt at sexual intercourse, but according to others, it is not necessary that the liberties or familiarities should have related to the private parts of the child. See Obscene.
Indecent publications. Such as are offensive to modesty and delicacy; obscene; lewd; tending to the corruption of morals. Dunlop v. U. S., 165 U.S. 486, 17 S.Ct. 375, 41 L.Ed. 799. See Obscene.

Public indecency. This phrase has no fixed legal meaning, is vague and indefinite, and cannot, in itself, imply a definite offense. The courts, by a kind of judicial legislation, in England and the United States, have usually limited the operation of the term to public displays of the naked person, the publication, sale, or exhibition of obscene books and prints, or the exhibition of a monster,—acts which have a direct bearing on public morals, and affect the body of society. Irven v. State, 138 Tex.Cr.R. 368, 136 S.W.2d 608, 609. See Obscene; also, Indecent exposure, supra.

Indecimable /indíes(m)æmbəl/. In old English law, that which is not titheable, or liable to pay tithe.

Inde date leges ne fortior omnia posset /indy dédyi láyjíyz niy fôørşı(y)ər ọnn(i)yə póəs/. Laws are made to prevent the stronger from having the power to do everything.

Indefeasible /indyfíyzəbəl/. That which cannot be defeated, revoked, or made void. This term is usually applied to an estate or right which cannot be defeated.

Indefensus /indyfén(t)səs/. Lat. In old English practice, undefended; undenied by pleading. A defendant who makes no defense or plea.

Indefinite. Without fixed boundaries or distinguishing characteristics; not definite, determinate, or precise.

Indefinite failure of issue. A failure of issue not merely at the death of the party whose issue are referred to, but at any subsequent period, however remote. A failure of issue whenever it shall happen, sooner or later, without any fixed, certain, or definite period within which it must happen.

Indefinite legacy. See Legacy.

Indefinite number. A number which may be increased or diminished at pleasure.

Indefinitum equipollet universali /indyfınánjyədəm ɛkwpəlɛt jəwũnˈvɔrsəlɛplə/. The undefined is equivalent to the whole.

Indefinitum supplet locum universalis /indyfınánjyədəm ˈsɑplət ləwˈkəm jəwũnˈvɔrsəlɛləs/. The undefined or general supplies the place of the whole.

In delicto /ɪn dəlɪktəʊ/. In fault. See In pari delicto.

Indemnification. See Indemnify; Indemnity.

Indemnify /indyˈməfəʊ/. To restore the victim of a loss, in whole or in part, by payment, repair, or replacement. To save harmless; to secure against loss or damage; to give security for the reimbursement of a person in case of an anticipated loss falling upon him. To make good; to compensate; to make reimbursement to one of a loss already incurred by him. Several states by statute have provided special funds for compensating crime victims. See also Hold harmless agreement; Indemnity; Reparation; Restitution; Subrogation.

Indemnity /ˈɪndiˈmənti/. Lat. Without hurt, harm, or damage; harmless.

Indemnitor /ˈɪndiˈməndər/. The person who, in a contract of indemnity, is to be indemnified or protected by the other.

Indemnity /ˈɪndiˈməntlɪ/. A collateral contract or assurance, by which one person engages to secure another against an anticipated loss or to prevent him from being damned by the legal consequences of an act or forbearance on the part of one of the parties or of some third person. Term pertains to liability for loss shifted from one person held legally responsible to another person. Boyle v. Burt, Iowa, 179 N.W.2d 513, 515.

The term is also used to denote a compensation given to make the person whole from a loss already sustained; as where the government gives indemnity for private property taken by it for public use. It means, also, restitution or reimbursement. See Compensation; Eminent domain; Expropriation; Just compensation.

A legislative act, assuring a general dispensation from punishment or exemption from prosecution to persons involved in offenses, omissions of official duty, or acts in excess of authority, is called an indemnity; strictly it is an act of indemnity.

See also Contribution; Double indemnity; Indemnify; Subrogation.

Indemnity against liability. A contract to indemnify when liability of person indemnified arises, irrespective of whether person indemnified has suffered actual loss. Indemnity against loss, on the other hand, does not render indemnitor liable until person indemnified makes payment or sustains loss. See also Subrogation.

Indemnity bond. A bond for the payment of a penal sum conditioned to be void if the obligor shall indemnify and save harmless the obligee against some anticipated loss. It is generally given to provide reimbursement for loss resulting from breach of trust or failure of employee or agents to perform duties.

Indemnity contract. A contract between two parties whereby the one undertakes and agrees to indemnify the other against loss or damage arising from some contemplated act on the part of the indemnitor, or from some responsibility assumed by the indemnitee, or from the claim or demand of a third person, that is, to make good to him such pecuniary damage as he may suffer.

Indemnity insurance. See Insurance.

Indemnity lands. Lands granted to railroads, in aid of their construction, being portions of the public domain, to be selected in lieu of other parcels embraced within the original grant, but which were lost to the railroad by previous disposition or by reservation for other purposes.

Indemnity policy. As distinguished from general liability policy, a policy on which no action can be maintained except to indemnify for money actually paid. See Indemnity insurance and Liability insurance under Insurance.

Indenization /indénszáyshan/. The act of making a denizen, or of naturalizing.

Indent, n. A certificate or indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the Revolution for the principal or interest of the public debt.

Indent, v. To cut in a serrated or wavy line. In old conveyancing, if a deed was made by more parties than one, it was usual to make as many copies of it as there were parties, and each was cut or indented (either in acute angles, like the teeth of a saw, or in a wavy line) at the top or side, to tally or correspond with the others, and the deed so made was called an "indenture". Anciently, both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters written between them through which the parchment was cut, but afterwards, the word or letters being omitted, indenting came into use, the idea of which was that the genuineness of each part might be proved by its fitting into the angles cut in the other. But at length even this was discontinued, and eventually the term seemed only to give name to the species of deed executed by two or more parties, as opposed to a deed-poll (q.v.). 2 BI.Comm. 295.

Indenture /indénchar/. A written agreement under which bonds and debentures are issued, setting forth maturity date, interest rate, and other terms. A deed to which two or more persons are parties, and in which these enter into reciprocal and corresponding grants or obligations towards each other; whereas a deed-poll is properly one in which only the party making it executes it, or binds himself by it as a deed, though the grantors or grantees therein may be severally in number. See Indent, v.

Indenture means mortgage, deed of trust, or indenture, under which there is outstanding a security, other than a voting-trust certificate, constituting a claim against the debtor, a claim secured by a lien on any of the debtor’s property, or an equity security of the debtor. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(22).

Indenture of a fine. In old English law, indentures made and engrossed at the chirographer’s office and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee, usually beginning with the words: “Hæc est finalis concordia.” And then reciting the whole proceedings at length. 2 BI.Comm. 351.

Indenture of trust. See Trust indenture.

Indenture trustee. Person or institution named in a trust indenture and charged with holding legal title to the trust property and with carrying out the terms of the indenture. Trustee under an indenture. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(23).

Independence. The state or condition of being free from dependence, subjection, or control. Political independence is the attribute of a nation or state which is entirely autonomous, and not subject to the government, control, or dictation of any exterior power.

Independent. Not dependent; not subject to control, restriction, modification, or limitation from a given outside source.

Independent adjuster. A person, firm or corporation who holds himself or itself out for employment to more than one insurance company, is not a regular employee of the company, does not work exclusively for one company and is paid in each case assigned for time consumed and expenses incurred.

Independent advice. Concerning a trust deed or will which must be shown where a fiduciary relationship exists, means that the donor had the preliminary benefit of conferring fully and privately upon the subject of his intended gift with a person who was not only competent to inform him correctly as to its legal effect, but who was, furthermore, so disassociated from the interests of the donee as to be in a position to advise with the donor impartially and confidentially as to the consequences to himself of his proposed benefaction.

Independent contract. See Contract.

Independent contractor. Generally, one who, in exercise of an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods and is subject to his employer's control only as to end product or final result of his work. Hammes v. Suk, 291 Minn. 233, 190 N.W.2d 478, 480, 481. One who renders service in course of independent employment or occupation, and who follows employer's desires only as to results of work, and not as to means whereby it is to be accomplished. Sparks v. L. D. Folsom Co., 217 Cal.App.2d 279, 31 Cal.Rptr. 640, 643; Housewright v. Pacific Far East Line Inc., 229 Cal.App.2d 259, 40 Cal.Rptr. 208, 212; Dowling v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, La.App., 168 So.2d 107, 112.

An independent contractor is a person who contracts with another to do something for him but who is not controlled by the other nor subject to the other's right to control with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of the undertaking. He may or may not be an agent. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 2.

Independent covenant. See Covenant.

Independenter se habet assecratio a viaggio navis /indépendéntar siy háybat ásékyáreysh(iy)ow éy víyéyéj(iy)ow néyyas/. The voyage insured is an independent or distinct thing from the voyage of the ship.

Independent significance. An act or document is said to have independent legal significance so as to carry out the wishes of the testator or decedent if it is not executed solely to avoid the requirements of a will; and, hence, what may appear to be a testamentary disposition without observing the requirements of the statutes on wills will be given effect.

Independent source rule. In connection with evidence, if the evidence to be introduced can be traced to a source independent of the originally illegally obtained fruits of interrogation or arrest, it is admissible. Wong Sun v. U. S., 371 U.S. 471, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441.
INDESTRUCTIBLE TRUST

Indestructible trust. A trust which, inter alia, does not permit the invasion of principal by the trustees but which provides for income to A for life, with remainder to A's son's issue and for failure to A's daughter or issue. Application of Renn, 177 Misc. 95, 29 N.Y. S.2d 410, 412.

Indeterminate. That which is uncertain, or not particularly designated.

Indeterminate conditional release. Type of release from penal confinement after fulfillment of conditions but subject to revocation for breach of conditions of release. See also Parole.

Indeterminate sentence. A sentence to imprisonment for the maximum period defined by law, subject to termination by the parole board or other agency at any time after service of the minimum period. Such a sentence is invalid unless specifically authorized by statute.

A sentence of imprisonment the duration of which is not fixed by the court but is left to the determination of penal authorities within minimum and maximum time limits fixed by the court of law. See also Sentence.

Index. A book containing references, alphabetically arranged, to the contents of a series or collection of volumes; or an addition to a single volume or set of volumes containing such references to its contents.

Index animi sermo /ɪndɪks ˈænɪməi sərˈməʊ/. Language is the exponent of the intention. The language of a statute or instrument is the best guide to the intention.

Index offenses. The term designating the seven classes of offenses reported annually by the FBI in its Uniform Crime Reports. They include: willful homicide, forcible rape, robbery, burglary, aggravated assault, larceny over a specified amount, and motor vehicle theft.

Indian Claims Commission. The Indian Claims Commission hears and determines claims against the United States on behalf of any Indian tribe, band, or other identifiable group of American Indians residing within the United States.

Indian lands. Real property ceded to the U.S. by Indians, commonly to be held in trust for Indians. See Indian country; Indian reservation; Indian tribal property; Indian tribe.

Indica /ɪndɪs(h)(i)ʃə/. Generally, a document evidencing title to property, real or personal; e.g. carbon copy of bill of sale to automobile. Edwards v. Central Motor Co., 38 Tenn.App. 577, 277 S.W.2d 413, 416.

Indian tribal property. Property in which an Indian tribe has a legally enforceable interest. Such term refers to real property, the title to which is vested in United States but held in trust for the Indian tribe. Such property, depending on context in which the term is used, may or may not be "public property" of the United States. Chief Seattle Properties, Inc. v. Kitsap County, 86 Wash.2d 7, 541 P.2d 699, 704.

Indian tribe. A separate and distinct community or body of the aboriginal Indian race of men found in the United States. Montoya v. U. S., 180 U.S. 261, 21 S.Ct. 358, 45 L.Ed. 521. An "Indian tribe" within meaning of Indian Nonintercourse Act is a body of Indians of the same or similar race, united in a community under one leadership or government, and inhabiting a particular, though sometimes ill-defined, territory. Mashpee Tribe v. New Seabury Corp., D.C. Mass., 427 F.Supp. 899, 902.

Indicare /ɪndɪkərɪ/ Lat. In the civil law, to show or discover. To fix or tell the price of a thing. To inform against; to accuse.

Indicatif. An abolished English writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a court-christian to the queen's bench.

Indication. In the law of evidence, a sign or token; a fact pointing to some inference or conclusion. See Inference.

Indicative evidence. This is not evidence properly so called, but the mere suggestion of evidence proper, which may possibly be procured if the suggestion is followed up. See Inference.

Indicavit /ɪndɪkəvɪt/. In old English practice, a writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by the clerk of another patron, for tithes amounting to a fourth part of the value of the living. 3 Bl.Comm. 91. So termed from the emphatic word of the Latin form.

Indicia /ɪndɪs(h)(i)ʃə/. Signs; indications. Circumstances which point to the existence of a given fact as probable, but not certain. For example, "indicia of partnership" are any circumstances which would induce the belief that a given person was in reality, though not ostensibly, a member of a given firm.

The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely synonymous with circumstantial evidence. It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather than the inferences themselves.

Indicia of title. Generally, a document evidencing title to property, real or personal; e.g. carbon copy of bill of sale to automobile. Edwards v. Central Motor Co., 38 Tenn.App. 577, 277 S.W.2d 413, 416.
Indict /ˈɪndɪkt/. See Indictment.

Indictable /ɪndɪktəb(ə)l/. Subject to being indicted. An offense, the nature of which is proper or necessary to be prosecuted by process of indictment. Indictable offenses embrace common-law offenses or statutory offenses the punishments for which are infamous.

Indictable offense. Any criminal offense for which a person may properly be indicted or complained of.

Indicted /ɪndɪktɪd/. Charged in an indictment with a criminal offense. See Jury; Indictment.

Indictee /ɪndɪˈtiː/. A person indicted.

Indictio /ɪndɪkʃ(i)əʊ/. In old public law, a declaration; a proclamation. Indictio belli, an accusation in writing originating with a prosecutor and issued by a grand jury against a party charged with a crime. An indictment is referred to as a "true bill", whereas failure to indict is called a "no bill".

Indictment /ɪndɪktmənt/. An accusation in writing found and presented by a grand jury, legally convicted and sworn, to the court in which it is impaneled, charging that a person therein named has done some act, or been guilty of some omission, which by law is a public offense, punishable on indictment. A formal written accusation originating with a prosecutor and issued by a grand jury against a party charged with a crime. An indictment is referred to as a "true bill", whereas failure to indict is called a "no bill".

An indictment is merely a charge which must be proved at trial beyond a reasonable doubt before defendant may be convicted. U. S. v. Zollick, D.C. N.Y., 274 F.Supp. 385, 390. An indictment is only an accusation, it is the physical means by which a defendant is brought to trial, its sole purpose is to identify defendant's alleged offense, and it is not evidence that offense charged was committed and may not be considered as evidence by jury during its deliberations. U. S. v. Glaziou, C.A.N.Y., 402 F.2d 8, 15.

An offense which may be punished by death shall be prosecuted by indictment. An offense which may be punished by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year or at hard labor shall be prosecuted by indictment or, if indictment is waived, it may be prosecuted by information. Any other offense may be prosecuted by indictment or by information. Fed. R.Crim.P. 7.

See also Information; Presentment.

Joinder of indictments. See Joinder.

Joint indictment. When several offenders are joined in the same indictment, as when principals in the first and second degree, and accessories before and after the fact, are all presented in the same indictment.

Indictment de felony est contra pacem domini regis, coronam et dignitatem suam, in genere et non in individuo; quia in Anglia non est interregnum /ɪndɪktmənt dɪˈfɛləni ɛst kɒnˈtrə ˈpɛsəm ˈdɒmənei ˈrɪljəs, kərəʊnəm ɛt ˈdɪgnɪtədəm s(ə)ˈjɪəwəm, ɪn ˈdʒenəriˌ ɛt nɒn ɪn ɪndəˈvɪdiːjuw, kɒwə in ˈæŋɡliə nɒn ɛst ɪntərəɡəm/. Indictment for felony is against the peace of our lord the king, his crown and dignity in general, and not against his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.

Indictor /ɪndɪˈdætər/. He who causes another to be indicted. The latter is sometimes called the "indictee."

In diem /ɪn ˈdɛɪm/. For a day; for the space of a day. See also Per diem.

Indifferent. Impartial; unbiased; disinterested.

Indigene /ɪndɪˈdʒiːnə/. In old English law, a subject born; one born within the realm, or naturalized by act of parliament. The opposite of "alienigena" (q.v.).

Indigent /ɪndɪˈdʒɛnt/. In a general sense, one who is needy and poor, or one who has not sufficient property to furnish him a living nor anyone able to support him to whom he is entitled to look for support. Term commonly used to refer to one's financial ability, and ordinarily indicates one who is destitute of means of comfortable subsistence so as to be in want. Powers v. State, 194 Kan. 820, 402 P.2d 328, 332.

Indigent defendant. A person indicted or complained of who is without funds or ability to hire a lawyer to defend him and who, in most instances, is entitled to appointed counsel, consistent with the protection of the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to U.S. Const. Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792, 9 L.Ed.2d 799; Fed.R.Crim.P. 44. See also Counsel, right to; Pauper's oath.

Indignity /ɪndɪɡnəti/. In the law of divorce, a species of cruelty addressed to the mind, sensibilities, self-respect, or personal honor of the subject, rather than to the body. "Indignities" justifying grant of divorce may consist of vulgarity, unmerited reproach, habitual contumely, studied neglect, intentional incivility, manifest disdain, abusive language, or malignant ridicule. Hargrove v. Hargrove, Pa.Super., 381 A.2d 143, 148. See Mental cruelty.

Indirect. Not direct in relation or connection; not having an immediate bearing or application; not related in the natural way. Almost always used in law in opposition to "direct," though not the only antithesis of the latter word, as the terms "collateral" and "cross" are sometimes used in contrast with "direct."

As to indirect Confession; Contempt, and Tax, see those titles.

Indirect evidence. Such evidence which only tends to establish the issue by proof of various facts sustaining by their consistency the hypothesis claimed. It consists of both inferences and presumptions. Proof of collateral circumstances, from which a fact in controversy, not directly attested to by direct evidence (witnesses or documents), may be inferred. Proof of some other fact or facts from which, taken either singly or collectively, existence of particular fact in question may be inferred as necessary or probable consequence. United Textile Workers of America, AFL-CIO, Local Union No. 120 v. Newberry Mills, Inc., D.C.S.C., 238 F.Supp. 366, 372. See also Circumstantial evidence; Inference; Presumption.

Indirect tax. A tax upon some right or privilege or corporate franchise; e.g. privilege tax; franchise tax. Madison Suburban Utility Dist. of Davidson County Indictment for felony is against the peace of our lord the king, his crown and dignity in general, and not against his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.

v. Carson, 191 Tenn. 300, 232 S.W.2d 277, 280. A tax laid upon the happening of an event as distinguished from its tangible fruits. Chickering v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Mass., 118 F.2d 254, 258.

In disjunctivis sufficit alteram partem esse veram /in disjagtávyas sáfaast õltam párdam éäly virm/. In disjunctives it is sufficient that either part be true.
Where a condition is in the disjunctive, it is sufficient if either part be performed.

Indispensable. That which cannot be spared, omitted, or dispensed with.

Indispensable evidence. That without which a particular fact cannot be proved.

Indispensable parties. One without whose presence no adequate judgment can be entered determining rights of parties before a court. Insurance Co. of North America v. Allied Crude Vegetable Oil Refining Corp., have such an interest in the controversy that the court cannot render a final decree without affecting their interests. Ohmart v. Dennis, 188 Neb. 260, 196
N.W.2d 181, 184. Those without whom the action cannot proceed, and must be joined even if by such joinder the court loses jurisdiction over the controversy. Milligan v. Anderson, C.A.Okl., 522 F.2d 1202, 1205. Fed.R.Civil P. 19. See Joinder (Joinder of parties); Parties.

Indistanter /indístántar/. Forthwith; without delay.

Inditee /indayty/. L. Fr. In old English law, a person indicted.

Individual. As a noun, this term denotes a single person as distinguished from a group or class, and also, very commonly, a private or natural person as distinguished from a partnership, corporation, or association; but it is said that this restrictive signification is not necessarily inherent in the word, and that it may, in proper cases, include artificial persons. See also Person.

As an adjective, "individual" means pertaining or belonging to, or characteristic of, one single person, either in opposition to a firm, association, or corporation, or considered in his relation thereto.

Individual assets. In the law of partnership, property belonging to a member of a partnership as his separate and private property, apart from the assets or property belonging to the firm as such or the partner's interest therein.

Individual debts. Such as are due from a member of a partnership in his private or personal capacity, as distinguished from those due from the firm or partnership.

Individually. Separately and personally, as distinguished from jointly or officially, and as opposed to collective or associative action or common interest.

Individual proprietorship. See Sole proprietorship.

Individual retirement account (I.R.A.). Individuals, whether or not already covered by qualified pension or profit-sharing plans, are permitted to set aside a certain percent of their income per year (not to exceed a statutorily set amount) in an individual retirement trust or custodial account. The amount set aside can be deducted by the individual and will be subject to income tax only upon withdrawal.
Specific statutory requirements are established for the establishment of the trust or custodial account, contributions, and withdrawal of such amounts with penalties provided for failure to comply. I.R.C. § 408
(a). See also Keogh Plan.

Individual system of location. A term formerly used in some states to designate the location of public lands by surveys, in which the land called for by each warrant was separately surveyed.

Indivisible. Not susceptible of division or apportionment; inseparable; entire. Thus, a contract, covenant, consideration, etc., may be divisible or indivisible; i.e., separable or entire. See also Contract.

Indivisum /indíváyszam/. Lat. That which two or more persons hold in common without partition; undivided.

Indorsee /ándórseyi/. The person to whom a negotiable instrument, promissory note, bill of lading, etc., is assigned by indorsement.

Indorsee in due course. An indorsee in due course is one who, in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value, before its apparent maturity or presumptive dishonor, and without knowledge of its actual dishonor, acquires a negotiable instrument duly indorsed to him, or indorsed generally, or payable to the bearer.

Indorsement /ándórsmant/. The act of a payee, drawee, accommodation indorser, or holder of a bill, note, check, or other negotiable instrument, in writing his name upon the back of the same, with or without further or qualifying words, whereby the property in the same is assigned and transferred to another. U.C.C. § 3–202 et seq.

An indorsement must be written by or on behalf of the holder and on the instrument or on a paper so firmly affixed thereto as to become a part thereof.
An indorsement is effective for negotiation only when it conveys the entire instrument or any unpaid residue. If it purports to be of less it operates only as a Accommodation indorsement. In the law of negotia-table instruments, one made by a third person without any consideration, but merely for the benefit of the holder of the instrument, or to enable the maker to obtain money or credit on it. Unless otherwise explained, it is understood to be a loan of the indorser's credit without restriction. Accommodation indorser is not liable to party accommodated. U.C.C. § 3–415.

Blank indorsement. One made by the mere writing of the indorser's name on the back of the note or bill, without mention of the name of any person in whose favor the indorsement is made, but with the implied understanding that any lawful holder may fill in his own name above the indorsement if he so chooses.
An indorsement in blank specifies no particular indorsee and may consist of a mere signature. An instrument payable to order and indorsed in blank becomes payable to bearer and may be negotiated by delivery alone until specially indorsed. The holder may convert a blank indorsement into a special indorsement by writing over the signature of the in-Indorser in blank any contract consistent with the character of the indorsement. U.C.C. § 3-204(2), (3).

Conditional indorsement. One by which the indorser annexes some condition (other than the failure of prior parties to pay) to his liability. The condition may be either present or subsequent. Special indorsement with additional words of condition. U.C.C. § 3-205(a).

Full indorsement. One by which the indorser orders the money to be paid to some particular person by name; it differs from a blank indorsement, which consists merely in the name of the indorser written on the back of the instrument.

General indorsement. See Blank indorsement, supra.

Qualified indorsement. One which restrains or limits, or qualifies or enlarges, the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deducible from the nature of the instrument. Stover Bank v. Welpman, Mo. App., 284 S.W. 177, 180. A transfer of a bill or promissory note to an indorsee, without any liability to the indorser. Accomplished by adding after signature words such as “without recourse” or the like. U.C.C. § 3-414(1).

Restrictive indorsement. One which stops the negotiability of the instrument, or which contains such a definite direction as to the payment as to preclude the indorsee from making any further transfer of the instrument. An indorsement is restrictive which either: (a) is conditional; or (b) purports to prohibit further transfer of the instrument; or (c) includes the words “for collection”, “for deposit”, “pay any bank”; or like terms signifying a purpose of deposit or collection; or (d) otherwise states that it is for the benefit or use of the indorser or of another person. U.C.C. § 3-205.

Special indorsement. A special indorsement specifies the person to whom or to whose order it makes the instrument payable. Any instrument specially indorsed becomes payable to the order of the special indorsee and may be further negotiated only by his indorsee. U.C.C. § 3-204(1).

Unauthorized indorsement. One made without actual, implied or apparent authority and includes a forgery. U.C.C. §§ 1–201, 3–404.

Without recourse. See Qualified indorsement, supra.

Indorser /i ndórsar/. He who indorses; i.e., being the payee or holder, writes his name on the back of a negotiable instrument. One who signs his name as payee on the back of a check to obtain the cash or credit represented on its face.

In dorso /i ndórsow/. On the back. 2 Bl.Comm. 468. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record. Hence the English indorse, indorsement, etc.

In dublis, benigniora praferenda sunt /i nd(y)ùwbiyias, banigniyòra préfaréndà sant/ /i nd(y)ùwbiyas, mèyjas dìgnìm ét åkspiypsìándìm/. In doubtful cases, the more favorable views are to be preferred; the more liberal interpretation is to be followed.

In dublis, magis dignum est acclplendum /i nd(y)ùwbiyas, nòn praz(y)ùwmdàr pròw testàmentòw/. In doubtful cases, the presumption is not in favor of a will.

In dublo /i nd(y)ùwbiyow/. In doubt; in a state of uncertainty, or in a doubtful case.

In dublo, haec legis constructio quam verba ostendunt /i nd(y)ùwbiyow, hìyk liyìjìs konstràkshì(y)ìow kwìèm vàrba âsténdànt/ /i nd(y)ùwbiyow, pàrìz màyshì(y)ìar èst sàkwëndà/ /i nd(y)ùwbiyow, párz màyshì(y)ìar èst sàkwëndà/. In doubt, the milder course is to be followed.

In dublo, pro lege fori /i nd(y)ùwbiyow, pròw liyìjì lýfty/ /i nd(y)ùwbiyow, pàrìz màyshì(y)ìar èst sàkwëndà/. In a doubtful case, the law of the forum is to be preferred. “A false maxim.”

In dublo, sequendum quod tutius est /i nd(y)ùwbiyow, sàkwëndìm kwòd tì(y)ùwshì(y)ìas èst/. In doubt, the safer course is to be adopted.

Indubitable proof /i nd(y)ùwbdàbìal prùwìf/. Evidence which is not only found credible, but is of such weight and directness as to make out the facts alleged beyond a doubt. See Prima facie.

Induce. To bring on or about, to affect, cause, to influence to an act or course of conduct, lead by persuasion or reasoning, incite by motives, prevail on. See also Seduce.

Inducement. In contracts, the benefit or advantage which the promisor is to receive from a contract is the inducement for making it. In criminal evidence, motive; that which leads or tempts to the commission of crime.

Inducie /i nd(y)ùwshì(y)ìjìy/. In international law, a truce; a suspension of hostilities; an agreement during war to abstain for a time from warlike acts.

Induct. To put in enjoyment or possession, especially to introduce into possession of an office or benefice, with customary ceremonies. To bring in, initiate; to put formally in possession; to enter formerly into military service; to inaugurate or install. See Induction.

Inductio /i ndàkshì(y)ìow/. Lat. In the civil law, obli­gation, by drawing the pen over the writing.

Induction. Act or process of inducting; e.g. process of inducting civilian into military service.

Inducti sunt in carcerem et in parcella /i ndàktsìy sànt in kàrsàrìm èd imparkegyadì/. See Imparcare.

Indulto /i ndàltòw/. In Ecclesiastical law, a dispensation granted by the pope to do or obtain something contrary to the common law.

In old Spanish law, the condonation or remission of the punishment imposed on a criminal for his offense. This power was exclusively vested in the king.

Indumento /i ndìyùwëmÀnt/. Endowment (q.v.).

Indublo /i nd(y)ùwpìlaw/. In double. Damna in duplo, double damages.
Industrial disease. In law of worker's compensation, physical disorder which is caused by or is incident to particular occupation. Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co. v. Rozan, 92 N.H. 328, 30 A.2d 474, 475. See also Occupational disease.

Industrial goods. Goods which are destined and designed to produce other goods as contrasted with consumer goods.

Industrial relations. Term includes all phases of relations between employer and employee, including collective bargaining, safety, employee benefits, etc.

Industriam, per /pār indistriyam/. Lat. A qualified property in animals fere nature may be acquired per industriam, i.e., by a man's reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, and education; or by so confining them within his own immediate power that they cannot escape and use their natural liberty.

Industry. Any department or branch of art, occupation, or business conducted as a means of livelihood or for profit; especially, one which employs much labor and capital and is a distinct branch of trade.

In eadem causa /in iyéydam køza/. In the same state or condition.

Inebriate /iñybiyat/. A person under the influence of or addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors.

Ineligibility. Disqualification or legal incapacity to be elected to an office or appointed to a particular position. Thus, an alien or naturalized citizen is ineligible to be elected president of the United States. This incapacity arises from various causes, and a person may be incapable of being elected to one office who may be elected to another; the incapacity may also be perpetual or temporary. See also Incapacity.

In emolationem vicini /in ém(y)éséshiyowm vasay-nay/. In envy or hatred of a neighbor. Where an act is done, or action brought, solely to hurt or distress another, it is said to be in emolationem vicini.

In eo quod sit plus sit, semper inest et minus /in iyow kwôd plès sit, sêmpar inést êt máynas/. In the greater is always included the less also.

In equity. In a court of equity, as distinguished from a court of law, in the purview, consideration, or contemplation of equity; according to the doctrines of equity. See Equitable; Equity.

Inescapable peril. Within last clear chance doctrine, means peril which the plaintiff is helpless to avoid by his own efforts, but which requires action on part of defendant to avert it. Melenson v. Howell, 344 Mo. 1137, 130 S.W.2d 555, 560.

In esse /in ésiy/. In being. Actually existing. Distinguished from in posse, which means "that which is not, but may be." A child before birth is in posse; after birth, in esse.

Inesse potest donationi, modus, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa /inésiy pówdast danéshiyowm, mówdas, kandish(i)yow sáviy kóza; êt mówdas êst; sáy kandish(i)yow; kwáya kóza/. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause; as [ut] introduces a manner; if [si], a condition; because [quia], a cause.

In est de jure /inést diy jùriy/. (Lat.) It is implied of right or by law.

In evidence. Included in the evidence already adduced. The "facts in evidence" are such as have already been proved in the cause.

Inexitable. Incapable of being avoided; fortuitous; transcending the power of human care, foresight, or exertion to avoid or prevent, and therefore suspending legal relations so far as to excuse from the performance of contract obligations, or from liability for consequent loss.

Inevitable accident. An unavoidable accident; one produced by an irresistible physical cause; an accident which cannot be prevented by human skill or foresight, but results from natural causes, such as lightning or storms, perils of the sea, inundations or earthquakes, or sudden death or illness. By irresistible force is meant an interposition of human agency, from its nature and power absolutely uncontrollable.

An accident is "inevitable", so as to preclude recovery on ground of negligence, if person by whom it occurs neither has nor is legally bound to have sufficient power to avoid it or prevent its injuring another. Stephens v. Virginia Elec. & Power Co., 184 Va. 94, 34 S.E.2d 374, 377.

The highest degree of caution that can be used is not required. It is enough that it is reasonable under the circumstances; such as is usual in similar cases, and has been found by long experience to be sufficient to answer the end in view,—the safety of life and property. Inevitable accident is only when the disaster happens from natural causes, without negligence or fault on either side, and when both parties have endeavored, by every means in their power, with due care and caution, and with a proper display of nautical skill, to prevent the occurrence of the accident. The Philip J. Kenny, C.C.A.N.J., 60 F.2d 457, 458.

See also Act of God.

In excambio /in ekskamb(i)yow/. In exchange. Formal words in old deeds of exchange.

Inexusable neglect. Such neglect which will preclude setting aside of default judgment, implies something more than the unintentional inadvertence or neglect common to all who share the ordinary frailties of mankind. Monteve v. Tonkawa Village Apartments, 215 Kan. 59, 523 P.2d 351, 356.

In execution and pursuance of /in èkskayùwshan ènd pars(y)uwwans òv/. Words used to express the fact that the instrument is intended to carry into effect some other instrument, as in case of a deed in execution of a power.

In exitu /in égzat(y)uw/. In issue. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est /in ékspazhišiyowniy instramantóром, mälá gramándaká, kwôd fayary pówdast, vátánda êst/. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible.

In extenso /in aksténso/. In extension; at full length; from beginning to end, leaving out nothing.

In extremis /in akstrimahas/. In extremity; in the last extremity; in the last illness. Agens in extremis, being in extremity. Declarations in extremis, dying declarations. In extremis does not always mean in articulo mortis. In re Mallery's Will, 127 Misc. 784, 217 N.Y.S. 489, 492.

In facie curie /in fēys(h)i(y)i kyūriy(i)y/. In the face of the court.

In facie ecclesie /in fēys(h)i(y)i akliyziy(i)y/. In the face of the church. A term applied in the law of England to marriages, which are required to be solemnized in a parish church or public chapel, unless by dispensation or license.

In faciendo /in fēys(h)i(y)i yendow/. In doing; in feasance; in the performance of an act.

In fact. Actual, real; as distinguished from implied or inferred. Resulting from the acts of parties, instead of from the act or intendment of law.

In facto /in fækto/. In fact; in deed. In facto dicit, in fact says.

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum, magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit /in fēks-tw kwōd siē hēybad ēd bōnwām ēt mālām, mējyās diy bōnow kwām diy mālōw léks āntēndāt/. In an act or deed which admits of being considered as both good and bad, the law intends more from the good than from the bad; the law makes the more favorable construction.

Infamia /infēym(i)yə/. Lat. Infamy; ignominy or disgrace.

By infamia juris is meant infamy established by law as the consequence of crime; infamia facti is where the party is supposed to be guilty of such crime, but it has not been judicially proved.

Infamis /infēymas/. Lat. In Roman law, a person whose right of reputation was diminished (involving the loss of some of the rights of citizenship) either on account of his infamous avocation or because of conviction for crime.

Infamous /infāmag/. Shameful or disgraceful. Possessing notorious reputation. Famous or well known in a derogatory sense.

Infamous crime. See Crime.

Infamous punishment. See Punishment.

Infamy /infāmy/. Condition of being infamous. A qualification of a man's legal status produced by his conviction of an infamous crime and the consequent loss of honor and credit, which, at common law, rendered him incompetent as a witness, and by statute in some jurisdictions entails other disabilities. See Civil death.

Infancy. Minority; the state of a person who is under the age of legal majority,—at common law, twenty-one years; now, generally 18 years. According to the sense in which this term is used, it may denote the condition of the person merely with reference to his years, or the contractual disabilities which non-age entails, or his status with regard to other powers or relations.

At common law, children under the age of seven are conclusively presumed to be without criminal capacity, those who have reached the age of fourteen are treated as fully responsible, while as to those between the ages of seven and fourteen there is a rebuttable presumption of criminal incapacity. Many states have made some change by statute in the age of criminal responsibility for minors. In addition, all jurisdictions have adopted juvenile court legislation providing that some or all criminal conduct by those persons under a certain age (usually eighteen) must or may be adjudicated in the juvenile court rather than in a criminal prosecution.

See also Child; Minor.

Infangenthef /infānθiθiθ/. In old English law, a privilege of lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee. See Outfanghef.

Infans /infān(d)z/. Lat. In the civil law, a child under the age of seven years; so called "quasi impos fandi" (as not having the faculty of speech).

Infant. See Child; Infancy; Minor.

Infantia /infānθiθ(i)yə/. Lat. In the civil law, the period of infancy between birth and the age of seven years.

Infanticide /infāntssāy̆d/. The murder or killing of an infant soon after its birth. The fact of the birth distinguishes this act from "feticide" or "procuring abortion," which terms denote the destruction of the fetus in the womb. See also Prolicide.

Infanzon /infānsōw̅n/. In Spanish law, a person of noble birth, who exercises within his domains and inheritance no other rights and privileges than those conceded to him.

In favorabilibus magis attenditur quod prodest quam quod nocet /in fē✈varshibhēbēs mējyās āstēndār kwōd prōwedst kwām kwōd nōsāt/. In things favored, what profits is more regarded than what prejudices.

In favorem libertatis /in favoram libartetiydəs/. In favor of liberty.

In favorem vitae /in favoram váydiy/. In favor of life.

In favorem vitae, libertatis, et innocentie, omnia prēsomuntur /in favoram váydiy, libartetiydəs, ēd ināsēnshiyiy, ōmniyā priyzymāntə/. In favor of life, liberty, and innocence, every presumption is made.

Infensare curiam /infānsērīy kyūriy̆m/. Lat. An expression applied to a court when it suggested to an advocate something which he had omitted through mistake or ignorance.

In feodo /in fyūwdo/. In fee. Seisitus in feodo, seised in fee.

Infeoffment /infīfμmənt/fēt/. The act or instrument of feoffment.
Inference. In the law of evidence, a truth or proposition drawn from another which is supposed or admitted to be true. A process of reasoning by which a fact or proposition sought to be established is deduced as a logical consequence from other facts, or a state of facts, already proved or admitted. Com. v. Whitman, 199 Pa. Super. 631, 186 A.2d 632, 633. Inferences are deductions or conclusions which with reason and common sense lead the jury to draw from facts which have been established by the evidence in the case.

An inference is a deduction of fact that may logically and reasonably be drawn from another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established in the action. Calif. Evid. Code.

See also Reasonable inference rule. Compare Presumption.

Inference on inference, rule of. Means that one presumption or inference may not be based upon another. McManimen v. Public Service Co. of Northern Illinois, 317 Ill. App. 649, 47 N.E.2d 385.

Inferential. In the law of evidence, operating in the way of inference; argumentative. Presumptive evidence is sometimes termed "inferential".

Inferential facts. Such as are established not directly by testimony or other evidence, but by inferences or conclusions drawn from the evidence.

Inferior. One who, in relation to another, has less power and is below him; one who is bound to obey another. He who makes the law is the superior; he who is bound to obey it, the inferior.

Inferior court. This term may denote any court subordinate to the chief appellate tribunal in the particular judicial system (e.g. trial court); but it is also commonly used as the designation of a court of special, limited, or statutory jurisdiction, whose record must show the existence and attaching of jurisdiction in any given case, in order to give presumptive validity to its judgment.

Infedation /in'fyudwe'de'shan/. The placing in possession of a freehold estate; also the granting of tithes to laymen.

Inficiari /in'fis(h)i'yé'ray/. Lat. In the civil law, to deny; to deny one's liability; to refuse to pay a debt or restore a pledge; to deny the allegation of a plaintiff; to deny the charge of an accuser.

Inficiatio /in'fis(h)i'yé'sh(i)y'éw/. Lat. In the civil law, denial; the denial of a debt or liability; the denial of the claim or allegation of a party plaintiff.

In fictione juris semper equitas existit /in'fikshiyó'wi ny jú'ras sémph iykwa'tas ágzis'tat/. In the fiction of law there is always equity; a legal fiction is always consistent with equity.

Infidel. One who does not believe in the existence of a God who will reward or punish in this world or in that which is to come. One who professes no religion that can bind his conscience to speak the truth. One who does not recognize the inspiration or obligation of the Holy Scriptures, or generally recognized features of the Christian religion.

Infidelis /in'fa'di'ilas/dél/. In old English law, an infidel or heathen.

In feudal law, one who violated fealty.

Infidelitas /in'fa'dé-ltá'sas/. In feudal law, infidelity; faithlessness to one's feudal oath.

Infidelity. Unfaithfulness in marriage; usually referring to commission of adultery by one spouse.

Infiduciare /in'fa'd(y)i'wsh(h)i'yé'ri/. In old European law, to pledge property.

In fieri /in fá'yri/. In being made; in process of formation or development; hence, incomplete or inchoate. Legal proceedings are described as in fieri until judgment is entered.

Inflict /in'falt/. Sax. An assault made on a person inhabiting the same dwelling.

In fine /in fáyn(i)y/. Lat. At the end. Used, in references, to indicate that the passage cited is at the end of a book, chapter, section, etc.

Infinitum in jure repobatur /in'fáná'yà'dam i jú'riy répobár'dar/. As applied to litigation, that which is endless is repudiated in law.

Infirm. Weak, feeble. Lacking moral character or weak of health. The testimony of an "infirm" witness may be taken de bene esse in some circumstances. See also Incapacity.

Infirmative. In the law of evidence, having the quality of diminishing force; having a tendency to weaken or render infirm. Exculpatory is used by some authors as synonymous.

Infirmative consideration. In the law of evidence, a consideration, supposition, or hypothesis of which the criminative facts of a case admit, and which tends to weaken the inference or presumption of guilt deductible from them.

Infirmative fact. In the law of evidence, a fact set up, proved, or even supposed, in opposition to the criminative facts of a case, the tendency of which is to weaken the force of the inference of guilt deductible from them.

Infirmative hypothesis. A term sometimes used in criminal evidence to denote an hypothesis or theory of the case which assumes the defendant's innocence, and explains the criminative evidence in a manner consistent with that assumption.

Infirmity. Disability; feebleness. In an application for insurance an ailment or disease of a substantial character, which apparently in some material degree impairs the physical condition and health of the applicant and increases the chance of his death or sickness and which if known, would have been likely to deter the insurance company from issuing the policy. See also Incapacity.

Influence. Power exerted over others. To affect, modify or act upon by physical, mental or moral power, especially in some gentle, subtle, and gradual way. State v. Robertson, 241 La. 249, 128 So.2d 646, 648. See also Undue influence.

Informal. Deficient in legal form; inartificially drawn up.
Informal contract. Generally refers to an oral contract as contrasted with a written contract or specialty instrument.

Informality. Want of legal form.

Informal proceedings. Proceedings less formal than a normal trial; e.g., small claims or conciliation court, hearings, etc. Those conducted without prior notice to interested persons by an officer of the Court acting as registrar for probate of a will or appointment of a personal representative. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(19).

Informant. See Informer.

In forma pauperis /in fórma póparas/. In the character or manner of a pauper. Describes permission given to a poor person (i.e., indigent) to proceed without liability for court fees or costs. An indigent will not be deprived of his rights to litigate and appeal; if the court is satisfied as to his indigence he may proceed without incurring costs or fees of court. Fed.R.Crim.P. 44. See also Indigent defendant.

Information. An accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offense, without an indictment. An accusation in the nature of an indictment, from which it differs only in being presented by a competent public officer on his oath of office, instead of a grand jury on their oath. A written accusation made by a public prosecutor, without the intervention of a grand jury. Salvail v. Sharkey, 108 R.I. 63, 271 A.2d 814, 817. In information may be used in place of a grand jury indictment to bring a person to trial. As regards federal crimes, see Fed.R.Crim.P. 7.

Information and belief. A standard legal term which is used to indicate that the allegation is not based on the firsthand knowledge of the person making the allegation, but that person nevertheless, in good faith, believes the allegation to be true. See Probable cause.

Informed consent. A person's agreement to allow something to happen (such as surgery) that is based on a full disclosure of facts needed to make the decision intelligently; i.e., knowledge of risks involved, alternatives, etc. Informed consent is the name for a general principle of law that a physician has a duty to disclose what a reasonably prudent physician in the medical community in the exercise of reasonable care would disclose to his patient as to whatever grave risks of injury might be incurred from a proposed course of treatment, so that a patient, exercising ordinary care for his own welfare, and faced with a choice of undergoing the proposed treatment, or alternative treatment, or none at all, may intelligently exercise his judgment by reasonably balancing the probable risks against the probable benefits. Ze Barth v. Swedish Hospital Medical Center, 81 Wash.2d 12, 499 P.2d 1, 8.

Informant. A person who informs or prefers an accusation against another, whom he suspects of the violation of some penal statute. An undisclosed person who confidentially volunteers material information of law violations to officers and does not include persons who supply information only after being inter-viewed by police officers, or who give information as witnesses during course of investigation. Gordon v. U. S., C.A.Fla., 438 F.2d 858, 874. Rewards for information obtained from informers is provided for by 18 U.S.C.A. § 3059.

In foro /in fórō/. In a (or the) forum, court, or tribunal.

In foro consciente /in fórō kónsh(ıy)énshiy(ı)y//. In the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously, considered from a moral, rather than a legal, point of view.

In foro contentioso /in fórō kántěnshiyówsvós/. In the forum of contention or litigation.

In foro ecclesiastico /in fórō sklíyziyéstaków/. In an ecclesiastical forum; in the ecclesiastical court.

In foro securi /in fórō sékylárlay/. In a secular forum or court.

Infurnitum, homicide per /hómasayd pár ifartyúwn-(ı)yam/. Where a man doing a lawful act, without intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another.

Infra /infra/. (Lat.) Below, under, beneath, underneath. The opposite of supra, above. Thus, we say, primo gradu est—supra, pater, mater, infra, filius, filia: in the first degree of kindred in the ascending line, above is the father and the mother, below, in the descending line, son and daughter.

In another sense, this word signifies within; as, infra corpus civitatis, within the body of the country; infra præsidia, within the guards. So of time, during: infra furorem, during the madness. This use is not classical. The use of infra for intra seems to have sprung up among the barbarians after the fall of the Roman empire.

Infra statem /infra atéydam/. Under age; not of age. Applied to minors.

Infra annos nubiles /infra ānwows n(y)yúwbálíyz/. Under marriageable years; not yet of marriageable age.

Infra annum /infra ānám/. Under or within a year.

Infra annum lactus /infra ānám láktas/>. (Within the year of mourning.) The phrase is used in reference to the marriage of a widow within a year after her husband's death, which was prohibited by the civil law.

Infra brachia /infra bréyky(ı)y/. Within her arms. Used of a husband de jure, as well as de facto. Also inter brachia. It was in this sense that a woman could only have an appeal for murder of her husband inter brachia sua.

Infra civitatem /infra sívátéydm/. Within the state.

Infra corpus comitatus /infra kórpas kómatéydás/. Within the body (territorial limits) of a county. In English law, waters which are infra corpus comitatus are exempt from the jurisdiction of the admiralty.
Infraction. A breach, violation, or infringement; as of a law, a contract, a right or duty. A violation of a statute for which the only sentence authorized is a fine and which violation is expressly designated as an infraction.

Infra dignitatem curie. Beneath the dignity of the court; unworthy of the consideration of the court. Where a bill in equity is brought upon a matter too trifling to deserve the attention of the court, it is demurrable, as being infra dignitatem curie.

Infra furorem. During madness; while in a state of insanity.

Infra hospitium. Within the inn. When a traveler's baggage comes infra hospitium, i.e., in the care and under the custody of the innkeeper, the latter's liability attaches. Davidson v. Madison Corporation, 231 App.Div. 421, 247 N.Y.S. 789, 795.

Infra jurisdictionem. Within the jurisdiction.

Infra praesidia. Within the protection; within the defenses. In international law, when a traveler's baggage comes infra praesidia, i.e., in the care and under the custody of the innkeeper, the latter's liability attaches.

In fraudem creditorum. In fraud of creditors; with intent to defraud creditors.

In fraudem legis. In fraud of the law. With the intent or view of evading the law.

Infringement. A breaking into; a trespass or encroachment upon; a violation of a law, regulation, contract, or right. Used especially of invasions of the rights secured by patents, copyrights, and trademarks. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

Contributory infringement. The intentional aiding of one person by another in the unlawful making or selling of a patented invention; usually done by making or selling one part of the patented invention, or one element of the combination, with the intent and purpose of so aiding.

Criminal infringement. Any person who infringes a copyright willfully and for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial gain is subject to a fine and/or imprisonment. Copyright Act, § 506.

Infringement of copyright. Unauthorized use of copyrighted material; i.e., use without permission of copyright holder. In determining whether there is a copyright infringement, and not a “fair use” exemption, the factors to be considered include: (1) the purpose and character of the use, including whether such use is of a commercial nature or is for nonprofit educational purposes; (2) the nature of the copyrighted work; (3) the amount and substantiality of the portion used in relation to the copyrighted work as a whole; and (4) the effect of the use upon the potential market for or value of the copyrighted work. Copyright Act, § 107.

Remedies for copyright infringement include injunctive relief, impounding and disposition of infringing articles, and recovery of actual damages and profits. In lieu of actual damages, the federal Copyright Act provides for statutory damages which will vary as to whether the infringement was willful or unintentional. Copyright Act, § 504.

See also Fair use doctrine.

Infringement of patent. The unauthorized making, using, or selling for practical use, or for profit, of an invention covered by a valid claim of a patent during the life of the patent. It may involve any one or all of the acts of making, using, and selling. Phillips Electronic & Pharmaceutical Industries Corp. v. Thermal & Electronics Industries, Inc., D.C.N.J., 311 F.Supp. 17, 39. To constitute infringement of a patent claim there must be present in the infringing device or combination every element of such claim or its equivalent, so combined as to produce substantially the same result operating in substantially the same way.

Infringement of trademark. The unauthorized use or colorable imitation of the mark already appropriated by another, on goods of a similar class. Northam Warren Corporation v. Universal Cosmetic Co., C.C.A.Ill., 18 F.2d 774, 775. It exists if words or designs used by defendant are identical with or so similar to plaintiff's that they are likely to cause confusion, or deceive or mislead others. McGraw-Hill Pub. Co. v. American Aviation Associates, 73 App.D.C. 131, 117 F.2d 293, 294; Seattle Street Railway & Municipal Employees Relief Ass'n v. Ama.gamated Ass'n of Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employees of America, 3 Wash.2d 520, 101 P.2d 338, 344; California Fruit Growers Exchange v. Windsor Beverages, C.C.A.Ill., 118 F.2d 149, 152.

Infringer. One who infringes the rights secured by copyright, patent or trademark holders. One who affixes the trademark of another to similar articles in such way that his use of it is liable to cause confusion in the trade, or is calculated to mislead purchasers and induce them to buy infringer's articles as goods of the other thus depriving the latter of the full benefit of his property. James Heddon's Sons v. Millsite Steel & Wire Works, C.C.A.Mich., 128 F.2d 6, 8.

In full. Relating to the whole or full amount; as a receipt in full. Complete; giving all details.

In full life. Continuing in both physical and civil existence; that is, neither actually dead nor civiliter mortuus.

In futuro. In future; at a future time; the opposite of in præsenti.

In generalibus versatur error. Error in general expressions.

In generalibus passagio. In the general passage; that is, on the journey to Palestine with the general company or body of Crusaders. This term was of frequent occurrence in the old law of essoins, as a means of accounting for the absence of the party, and was distinguished from simplex passagium, which meant that he was performing a pilgrimage to the Holy Land alone.
In genere /in jëneri/. In kind; in the same genus or class; the same in quantity and quality, but not individually the same. In the Roman law, things which may be given or restored in genere are distinguished from such as must be given or restored in specie; that is, identically.

Ingenuitas /iinjën(y)uwatäs/. Lat. Freedom; liberty; the state or condition of one who is free. Also liberty given to a servant by manumission.

Ingenuitas regni /iinjën(y)uwatäs rèignay/. In old English law, the freemen, yeomanry, or commonalty of the kingdom. Applied sometimes also to the barons.

Ingenuus /iinjën(y)uwæs/. In Roman law, a person who, immediately that he was born, was a free person. He was opposed to libertinus, or libertus, who, having been born a slave, was afterwards manumitted or made free. It is not the same as the English law term "generosus", which denoted a person not merely free, but of good family. There were no distinctions among ingenui; but among libertini there were (prior to Justinian’s abolition of the distinctions) three varieties, namely: Those of the highest rank, called "Cives Romani"; those of the second rank, called "Latini Juniani"; and those of the lowest rank, called "Dediticii".

Ingratitude. In Roman law, ingratitude was accounted a sufficient cause for revoking a gift or recalling the liberty of a freedman. Such is also the law of France with respect to the first case. But the English and American law has left the matter entirely to the moral sense. Ungrateful.

In gremio legis /in griym(i)yow liyjës/. In the bosom of the law; in the protection of the law; in abeyance.

Ingress. The act, or right of, entering. Access; entrance.

Ingress, egress, and regress. These words express the right (e.g. of a lessee) to enter, go upon, and return from the lands in question.

Ingressu /ingrés(y)uw/. In English law, an ancient writ of entry, by which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Abolished in 1833.

Ingressus /igrés(y)uw/. In old English law, ingress; entry. The relief paid by an heir to the lord was sometimes so called.

In gross. In a large quantity or sum; without deduction, division, or particulars; by wholesale. At large, in one sum; not annexed to or dependent upon another thing. Common in gross is such as is neither appendant nor appurtenant to land, but is annexed to a man’s person. See also in bulk.

Ingrossator /igraséydar/. In old English law, an engrosser. Ingrossator magni rotuli /igraséydar mëgnay rochlay/, engrosser of the great roll; called “clerk of the pipe”.

Ingrossing. The act of making a fair and perfect copy of any document from a rough draft of it, in order that it may be executed or put to its final purpose. See Engross.

Inhabitant. One who resides actually and permanently in a given place, and has his domicile there. Ex parte Shaw, 145 U.S. 444, 12 S.Ct. 935, 36 L.Ed. 768.

The words “inhabitant,” “citizen,” and “resident,” as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors, means substantially the same thing; and, in general, one is an inhabitant, resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile or home. But the terms “resident” and “inhabitant” have also been held not synonymous, the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former, and importing privileges and duties to which a mere resident would not be subject. A corporation can be an inhabitant only in the state of its incorporation. Sperry Products v. Association of American Railroads, C.C.A.N.Y., 132 F.2d 408, 411. See also Domicile, Residence.

In hac parte /in hák párdy/. In this behalf; on this side.

In hac verba /in hák vàrba/. In these words; in the same words.

In heredes non solent transire actiones que peneales ex maleficio sunt /in hárydiz nön sówlant trænzäyriy àkshiyowniyz kwiy pânyëlyiyz èks sìfish(i)yow sánt/. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs.

Inhere /inhir/. To exist in and inseparable from something else; to stick fast. To be inherent.

Inherently dangerous. Danger inhering in instrumentality or condition itself at all times, so as to require special precautions to prevent injury; not danger arising from mere casual or collateral negligence of others with respect thereto under particular circumstances. Brown v. City of Craig, 350 Mo. 836, 168 S.W.2d 1080, 1082. An object which has in itself the potential for causing harm or destruction, against which precautions must be taken. Dangerous per se, without requiring human intervention to produce harmful effects; e.g., explosives.

Product is “inherently dangerous” where danger of an injury arises from product itself, and not from defect in product. General Bronze Corp. v. Kostopoulos, 203 Va. 66, 122 S.E.2d 548, 551. An activity is “inherently dangerous” when it is probable or likely that injurious consequences will attend doing of work. Reeves v. John A. Cooper Co., D.C.Ark., 304 F.Supp. 828, 832. See also Strict liability.

Inherent or latent defect. Fault or deficiency in a thing which is not easily discoverable and which is fixed in the object itself and not from without. See Latent defect.

Inherent powers /inhirant páwarz/. An authority possessed without its being derived from another. A right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right, ability, or faculty from another. Powers originating from the nature of government or sovereignty, i.e., powers over and beyond those explicitly granted in the Constitution or reasonably to be implied from express grants. See also Power.

Inherent powers of a court. Those reasonably necessary for administration of justice. State ex rel. Gen-Inherent right. One which abides in a person and is not given from something or someone outside itself. A right which a person has because he is a person.

Inheretrix /inhêrêtriks/. The old term for “heiress”.

Inherit /inhêhrat/. To take by inheritance; to take as heir on death of ancestor; to take by descent from ancestor; to take or receive, as right or title, by law from ancestor at his decease. In re Buell’s Estate, 167 Or. 295, 117 P.2d 832, 836. Acquisition of property by descent and distribution. The word is also used in its popular sense, as the equivalent of to take or receive. See also Inheritance.

Inheritable blood. Blood which has the purity (freedom from attainder) and legitimacy necessary to give its possessor the character of a lawful heir. That which is capable of being the medium for the transmission of an inheritance.

Inheritance /inhêhradant(t)s/. That which is inherited or to be inherited. Property which descends to heir on the intestate death of another. An estate or property which a man has by descent, as heir to another, or which he may transmit to another, as his heir. See Bequest; Descent; Heirs; Legacy.

Civil law. The succession of the heir to all the rights and property of the estate-leaver. It is either testamentary, where the heir is created by will, or ab intestato, where it arises merely by operation of law.

Inheritance tax. Tax imposed upon the privilege of receiving property from a decedent at death as contrasted with an estate tax which is imposed on the privilege of transmitting property at death. A tax on the transfer or passing of estates or property by legacy, devise, or intestate succession; not a tax on the property itself, but on the right to acquire it by descent or testamentary gift. Compare Estate tax.

Inhibition /in(h)abishan/. Restraining or holding back.

In Ecclesiastical law, a writ issuing from a superior ecclesiastical court, forbidding an inferior judge to proceed further in a cause pending before him. In this sense it is closely analogous to the writ of prohibition at common law. Also the writ of a bishop or ecclesiastical judge that a clergyman shall cease from taking any duty.

In old English law, the name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause pending before him; it was in the nature of a prohibition.

In the civil law, a prohibition which the law makes or a judge ordains to an individual. See Immigration.

In his enim quae sunt favorabilia animae, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extenso statutu /in his enim kwiy sânt féyvarabil(i)ya âzâmiy, kwâmvâs sânt dêmâowos riýbas, fâyad âldäkwâندow áksûtësh(i)y(w)ow stachüwday/. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should sometimes be made.

In his que de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo allevius patriae vel loci non est allegenda /in his kwiy dii jûri kwämiyünawâ yônâbândar, kônswat(y)üwodw âldäkwüwjas pätiriyi vêl lôwsaw nôn èst âlajëndâ/. In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular district or place is not to be alleged.

In hoc /in hók/. In this; in respect to this.

Inbonestus /inhânéstas/. In Old English law, unseemly; not in due order.

Inhuman treatment. In the law of divorce, such mental or physical cruelty or severity as endangers the life or health of the party to whom it is addressed, or creates a well-founded apprehension of such danger. The phrase commonly employed in statutes is “cruel and inhuman treatment,” from which it may be inferred that “inhumanity” is an extreme or aggravated “cruelty.” Such treatment commonly constitutes a ground for divorce. See also Cruelty; Mental cruelty.

In iiâdem terminis /in iyâysdam téármanas/. In the same terms.

In liis que sunt mere facultatis nunquam prescibitur /in áyas kwiy sânt miriy fâkältëydâs nájkwam praskribësdr/. Prescription does not run against a mere power or faculty to act.

In individuo /in davidd(y)uwow/. In the distinct, identical, or individual form; in specie.

In infinitum /in infañydam/. Infinitely; indefinitely. Imports indefinite succession or continuance.

In initio /in snish(i)yow/. In or at the beginning. In initio litis, at the beginning, or in the first stage of the suit.

In integrum /in ántégram/. To the original or former state.

In invidiam /in avid(i)yam/. To excite a prejudice.

In invitum /in anváydam/. Against an unwilling party; against one not assenting. A term applied to proceedings against an adverse party, to which he does not consent.

In ipsis faucibus /in ipsis fâsabas/. In the very throat or entrance. In ipsis facultibus of a port, actually entering a port.

Iniquissima pax est antependa justissimo bello /inikwisâma pâks èst ântépanénda jâstsìsmow bëlow/. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war.

Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam /inâykwam èst eýl(i)yowos párdmiriy, eýl(i)yowos in(h)abiriy mărîkachiiram/. It is inequitable to permit some to trade and to prohibit others.

Iniquum est ali quem rei sui esse judicem /anâykwam èst âldäkwam riýây s(y)ûwawâ ésyâ jüwêsdam/. It is wrong for a man to be a judge in his own cause.

Iniquum est ingeniis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem /änâykwam èst injénüwâs hâmínâbas nôn ésyâ líbâram riýam s(y)uwerem élyliýé- shiyôwnam/. It is unjust that freemen should not have the free disposal of their own property.

Initial. That which begins or stands at the beginning.

The first letter of a person's name.
Initial carrier. In the law of bailments, the carrier who first receives the goods and begins the process of their transportation, afterwards delivering them to another carrier for the further prosecution or completion of their journey. But it has also been defined as the one contracting with the shipper, and not necessarily the one whose line constitutes the first link in transportation.

Initiate. Commence; start; originate; introduce; inchoate. Curtesy initiate is the interest which a husband has in the wife's lands after a child is born who may inherit, but before the wife dies. To propose for approval—as schedule of rates. Idaho Power Co. v. Thompson, D.C.Idaho, 19 F.2d 547, 579.

Initiative. An electoral process whereby designated percentages of the electorate may initiate legislative or constitutional changes through the filing of formal petitions to be acted on by the legislature or the total electorate. The power of the people to propose bills and laws, and to enact or reject them at the polls, independent of legislative assembly. Hughes v. Bryan, Okl., 425 P.2d 952, 954. Not all state constitutions provide for initiative. See also Referendum.

In itinere /in ayitainri/. In eyre; on a journey or circuit. In old English law, the justices in itinere (or in eyre) were those who made a circuit through the kingdom once in seven years for the purposes of trying causes. In course of transportation; on the way; not delivered to the vendee. In this sense the phrase is equivalent to "in transitu."

In judgment. In a court of justice; in a seat of judgment.

In judiclis, minori etati succurritur /in jadis(h)iyas, manóray atéyday sakárödar/. In courts or judicial proceedings, infancy is aided or favored.

In judicio /in jadis(h)iyo/w/. In Roman law, in the course of an actual trial; before a judge (judex). A cause, during its preparatory stages, conducted before the prætor, was said to be in jure; in its second stage, after it had been sent to a judex for trial, it was said to be in judicio.

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis /in jadis(h)iyo/w nòn kréddar náysay járyédas/. In a trial, credence is given only to those who are sworn.

Injunction. A prohibitive, equitable remedy issued or granted by a court at the suit of a party complainant, directed to a party defendant in the action, or to a party made a defendant for that purpose, forbidding the latter to do some act, or to permit his servants or agents to do some act, which he is threatening or attempting to commit, or restraining him in the continuance thereof, such act being unjust and inequitable, injurious to the plaintiff, and not such as can be adequately redressed by an action at law. A judicial process operating in personam, and requiring person to whom it is directed to do or refrain from doing a particular thing. Gainsburg v. Dodge, 193 Ark. 473, 101 S.W.2d 178, 180. Fed.R.Civ.P. 65. See also Temporary restraining order.

Interlocutory injunction. Interlocutory injunctions are those issued at any time during the pendency of the litigation for the short-term purpose of preventing irreparable injury to the petitioner prior to the time that the court will be in a position to either grant or deny permanent relief on the merits. In accordance with their purpose, interlocutory injunctions are limited in duration to some specified length of time, or at the very outside, to the time of conclusion of the case on the merits. Within the category of interlocutory injunctions there are two distinct types which must be considered individually. The first is generally referred to as a preliminary injunction, and includes any interlocutory injunction granted after the respondent has been given notice and the opportunity to participate in a hearing on whether or not that injunction should issue. The second is generally referred to as a temporary restraining order, and differs from a preliminary injunction primarily in that it is issued ex parte, without notice or opportunity to be heard granted to the respondent. Temporary restraining orders supply the need for relief in those situations in which the petitioner will suffer irreparable injury if relief is not granted immediately, and time simply does not permit either the delivery of notice or the holding of a hearing. Fed.R.Civ.P. 65.

Mandatory injunction. One which (1) commands the defendant to do some positive act or particular thing; (2) prohibits him from refusing (or persisting in a refusal) to do or permit some act to which the plaintiff has a legal right; or (3) restrains the defendant from permitting his previous wrongful act to continue operative, thus virtually compelling him to undo it.

Permanent injunction. One intended to remain in force until the final termination of the particular suit.

Perpetual injunction. An injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time. Preliminary injunction. An injunction granted at the institution of a suit, to restrain the defendant from doing or continuing some act, the right to which is in dispute, and which may either be discharged or made perpetual, according to the result of the controversy, as soon as the rights of the parties are determined. Fed.R.Civ.P. 65.

Preventive injunction. One which prohibits the defendant from doing a particular act or commands him to refrain from it.

Prohibitory injunction. An order of a court in the form of a judgment which directs one not to do a certain thing; sometimes called a restraining order.

Provisional injunction. Another name for a preliminary or temporary injunction or an injunction pendente lite.

Restraining order. See Order; Restraining order; Temporary restraining order.
INJUNCTION

Temporary injunction. A preliminary or provisional injunction, or one granted pendente lite; as opposed to a final or perpetual injunction. See also Temporary restraining order.

In jure /in júry/. In law; according to law.

In the Roman practice, the procedure in an action was divided into two stages. The first was said to be in jure; it took place before the prætor, and included the formal and introductory part and the settlement of questions of law. The second stage was committed to the judex, and comprised the investigation and trial of the facts; this was said to be in judicio.

Injure. To violate the legal right of another or inflict an actionable wrong. To do harm to, damage, or impair. To hurt or wound, as the person; to impair the soundness of, as health. Ziolkowski v. Continental Casualty Co., 284 Ill.App. 505, 1 N.E.2d 410, 412. As applied to a building, "injure" means to materially impair or destroy any part of the existing structure. See Injury.

In jure alterius /in júry oltiřiys/. In another’s right.

In jure, non remota causa sed proxima spectatur /in júry, nón rámówda kóza séd próksama spektéýdar/. In law, the proximate, and not the remote, cause is regarded.

In jure proprio /in júry prówpriyow/. In one’s own right.

Injures graves /injariyz gréyvz/anžhýr gráv/. Fr. In French law, grievous insults or injuries, including personal insults and reproachful language, constituting a just cause of divorce.

Injuria /anžjúr(i)ja/. Lat. Injury; wrong; the privation or violation of right.

Injuria absque damno /anžjúr(i)ya ebéskwiýd diámnow/. Injury or wrong without damage. A wrong done, but from which no loss or damage results, and which, therefore, will not sustain an action.

Injuria fit ei cui convicium dictum est, vel de eo factum carmen famosum /anžjúr(i)ja fiy íyay k(ýuy)ay kanvis(h)(i)jam diktam ést, vél diy íyow fáktham kárman fámósom/. An injury is done to him of whom a reproachful thing is said, or concerning whom an infamous song is made.

Injuria illata judici, seu locum tenenti regis, videtur ipsi regi illata maxime si fiat in exercerentum officium /anžjúr(i)ya aléýda júwdasay, st(y)úw lóókam tándèntay ríyjas, vástiyar ípsay ríyaj aléýda máksmiay sáy fáyat in ezáréntam shésh(i)jam/. An injury offered to a judge, or person representing the king, is considered as offered to the king himself, especially if it be done in the exercise of his office.

Injuria non excusat injuriam /anžjúr(i)ja nón áks-kýúwzad anžjúr(i)jam/. One wrong does not justify another.

Injuria non presumitur /anžjúr(i)ya nón praz(y)úwmn-ádar/. Injury is not presumed. Cruel, oppressive, or tortious conduct will not be presumed.

Injuria propria non cadet in beneficium facientis /anžjúr(i)ja prówpriyam nón kýýdd an bénafish(i)jam fás(h)(i)ýéntas/. One’s own wrong shall not fall to the advantage of him that does it. A man will not be allowed to derive benefit from his own wrongful act.

Injuria servi dominum pertingit /anžjúr(i)ya sí:vAY doymam partinj/i/. The master is liable for injury done by his servant.

Injurious falsehood. In law of slander and libel, a defamation which does actual damage. See Libel; Slander.

Injurious words /anžjúr(i)yas wárdz/. Slander, or libelous words. See Libel; Slander.

Injury. Any wrong or damage done to another, either in his person, rights, reputation, or property. The invasion of any legally protected interest of another. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 7.

Absolute injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Accidental injury. A bodily injury by accident.

Within worker's compensation acts, one which occurs in the course of the employment, unexpectedly, and without the affirmative act or design of the employee; it being something which is unforeseen and not expected by the person to whom it happens. Any injury to an employee in the course of his employment due to any occurrence referable to a definite time, and of the happening of which he can give notice to his employer, regardless of whether the injury is a visible hurt from external force, or disease or infection induced by sudden and catastrophic exposure. Lerner v. Rump Bros., 212 App.Div. 747, 209 N.Y.S. 698, 701. The term is to receive a broad and liberal construction with a view to compensating injured employees where injury resulted through some accidental means, was unexpected and undesigned and may be the result of mere mischance or miscalculation as to effect of voluntary action. It includes an accident causing injury to the physical structure of the body, notwithstanding a natural weakness predisposing to injury. The words indicate, not so much the existence of an accident, but rather the idea that the injury was unexpected or unintended.

See also Accident; Compensable injury; Continuous injury; Damages; Disability; Great bodily injury; Harm; Loss; Malicious injury; Pain and suffering; Pecuniary injury.

Bodily injury. Physical pain, illness or any impairment of physical condition. “Serious bodily injury” means bodily injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious, permanent disfigurement, or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ. Model Penal Code, § 210.0.

Civil injury. Injuries to person or property, resulting from a breach of contract, delict, or criminal offense, which may be redressed by means of a civil action. An infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals considered as individuals.

Irreparable injury. This phrase does not mean such an injury as is beyond the possibility of repair, or beyond possible compensation in damages, or necessarily great damage, but includes an injury, whether great or small, which ought not to be submitted to, on the one hand, or inflicted, on the other; and which, because it is so large or so small, or is of such constant and frequent occurrence, or because no certain pecuniary standard exists for the measurement of damages, cannot receive reasonable redress in a court of law. Wrongs of a repeated and continuing character, or which occasion damages that are estimated only by conjecture, and not by any accurate standard, are included. The remedy for such is commonly in the nature of injunctive relief. "Irreparable injury" justifying an injunction is that which cannot be adequately compensated in damages or for which damages cannot be compensable in money. Caffery v. Powell, La.App., 320 So.2d 223, 226. Contrast Reparable injury, infra.

Permanent injury. An injury that, according to every reasonable probability, will continue throughout the remainder of one's life.

Personal injury. In a narrow sense, a hurt or damage done to a man's person, such as a cut or bruise, a broken limb, or the like, as distinguished from an injury to his property or his reputation. The phrase is chiefly used in this connection with actions of tort for negligence and under worker's compensation statutes. But the term is also used (chiefly in statutes) in a much wider sense, and as including any injury which is an invasion of personal rights, and in this signification it may include such injuries to the person as libel or slander, criminal conversation, malicious prosecution, false imprisonment, and mental suffering. Gray v. Wallace, 319 S.W.2d 582.

In worker's compensation acts, "personal injury" means any harm or damage to the health of an employee, however caused, whether by accident, disease, or otherwise, which arises in the course of and out of his employment, and incapacitates him in whole or in part. The occurrence of disability or impairment. Such includes the aggravation of a preexisting injury.

Private injuries. Infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals considered as individuals.

Public injuries. Breaches and violations of rights and duties which affect the whole community as a community.

Real injury. A real injury is inflicted by any act by which a person's honor or dignity is affected.

Relative injuries. Injuries to those rights which a person possesses in relation to the person who is immediately affected by the wrongful act done.

Reparable injury. The general principle is that an injury, the damage from which is merely in the nature of pecuniary loss, and can be exactly and fully repaired by compensation in money, is a "reparable injury". Contrast Irreparable injury, supra.

Verbal injury. See Libel; Slander.

Injustice. The withholding or denial of justice. In law, almost invariably applied to the act, fault, or omission of a court, as distinguished from that of an individual. "Fraud" is deception practiced by the party; "injustice" is the fault or error of the court. They are not equivalent words in substance, or in a statute authorizing a new trial on a showing of fraud or injustice. Fraud is always the result of contrivance and deception; injustice may be done by the negligence, mistake, or omission of the court itself. Silvey v. U. S., 7 Ct.Cl. 305, 324.

Injustum est, nisi tota lege inspecta, de una aliqua ejus particula proposita judicare vel respondere /injustam est, náysay tówdá líjíisy anşpéká, diy yúwna țiékwa líjías partík(y)álá prápóžáda jüwádákéryí vél respondírý/. It is unjust to decide or respond to any particular part of a law without examining the whole of the law.

In jus vocare /in jíš wówkéry//. To call, cite, or summon to court. In jus vocando, summoning to court.

In kind. Of the same species or category. In the same kind, class, or genus. A loan is returned "in kind" when not the identical article, but one corresponding and equivalent to it, is given to the lender. See Distribution in kind; In generis; Like-kind exchange.

Inlagare /inlagéryí/. In old English law, to restore to protection of law. To restore a man from the condition of outlawry. Opposed to utlagare.

Inlagation /inlagéýshán/. Restoration to the protection of law. Restoration from a condition of outlawry.

Inlagh /ínól/. A person within the law's protection; contrary to utlagh, an outlaw.

Inland. Within a country, state or territory; within the interior part of a land mass.

In old English law, inland was used for the demesne (q.v.) of a manor; that part which lay next or most convenient for the lord's mansion-house, as within the view thereof, and which, therefore, he kept in his own hands for support of his family and for hospitality; in distinction from outland or utland, which was the portion let out to tenants.

Inland bill of exchange. A bill of which both the drawer and drawee reside within the same state or country. Otherwise called a "domestic bill," and distinguished from a "foreign bill." See Bill.

Inland navigation. Within the meaning of the legislation of congress upon the subject, this phrase means navigation upon inland waters (q.v.).

Inland trade. Trade wholly carried on at home; as distinguished from foreign commerce. See Commerce.

Inland waters. Such waters as canals, lakes, rivers, watercourses, inlets and bays, within, or partly within, the United States, exclusive of the open sea, though the water in question may open or empty into the ocean. United States v. Steam Vessels of War, 106 U.S. 607, 1 S.Ct. 539, 27 L.Ed. 286.

Inlantal, inlantale /inlental, inlantéýliy/. Desmesne or inland, opposed to delantal, or land tenanted.

Inlaughe /inló/. Sax. In old English law, under the law (sub lege), in a frank-pledge, or decennary.

Inlaw. To place under the protection of the law.

In law. In the intentment, contemplation, or inference of the law; implied or inferred by law; existing in law or by force of law. See In fact.
In actions of slander, it was formerly the rule that, if the words alleged would admit of two constructions, they should be taken in the less injurious and defamatory sense, or in mitiori sensu.

In modum assisa /in mówdam ssásyzi/. In the manner or form of an assize. In modum jurate, in manner of a jury.

In mora /in móra/. In default; literally, in delay. In the civil law, a borrower who omits or refuses to return the thing loaned at the proper time is said to be in mora.

In mortua manu /in mórchwu mánuyuw/. Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civiliter mortui.

Inn. A public lodging establishment. A lodging house where all who conduct themselves properly, and who are able and ready to pay for their entertainment, are received, if there is accommodation for them, and who, while there, are supplied at a reasonable charge with their meals, their lodging, and such services and attention as are necessarily incident to the use of the house as a temporary home. A place where the public will be received and accommodations provided to guests for compensation. Edwards v. City of Los Angeles, 48 Cal.App.2d 62, 119 P.2d 370, 373, 374. A hotel, tavern, motel, or hostel.

Innamium /ínénýmiam/. In old English law, a pledge.

Innavigability. In insurance law, the condition of being innavigable (q.v.). The term is also applied to the condition of streams which are not large enough or deep enough, or are otherwise unsuited, for navigation.

Innavigable. As applied to streams, not capable of or suitable for navigation; impassable by ships or vessels. As applied to vessels in the law of marine insurance, it means unfit for navigation; so damaged by misadventures at sea as to be no longer capable of making a voyage.

Inner barrister. A serjeant or king’s counsel, in England, who is admitted to plead within the bar.

Inns. In old records, lands recovered from the sea by draining and banking.

Innkeeper. One who keeps an inn, hotel, motel or house for the lodging and entertainment of travelers.

Innocence. The absence of guilt. See also Presumption of innocence.

Innocent. Free from guilt; acting in good faith and without knowledge of incriminatory circumstances, or of defects or objections.

Innocent agent. In criminal law, one who, being ignorant of any unlawful intent on the part of his principal, is merely the instrument of the guilty party in committing an offense; one who does an unlawful act at the solicitation or request of another, but who, from defect of understanding or ignorance of the inculpatory facts, incurs no legal guilt.
Innocent conveyances. A technical term of the old English law of conveyancing, used to designate such conveyances as may be made by a leasehold tenant without working a forfeiture. These are said to be lease and re-lease, bargain and sale, and, in case of a life-tenant, a covenant to stand seised.

Innocent purchaser. One who, by an honest contract or agreement, purchases property or acquires an interest therein without knowledge of any infirmity in the title of the seller. Treit v. Oregon Auto. Ins. Co., 262 Or. 549, 499 P.2d 335, 336. Person is "innocent purchaser" when he purchases without notice, actual or constructive, of any infirmity and pays valuable consideration and acts in good faith. Morehead v. Harris, 262 N.C. 330, 137 S.E.2d 174, 182, 185. See also Good faith purchaser.

Innocent trespass. A trespass to land, committed, not recklessly, but through inadvertence or mistake, or in good faith, under an honest belief that the trespasser was acting within his legal rights.

Innocent trespasser. One who enters another's land unlawfully, but inadvertently or unintentionally, or in the honest, reasonable belief of his own right so to do, and removes sand or other material therefrom, is an "innocent trespasser." Restatement, Second, Torts, § 164.

Innominate /inômaneyt/. In the civil law, not named or classed; belonging to no specific class; ranking under a general head. A term applied to those contracts for which no certain or precise remedy was appointed, but a general action on the case only.

Innominate contracts. Literally, are the "unclassified" contracts of Roman law. They are contracts which are neither re, verbis, litteris, nor consensu simply, but some mixture of or variation upon two or more of such contracts. They are principally the contracts of permutatio, de restimato, precarium, and transactio.

In nomine Dei, Amen /in nómaniy diyay, êymén/. In the name of God, Amen. A solemn introduction, generally used in wills and many other instruments. The translation is often used in wills at the present day.

Innotescimus /instéssamsas/. Lat. We make known. A term formerly applied to letters patent, derived from the emphatic word at the conclusion of the Latin forms. It was a species of exemplification of charters or other instruments not of record.

In novo casu, novum remedium apponendum est /in nówovw kéys(y)uw, nóvovam ramlyd(li)ym ëpanéndam ëst/. A new remedy is to be applied to a new case.

Innoxiare /anôks(h)iýeryy/. In old English law, to purge one of a fault and make him innocent.

Inns of Chancery. So called because anciently inhabited by such clerks as chiefly studied the framing of writs, which regularly belonged to the cursitors, who were officers of the Court of Chancery. There were nine of them,—Clement's, Clifford's, and Lyon's Inn; Furnival's, Thavies', and Symond's Inn; New Inn; and Barnard's and Staples' Inn. These were formerly preparatory colleges for students, and many entered them before they were admitted into the inns of court. They consist chiefly of solicitors, and possess corporate property, hall, chambers, etc., but perform no public functions like the inns of court.

Inns of Court. These are certain private unincorporated associations, in the nature of collegiate houses, located in London, and invested with the exclusive privilege of calling men to the bar: that is, conferring the rank or degree of a barrister. They were founded probably about the beginning of the fourteenth century. The principal inns of court are the Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. (The two former originally belonged to the Knights Templar, the two latter to the earls of Lincoln and Gray respectively.) These bodies now have a "common council of legal education," for giving lectures and holding examinations. The inns of chancery, distinguishable from the foregoing, but generally classed with them under the general name, are the buildings known as "Clifford's Inn," "Clement's Inn," "New Inn," "Staples' Inn," and "Barnard's Inn." They were formerly a sort of collegiate houses in which law students learned the elements of law before being admitted into the inns of court, but they have long ceased to occupy that position. The Inns of Court (governed by officers called "benches") hold the exclusive privilege of conferring the degree of barrister-at-law which is required to practice as an advocate or counsel in the superior courts.

In nubibus /in n(y)uwbasas/. In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in mare, in terrâ, vel in custodia legis, in the air, sea, or earth, or in the custody of the law. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in gremio legis.

Innuendo /inyuwendow/. This Latin word (commonly translated "meaning") was the technical beginning of that clause in a declaration or indictment for slander or libel in which the meaning of the alleged libelous words was explained, or the application of the language charged to the plaintiff was pointed out; hence it gave its name to the whole clause. Indirect or subtle implication in words or expression, usually derogatory.

An "innuendo" in pleading in libel action is a statement by plaintiff of construction which he puts upon words which are alleged to be libelous and which meaning he will induce jury to adopt at trial. Its function is to set a meaning upon words or language of doubtful or ambiguous import which alone would not be actionable.

The word is also used (though more rarely) in other species of pleadings, to introduce an explanation of a preceding word, charge, or averment. Guide Pub. Co. v. Futrell, 175 Va. 77, 7 S.E.2d 133, 138.

In nullius bonis /in nálâyás bownas/. Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure-trove and wreck were anciently considered.

In nullo est erratum /in nálow est eréydam/. In nothing is there error. The name of the common plea or joinder in error, denying the existence of error in the record or proceedings; which is in the nature of a demurrer, and at once refers the matter of law arising thereon to the judgment of the court.
In obscura voluntate manumittentis, favendum est libertate /in abskyûras, inspasay salûriy kwôd vênârasîûysîy asë, òt kwôd plarâmkwivy fâyray sowliat/. In obscure cases, we usually look at what is most probable, or what most commonly happens.

In obscuris, inspici solere quod verisimilius est, aut quod pl;àmy;sìuni; y ûray

In odium spoliatoris omnia prîzesumuntur /in kwôd mînsam ëst sëkwamar/. In obscure or doubtful cases, we follow that which is the least.

In odium spoliatoris /in ówd(i)yam spôw(l)i yatôras/. In hatred of a despoiler, robber, or wrongdoer.

In odium spoliatoris omnia prásununtur /in ówd(i)yam spôw(l)i yatôras omniy priyz(y)amântar/. To the prejudice (in condemnation) of a despoiler all things are presumed; every presumption is made against a wrongdoer.

Inofficiosum /inafi(y)s(h)yôwsm/. In the civil law, inofficious, contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by quëreâla inofficiois testimânti.

Inofficious testament /inafiyas têstrant/. A will not in accordance with the testator's natural affection and moral duties. But particularly, in the civil law, a will which deprives the heirs of that portion of the estate to which they law entitles them, and of which they cannot legally be disinherited. A testament contrary to the natural duty of the parent, because it totally disinherited the child, without expressly giving the reason therefor.

Inofficiocidad /inowfisîyóisyôd/. In Spanish law, everything done contrary to a duty or obligation assumed, as well as in opposition to the piety and affection dictated by nature: inúfsiosum diciitur id omne quod contra pietatis officium factum est. The term applies especially to testaments, donations, dower, etc., which may be either revoked or reduced when they affect injuriously the rights of creditors or heirs.

In omni actione ubi dús cumcorrunt districctiones, vide licet, in rem et in personam, illa districtio tenenda est que magis timetur et magis ligat /in omnay âkshiyôwniû yûwbsy d(i)yûwi kânkanrânt distrikshiyôwniy, vâydiylisad in rém ët in parsôwnam, ilâ distrikshyow tanêndâ êst kwîy mëyjas tamiyôd êt mëyjôs ligat/. In every action where two distresses concur, that is, in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreaded, and which binds most firmly.

In omnibus /in omnabas/. In all things; on all points. “A case parallel in omnibus.”

In omnibus obligationibus in quibus dies non ponitur, præsenti die debetur /in omnabas ôblâgyshiyôwnabas in kwôbas dâyiyôs nîn pôwmaâr, praûzentay dâyîyô dôstr/ /in all obligations in which a date is not put, the debt is due on the present day; the liability accrues immediately.

In omnibus [fere] penalibus judicilis, et ëstati et imprudentie succurritur /in omnabas (fîrîy) panûlûbâs jadishiyas, ëd stéday âd imûruwdênshiy(i)y skàbhrâdâr/. In nearly all penal judgments, immaturity of age and imbecility of mind are favored.

In omnibus quidem, maxime tamen in jure, æquitas spectanda sit /in omnabas kwôydam mëksamiy têymân in jûriy, ëkwyôwes spêkêndô sl/. In all things, but especially in law, equity is to be regarded.

In omni re nascitur res quâ ipsam rem exterminat /in omnay riy nûsàdr riy kwîy ipsâm rêm skàbhrâman/. In everything there arises a thing which destroys the thing itself. Everything contains the element of its own destruction.

Inops consilli /inops kan(t)sîliy/ //Lat. Destitute of counsel; without legal counsel. A term applied to the acts or condition of one acting without legal advice, as a testator drafting his own will.

Inordinatus /inûrdûnayôdâs/. An intestate.

In pacato solo /in pâkyôwôw sôlow/. In a country which is at peace.

In pace Dei et regis /in pêysiy diayê rìyjâs/. In the peace of God and the king. Formal words in old appeals of murder.

In pais /in pêy(s)/>. This phrase, as applied to a legal transaction, primarily means that it has taken place without legal proceedings. Thus a widow was said to make a request in pais for her dower when she simply applied to the heir without issuing a writ. So conveyances are divided into those by matter of record and those by matter in pais. In some cases, however, “matters in pais” are opposed not only to “matters of record,” but also to “matters in writing,” i.e., deeds, as where estoppel by deed is distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais. See also Pais.

In pais, estoppel /astôpûl in pêy(s)/>. An estoppel not arising from deed or record or written contract. The doctrine is that a person may be precluded by his act or conduct or silence, when it is his duty to speak, from asserting a right which he otherwise would have had. Marshall v. Wilson, 175 Or. 506, 154 P.2d 547, 551. The effect of a party's voluntary conduct whereby, he is precluded from asserting rights as against another person who has in good faith relied upon such conduct and has been led thereby to change his condition for the worse and who acquires some corresponding right of property or contract. Oswego Falls Corporation v. City of Fulton, 148 Misc. 170, 265 N.Y.S. 436. Elements or fundamentals of “estoppel in pais” include admission, statement, or act inconsistent with claim afterwards asserted, National Match Co. v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 227 Mo.App. 1115, 58 S.W.2d 75; change of position to loss or injury of party claiming estoppel, Malloy v. City of Chicago, 369 Ill. 97, 15 N.E.2d 861, 865; circumstances such that party estopped knew or should have known facts to be otherwise or pretended to know facts which he did not know; false representation or concealment of material facts, Pickens v. Maryland Casualty Co., 141 Neb. 105, 2 N.W.2d 593, 596; inducement to alter position; intention that false representation or concealment be acted on, Malloy v. City of Chicago, 369 Ill. 97, 15 N.E.2d 861, 865; Peterson v. City of Parsons, 139 Kan. 701, 33 P.2d 715, 720; knowledge of facts, by party to be estopped, Darling Stores v. Fidelity-Bankers Trust Co., 178 Tenn. 165, 156 S.W.2d 419, 424; Peterson v. City of Parsons, 139 Kan. 701, 33 P.2d 715, 720; lack of knowledge or means of knowledge of party claiming estoppel, Sinclair Refining Co. v. Jenkins Petroleum Process Co., C.C.A.Me., 99 F.2d 9, 13, 14; misleading of one person by another person to his prejudice or injury, Garmon v. Davis, 63 Ga.App. 815, 12 S.E.2d 209, 211; Current News Features v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., C.C.A.S.D., 99 F.2d 9, 13, 14; misleading of one person by another person to his prejudice or injury, Garmon v. Davis, 63 Ga.App. 815, 12 S.E.2d 209, 211; ignorance or lack of knowledge or means of knowledge of party claiming estoppel, City of St. Louis v. Mississippi River Fuel Corporation, D.C.Mo., 57 F.Supp. 549, 554; In re Bremer's Estate, 141 Neb. 251, 3 N.W.2d 419, 424; reliance by one party on belief induced by other party, Strand v. State, 16 Wash.2d 107, 132 P.2d 1011, 1016.

See also Equitable estoppel.

In paper. In old English law, a term formerly applied to the proceedings in a cause before the record was made up. Probably from the circumstance of the record being always on parchment. The opposite of "on record."

In pari causa /in pārēy kōzā/"pāry*"/. In an equal cause. In a cause where the parties on each side have equal rights.

In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet /in pārēy kōzā pāzēzār pōwsh(i)jār hābrāy dēbāt/". In an equal cause he who has the possession should be preferred.

In pari delicto /in pārēy daliktw(i)"pāry*/. In equal fault; equally culpable or criminal; in a case of equal fault or guilt. A person who is in pari delicto with another differs from a particeps criminis in this, that the former term always includes the latter, but the latter does not always include the former.

In pari delicto potior est conditionis possidentis [defendenti] /in pārēy daliktw(i)jār ēst kandish(i)yjow pōsādēntās/"defendéntas"/. In a case of equal or mutual fault [between two parties] the condition of the party in possession [or defending] is the better one. Where each party is equally in fault, the fault favors him who is actually in possession. Where the fault is mutual, the law will leave the case as it finds it.

In pari materia /in pārēy māt(i)jāy/". Upon the same matter or subject. Statutes in pari materia are to be construed together. "Statutes in pari materia" are those relating to the same person or thing or having a common purpose. Undercoffler v. L. C. Robinson & Sons, Inc., 111 Ga.App. 411, 141 S.E.2d 847, 849.

In patiendo /in pāshiyēndōw/. In suffering, permitting, or allowing.

In pectore judicis /in pēktarīy jūwdsās/". In the breast of the judge. A phrase applied to a judgment.
In potestate parentis /in pówdstétdiy páréntas/. In the power of a parent. 2 Bl.Comm. 498.

In premisorum fidem /in prémisórám fáydam/. In confirmation or attestation of the premises. A notarial phrase.

In preparatoriis ad judicium favetur actori /in prépáratóríyys áé juwdísh(y)am fávídár áektórár/. In things preceding judgment the plaintiff is favored.

In prémis /in préndar/. L. Fr. In taking. A term applied to such incorporeal hereditaments as a party entitled to them was to take for himself; such as common. 3 Bl.Comm. 15. See In render.

In pretio emptionis et venditionis, naturaliter licet contrahtentibus se circunvenire /in présh(y)ow ém(p)-sh(y)ównas ét vandishiyównus, nácharéyldar láyadt kontrahténatbas sly sárkmánáyriy/. In the price of buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to overreach each other.

In prímis /in práymas/imprér/. In the first place. A phrase used in argument.

In principió /in prínsip(i)yow/. At the beginning.

In promptu /in prómp(t)ú(y)ow/imprér/. In readiness; at hand. Usually written impromptu.

In propria causa nemo judex /in prówpriyá kózá nýmow jùwdaks/. No one can judge in his own cause.

In propria persona /in prówpriyá parsówna/. In one's own proper person. It was formerly a rule in pleading that pleas to the jurisdiction of the court must be plead in propria persona, because if pleaded by attorney they admit the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction. See Pro se.

Inquest. The inquiry by a coroner or medical examiner, sometimes with the aid of a jury, into the manner of the death of any one who has been slain, or has died suddenly or by violence or in prison.

A body of men appointed by law to inquire into certain matters. The grand jury is sometimes called the “grand inquest.” The judicial inquiry made by a jury summoned for the purpose is called an “inquest.” The finding of such men, upon an investigation, is also called an “inquest.”

See also Inquisition.

Coroner’s inquest. See Coroner.

Inquest, arrest of. See Arrest.

Inquest jury. See Jury.

Inquest of office. In old English practice, an inquiry made by the king’s (or the queen’s) officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ sent to them for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels; as to inquire whether the king’s tenant for life died seised, whereby the reversion accrues to the king; whether A., who held immediately of the crown, died without heir, in which case the lands belong to the king by escheat; whether B. be attained of treason, whereby his estate is forfeited to the crown; whether C., who has purchased land, be an alien, which is another cause of forfeiture, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 258. These inquests of office were most frequent in practice during the continuance of the military tenures; and were devised by law as an authentic means to give the king his right by solemn matter of record. Id. 258, 259. Sometimes simply termed “office,” as in the phrase “office found” (q.v.). Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Mingus, 165 U.S. 413, 17 S.Ct. 348, 41 L.Ed. 770.

Inquisition /inkwážishan/. An inquiry or inquest; particularly, an investigation of certain facts made by a sheriff, together with a jury impaneled by him for the purpose. The instrument of writing on which their decision is made is also called an inquisition. In its broadest sense, “inquisition,” includes any judicial inquiry. See Inquest.
Inquisition after death. See Inquest; Inquisito.

Inquisitor /ankwɪˈzaɪdər/. A designation of sheriffs, coroners super visum corporis, and the like, who have power to inquire into certain matters.

In Ecclesiastical law, the name of an officer who is authorized to inquire into heresies, and the like, and to punish them. A judge.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus /in kwó kwís dálkňkwat, in iyóu diy júrií ýst pyúwni-yénda/. In whatever thing one offends, in that is he rightfully to be punished. The punishment shall have relation to the nature of the offense.

In re /in ri/. In the affair; in the matter of; concerning; regarding. This is the usual method of entitling a judicial proceeding in which there are not adversary parties, but merely some res concerning which judicial action is to be taken, such as a bankrupt's estate, an estate in the probate court, a proposed public highway, etc. It is also sometimes used as a designation of a proceeding where one party makes an application on his own behalf, but such proceedings are more usually entitled "Ex parte ____!"

In rebus /in riýbas/. (Lat.) In things, cases, or matters.

In rebus manifestis, errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda. "In clear things, though injurious to things, an extension of a statute should sometimes be made.

In rebus que sunt favorabilia anime, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statuti /in riýbas kwíy sánt févyarbil(y)á čémiý, kwámwás sánt dənmnoswá riýbas, fáyod álekýwándow skéntš(h)ýow stayúwyåd/. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to things, an extension of a statute should sometimes be made.

In re communi melior est conditio prohibentis /in riý kamýwúwny mýylyýyar ýst kándish(h)ýow prów-habentas/. In common property the condition of the one prohibiting is the better. In other words, either co-owner has a right of veto against the acts of the other. Gulf Refining Co. of Louisiana v. Carroll, 145 La. 299, 82 So. 277, 279.

In re communi neminem dominorum jure facere quicquam, invito altero, posse /in riý kamýwūwny némam dámnórám júrií fésaríi kwámkwan, án váýdów dítarów, pósíy/. One co-proprietor can exercise no authority over the common property against the will of the other. In other words, either co-owner has a right of veto against the acts of the other.

In re communi potior est conditio prohibentis /in riý kamýwúwny póws(h)ýar ýst kándish(h)ýow prów-habentas/. In a partnership the condition of one who forbids is more favorable.

In re dubia, benigniorum interpretationem sequi, non minus justius est quam tutius /in riý d(y)úwbíya, báningýóram antárpratéshiyóówm sékway, nón máýnas jást(ly)yas ýst kwâm týúwsh(h)ýas/. In a doubtful matter, to follow the more liberal interpretation is not less the juster than the safer course.

In re dubia, magis inficiatio quam affirmatio intelligenda /in riý d(y)úwbíya, mèýyas snfísh(h)íyèysh(h)ýow kwám áfárme sh(h)ýow antálshjénda/. In a doubtful matter, the denial or negative is to be understood [or regarded], rather than the affirmative.

In regard to /in ragár’d túw/. Concerning; relating to; in respect of; with respect to; about. Hart v. Hart, 181 Iowa 527, 164 N.W. 849, 850.

In re lupanari, testes lupanares admittentur /in riý k(y)úwbánéray, téstitýz (k)yúwbónéryýz ámdmaténtar/. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses.

In rem /in rém/. A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

An "action in rem" is a proceeding that takes no cognizance of owner but determines right in specific property against all of the world, equally binding on everyone. Flesch v. Circle City Excavating & Rental Corp., 137 Ind.App. 695, 210 N.E.2d 865, 868. It is true that, in a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of property, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. In the strict sense of the term, a proceeding "in rem" is one which is taken directly against property or one which is brought to enforce a right in the thing itself.

Actions in which the court is required to have control of the thing or object and in which an adjudication is made as to the object which binds the whole world and not simply the interests of the parties to the proceeding. Flesch v. Circle City Excavating & Rental Corp., 137 Ind.App. 695, 210 N.E.2d 865.

Judgment in rem. See that title.

Quasi in rem. A term applied to proceedings which are not strictly and purely in rem, but are brought against the defendant personally, though the real object is to deal with particular property or subject property to the discharge of claims asserted; for example, foreign attachment, or proceedings to foreclose a mortgage, remove a cloud from title, or effect a partition. Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U.S. 185, 7 S.Ct. 165, 100 L.Ed. 372. An action in which the basis of jurisdiction is the defendant's interest in property, real or personal, which is within the court's power, as distinguished from in rem jurisdiction in which the court exercises power over the property itself, not simply the defendant's interest therein.

In rem actio est per quam rem nostram que ab alió possidetur petimus, et semper adversus eum est qui rem possidet. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property.

In rem jurisdiction. Power over a thing possessed by a court which allows it to seize and hold the object for some legal purpose; e.g. boat on which narcotics are found. Calero Toledo v. Pearson Yacht Leasing Co., 416 U.S. 663, 94 S.Ct. 2080, 40 L.Ed.2d 452. See also Jurisdiction in rem; Jurisdiction quasi in rem.

In rem mortgage. Foreclosure of mortgage is in the nature of an in rem proceeding but it approximates more closely a quasi in rem action because it is directed to the extinguishment of the rights of mortgagor as well as all others.

In render. A thing is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant; as rent. It is said to lie in prender when it consists in the right in the lord or other person to take something. See In prender.

In re pari potiorem causam esse prohibentis constat. In a thing equally shared [by several] it is clear that the party refusing [to permit the use of it] has the better cause. A maxim applied to partnerships, where one partner has a right to withhold his assent to the acts of his copartner.

In re propria iniquum admodum est ab aliqui licentiam tribuere sententiam. It is extremely unjust that any one should be judge in his own cause.

In repubica maxime conservanda sunt jura belli. Jurisdiction in rem; Jurisdiction quasi in rem.

In respect of decedent. See Income in respect of decedent.

In restitutionem, non in panem hares succedit. The heir succeeds to the estate, not to the penalty. An heir may be compelled to make restitution of a sum unlawfully appropriated by the ancestor, but is not answerable criminally, as for a penalty.

In restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est. The most benign interpretation is to be made in restitutions.

Inroll. A form of "enroll," used in the old books. See Enroll.

Inrollment. See Enroll.

I.N.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Insane delusion. An "insane delusion" is a conception of a disordered mind which imagines facts to exist of which there is no evidence and belief in which is adhered to against all evidence and argument to contrary, and which cannot be accounted for on any reasonable hypothesis. In re Nigro's Estate, 243 Cal. App.2d 152, 52 Cal.Rptr. 128, 133.

Insanity. The term is a social and legal term rather than a medical one, and indicates a condition which renders the affected person unfit to enjoy liberty of action because of the unreliability of his behavior with concomitant danger to himself and others. The term is more or less synonymous with mental illness or psychosis. In law, the term is used to denote that degree of mental illness which negates the individual's legal responsibility or capacity.

Insanity as Defense to Crime

There are various tests used by the courts to determine criminal responsibility, or lack thereof, of a defendant who asserts the defense that he or she was insane at the time of the crime. The test as provided in Section 4.01 of the Model Penal Code is as follows: “A person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect he lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the criminality (wrongfulness) of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law.” This test, as defined by the American Law Institute, has been adopted (sometimes with slight modifications) by a number of states and also in the various Federal Courts of Appeal.

If a defendant intends to rely upon the defense of insanity at the time of the alleged crime, he is required to notify the attorney for the government of such intention. Fed.R.Crim.P. 12.2.

See also Automatism; Diminished responsibility doctrine; Durham rule; Irresistible impulse; M'Naghten Rule; and Right and wrong test, for various other tests used by courts to determine criminal responsibility of defendant who asserts insanity defense. See also Competency; Incompetency; Insane delusion; Lucid interval; Lunacy; Melancholia; Sanity hearing; Substantial capacity; Uncontrollable impulse.

Insanity as Affecting Capacity

Capacity to make a will includes an intelligent understanding of the testator's property, its extent and items, and of the nature of the act he is about to perform, together with a clear understanding and purpose as to the manner of its distribution and the persons who are to receive it. Lacking these, the testator is not mentally competent. The presence of insane delusions is not inconsistent with testamentary capacity, if they are of such a nature that they cannot reasonably be supposed to have affected the dispositions made by the will; and the same is true of the various forms of monomania and of all kinds of eccentricity and personal idiosyncrasy. But imbecility, senile dementia, and all forms of systematized mania which affect the understanding and judgment generally disable the person from making a valid will. To constitute "senile dementia," incapacitating one to make a will, there must be such a failure of the mind as to deprive the testator of intelligent action. See also Capacity.
As a ground for voiding or annulling a contract or conveyance, insanity does not mean a total deprivation of reason, but an inability, from defect of perception, memory, and judgment, to do the act in question or to understand its nature and consequences. The insanity must have entered into and induced the particular contract or conveyance; it must appear that it was not the act of the free and untrammeled mind, and that on account of the diseased condition of the mind the person entered into a contract or made a conveyance which he would not have made if he had been in the possession of his reason.

Most state statutes provide for annulment of a marriage because of insanity. Insanity sufficient to justify the annulment of a marriage means such a want of understanding at the time of the marriage as to render the party incapable of assenting to the contract of marriage. Also, under most state statutes, insanity, if sufficient in degree and/or duration, constitutes a ground for divorce. In general, the same degree of mental capacity which enables a person to make a valid deed or will is sufficient to enable him to marry.

As a ground for restraining the personal liberty of the person (i.e. commitment), it may be said in general that the form of insanity from which he suffers should be such as to make his going at large a source of danger to himself or to others, though this matter is largely regulated by statute, and in many places the law permits the commitment of persons whose insanity does not manifest itself in homicidal or other destructive forms of mania, but who are incapable of caring for themselves and their property or who are simply fit subjects for treatment in hospitals and other institutions specially designed for the care of such patients. See Commitment.

To constitute insanity such as will authorize the appointment of a guardian or conservator, there must be such a deprivation of reason and judgment as to render him incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life; a want of sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business and to take care of and manage his property and affairs.

Insanity as a plea or proceeding to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations means practically the same thing as in relation to the appointment of a guardian. On the one hand, it does not require a total deprivation of reason or absence of understanding. On the other hand, it does not include mere weakness of mind short of imbecility. It means such a degree of derangement as renders the subject incapable of understanding the nature of the particular affair and his rights and remedies in regard to it and incapable of taking discreet and intelligent action. The time of sanity required in order to allow the statute to begin to run is such as will enable the party to examine his affairs and institute an action, and is for the jury.

There are a few other legal rights or relations into which the question of insanity enters, such as the capacity of a witness or of a voter; but they are governed by the same general principles. The test is capacity to understand and appreciate the nature of the particular act and to exercise intelligence in its performance. A witness must understand the nature and purpose of an oath and have enough intelligence and memory to relate correctly the facts within his knowledge. So a voter must understand the nature of the act to be performed and be able to make an intelligent choice of candidates. In either case, eccentricity, feeble-mindedness not amounting to imbecility, or insane delusions which do not affect the matter in hand, do not disqualify. District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U.S. 519, 2 S.Ct. 840, 27 L.Ed. 618.

Insanus est qui, abjecta ratione, omnia cum impetu et furore facit /inséynas est kwáb réyshiówniy ômníya ká m'páduw ét fýóróí féysat/. He is insane who, reason being thrown away, does everything with violence and rage.

In satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est /in sàdísfækshiównabas nón pàrmíddar àmpliýas fáýsray kwém semál fáktam est/. In payments, more must not be received than has been received once for all.

Inscribed. Entered (e.g. a name) on a list or in a register. Type of government bonds, such as Series E, whose records are kept by the Federal Reserve Bank rather than by the Treasury Dept.

Inscribere /inskribarí/. Lat. In the civil law, to subscribe an accusation. To bind one's self, in case of failure to prove an accusation, to suffer the same punishment which the accused would have suffered had he been proved guilty.

Inscriptio /inskripsh(i)y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a written accusation in which the accuser undertakes to suffer the punishment appropriate to the offense charged, if the accused is able to clear himself of the accusation.

Inscription. In evidence, anything written or engraved upon a metallic or other solid substance, intended for great durability; as upon a tombstone, pillar, tablet, medal, ring, etc.

The entry of a mortgage, lien, or other document at large in a book of public records; corresponding to “recording” or “registration.”

In civil law, an engagement which a person who makes a solemn accusation of a crime against another enters into that he will suffer the same punishment, if he has accused the other falsely, which would have been inflicted upon him had he been guilty.

Inscriptiones /inskripshiówniy/. The name given by the old English law to any written instrument by which anything was granted.

Insecure. Unsafe and dangerous. Not secure or safe; not certain. Impairment or loss of security. See Acceleration clause; Insecurity clause.

Insecurity clause. Provision in contract that allows a creditor to make an entire debt come due if there is good reason to believe that the debtor cannot or will not pay. See also Acceleration clause.

In separali /in sèpéréylay/. In several; in severalty.

Insider. With respect to federal regulation of purchase and sale of securities, refers to anyone who has knowledge of facts not available to the general public. 15 U.S.C.A. § 78p(a). See also Insider information; Insider reports; Insider trading; Rule 10b–5; Short swing profits; Tippees.
Insider information. Information about a company's financial situation that is obtained before the public obtains it. True inside information is usually only known by corporate officials or other "insiders." See also Insider.

Insider reports. Monthly reports required by Securities and Exchange Commission from directors, officers and stockholders of their transactions in stock of which they own more than 10% of such shares.

Insider trading. Buying and selling of corporate shares by officers, directors and stockholders who own more than 10% of the stock of a corporation listed on a national exchange. Such transactions must be reported monthly to Securities and Exchange Commission. See also Insider reports.

Insidiatores viarum /insiidiatóryrz vayerám/. Lat. Highwaymen; persons who lie in wait in order to commit some felony or other misdemeanor.

Insignia /insiñ(i)yarə/. Ensigns or arms; distinctive marks; badges; indicia; characteristics.

Insiliarius /insi-liəriəs/. An evil counsellor.

Insilium /insi-liəm/. Evil advice or counsel.

In similis materia /in simalay matir(ə)yə/. Dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

Insimul /insi-məl/. Lat. Together; jointly.

Insimul computassent /insi-məl kəmpə-təssənt/. They accounted together. In common law pleading, the name of the count in assumpsit upon an account stated; it being averred that the parties had settled their accounts together, and defendant engaged to pay plaintiff the balance.

Insimul tenuit /insi-məl tən(y)iət/. One species of the writ of formedon brought against a stranger by a coparcener on the possession of the ancestor, etc.

Insinuacion /insi-nuywəswɔyn/. In Spanish law, the presentation of a public document to a competent judge, in order to obtain his approbation and sanction of the same, and thereby give it judicial authenticity. Eschiche.

Insinuare /insi-nuy-wɛrɪə/. Lat. In the civil law, to put into; to deposit a writing in court, answering nearly to the modern expression "to file." Si non mandat-um actis insinuatum est, if the power or authority be not deposited among the records of the court. To declare or acknowledge before a judicial officer; to give an act an official form.

Insinuatio /insi-nuy-wɛsh(ə)yə/. Lat. In old English law, information or suggestion. Ex insinuatione, on the information.

Insinuation. To hint or suggest doubt or suspicion. In the civil law, the transcription of an act on the public registers like our recording of deeds. It was not necessary in any other alienation but that appropriated to the purpose of donation.

Insinuation of a will. In the civil law, the first production of a will, or the leaving it with the registrar, in order to its probate.

In solidó /in sōlədə/. In the civil law, for the whole; as a whole. An obligation in solidó is one where each of the several obligors is liable for the whole; that is, it is joint and several. Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U.S. 264, 6 S.Ct. 40, 29 L.Ed. 377. Possession in solidum is exclusive possession. When several persons obligate themselves to the obligee by the terms "in solidó," or use any other expressions which clearly show that they intend that each one shall be separately bound to perform the whole of the obligation, it is called an "obligation in solidó" on the part of the obligors.

In solidum /in sōlədəm/. For the whole. Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur, if there be several sureties, however numerous they may be, they are individually bound for the whole debt. In parte sive in solidum, for a part or for the whole.

In solo /in sōlə/. In the soil or ground. In solo alieno, in another's ground. In solo propio, in one's own ground.

Insolvency. The condition of a person who is insolvent; inability to pay one's debts; lack of means to pay one's debts. Such a relative condition of a man's assets and liabilities that the former, if all made immediately available, would not be sufficient to discharge the latter. Or the condition of a person who is unable to pay his debts as they fall due, or in the usual course of trade and business. Adams v. Richardson, Mo., 337 S.W.2d 911, 916. In general, state insolvency laws have been superseded by the Federal Bankruptcy Act. See Bankruptcy.

"Insolvency" under the Bankruptcy Act is defined in § 101(26).

Under U.C.C., a person is insolvent who either has ceased to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business or cannot pay his debts as they fall due or is insolvent within the meaning of the Federal Bankruptcy Law. U.C.C. § 1–201(23).

In specie /in spi(y)s(h)əvi(y)/. Specific; specifically. Thus, to decree performance in specie is to decree specific performance. In kind; in the same or like form. A thing is said to exist in specie when it retains its existence as a distinct individual of a particular class.

Inspector. A prosecutor or adversary.

Inspection. To examine; scrutinize; investigate; look into; check over; or view for the purpose of ascertaining the quality, authenticity or conditions of an item, product, document, residence, business, etc. See also Freedom of Information Act; In camera inspection; Privacy Acts.

Discovery practice. Rights of parties in civil actions to inspect papers, documents, land, etc. of opposing party are governed by Fed.R. Civil P. 26 and 34. Similar rights of prosecutor and defendant in criminal cases are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 16. See also Inspection of documents; Jencks Act.
Reasonable inspection. As relates to duty of employer to provide employee with proper instrumentalities with which to work, does not mean such an inspection as would necessarily or infallibly disclose a defect if one existed, but only such inspection as reasonably prudent man, in the exercise of ordinary care, would make.

Inspection laws. Laws authorizing and directing the inspection and examination of various kinds of merchandise intended for sale, especially food, with a view to ascertaining its fitness for use, and excluding unwholesome or unmarketable goods from sale, and directing the appointment of official inspectors for that purpose; e.g. grain or meat inspection laws. Patapsco Guano Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 171 U.S. 345, 18 S.Ct. 862, 43 L.Ed. 191. State and federal inspection laws may also be concerned with employment safety conditions (e.g. Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA)); building construction safety (e.g. building ordinances); health conditions of restaurants or food processors; and safety conditions of motor vehicles.

If a resident refuses permission to a fire, health, building, etc. inspector to inspect the premises, a search warrant will be required. Camara v. Municipal Court of etc. San Francisco, 387 U.S. 523, 87 S.Ct. 1727, 18 L.Ed.2d 930. A warrant is likewise required for inspection of business premises by OSHA inspectors. Marshall v. Barlow's, Inc., 436 U.S. 307, 98 S.Ct. 1816, 56 L.Ed.2d 35. See also Freedom of Information Act; Privacy Act.

Inspection of documents. This phrase refers to the right of a party, in a civil action, to inspect and make copies of documents which are essential or material to the maintenance of his cause, and which are either in the custody of an officer of the law or in the possession of the adverse party. Fed.R. Civil P. 26 and 34. Such opportunity for inspection in criminal cases is afforded both the prosecutor and defendant under Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

Inspection rights. Buyer of goods has right to inspect them before payment or acceptance at any reasonable place and time and in any reasonable manner. U.C.C. § 2–513(1). See also Inspection.

With respect to discovery in civil actions, Fed.R. Civil P. 26 and 34 affords a party the right to inspect documents, records, land, etc. of the other party. Similar rights are afforded the prosecutor and defendant under Fed.R.Crim.P. 16.

Inspection, trial by. A mode of trial formerly in use in England, by which the judges of a court decided a point in dispute, upon the testimony of their own senses, without the intervention of a jury. This took place in cases where the fact upon which issue was taken must, from its nature, be evident to the court from ocular demonstration, or other irrefragable proof; and was adopted for the greater expedition of a cause.

Inspector. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction. Officers whose duty it is to examine the quality of certain articles of merchandise, food, weights and measures, working conditions of business, structural soundness of building, etc.; e.g. federal grain or meat inspectors; OSHA inspectors; building inspectors; health inspectors. See also Inspection laws.

Inspectorship, deed of. In old English law, an instrument entered into between an insolvent debtor and his creditors, appointing one or more persons to inspect and oversee the winding up of such insolvent's affairs on behalf of the creditors.

Inspeximus /inspek'simas/. (Lat.) We have seen. A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspeximus such former grant, and so reciting it verbatim; it then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient.

Install. To place in a seat, give a place to; to set, place, or instate in an office, rank, or order, etc. To set up or fix in position for use or service.

Installation. The ceremony of inducting or investing with any charge, office, or rank, as the placing a bishop into his see, a dean or prebendary into his stall or seat, or a knight into his order. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The President of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office, by being sworn agreeably to the constitution and laws.

Installment contract. Type of agreement calling for periodic performances and payments. An "installment contract" is one which requires or authorizes the delivery of goods in separate lots to be separately accepted, even though the contract contains a clause "each delivery is a separate contract" or its equivalent. U.C.C. § 2–612.

See Installment land contract; Installment sale; Retail installment contract.

Installment credit. Commercial arrangement in which buyer undertakes to pay in more than one payment and seller agrees to sell on such basis and in which a finance charge may be exacted. Such agreements are commonly subject to statutory disclosure regulation; e.g. Truth-in-Lending laws. See also Annual percentage rate.

Installment land contract. Type of contract by which buyer is required to make periodic payments towards purchase price of land and only on the last payment is the seller required to deliver a deed. Also called a "contract for deed" or "long-term land contract." See also Land contract.
INSTALLMENT LOAN

Installment loan. A loan made to be repaid in specified, usually equal, amounts over a certain number of months. The contract specifies the amount and method of payment. Consumer installment loan contracts are subject to disclosure requirements of Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). See also Annual percentage rate; Balloon payment; Installment credit; Installment sale.

Installment method. A method of accounting enabling a taxpayer to spread the recognition of gain on the sale of property over the payout period. Under this elective procedure, the seller computes the gross profit percentage from the sale (i.e., the gain divided by the selling price) and applies it to each payment received to arrive at the gain to be recognized. I.R.C. § 453.

Installment plan. Commercial sales arrangement by which goods are sold and buyer pays for them in periodic payments. See also Installment contract; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment sale.

Installment sale. Commercial arrangement by which buyer makes initial down payment and signs a contract for payment of the balance in installments over a period of time. In accounting for such sales, the seller may either account for the profit on basis of each installment payment received or the entire amount in the period of the sale; in latter case, reserves are established for bad debts, collection expenses and costs of reconditioning returned merchandise. See also Installment contract; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment method.

Retail installment sale. The sale of goods or the furnishing of services by a retail seller to a retail buyer for a deferred payment price payable in installments. Retail installment sales contracts are governed with respect to disclosure of terms and finance charges by Truth-in-Lending Act (q.v.). See also Annual percentage rate.

Instance court. In English law, that division or department of the court of admiralty which exercised all the ordinary admiralty jurisdiction, with the single exception of prize cases, the latter belonging to the branch called the “Prize Court.” Now part of High Court.

Instancia /invst ANSI ya/. In Spanish law, the institution and prosecution of a suit from its commencement until definitive judgment. The first instance, “primera instancia,” is the prosecution of the suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, “segunda instancia,” is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance, “tercera instancia,” is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisdiction of the same.

Instans est finis unus temporis et principium alterius /invsten(d)iz este faynas yanayas temparas et prin(t)sip(i)yan oltiriyas/. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another.

Instant. Present, current, as instant case.

Instantaneous crime. An “instantaneous” crime is one which is fully consummated or completed in and by a single act (such as arson or murder) as distinguished from one which involves a series or repetition of acts.

Instantaneous death. See Death.

Instanter /invstenar/. Immediately; instantly; forthwith; without delay. Trial instanter was had where a prisoner between attainder and execution pleaded that he was not the same who was attainted. When a party was ordered to plead instanter, he was required to plead the same day. The term was usually understood to mean within twenty-four hours.

Instantly. Immediately; directly; without delay; at once.

Instar /invst ar/. Lat. Likeness; the likeness, size, or equivalent of a thing. Instar dentium, like teeth. Instar omnium, equivalent or tantamount to all.

In statu quo /in steyt(y)uw kwow/ “stet(y)u/”. In the condition in which it was. Status quo.

Instigate /invstegyit/. To stimulate or goad to an action, especially a bad action; one of its synonyms is “abet”. Hughes v. Van Bruggen, 44 N.M. 534, 105 P.2d 494, 499. See Aid and abet; Entrapment.

Instigation /invstegyshan/. Incitation; urging; solicitation. The act by which one incites another to do something, as to commit some crime or to commence a suit. See Aid and abet; Entrapment.

In stipulationibus cum queritur quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorum interpretanda sunt /inv stipy ley shiyown baums kaim kwiradar kwid ekstam sit vahr bokntra stipy latoram intip rants zant/ In the construction of agreements words are interpreted against the person using them. Thus, the construction of the stipulatio is against the stipulator, and the construction of the promissio against the promisor.

In stipulationibus, id tempus spectatur quo contrahitmus /inv stipy ley shiyown baums id tempas spketydar kwow kantrahas nas/. In stipulations, the time when we contract is regarded.

Instirpare /invstarperry/. To plant or establish.

In stirpes /in styrpiyz/. In the law of intestate succession, according to the roots or stocks; by representation; as distinguished from succession per capita. See Per stirpes; Per capita.

Institor /invstidar/. Lat. In the civil law, a clerk in a store; an agent.

Institoria action /invstatiori(i)ya eksh(iy)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of an action given to those who had contracted with an institor (q.v.) to compel the principal to performance.

Institorial power /invstatiori(i)yal pawar/. In the civil law, the charge given to a clerk to manage a shop or store.

Institute, v. To inaugurate or commence, as to institute an action. Post v. U. S., 161 U.S. 583, 16 S.Ct. 611, 40 L.Ed. 816. To set up; to originate; to start; to introduce. To nominate, constitute, or appoint, as to institute an heir by testament. See Institution.
Institutes. An elementary work of the Roman jurist Gaius; important as having formed the foundation of the Institutes of Justinian (q.v.). These Institutes were discovered by Niebuhr in 1816, in a codex rescriptus of the library of the cathedral chapter at Verona, and were first published at Berlin in 1820.

Institutes of Justinian. One of the four component parts or principal divisions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, being an elementary treatise on the law, in four books. This work was compiled from earlier sources (resting principally on the Institutes of Gaius), by a commission composed of Tribonian and two others, by command and under direction of the emperor Justinian, and was first published November 21, A.D. 533.

Institutes of Lord Coke. The name of four volumes by Lord Coke, published A.D. 1628. The first is an extensive comment upon a treatise on tenures, compiled by Littleton, a judge of the common pleas, temp. Edward IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common-law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and Year Books, but greatly defective in method. It is usually cited by the name of "Co. Litt," or as "1 Inst." The second volume is a comment upon old acts of parliament, without systematic order; the third a more methodical treatise on the pleas of the crown; and the fourth an account of the several species of courts. These are cited as 2, 3, or 4 "Inst.,” without any author's name.

Theophrastus' Institutes. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A.D. 533. This paraphrase maintained itself as a manual of law until the eighth or tenth century. This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harmenipulus, the last of the Greek jurists. It is also conjectured that Theophrastus was not the editor of his own paraphrase, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after his explanations and lectures, inasmuch as it contains certain barbarous phrases, and the texts of the manuscripts vary greatly from each other.

Institutio heredis /ins-ta-t(y)ůwsh(y)ow hariydas/. Lat. In Roman law, the appointment of the heres in the will. It corresponds very nearly to the nomination of an executor in English law. Without such an appointment the will was void at law, but the prætor (i.e., equity) would, under certain circumstances, carry out the intentions of the testator.

Instituted executor. An instituted executor is one who is appointed by the testator without any condition.

Institutes. A name sometimes given to textbooks containing the elementary principles of jurisprudence, arranged in an orderly and systematic manner. For example, the Institutes of Justinian, of Gaius, of Lord Coke.

Civil law. The appointment of an heir; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights active and passive.

Political law. A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social.

A system or body of usages, laws, or regulations, of extensive and recurring operation, containing within itself an organism by which it effects its own independent action, continuance, and generally its own further development. Its object is to generate, effect, regulate, or sanction a succession of acts, transactions, or productions of a peculiar kind or class. We are likewise in the habit of calling single laws or usages "institutions," if their operation is of vital importance and vast scope, and if their continuance is in a high degree independent of any interfering power.

Practice. Commencement of civil action or criminal prosecution. See Commence.

Public institution. One which is created and exists by law or public authority, for benefit of public in general; e.g., a public hospital, charity, college, university, etc.

Institutiones /ins-ta-t(y)ůwshiyówniyz/. Lat. Works containing the elements of any science; institutions or institutes. One of Justinian's principal law collections, and a similar work of the Roman jurist Gaius, are so entitled. See Institutes.

Instruct. To convey information as a client to an attorney, or as an attorney to a counsel, or as a judge to a jury. To authorize one to appear as advocate; to give a case in charge to the jury.

Instructions to jury. See Jury instructions.

Instrument. A written document; a formal or legal document in writing, such as a contract, deed, will, bond, or lease. A negotiable instrument (defined in U.C.C. § 3–104), or a security (defined in U.C.C. § 8–102) or any other writing which evidences a right to the payment of money and is not itself a security agreement or lease and is of a type which is in ordinary course of business transferred by delivery with any necessary indorsement or assignment. U.C.C. § 9–105(1).
Anything reduced to writing, a document of a formal or solemn character, a writing given as a means of affording evidence. A document or writing which gives formal expression to a legal act or agreement, for the purpose of creating, securing, modifying, or terminating a right. A writing executed and delivered as the evidence of an act or agreement. Moore v. Diamond Dry Goods Co., 47 Ariz. 128, 54 P.2d 553, 554. Anything which may be presented as evidence to the senses of the adjudicating tribunal.

See also Bearer instrument; Bill; Commercial paper; Negotiable instruments; Note.

Instrumenta /ɪnstrəˈmɛntə/. Lat. That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal; as court rolls, accounts, and the like.

Instrumental. Serviceable, helpful; serving as a means or agent; something by which an end is achieved.

Instrumentality rule. Under this rule, corporate existence will be disregarded where a corporation (subsidiary) is so organized and controlled and its affairs so conducted as to make it only an adjunct and instrumentality of another corporation (parent corporation), and parent corporation will be responsible for the obligations of its subsidiary. Taylor v. Standard Gas & Electric Co., C.C.A.Okl., 96 F.2d 693, 704.

The so-called "instrumentality" or "alter ego" rule states that when a corporation is so dominated by another corporation that the subservient corporation becomes a mere instrument and is really indistinguishable from controlling corporation, then the corporate veil of the dominated corporation will be disregarded, if to retain it results in injustice. National Bond Finance Co. v. General Motors Corp., D.C.Mo., 238 F.Supp. 248, 255.

Instrument of appeal. The document by which an appeal is brought in an English matrimonial cause from the president of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division to the full court. It is analogous to a petition.

Instrument of evidence. Instruments of evidence are the media through which the evidence of facts, either disputed or required to be proved, is conveyed to the mind of a judicial tribunal; and they comprise persons and living things as well as writings. Demonstrative evidence.

Insufficiency. Not sufficient; inadequate to some need, purpose, or use; wanting in needful value, ability, or fitness; incompetent; unfit, as insufficient food; insufficient means. It is the antonym of "sufficient." Nissen v. Miller, 44 N.M. 487, 105 P.2d 324, 325.

Insul/a /ɪnsəˈluːə/. Lat. An island; a house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground.

Insular courts. Federal courts established by Congress with jurisdiction over insular possessions of the United States.

Insular possessions. Island territories of the U.S., e.g. Puerto Rico.

Insulation period. The sixty days immediately preceding the expiration of a collective bargaining agreement when no representation petition may be filed. This is to permit the employer and incumbent union the opportunity to negotiate a new contract without rival claims for recognition.

Insuper /ɪnsəˈpjuːə/. Lat. Moreover; over and above.

An old English exchequer term, applied to a charge made upon a person in his account.

Insurable interest. Such a real and substantial interest in specific property as will prevent a contract to indemnify the person interested against its loss from being a mere wager policy. Such an interest as will make the loss of the property of pecuniary damage to the insured. A right, benefit, or advantage arising out of the property or dependent thereon, or any liability in respect thereof, or any relation thereto or concern therein, of such a nature that it might be so affected by the contemplated peril as to directly damnify the insured. Generally, an "insurable interest" exists where insured derives pecuniary benefit or advantage by preservation and continued existence of property or would sustain pecuniary loss from its destruction. Hinojosa v. Allstate Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 520 S.W.2d 936, 938.

In the case of life insurance, a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of another; also, a reasonable ground, founded upon the relation of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured. Connecticut Mut. Life Insurance Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U.S. 457, 460, 24 L.Ed. 251. Essential thing being that policy be obtained in good faith, not for purpose of speculating on hazard of life in which insured has no interest. Alexander v. Griffith Brokerage Co., 228 Mo.App. 773, 73 S.W.2d 418, 423.

Insurable value. Value of property for insurance purposes. Based on the value of the property, less indestructible parts (land) for fire insurance. For title insurance purposes, the sales price (market value) is used.
Insurance. A contract whereby, for a stipulated consideration, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the compensation is usually called the "insurer" or "underwriter;" the other, the "insured" or "assured;" the agreed consideration, the "premium;" the written contract, a "policy;" the events insured against, "risks" or "perils;" and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the "insurable interest." A contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss, damage, or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event and is applicable only to some contingency or act to occur in future. An agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money or its equivalent or to do an act valuable to other party upon destruction, loss, or injury of something in which other party has an interest.

See also Insurable interest; Lloyd's insurance; Lloyd's of London; Loss; Named insured; Partial limitation; Participation; Policy of insurance; Premium; Pro rata clause; Reinsurance; Replacement insurance; Self-insurance.

Classification

Accident insurance. Form of insurance which undertakes to indemnify the assured against expense, loss of time, and suffering resulting from accidents causing him physical injury, usually by payment at a fixed rate per month while the consequent disability lasts, and sometimes including the payment of a fixed sum to his heirs in case of his death by accident within the term of the policy. See also Casualty insurance.

Accounts receivable insurance. Insurance coverage designed to protect against inability to collect because of damage to records which support the accounts.

Additional insured. A person other than the named insured, such as the insured's spouse, who is protected under the terms of the contract.

Air travel insurance. Form of life insurance which may be purchased by air travelers according to the terms of which the face value of the policy is paid to the named beneficiary in the event of death resulting from a particular flight.

All-risk insurance. Type of insurance policy which ordinarily covers every loss that may happen, except by fraudulent acts of the insured. Miller v. Boston Ins. Co., 218 A.2d 275, 278, 420 Pa. 566. Type of policy which protects against all risks and perils except those specifically enumerated.

Annuity insurance. An insurance contract calling for periodic payments to the insured or annuitant for a stated period or for life.

Assessment insurance. A species of mutual insurance in which the policyholders are assessed as losses are incurred. A contract by which payments to insured are not unalterably fixed, but dependent on collection of assessments necessary to pay amounts insured, while an "old-line policy" unalterably fixes premiums and definitely and unchangedly fixes insurer's liability.

Automobile insurance may embrace insurance against loss of or damage to a motor vehicle caused by fire, windstorm, theft, collision, or other insurable hazards, and also against legal liability for personal injuries or damage to property resulting from operation of the vehicle. Policy of indemnity to protect the operator and owner from liability to third persons as a result of the operation of the automobile. See also Collision insurance; and No-fault auto insurance, infra, this topic.

Business insurance. Type of insurance which protects a business on the disability or death of a key employee. See also Key man life insurance, infra.

Business interruption insurance. Type of insurance which protects a business from losses due to inability to operate because of fire or other hazards.

Casualty insurance. That type of insurance that is primarily concerned with losses caused by injuries to persons and legal liability imposed upon the insured for such injury or for damage to the property of others.

Coinsurance. Provision in a policy that the liability of the insurer is limited to that proportion of the loss which the amount of insurance bears to a particular percentage of the value of property at the time of the loss. See also Coinsurance.

Collision insurance. A form of automobile insurance that covers loss to the insured vehicle from its collision with another vehicle or object, but not covering bodily injury or liability also arising out of the collision. Type of coverage which protects insured for damage to his own property in an accident as contrasted with liability insurance which protects him in an action or claim for loss to another's property.

See also Convertible collision insurance, infra.

Commercial insurance. Indemnity agreements, in the form of insurance bonds or policies, whereby parties to commercial contracts are to a designated extent guarantied against loss by reason of a breach of contractual obligations on the part of the other contracting party. To this class belong policies of contract credit and title insurance.

Comprehensive insurance. See All risk insurance, supra.

Concurrent insurance. Insurance coverage under two or more similar policies of varying dates and amounts.

Convertible collision insurance. Type of collision coverage generally carrying lower premium but requiring higher premium after first loss or claim; an alternative form of deductible collision coverage.

Convertible insurance. A policy that may be changed to another form by contractual provision and without evidence of insurability. Usually used to refer to term life insurance convertible to permanent insurance.

Convertible life insurance. Generally a form of term life insurance which gives the insured the right to change policy to permanent life insurance without medical examination.

Cooperative insurance. Type of non-stock mutual insurance in which the policyholders are the owners, may be assessable or nonassessable.
Credit insurance. Type of insurance protection against losses due to death, disability, insolvency or bankruptcy of debtor. Policy covers balance of debt due, with proceeds payable to creditor. Commonly offered by banks and other lenders. Terms and conditions of such are regulated by federal and state statutes; e.g., Truth-in-Lending laws.

Crime insurance. Type of insurance which protects insured from losses due to criminal acts against insured such as burglary, etc. Such insurance is sponsored by federal government for residents of certain high-crime localities.

Crop insurance. Insurance coverage against financial loss due to destruction of agricultural products resulting from rain, hail, and other elements of nature. Such insurance is sponsored by Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

Decreasing term insurance. A term insurance policy where the premiums are uniform throughout its life, but the face value of the policy declines. Sometimes called a home protection plan because the face value declines much in the same way a mortgage due on a house declines. A form of life insurance that provides a death benefit of amount declining throughout the term of the contract to zero at the end of the term.

Deposit insurance. Federally sponsored (Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.) insurance coverage against loss of deposits due to bank closings.

Employer's liability insurance. In this form of insurance the risk insured against is the liability of the assured to make compensation or pay damages for an accident, injury, or death occurring to a servant or other employee in the course of his employment, either at common law or under statutes imposing such liability on employers. Coverage which protects employer as to claims not covered under worker's compensation insurance.

Endowment insurance. Type of protection which combines life insurance and investment so that if the insured outlives the policy the face value is paid to him. If he does not outlive it, the face value is paid to his beneficiary.

Errors and omissions insurance. Insurance that indemnifies the insured for any loss sustained because of an error or oversight on his part.

Excess insurance. Coverage against loss in excess of a stated amount or in excess of coverage provided under another insurance contract.

Extended term insurance. A non-forfeiture provision in most policies which continues the existing amount of life insurance for as long a period of time as the contract's cash value will purchase term coverage.

Family income insurance. Type of term insurance designed to give maximum coverage during the period of maximum family dependency.

Fidelity insurance. Form of insurance in which the insurer undertakes to guaranty the fidelity of an officer, agent, or employee of the assured, or rather to indemnify the latter for losses caused by dishonesty or a want of fidelity on the part of such a person. See also Fidelity and guaranty insurance.

Fire insurance. A contract of insurance by which the underwriter, in consideration of the premium, undertakes to indemnify the insured against all losses in his houses, buildings, furniture, ships in port, or merchandise, by means of accidental fire happening within a prescribed period. See also Loss payable clause; Pro rata distribution clause.

First party insurance. Insurance which applies to the insured's own property or person.

Fleet policy insurance. Type of blanket policy covering a number of vehicles of the same insured; e.g., covers pool or fleet of vehicles owned by business.

Floater insurance. A form of insurance that applies to moveable property whatever its location, if within the territorial limits imposed by the contract.

Fraternal insurance. The form of life or accident insurance furnished by a fraternal beneficial association, consisting in the undertaking to pay to a member, or his heirs in case of death, a stipulated sum of money, out of funds raised for that purpose by the payment of dues or assessments by all the members of the association.

Government insurance. Life insurance underwritten and offered by Federal government to war veterans. See also National service life insurance; War risk insurance, infra.

Group insurance. A form of insurance whereby individual lives of a group of persons, usually employees, are in consideration of a flat periodical premium based on average age and paid either by employer in whole or partially by both employer and employee, insured each in a definite sum so long as insured remains in such employment and the premiums are paid. Holland v. Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co., 45 N.J. Super. 66, 131 A.2d 428, 429. Coverage of number of individuals by means of single or blanket policy. McFarland v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 105 Ga.App. 209, 124 S.E.2d 432, 433. Type of insurance (life, medical, dental, automobile, legal) offered to employees or other homogeneous group under a single master policy. Generally, each employee receives a certificate of participation instead of a policy.

Group-term life insurance. Life insurance coverage permitted by an employer for a group of employees. Such insurance is renewable on a year-to-year basis and does not accumulate in value (i.e., no cash surrender value is built up). The premiums paid by the employer on such insurance are not taxed to an employee on coverage of up to a specified amount per year.

Guaranty or fidelity insurance. A contract whereby one, for a consideration, agrees to indemnify another against loss arising from the want of integrity or fidelity of employees and persons holding positions of trust, or embezzlements by them, or against the insolvency of debtors, losses in trade, loss by non-payment of notes, or against breaches of contract.

Hail insurance. Type of insurance which provides protection against loss of crops, grain, etc. because of hail storms. See also Crop insurance, supra.

Health insurance. A contract or agreement whereby an insurer is obligated to pay or allow a benefit of pecuniary value with respect to the bodily injury, disablement, sickness, death by accident or accidental means of a human being, or because of any expense relating thereto, or because of any expense incurred in prevention of sickness, and includes every risk pertaining to any of the enumerated risks.

Homeowners insurance. Policy insuring individuals against any, some, or all of the risks of loss to personal dwellings or the contents thereof or the personal liability pertaining thereto.

Indemnity insurance. Insurance which provides indemnity against loss, in contrast to contracts which provide for indemnity against liability. The latter are known as liability contracts or policies, and the former as indemnity contracts or policies.

Inland marine insurance. Originally, a form of insurance protection for goods transported other than on the ocean. Now, term applies to a variety of coverages on floating personal property and to general liability as a bailee.

Joint life insurance. Form of life insurance on two or more persons and payable on the death of the first to die.

Key man life insurance. Type of life insurance written on the life of an important or key officer or employee in a business organization. The business is the beneficiary and is entitled to the proceeds on his death. See also Key man insurance.

Level premium insurance. Type of insurance in which the cost is spread evenly over the premium paying period.

Liability insurance. Insurance that covers suits against the insured for such damages as injury or death to other drivers or passengers, property damage, and the like. It is insurance for those damages for which the driver can be held liable.

Liability insurance is that form of insurance which indemnifies against liability on account of injuries to the person or property of another. It is distinguished from "indemnity insurance" (see that title, supra), and may be issued to cover the liability of, for example, carriers, contractors, employers, landlords, manufacturers, drivers.

Life insurance. A contract between the holder of a policy and an insurance company (i.e., the carrier) whereby the company agrees, in return for premium payments, to pay a specified sum (i.e., the face value or maturity value of the policy) to the designated beneficiary upon the death of the insured.

That kind of insurance in which the risk contemplated is the death of a particular person; upon which event (if it occurs within a prescribed term, or, according to the contract, whenever it occurs) the insurer engages to pay a stipulated sum to the legal representatives of such person, or to a third person having an insurable interest in the life of such person.

See also Life insurance proceeds; Life insurance trust; Term insurance (this topic).

Group life insurance. Type of life insurance commonly offered by companies to their employees in which there is a master insurance contract providing life insurance benefits to each covered employee who holds a certificate indicating his participation.

Limited payment life insurance. Type of life insurance for which premiums are payable for a definite period after which the policy is fully paid.

Straight life insurance or whole life insurance is insurance for which premiums are collected so long as the insured may live, whereas, term insurance is insurance which promises payment only within a stipulated term covered by the policy; though such term policies are commonly renewed each term. The premium for whole life insurance remains the same whereas the premium for term insurance increases with the age of the insured, i.e. as the risk increases. Also, whole life policies build up cash reserves, whereas term policies do not. See also Term insurance.

Limited policy insurance. Type of coverage which offers protection against specific perils or accidents and against no others.

Major medical insurance. Insurance protection against large medical, surgical and hospital expenses of the insured.

Malpractice insurance. Type of liability insurance which protects professional people (e.g., doctors, lawyers, accountants) against claims of negligence brought against them.

Manual rating insurance. Type of insurance in which the premium is set from a manual classifying types of risk on a general basis such as a particular industry without reference to the individual case.

Marine insurance. A contract whereby one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other against certain perils or sea-risks to which his ship, freight, and cargo, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage, or a fixed period of time. An insurance against risks connected with navigation, to which a ship, cargo, freightage, profits, or other insurable interest in movable property may be exposed during a certain voyage or a fixed period of time. See also Inland marine insurance, supra.

Mortgage insurance. Insurance from which the benefits are intended by the policyowner to pay off the balance due on a mortgage upon the death of the insured or to meet the payments on a mortgage as they fall due in case of the death or disability of the insured. Insurance against loss to the mortgagor in the event of default and a failure of the mortgaged property to satisfy the balance owing plus costs of foreclosure.

National service life insurance. Life insurance on servicemen. The contract is between the U.S. Government and private insurers for benefit of servicemen.

No-fault auto insurance. Type of automobile insurance in which claims for personal injury (and sometimes property damage) are made against the claimant's own insurance company (no matter who was at fault) rather than against the insurer of the party at fault. Under such state "no-fault" statutes only in cases of serious personal injuries and high medical costs may the injured bring an action against the other party or his insurer. No-fault statutes vary from state to state in terms of scope of coverage, threshold amounts, etc.
Nonassessable insurance. Type of insurance in which the rate of premium is guaranteed and no additional assessments may be made against the policyholder.

Old line life insurance. Insurance on a level or flat rate plan where, for a fixed premium payable without condition at stated intervals, a certain sum is to be paid upon death without condition.

Ordinary life insurance. Whole life and permanent insurance as distinguished from term, group and industrial insurance.

Paid-up insurance. Insurance policy on which all premiums have been paid and on which no further premiums are due and for which benefits company is liable.

Participating insurance. Type of insurance issued by a mutual company on which policyholder may participate in dividend distributions.

Partnership insurance. Life insurance on lives of partners designed to enable surviving partners to buy out deceased partner’s estate. Life or health insurance sold to a partnership, usually for guaranteeing business continuity in case of disability or death of a partner.

Product liability insurance. Type of liability coverage which protects manufacturers and suppliers from claims for accidents arising out of the use of their products.

Public liability insurance. Insurance liability protection against claims arising out of the insured’s property, conduct or the conduct of his agent.

Reciprocal insurance. Type of insurance plan administered by an exchange rather than an insurance company and in which each insured is the insurer of the other members of the plan.

Renewable term insurance. Type of term insurance in which the premiums are level during each term, but increases at each new term with the age of the insured. The insured generally has the right to renew for additional terms without a medical examination.

Retirement income insurance. Type of insurance in which the insurer guarantees payment of the policy if the insured dies before a certain age and an annuity if the insured survives beyond the specified period.

Self insurance. Plan in which the insured (e.g. business) places aside in a fund sufficient sums to cover liability losses that may be sustained. Commonly, under such plan the business will self-insure itself up to a certain amount and then carry regular liability insurance to cover any excesses.

Single premium insurance. Type of policy on which the insured makes but one premium payment.

Social insurance. A comprehensive welfare plan established by law, generally compulsory in nature, and based on a program which spreads the cost of benefits among the entire population rather than on individual recipients. The federal government began to use social insurance programs in 1935 with the passage of the Social Security Act. The basic federal and state approaches to social insurance presently in use are: Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (i.e. social security); Medicare and Medicaid; unemployment insurance; and worker’s compensation.

Split dollar insurance. Type of insurance in which the insurer divides the premium dollar between life insurance protection and investment for the benefit of the insured.

Step-rate premium insurance. Type of insurance in which the premium may vary from time to time at the option of the insurer.

Surety and fidelity insurance. Form of insurance which more approximates a bond which protects the insured against dishonesty of employees, agents and the public.

Term insurance. Form of pure life insurance having no cash surrender value and generally furnishing insurance protection for only a specified or limited period of time; though such policy is usually renewable from term to term. See also Convertible life; Decreasing term; Extended term; Family income; Group term; Renewable term insurance, supra.

Title insurance. Insurance against loss or damage resulting from defects or failure of title to a particular parcel of realty, or from the enforcement of liens existing against it at the time of the insurance. This form of insurance is taken out by a purchaser of the property or one loaning money on mortgage, and is furnished by companies specially organized for the purpose, and which keep complete sets of abstracts or duplicates of the records, employ expert title-examiners, and prepare conveyances and transfers of all sorts. A “certificate of title” furnished by such a company is merely the formally expressed professional opinion of the company’s examiner that the title is complete and perfect (or otherwise, as stated), and the company is liable only for a want of care, skill, or diligence on the part of its examiner; whereas an “insurance of title” warrants the validity of the title in any and all events. It is not always easy to distinguish between such insurance and a “guaranty of title” given by such a company, except that in the former case the maximum limit of liability is fixed by the policy, while in the latter case the undertaking is to make good any and all loss resulting from defect or failure of the title.

Trust insurance. A trust, the res of which consists in whole or in part of insurance policies.

Unemployment insurance. Form of taxation collected from business to fund unemployment payments and benefits.

War risk insurance. Insurance offered by the federal government to protect persons against wartime loss of vessels and property on the high seas, and death or injury while in the armed forces. Insurance covering damage caused by acts of war. War risk insurance refers to those contracts which were brought into being by the United States government during the first World War to replace ordinary life and accident insurance which was no longer available to those in the hazardous occupation of military service. See also National service life insurance, supra.

Worker’s compensation insurance. Type of protection purchased by employers to cover payments to employees who are injured in accidents arising out of and in the course of their employment; governed by statutes in all jurisdictions. See also Employer’s liability insurance, supra.
Other Insurance Terms

Blanket policy. Policy covering more than one type of property in one location, or one or more types of property at more than one location.

Comprehensive coverage. A simple and convenient form of indemnity now commonly available in contracts of automobile insurance. It includes not only the conventional coverages against loss caused by fire, theft, wind, water, or malicious mischief, but is generally designed to protect against all damage to the insured vehicle except collision or upset.

Concurrent insurance. That which to any extent insures the same interest against the same casualty, at the same time, as the primary insurance, on such terms that the insurers would bear proportionately the loss happening within the provisions of both policies.

Contract of insurance. See Contract of insurance.

Double insurance. See Double.

Excess insurance. See Excess insurance, supra.

General and special insurance. In marine insurance, a general insurance is effected when the perils insured against are such as the law would imply from the nature of the contract considered in itself and supposing none to be specified in the policy. In the case of special insurance, further perils (in addition to implied perils) are expressed in the policy.

Insurance adjuster. One undertaking to ascertain and report the actual loss to the subject-matter of insurance due to the peril insured against. The adjuster also settles claims against the insurer. Such adjuster may be employed either by the insurer or the insured. See Adjuster.

Insurance agent. Person authorized to represent insurer in dealing with third parties in matters relating to insurance. American Casualty Co. of Reading, Pa. v. Ricas, 179 Md. 627, 22 A.2d 484, 487. An agent employed by an insurance company to solicit insurance business. Agents of insurance companies are called “general agents” when clothed with the general oversight of the companies’ business in a state or large section of country, and “local agents” when their functions are limited and confined to some particular locality. See also Insurance broker, infra.

Insurance broker. One who acts as middleman between insured and company, and who solicits insurance from public under no employment from any special company and places order of insurance with company selected by insurer or, in absence of any selection, with company selected by such broker. Broker is agent for insured though at same time for some purposes he may be agent for insurer, and his acts and representations within scope of his authority as such agent are binding on insured. An “insurance agent” is tied to his company, whereas an “insurance broker” is an independent middleman not tied to a particular company. Osborn v. Ozlin, Va., 310 U.S. 53, 60 S.Ct. 758, 761, 84 L.Ed. 1074.

Insurance commissioner. A public officer in most states, whose duty is to supervise the business of insurance as conducted in the state by foreign and domestic companies, for the protection and benefit of policy-holders, and especially to issue licenses, approve rates, make periodical examinations into the condition of such companies, and receive, file, and publish periodical statements of their business as furnished by them.

Insurance company. A corporation or association whose business is to make contracts of insurance. They are generally either mutual companies or stock companies. A “mutual” insurance company is one whose fund for the payment of losses consists not of capital subscribed or furnished by outside parties, but of premiums mutually contributed by the parties insured, or in other words, one in which all persons insured become members of the association and contribute either cash or assessable premium notes, or both, to a common fund, out of which each is entitled to indemnity in case of loss. A “stock” company is one organized according to the usual form of business corporations, having a capital stock divided into shares, which, with current income and accumulated surplus, constitutes the fund for the payment of losses, policy-holders paying fixed premiums and not being members of the association unless they also happen to be stockholders. See also Joint stock insurance company.

Insurance policy. See Policy of insurance.

Insurance rating. Process by which the premium for a policy is set after considering the risks involved.

Insurance trust. An agreement between insured and trustee, whereby proceeds of policy are paid directly to trustee for investment and distribution to designated beneficiaries in manner and at such time as insured has directed in trust agreement. See also Trust.

Interinsurance. Insurance system whereby several individuals, partnerships, or corporations, through common attorney in fact, underwrite one another’s risks against loss under agreement that underwriters act separately and severally. Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 63 S.Ct. 602, 604, 87 L.Ed. 777. It is distinguishable from all other forms of insurance, in that every insured is interinsurer, and every insurer is insured.

Loss. See Loss.

Mutual insurance. That form of insurance provided by mutual companies. An essential characteristic of a mutual insurance company is collective and entire ownership and control by its members, all of whom must be policyholders. A mutual company may collect cash premiums from members in advance or it may assess members to pay losses and overhead. An insurance company can be mutual even though policyholders are not subject to assessment. To be a mutual insurance company, it is also essential that the company provide insurance to its members substantially at cost. Ohio Farmers Indemnity Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ohio, 108 F.2d 665; Union Ins. Co. v. Hoge, 62 U.S. (21 How.) 35, 16 L.Ed. 61; Mutual Fire Ins. Co. of Germantown v. United States, 142 F.2d 344.
INSURANCE

Over-insurance. Insurance effected upon property, either in one or several companies, to an amount which, separately or in the aggregate, exceeds the actual value of the property. See Excess insurance.

Reinsurance. Insurance of an insurer; a contract by which an insurer procures a third person (usually another insurance company) to insure it against loss or liability, or a portion of such, by reason of the original insurance.

Umbrella policy. A type of supplemental insurance policy that extends normal automobile liability limits to e.g. $1 million or more for a relatively small additional premium.

Under-insurance. Insurance coverage for less than the value of the property. Under such policy, coverage for loss or damage to property will be reduced by percentage of underinsurance.

Insure. To make sure or secure, to guarantee, as, to insure safety to any one. To engage to indemnify a person against pecuniary loss from specified perils or possible liability. To provide insurance. See also Underwrite.

Insured. The person who obtains or is otherwise covered by insurance on his health, life, or property. The "insured" in a policy is not limited to the insured named in the policy, but applies to anyone who is insured under the policy. Midwest Contractors Equipment Co. v. Bituminous Cas. Corp., 112 Ill. App.2d 134, 251 N.E.2d 349, 352. The owner of a policy of insurance. Detrick v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., Iowa, 158 N.W.2d 99, 104.

Insurer. The underwriter or insurance company with whom a contract of insurance is made. The one who assumes risk or underwrites a policy, or the underwriter or company with whom contract of insurance is made. National Securities, Inc. v. Johnson, 14 Ariz.App. 31, 480 P.2d 368, 370.

Insurgent. One who participates in an insurrection; one who opposes the execution of law by force of arms, or who rises in revolt against the constituted authorities. An enemy.

Insurrection. A rebellion, or rising of citizens or subjects in resistance to their government. Insurrection consists in any combined resistance to the lawful authority of the state, with intent to cause the denial thereof, when the same is manifested, or intended to be manifested, by acts of violence. It is a federal crime to incite, assist, or engage in rebellion or insurrection against the United States. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2383. See also Internal security acts.

Intake. In old English law, temporary inclosures made by customary tenants of a manor under a special custom authorizing them to inclose part of the waste until one or more crops have been raised on it.

Intangible property. As used chiefly in the law of taxation, this term means such property as has no intrinsic and marketable value, but is merely the representative or evidence of value, such as certificates of stock, bonds, promissory notes, and franchises. See Intangible asset.

Intangibles. Property that is a "right" rather than a physical object. Examples would be patents, stocks, bonds, goodwill, trademarks, franchises, and copyrights. See Amortization; General intangibles; Intangible asset.

Intangibles tax. In certain states such tax is imposed on every resident for right to exercise following privileges: (a) Signing, executing and issuing intangibles; (b) selling, assigning, transferring, renewing, removing, consigning, mailing, shipping, trading in and enforcing intangibles; (c) receiving income, increase, issues and profits of intangibles; (d) transmitting intangibles by will or gift or under state laws of descent; (e) having intangibles separately classified for taxes.

Integer. /i:n t哲:/. Lat. Whole; untouched. Res integra /ri:'zr intgrə/ means a question which is new and undecided.

Integrated bar. The act of organizing the bar of a state into an association, membership in which is a condition precedent to the right to practice law. Integration is generally accomplished by enactment of a statute conferring authority upon the highest court of the state to integrate the bar, or by rule of court in the exercise of its inherent power.

Integrated contract. Contract which contains within its four corners the entire agreement of the parties and parol evidence tending to contradict, amend, etc., is inadmissible; the parties having made the contract the final expression of their agreement.

An agreement is integrated where the parties there to adopt the writing or writings as the final and complete expression of the agreement and an "integration" is the writing or writings so adopted. Wilson v. Viking Corporation, 134 Pa.Super. 153, 3 A.2d 180, 183.

Integrated property settlements. Contract commonly made on separation or divorce of spouses wherein the parties intend that the contract become part of the court order, decree or judgment.

Integrated writing. The writing or writings adopted by the parties to an agreement as the final and complete expression of the agreement. Restatement, Contracts, § 228; Pettett v. Cooper, 62 Ohio App. 377, 24 N.E.2d 299, 302. See also Integrated contract.

Integration. The act or process of making whole or entire. Bringing together different groups (as races) as equals.

Horizontal integration. Combination of two or more businesses of the same type such as manufacturers of the same type of products. Such combinations may violate antitrust laws under certain conditions. See also Merger.

Vertical integration. Combination of two or more businesses on different levels of operation such as manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing the same product. See also Merger.

Integrity. As used in statutes prescribing the qualifications of public officers, trustees, etc., this term means soundness or moral principle and character, as shown by one person dealing with others in the making and performance of contracts, and fidelity and honesty in the discharge of trusts; it is synonymous with "probi­ty," "honesty," and "uprightness."

Intelligibility. In pleading, the statement of matters of fact directly (excluding the necessity of inference or argument to arrive at the meaning) and in such appropriate terms, so arranged, as to be comprehensible by a person of common or ordinary understanding.

"Each averment of a pleading shall be simple, concise, and direct." Fed.R. Civil P. 8(e).

Intemperance. Habitual intemperance is that degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating liquor which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon an innocent party. Habitual or excessive use of liquor. See Intoxication.

Intend. To design, resolve, propose. To plan for and expect a certain result. To apply a rule of law in the nature of presumption; to discern and follow the probabilities of like cases. See also Intent.

Intendant. One who has the charge, management, or direction of some office, department, or public business.

Used in the constitutional and statutory law of some European governments to designate a principal officer of state corresponding to the cabinet or secretaries of the various departments of the United States government, as, "intendant of marine," "intendant of finance."

Intended to be recorded. Phrase used in conveyances, when reciting some other conveyance which has not yet been recorded, but which forms a link in the chain of title.

Intended use doctrine. In product liability cases, two factors are considered: the marketing scheme of the maker, and the foreseeability of the risks which are inherent in the product when used for the purposes intended. Helene Curtis Industries, Inc. v. Pruitt, C.A.Tex., 385 F.2d 841.

Intendente. In Spanish law, the immediate agent of the minister of finance, or the chief and principal director of the various departments of the United States government, appointed in the various departments in each of the provinces into which the Spanish monarchy is divided.

Intendment of law. The true meaning, the correct understanding or intention of the law. A presumption or inference made by the courts.

Common intendment. The natural and usual sense; the common meaning or understanding; the plain meaning of any writing as apparent on its face without straining or distorting the construction.

The word "intent" is used throughout the Restatement of Torts, 2nd, to denote that the actor desires to cause consequences of his act, or that he believes that the consequences are substantially certain to result from it. Sec. 8A.

Intent and motive should not be confused. Motive is what prompts a person to act, or fail to act. Intent refers only to the state of mind with which the act is done or omitted.

See also Aforethought; Constructive intent; Intention; Larcenous intent; Legislative intent; Malice aforethought; Manifestation of intention; Premeditation; Predatory intent; Presumed intent; Specific intent; Wilful.

Common intent. The natural sense given to words.

Criminal intent. See Criminal.

General intent. In criminal law, the intent to do that which the law prohibits. It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the defendant intended the precise harm or the precise result which eventuated.

Specific intent. In criminal law, the intent to accomplish the precise act which the law prohibits; e.g. assault with intent to rape.

Transferred intent. In tort law, if A, intending to strike B, misses B and hits C instead, the intent to strike B is transferred and supplies the necessary intent for the tort against C. See also Transferred intent, doctrine of.

Intentio. Lat. In the civil law, the formal complaint or claim of a plaintiff before the praetor.

In old English law, a count or declaration in a real action (narratio).

Intentio ceca mala. A blind or obscure meaning is bad or ineffectual. Said of a testator's intention.

Intentio inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni. The intention [of a party] ought to be subservient to [or in accordance with] the laws, not the laws to the intention.

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo. My intent gives a name to my act.

Intention. Determination to act in a certain way or to do a certain thing. Meaning; will; purpose; design.
“Intention,” when used with reference to the construction of wills and other documents, means the sense and meaning of it, as gathered from the words used therein. When used with reference to civil and criminal responsibility, a person who contemplates any result, as not unlikely to follow from a deliberate act of his own, may be said to intend that result, whether he desires it or not. See also Four corners rule; Intent.

Intentione /intènshiyówniy/. In old English law, a writ that lay against him who entered into lands after the death of a tenant in dower, or for life, etc., and held out to him in reversion or remainder.

Intent to kill. An element in certain aggravated assaults and batteries which requires the prosecution to prove the intent to kill in addition to the other elements of the assault and battery. See Aggravated assault; Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Inter alia /intèr allia/. Among; between.

Inter alla /intèr ēł(y)iyas/ *āliya/ *. Among other things. A term anciently used in pleading, especially in reciting statutes, where the whole statute was not set forth at length. Inter alia enactatum fuit, among other things it was enacted.

Inter alias causas acquisitionis, magna, celebris, et famosa est causa donationis /intèr ēl(y)iyas kòẕas ąkwzishiyównas, màgńa, sèlásbras, ėt fàmòwsa ēst kòẕa đañēshiyównas/. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift.

Inter alios /intèr ēliyas/. Between other persons; between those who are strangers to a matter in question.

Inter alios res gestas allis non posse prejudicium facere sepe constitutum est /intèr ēl(y)iyas riýz ēst liyiyas nôn pòsìy pràjùw dúkàndàm fàśàríí slıpìy kòn-statjùw dúdam ēst/. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice.

Inter apices juris /intèr ēypsiyỳiy júrąs/ *. Among the subtleties of the law. See Apex juris.

Inter arma silent leges /intèr ārmą sàylànt liyiyỳ/. In time of war the laws are silent. It applies as between the state and its external enemies; and also in cases of civil disturbance where extrajudicial force may supersede the ordinary process of law.

Inter brachia /intèr bréykìyiy/. Between her arms.

Inter ceteros /intèr sèdàrowś/ *. Among others; in a general clause; not by name (nominatim). A term applied in the civil law to clauses of disinheretance in a will.

Intercalare /intèrkalèriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to introduce or insert among or between others; to introduce a day or month into the calendar; to intercalate.

Intercedere /intèrsìyỳdùriy/. Lat. In the civil law, to become bound for another's debt.

Intercept. “Intercept” means the aural acquisition of the contents of any wire or oral communication through the use of any electronic, mechanical, or other device. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2510. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Interception. Within Federal Communications Act, prohibiting interception of communication by wire or radio, indicates taking or seizure by the way or before arrival at destined place, and does not ordinarily connote obtaining of what is to be sent before, or at the moment, it leaves the possession of the proposed sender, or after, or at the moment, it comes into possession of intended receiver. Communications Act of 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605; Goldman v. United States, N.Y., 316 U.S. 129, 62 S.Ct. 993, 995, 86 L.Ed. 1322. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Interchangeably. By way of exchange or interchange. This term properly denotes the method of signing deeds, leases, contracts, etc., executed in duplicate, where each party signs the copy which he delivers to the other.

Inter conjugés /intèr kòn’jagîjyz/. Between husband and wife.

Intercourse. Communication; literally, a running or passing between persons or places; commerce; sexual relations.

Interdict /intèrdiktx/. A prohibitory decree.

Ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which divine services (i.e. sacraments) are prohibited to be administered either to particular persons or in particular places.

Roman and civil law. A decree of the prætor by means of which, in certain cases determined by the edict, he himself directly commanded what should be done or omitted, particularly in causes involving the right of possession or a quasi possession. In the modern civil law, interdicts are regarded precisely the same as actions, though they give rise to a summary proceeding.

Interdicts are either probationary, restorative, or exhibitory; the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc. An interdict was distinguished from an “action” (actio), properly so called, by the circumstance that the prætor himself decided in the first instance (principaliter), on the application of the plaintiff, without previously appointing a judex, by issuing a decree commanding what should be done, or left undone. It might be adopted as a remedy in various cases where a regular action could not be maintained, and hence interdicts were at one time more extensively used than were the actions themselves. Afterwards, however, they fell into disuse, and in the time of Justinian were generally dispensed with.

Interdiction /intèrdiktsḥahan/. French law. Every person who, on account of insanity, has become incapable of controlling his own interests, can be put under the control of a guardian, who shall administer his affairs with the same effect as he might himself. Such a person is said to be “interdit,” and his status is described as “interdiction.”
Civil law. A judicial decree, by which a person is deprived of the exercise of his civil rights.

French-Canadian law. A proceeding instituted for the purpose of obtaining a curator of the person and property, and includes the calling of a family council and a petition to the court or its prothonotary, followed by a hearing.

International law. An “interdiction of commercial intercourse” between two countries is a governmental prohibition of commercial intercourse, intended to bring about an entire cessation for the time being of all trade whatever. The Edward, 1 Wheat. 272, 4 L.Ed. 86.

Interdiction of fire and water. Banishment by an order that no man should supply the person banished with fire or water, the two necessaries of life.

Interdum evenit ut exceptio quae prima facie justa videetur, tamen inique noceat. It sometimes happens that no man should supply the person banished with all trade whatever. The Edward, 1 Wheat. 272, 4 L.Ed. 86.

Interesse /intrésis/. Lat. Interest. The interest of money; also an interest in lands.

Interesse termini. An interest in a term. That species of interest or property which a lessee for years acquires in the lands demised to him, before he has actually become possessed of those lands; as distinguished from that property or interest vested in him by the demise, and also reduced into possession by an actual entry upon the lands and the assumption of ownership therein, and which is then termed an “estate for years.”

Pro interesse suo. For his own interest; according to, or to the extent of, his individual interest. Used (in practice) to describe the intervention of a party who comes into a suit for the purpose of protecting interests of his own which may be involved in the dispute between the principal parties or which may be affected by the settlement of their contention.

Interest. The most general term that can be employed to denote a right, claim, title, or legal share in something. In its application to lands or things real, it is frequently used in connection with the terms “estate,” “right,” and “title.” More particularly it means a right to have the advantage accruing from anything; any right in the nature of property, but less than title.

The word “interest” is used throughout the Restatement of Torts, 2d, to denote the object of any human desire. Sec. 1.

The word “interest” is used in the Restatement of Property both generically to include varying aggregates of rights, privileges, powers and immunities and distributively to mean any one of them. Sec. 5.

See also Adverse interest; Against interest; Beneficial interest; Contingent interest in personal property; Community of interest; Compelling state interest; Compound interest; Conflict of interest; Coupons; Equitable interest; Executory interests; Future interests; Identity of interests; Insurable interest; Leasehold interest; Legal interest; Lessee’s interest; Lessor’s interest; New York interest; Ownership; Pecuniary interest; Possessory interest; Public interest; Security interest; Senior interest; Terminable interest; Usury; Vested interest.

Absolute interest. Person has absolute interest in property when such is so completely vested in individual that no contingency can deprive him of it without his consent. So, too, he is the owner of such absolute interest who must necessarily sustain the loss if the property is destroyed. See also Fee simple; Title.

Easement. An easement is an “interest” in land and involves the title. Allen v. Smith, Mo.App., 375 S.W.2d 874, 878.

For use of money. Interest is the compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties for the use or forbearance or detention of money. Rosen v. U. S., C.A.Pa., 288 F.2d 658, 660. Basic cost of borrowing money or buying on installment contract. Payments a borrower pays a lender for the use of the money. A corporation pays interest on its bonds to the bondholders.

Accrued interest. Interest earned but not yet paid. See also Accruing interest.

Accumulated interest. Interest on bonds and other debts which is due or overdue but not yet paid. Boston interest. See Boston interest.

Compound interest. Interest upon interest; i.e. interest paid on principal plus accrued interest. Exists where accrued interest is added to the principal sum, and the whole treated as a new principal for the calculation of the interest for the next period. Interest added to principal as interest becomes due and thereafter made to bear interest. Wieland v. Loon, 79 S.D. 608, 116 N.W.2d 391, 393.

Conventional interest. Interest at the rate agreed upon and fixed by the parties themselves, as distinguished from that which the law would prescribe in the absence of an explicit agreement.

Excessive interest. See Usury.

Ex-interest. In the language of stock exchanges, a bond or other interest-bearing security is said to be sold “ex-interest” when the seller reserves to himself the interest already accrued and payable (if any) or the interest accruing up to the next interest day.

Gross interest. The total interest paid by the borrower which includes administrative costs and expenses to lender.

Interest rate. See Interest rate.

Interest upon interest. See Compound interest, infra.

Legal interest. See Legal interest.

New York interest. Computation of interest on the exact number of days in a month and not on a thirty day month. See also Boston interest.

Nominal interest. The interest stated on the security and not the rate based on the price of the security.

Ordinary interest. Interest computed entirely on the principal with no interest computed on the interest past due.

Simple interest. That which is paid for the principal or sum lent, at a certain rate or allowance, made by law or agreement of parties. Interest calculated on principal where interest earned during periods before maturity of the loan is neither added to the principal nor paid to the lender. That paid on the principal lent as distinguished for compound interest which is interest paid on unpaid interest. B. F. Saul Co. v. West End Park North, Inc., 250 Md. 707, 246 A.2d 591, 598.

Imputed interest. In taxation, taxable income resulting from purchase at a bargain of assets for less than their fair value; such occurs when one is so placed as to take advantage of an opportunity not available to others. An estimated charge for interest for use of capital though no cash payment is provided. See also Cost (Imputed cost).

In the case of certain long-term sales of property, the Internal Revenue Service has the authority to convert some of the gain from the sale into interest income if the contract does not provide for a minimum rate of interest to be paid by the purchaser. The application of this procedure has the effect of forcing the seller to recognize less long-term capital gain and more ordinary income if the contract does not provide for a minimum rate of interest to be paid by the purchaser. See also Cost (Imputed cost).

Insurance. See Insurable interest.

Intervention. Word "interest" as used in provision of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure that on timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action when representation of his "interest" by existing parties is or may be inadequate and he is or may be bound by judgment in action means specific legal or equitable interest in chose. Toles v. U. S., C.A. N.M., 371 F.2d 784, 785, 786. See Fed.R.Civil P. 24.

Interest sufficient to support intervention as of right must be significant, must be direct rather than contingent, and must be based on a right which belongs to the proposed intervenor rather than to an existing party to the suit. Vazman, S. A. v. Fidelity Intern. Bank, D.C.N.Y., 418 F.Supp. 1084, 1085. An “interest” in the subject of an action so as to render the holder thereof a necessary party or a proper intervenor does not include a mere, consequential, remote or conjectural possibility of being in some manner affected by the result of the action but must be such a direct claim upon the subject matter of the action that the holder will either gain or lose by direct operation of the judgment to be rendered. Bunting v. McDonnell Aircraft Corp., Mo., 522 S.W.2d 161, 169.

Penalty. Interest is exaction for past-due obligations and in essence is in the nature of a penalty; it is compensation for delay in payment. Wayne Tp. in Passaic County v. Ricmin, Inc., 124 N.J. Super. 509, 308 A.2d 27, 30. See also Penalty.

Interest equalization tax. Tax imposed on each acquisition by a U.S. person of stock of a foreign issuer, or of a debt obligation of a foreign obligor if such obligation has a period remaining to maturity of a year or more. I.R.C. § 4911(a).

Interest rate. The percentage of an amount of money which is paid for its use for a specified time. Commonly expressed as an annual percentage rate (APR). See Annual percentage rate; Truth-in-Lending Act; Usury.

Prime rate. The most favorable interest rates charged by a commercial bank on short-term loans to its best (i.e. most credit worthy) customers.

Interest repulcitne ne maleficia remaneant impunita /interātēs riyaypāblsiai niā mālafis(h)i(a) ramāniyant impyuānyā/ It concerns the state that crimes remain not unpunished.

Interest repulcitne ne sua quis male utatur /interātēs riyaypāblsiai s(y)ūwā kws mālyi yātēyār/ It concerns the state that persons do not misuse their property.

Interest repulcitne quod homines conserventur /interātēs riyaypāblsiai kvōd hōmaniyā konśārvēntar/ It concerns the state that the lives of men be preserved.

Interest repulcitne res judicatas non rescindē /interātēs riyaypāblsiai riy juwākēyādə nōn rāsindəy/ It concerns the state that things adjudicated be not rescinded. It is matter of public concern that solemn adjudications of the courts should not be disturbed.

Interest repulcitne ut carceres sint in tuto /interātēs riyaypāblsiai āt kāsārēyāj sint in t(y)ūwōdow/ It concerns the state that prisons be safe places of confinement.

Interest *(imprīnis) repulcitne ut pax in regno conserve­tur, et quaeunque paci adversēntur provide declinen­tur /interātēs amprāmys riyaypāblsiai āt pēks in rēg­nōw konśārvēdār āt kwiykākwių pēysay adversēntār pravāydīyī dēkālnēntar/ It especially concerns the state that peace be preserved in the kingdom, and that whatever things are against peace be prudently avoided.

Interest repulcitne ut quilibet re sua bene utatur /interātēs riyaypāblsiai āt kāsārēyāj sint in t(y)ūwōdow/ It is the concern of the state that every one uses his property properly.

Interest repulcitne ut sit finlis litium /interātēs riyaypāblsiai āt sūt fāyns āssyl(y)am/ It concerns the state that there be an end of lawsuits. It is for the general welfare that a period be put to litigation.

Interference. To check; hamper; hinder; infringe; encroach; trespass; disturb; intervene; intermeddle; interpose. To enter into, or to take part in, the concerns of others. People ex rel. Benefit Ass'n of Railway Employees v. Miner, 387 Ill. 393, 56 N.E.2d 353, 356.

Infringement. In patent law, this term designates a collision between rights claimed or granted; that is, where a person claims a patent for the whole or any integral part of the ground already covered by an existing patent or by a pending application. Term refers to Patent Office proceeding designed to determine priority of invention between two or more parties claiming same subject matter. Philco Corp. v. Radio Corp. of America, D.C.Del., 276 F.Supp. 24, 26. See Infringement.

Interim /intraim/. Lat. In the meantime; meanwhile; temporary; between. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. See also Interlocutary.
Interim committitur /ɪntərɪm kəmɪˈdɑːtər/. “In the meantime, let him be committed.” An order of court (or the docket-entry noting it) by which a prisoner is committed to prison and directed to be kept there until some further action can be taken, or until the time arrives for the execution of his sentence.

Interim curator /ɪntərɪm kəˈrɪdər/. In old English law, a person appointed by justices of the peace to take care of the property of a felon convict, until the appointment by the crown of an administrator or administrators for the same purpose.

Interim financing. A short-term loan usually obtained to pay for construction costs of building or house, with final financing to be covered by mortgage.

Interim officer. One appointed to fill the office during a temporary vacancy, or during an interval caused by the absence or incapacity of the regular incumbent.

Interim order. One made in the meantime, and until something is done.

Interim receipt. A receipt for money paid by way of premium for a contract of insurance for which application is made. If the risk is rejected, the money is refunded, less the pro rata premium.

Interim statements. In accounting, statements issued for periods less than the regular, annual accounting period. Most corporations are required to issue interim statements on a quarterly basis.

Interinsurance exchange /ɪntərˈɪnsərənsˈɛxənd/; Reciprocal exchange (q.v.).

Interior Department. Executive level department of federal government overseeing agencies concerned with Indian affairs, mining, fish and wildlife, geologic research, land management, national parks and monuments, territories, flood control, conservation, public works, and related areas. See also Bureau of Land Management.

Interlaqueare /ɪntərˈlækwiˈɛrə/. In old English practice, to link together, or interchangeably. Writs were called “interlaqueata” where several were issued against several parties residing in different counties, each party being summoned by a separate writ to warrant the tenant, together with the other warrantors.

Interlineation. The act of writing between the lines of an instrument; also what is written between lines. See also Interpolate.

Interlining. The practice whereby a carrier, whose certificated routes do not reach the shipment destination, transfers the shipment to another carrier for delivery. Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. U. S., Mass., 371 U.S. 115, 83 S.Ct. 217, 221, 9 L.Ed.2d 177. See also Joint through rate.

Interlocking directorate. A board of directors linked with that of another corporation by interlocking directors so that the businesses managed by them are to some degree under one control. Jack Tar of Ark., Inc. v. National Wells Television, Inc., 234 Ark. 306, 351 S.W.2d 848, 850.

Situation where places or seats on boards of directors of several different corporations or banks are filled by the same persons. This situation has the potential for antitrust violations (where e.g. the corporations or banks are competitors) and as such is controlled by Clayton Act (Sec. 8), 15 U.S.C.A. § 19.

Interlocutory /ɪntərˈlɒk(ə)ˈdɛri/. Provisional; interim; temporary; not final. Something intervening between the commencement and the end of a suit which decides some point or matter, but is not a final decision of the whole controversy.

As to interlocutory Costs; Decree; Injunction; Judgment; Order; and Sentence, see those titles. See also Intermediate order.

Interlocutory appeal. An appeal of a matter which is not determinable of the controversy, but which is necessary for a suitable adjudication of the merits. See also Final decision rule.

Interlocutory Appeals Act. Federal Act which grants discretion to the courts of appeals to review any interlocutory order whatever in a civil case if the trial (i.e. federal district court) judge, in making the order, has stated in writing that the order involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of litigation. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1292(b).

Interloper. Persons who interfere or intermeddle into business to which they have no right. Persons who enter a country or place to trade without license. One who meddles in affairs which are none of his business and for which he has no responsibility; an intruder; an intermeddler. Encroachment on rights of others.

Intermarriage. See Miscegenation.

Intermeddle. To interfere wrongly with property or the conduct of business affairs officiously or without right or title. See also Interfere; Interloper.

Not a technical legal term, but sometimes used with reference to the acts of an executor de son tort or a negotiorum gestor in the civil law.

Intermediary. An arbitrator or mediator. A broker; one who is employed to negotiate a matter between two parties, and who for that purpose may be agent of both; e.g. insurance broker. See also Finder.

Intermediary bank. Any bank to which an item is transferred in the course of collection except the depositary or payor bank. U.C.C. § 4–105(c).

Intermediate. Intervening; interposed during the progress of a suit, proceeding, business, etc., or between its beginning and end. See Interlocutory; Intervention.

Intermediate account. In probate law, an account of an executor, administrator, or guardian filed subsequent to his first or initial account and before his final account. An account filed with the court for the purpose of disclosing the acts of the person accounting and the state or condition of the fund in his hands, and not made the subject of a final judicial settlement.
Intermediate courts. Those courts which have general jurisdiction, either trial or appellate or both, but which are below the court of last resort in the jurisdiction.

Intermediate order. An order made between the commencement of the action and its final determination, incident to and during its progress, which does not determine the cause but only some intervening matter relating thereto; one that is not directly appealable. See Interlocutory.

In terminis terminatus /in ternamans ternamantabas/. In terms of determination; exactly in point. In express or determinate terms.

Intermittent easement. See Easement.

Intermittent stream. A stream, the flow of which in the state of nature is interrupted either from time to time during the year or at various places along its course, or both. U. S. v. Fallbrook Public Utility Dist., D.C. Cal., 109 F.Supp. 28, 78.

Intermixture of goods. Confusion of goods; the confusing or commingling together of goods belonging to different owners in such a way that the property of no particular owner can be separately identified or extracted from the mass. See also Confusion of goods.

Intern. To restrict or confine a person or group of persons, particularly in time of war (e.g. enemy aliens). An advanced student or recent graduate in a professional field; one trained in a profession allied to medicine who undergoes a period of practical clinical experience prior to practicing his profession. Regents of University of Michigan v. Michigan Employment Relations Commission, 38 Mich.App. 55, 195 N.W.2d 875, 878. See also Internment.

Internal. Relating to the interior; comprised within boundary lines; of interior concern or interest; domestic, as opposed to foreign.

Internal act. That which transpires within a person or organization or government as contrasted with a happening outside such.

Internal affairs of corporation. In conflicts, the rights and liabilities of a corporation are determined by the local law of the state which has the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 302(1). Such affairs are generally left to courts of the state of incorporation.

Internal commerce. See Commerce.

Internal improvements. With reference to governmental policy and constitutional provisions restricting taxation or the contracting of public debts, this term means works of general public utility or advantage, designed to promote facility of intercommunication, trade, and commerce, the transportation of persons and property, or the development of the natural resources of the state, such as railroads, public highways, turnpikes, and canals, bridges, the improvement of rivers and harbors, systems of artificial irrigation, and the improvement of water powers; but it does not include the building and maintenance of state institutions.

Internal police. A term sometimes applied to the police power, or power to enact laws in the interest of the public safety, health, and morality, which is inherent in the legislative authority of each state, is to be exercised with reference only to its domestic affairs and its own citizens, and is not surrendered to the federal government. See also Police power.

Internal revenue. Governmental revenues from internal sources by way of taxes as contrasted with revenues from customs and foreign sources.

Internal Revenue Code (I.R.C.). That body of law which codifies all federal tax laws including income, estate, stamp, gift, excise, etc. taxes. Such laws comprise Title 26 of U.S. Code, and are implemented by Treasury Regulations and Revenue Rulings.

Internal Revenue Service. The Internal Revenue Service (I.R.S.) is responsible for administering and enforcing the internal revenue laws, except those relating to alcohol, tobacco, firearms, explosives, and wagering. Basic I.R.S. activities include providing taxpayer service and education; determination, assessment, and collection of internal revenue taxes; determination of pension plan qualification and exempt organization status; and preparation and issuance of rulings and regulations to interpret the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

Internal Security. That branch of law and government (e.g. CIA, FBI) dealing with measures to protect the country from subversive activities.

Internal security acts. Federal Acts (Smith Act, 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 2385, 2386; McCarran Act, 50 U.S.C.A. § 781 et seq.) controlling and making illegal subversive activities of communist organizations and other groups whose purpose is to overthrow or disrupt the government.

Internal waters. Such as lie wholly within the body of the particular state or country. See also Inland waters.

International agreements. Treaties and other agreements of a contractual character between different countries or organizations of states (foreign) creating legal rights and obligations between the parties.

International commerce. See Commerce.

International Court of Justice. Judicial arm of the United Nations. It has jurisdiction to give advisory opinions on matters of law and treaty construction when requested by the General Assembly, Security Council or any other international agency authorized by the General Assembly to petition for such opinion. It has jurisdiction, also, to settle legal disputes between nations when voluntarily submitted to it. Its judgments may be enforced by the Security Council. Its jurisdiction and powers are defined by statute, to which all member states of the U.N. are parties. Judges of such court are elected by the General Assembly and Security Council of U.N.
International jurisdiction. Power of a court or other organization to hear and determine matters between different countries or persons of different countries or foreign states. See International Court of Justice.

International law. The law which regulates the intercourse of nations; the law of nations. The customary law which determines the rights and regulates the intercourse of independent nations in peace and war.

International Monetary Fund. Agency of United Nations established to stabilize international exchange and promote balanced international trade.

International Shoe Case. Due process requires that a foreign corporation be "present" within a state by a measure of minimal activity within the state for suits to be maintained against it in the state. International Shoe Co. v. State of Washington, etc., 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. See also McGee v. International Life Ins. Co., 355 U.S. 220, 78 S.Ct. 199, 2 L.Ed.2d 223; Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283. See Minimal contacts.

Interment. The detainment or confinement of enemy aliens or persons suspected of disloyalty in specially designated areas; e.g. Japanese during World War II. Johnson v. Eisentrager, 339 U.S. 763, 70 S.Ct. 936, 94 L.Ed. 1255.

Interuncio /intarnínus(h)(iy)ow/. A minister of a second order, charged with the affairs of the papal court in countries where that court has no nuncio.

Interuncius /intarnínus(h)(iy)as/. A messenger between two parties; a go-between. Applied to a broker, as the agent of both parties.

Inter pares /intar périyiz/. Between peers; between those who stand on a level or equality, as respects diligence, opportunity, responsibility, etc.

Inter partes /int ár párdyiz/. Between parties. Instruments in which two persons unite, each making conveyance to, or engagement with, the other, are called "papers inter partes."

Judgment inter partes. See Judgment in personam.

Interpellate /intarpélyet/*pálýet/. To address with a question, especially when formal and public; originally used with respect to proceedings in the French legislature. Used in reference to questions by the court to counsel during an argument.

Interpellation /intarpélyeshan/. In the civil law, the act by which, in consequence of an agreement, the party bound declares that he will not be bound beyond a certain time.

Interplea /intarpliy/. A plea by which a person sued in respect to property disclaims any interest in it and demands that rival claimants shall litigate their titles between themselves and relieve him from responsibility. See Interpleader.

Interpleader. When two or more persons claim the same thing (or fund) of a third, and he, laying no claim to it himself, is ignorant which of them has a right to it, and fears he may be prejudiced by their proceeding against him to recover it, he may join such claimants as defendants and require them to interplead their claims so that he may not be exposed to double or multiple liability. A defendant exposed to similar liability may obtain such interpleader by way of cross-claim or counterclaim. Interpleader in federal court is governed by the federal Interpleader Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 1335, and Fed.R. Civ. P. 22. Similar statutes and court rules govern interpleader in state courts.

Interpol. International Criminal Police Organization; a coordinating group for international law enforcement.

Interpolate /intárpaléyeyt/. To insert (additional or false) words in a complete instrument or document, thus altering meaning of such. See also Interlineation.

Interpolated terminal reserve. The method used in valuing insurance policies for gift and death tax purposes when the policies are not paid-up at the time of their transfer.

Interpolation /intárpaléyeshan/. The act of interpolating; the words interpolated. See also Interlineation; Interpretation.

Interposition /intarpézishan/. The doctrine that a state, in the exercise of its sovereignty, may reject a mandate of the federal government deemed to be unconstitutional or to exceed the powers delegated to the federal government. The doctrine denies constitutional obligation of states to respect Supreme Court decisions with which they do not agree. Bush v. Orleans Parish School Bd., D.C.La., 188 F.Supp. 916. The concept is based on the 10th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States reserving to the states powers not delegated to the United States. Historically, the doctrine emanated from Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (Dall.) 419, wherein the state of Georgia, when sued in the Supreme Court by a private citizen of another state, entered a remonstrance and declined to recognize the court's jurisdiction. The U.S. Supreme Court rejected this doctrine of interposition in Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, 78 S.Ct. 1401, 3 L.Ed.2d 5.

Interpret. To construe; to seek out the meaning of language; to translate orally from one tongue to another.

Interpretaet concordare leges legibus, est optimus interpretandi modus /intárpráteryiy et köjkardériy liyiyji liyabas, ést óptamas intárprátednay mówdas/. To interpret, and [in such a way as] to harmonize laws with laws, is the best mode of interpretation.

Interpretatio chartarum benigne facienda est, ut res magis valeat quam pereat /intárprátyesh(iy)ow kárterám banigníy féys(h)iyénda ést ét ríy z méýyas
Interpretation. The art or process of discovering and ascertaining the meaning of a statute, will, contract, or other written document. The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas.

It is said to be either "legal," which rests on the same authority as the law itself, or "doctrinal," which rests upon its intrinsic reasonableness. Legal interpretation may be either "authentic," when it is expressly provided by the legislator, or "usual," when it is derived from unwritten practice. Doctrinal interpretation may turn on the meaning of words and sentences, when it is called "grammatical," or on the intention of the legislator, when it is described as "logical." When logical interpretation stretches the words of a statute to cover its obvious meaning, it is called "extensive:" when, on the other hand, it avoids giving full meaning to the words, in order not to go beyond the intention of the legislator, it is called "restrictive."

As to strict and liberal interpretation, see Construction. See also Broad interpretation; Last antecedent rule.

Construction distinguished. In the strict usage of this term, "construction" is a term of wider scope than "interpretation;" for, while the latter is concerned only with ascertaining the sense and meaning of the subject-matter, the former may also be directed to explaining the legal effects and consequences of the instrument in question. Hence interpretation precedes construction, but stops at the written text. Interpretation and construction of written instruments are not the same. A rule of construction is one which either governs the effect of an ascertained intention, or points out what the court should do in the absence of express or implied intention, while a rule of interpretation is one which governs the ascertainment of the meaning of the maker of the instrument. In re Union Trust Co., 89 Misc. 69, 151 N.Y.S. 246, 249.

These two terms are however, commonly used interchangeably.

Close or strict interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called "literal." Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensiva, called, also, "liberal interpretation") adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excessans) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle.

Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio vafer), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

In the civil law, authentic interpretation of laws is that given by the legislator himself, which is obligatory on the courts. Customary interpretation (also called "usual") is that which arises from successive or concurrent decisions of the court on the same subject-matter, having regard to the spirit of the law, jurisprudence, usages, and equity: as distinguished from "authentic" interpretation, which is given by the legislator himself.

Interpretation clause. A section of a statute which defines the meaning of certain words occurring frequently in the other sections.

Interpretatio talis in ambiguis semper fienda est ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum (interpretatio vater), by which the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio vafer), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

Interrogation. In criminal law, process of questions propounded by police to person arrested or suspected to seek solution of crime. Such person is entitled to be informed of his rights, including right to have counsel present, and the consequences of his answers. If the police fail or neglect to give these warnings, the questions and answers are not admissible in evidence at the trial or hearing of the arrested person. Miranda v. State of Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694. See also Confession; Custodial interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Custodial interrogation. Questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way. See also Miranda Rule.

Interrogatoire (interrogatwär). In French law, an act which contains the interrogatories made by the judge.
to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused.

Interrogatories /intərˈɒgətəri/ /ˈɪntəˌrɒɡəˌtərē/ . A set or series of written questions drawn up for the purpose of being propounded to a party, witness, or other person having information of interest in the case.

A discovery device consisting of written questions about the case submitted by one party to the other party or witness. The answers to the interrogatories are usually given under oath, i.e., the person answering the questions signs a sworn statement that the answers are true. Fed.R.Civ.P. 33.

The court may submit to the jury, together with appropriate forms for a general verdict, written interrogatories upon one or more issues of fact the decision of which is necessary to a verdict. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 49.

In terrorem /ˈɪn tɛrroʊrəm/ . Lit. In fright or alarm or terror. In terror or warning; by way of threat. Applied to legacies given upon condition that the recipient shall not dispute the validity or the dispositions of the will; such a condition being usually regarded as a mere threat. See In terrorem clause.

In terrorem clause. A provision in a document such as a lease or will designed to frighten a beneficiary or lessee into doing or not doing something; e.g., clause in a will providing for revocation of a bequest or devise if the legatee or devisee contests the will. A condition "in terrorem" is a provision in a will which threatens beneficiaries with forfeiture of their legacies and bequests should they contest validity or dispositions of will. Taylor v. Rapp, 217 Ga. 654, 124 S.E.2d 271, 272.

In terrorem populi /ˈɪn tɛrroʊrəm ˈpɔpjuˌlɪ/ . Lat. To the terror of the people. A technical phrase formerly necessary in indictments for riots.

Interruptio /ˌɪntrəˈpɜːʃəʊər/ . Lat. Interruption. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit prescriptionem semel obtentam /ˌɪntrəˈpɜːʃəʊər ˌmɪltəˈpɜːʃəʊəl ˈnɒn ˈtɒl ˈprɛskrishəˈʃəʊnəm ˈsɛməl əbˈtɛntəm/ . Frequent interruption does not take away a prescription once secured.

Interruption. A break in continuity or uniformity. The occurrence of some act or fact, during the period of prescription, which is sufficient to arrest the running of the statute of limitations. It is said to be either "natural" or "civil," the former being caused by the act of the party; the latter by the legal effect or operation of some fact or circumstance. Interruption of the possession is where the right is not enjoyed or exercised continuously; interruption of the right is where the person having or claiming the right ceases the exercise of it in such a manner as to show that he does not claim to be entitled to exercise it.

Inter rusticos /ˈɪntər rʌstəˈkoʊs/ . Among the illiterate or unlearned.

Intersection. As applied to a street or highway means the space occupied by two streets at the point where they cross each other. Space common to both streets or highways, formed by continuing the curb lines. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickson, 27 Tenn.App. 752, 173 S.W.2d 714, 718.

Point of intersection of two roads is the point where their middle lines intersect. But the term may also mean the point which each of two approaching vehicles will reach at the same moment. "Intersection" may also apply where street or highway runs into but without crossing another; e.g. a "T" intersection.

Inter se or inter sese /ˌɪntər ˈsiː ˌɪntər ˈsiːz/ . Lat. Among or between themselves; used to distinguish rights or duties between two or more parties from their rights or duties to others.

Intersposial. Between husband and wife.

Interspousal immunity. See Husband-wife tort actions.

Interstate. Between two or more states; between places or persons in different states; concerning or affecting two or more states politically or territorially. See also Intrastate commerce.

Interstate agreements. See Interstate compact.

Interstate and foreign commerce. Commerce between a point in one State and a point in another State, between points in the same State through another State or through a foreign country, between points in a foreign country or countries through the United States, and commerce between a point in the United States and a point in a foreign country or in a Territory or possession of the United States, but only insofar as such commerce takes place in the United States. The term "United States" means all the States and the District of Columbia. 18 U.S.C.A. § 831.

Interstate commerce. Traffic, intercourse, commercial trading, or the transportation of persons or property between or among the several states of the Union, or from or between points in one state and points in another state; commerce between two states, or between places lying in different states. Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L.Ed. 23; Wabash, etc. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U.S. 557, 7 S.Ct. 4, 30 L.Ed. 244. It comprehends all the component parts of commercial intercourse between different states. Furst v. Brewster, 282 U.S. 493, 51 S.Ct. 295, 296, 75 L.Ed. 478. See Balancing of interests.

Interstate Commerce Act. The act of Congress of February 4, 1887 (49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.), designed to regulate commerce between the states, and particularly the transportation of persons and property, by carriers, between interstate points, prescribing that charges for such transportation shall be reasonable and just, prohibiting unjust discrimination, rebates, draw-backs, preferences, pooling of freights, etc., requiring schedules of rates to be published, establishing a commission to carry out the measures enacted, and prescribing the powers and duties of such commission and the procedure before it.

Interstate Commerce Commission. The I.C.C. was created by Congress to regulate, in the public interest, carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act which are engaged in transportation in interstate commerce and in foreign commerce to the extent that it takes place within the United States. Surface transportation under the Commission's jurisdiction includes railroads, trucking companies, bus lines, freight forwarders, water carriers, oil pipelines, transportation brokers, and express agencies. The regulatory laws vary with the type of transportation; however, they generally involve certification of carriers seeking to provide transportation for the public, rates, adequacy of service, purchases, and mergers. The I.C.C. assures that the carriers it regulates will provide the public with rates and services that are fair and reasonable.

Interstate compact. A voluntary agreement between two or more states which is designed to meet common problems of the parties concerned. Compacts on major matters must receive the consent of the U.S. Congress as specified in Article I, Section 10 of the Constitution. They usually relate to such things as conservation, boundary problems, education, port control, flood control, and penal matters.

Interstate extradition. The reclaimation and surrender, according to due legal proceedings, of a person who, having committed a crime in one of the states of the Union, has fled into another state to evade justice or escape prosecution. Art. IV, § 2, U.S. Const. See Extradition; Interstate rendition.

Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act. Federal Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1701 et seq.), the purpose of which is to provide purchasers and lessees of undeveloped land with the information they need in order to make an informed decision with regard to the land being sold or leased. As indicated by its title, this is a "disclosure" act.

Interstate law. That branch of law which affords rules and principles for the determination of controversies between citizens of different states in respect to mutual rights or obligations, in so far as the same are affected by the diversity of their citizenship or by diversity in the laws or institutions of the several states.

Interstate rendition. Right of one state to demand from asylum state surrender of a fugitive from justice from the demanding state when the fugitive is found in the asylum state. Art. IV, § 2, U.S. Const. Application of Dugger, 17 Ariz.App. 297, 497 P.2d 413. Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. See Extradition.

Interval ownership. Type of ownership of second (i.e., vacation) home whereby the property is owned for only an interval (e.g., two weeks or a month) of the year. Each owner receives a deed covering his interval period.

Intervening act. Such act of third person in order to break chain of causation and obviate liability for original breach of duty must be a superseding cause and one which original wrongdoer was not bound to anticipate as the natural or ordinary result of his acts. Littell v. Argus Production Co., C.C.A.Kan., 78 F.2d 955, 957. See also Intervening cause.

Intervening agency. To render an original wrong a remote cause, an "intervening agency" must be independent of such wrong, adequate to produce the injury, so interrupting the natural sequence of events as to produce a result different from what would have been produced, and one that could not have been reasonably expected from the original wrong. An independent "intervening agency" which will protect the original wrongdoer must be the efficient cause of the injury of which complaint is made, and not a negligent act or omission of such agency concurring with or succeeding the original negligence permitted by the original wrongdoer to continue and which in the natural course of events results in such injury. In short, the result prevented by the intervening agency must be the injury complained of, and not the requalit for that injury. Swanson v. Slagal, 212 Ind. 394, 8 N.E.2d 993, 1000. See also Intervening cause.

Intervening cause. The "intervening cause," which will relieve of liability for an injury, is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and the injury, turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed and which could not have been reasonably anticipated. An act of an independent agency which destroys the causal connection between the negligent act of the defendant and the wrongful injury; the independent act being the immediate cause, in which case damages are not recoverable because the original wrongful act is not the proximate cause. An "intervening efficient cause" is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and injury, and itself becomes direct and immediate cause of injury. Philbaum v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 315 Ill. 131, 145 N.E. 806, 808.

In criminal law, a cause which comes between an antecedent and a consequence; it may be either independent or dependent, but in either case it is sufficient to negate criminal responsibility. See also Intervening act; Intervening agency.

Intervening damages. See Damages.

Intervening force. One which actively operates in producing harm to another after the actor's negligent act or omission has been committed. Walborn v. Epley, 148 Pa.Super. 417, 24 A.2d 668, 671; American Mut. Liability Ins. Co. v. Buckley & Co., C.C.A.Pa., 117 F.2d 845, 847.

Intervenor. An intervenor is a person who voluntarily interposes in an action or other proceeding with the leave of the court. See Intervention.

Intervention. The procedure by which a third person, not originally a party to the suit, but claiming an interest in the subject matter, comes into the case, in order to protect his right or interpose his claim. The grounds and procedure are usually defined by various state statutes or Rules of Civil Procedure; e.g., Fed.R. Civil P. 24. Intervention may exist either as a matter of right (Rule 24(a)) or at the discretion of the court (Rule 24(b)).

In English ecclesiastical law, the proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject-matter in dispute, in order the better to pro-
Inter vivos gift. A gift made when donor is living and provides that gift take effect while donor is living as contrasted with testamentary gift which is to take effect on death of donor (testator).

Inter vivos transfer. A transfer of property during the life of the owner. To be distinguished from testamentary transfers where the property passes at death.

Inter vivos trust. Trust created during lifetime of settlor and to become effective in his lifetime as contrasted with a testamentary trust which takes effect at death of settlor or testator. See also Trust.

Intestable. One who has not testamentary capacity; e.g., an infant, lunatic, or person civilly dead.

Intestacy. The state or condition of dying without having made a valid will, or without having disposed of his property by will. The phrase “in the absence of a will” has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, “at,” “inside of,” and “to,” and has been understood to mean a proper, friendly relation of the parties, but it is frequently used to convey the idea of an improper relation.

Intestat. Without making a will. A person dies intestat who either has made no testament at all or has made one not legally valid or is irreconcilably factum est; aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est; aut nemo ex eo heres exstitit. A person dies intestat who either has made no testament at all or has made one not legally valid; or if the testament he has made be revoked, or made useless; or if no heir has come forward.

In the course of employment. The phrase “in the course of” employment, as used in workers’ compensation acts, relates to time, place and circumstances under which accident occurred, and means injury happened while worker was at work in his or her employer’s service. Peter Kiewitt Sons’ Co. v. Industrial Commission, 88 Ariz. 164, 354 P.2d 28, 30.

Intimacy. As generally applied to persons, it is understood to mean a proper, friendly relation of the parties, but it is frequently used to convey the idea of an improper relation.

Intimate. Close in friendship or acquaintance, familiar, near, confidential. Atkins Corporation v. Toumy, 6

Intimidation. Unlawful coercion; extortion; duress; putting in fear. To take, or attempt to take, “by intimidation” means willfully to take, or attempt to take, by putting in fear of bodily harm. Such fear must arise from the willful conduct of the accused, rather than from some mere temperamental timidity of the victim; however, the fear of the victim need not be so great as to result in terror, panic, or hysteria.

Intitle. An old form of “entitle.”

Into. A preposition signifying to the inside of; within. It expresses entrance, or a passage from the outside of a thing to its interior, and follows verbs expressing motion. It has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, “at,” “inside of,” and “to,” and has been distinguished from the words “from” and “through.”

Intol and uttol. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or bought in and sold out.
In totidem verbis /in tocýdýdam várbas/. In so many words; in precisely the same words; word for word.

In toto /in tocýdow/. In the whole; wholly; completely; as the award is void in toto.

In toto et pars continetur /in tocýdow et párz könntiñjýdor/. In the whole the part also is contained.

Intoxicating liquor. Any liquor used as a beverage, and which, when so used in sufficient quantities, ordinarily or commonly produces entire or partial intoxication. Any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such proportion that it will produce intoxication when imbibed in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Frisvold v. Leahy, 15 Cal.App.2d 752, 60 P.2d 151, 153. See also Alcoholic liquors.

Intoxication. Term comprehends situation where, by reason of drinking intoxicants, an individual does not have the normal use of his physical or mental faculties, thus rendering him incapable of acting in the manner in which an ordinarily prudent and cautious man, in full possession of his faculties, using reasonable care, would act under like conditions. Hendy v. Geary, 105 R.I. 419, 252 A.2d 435, 441.

A disturbance of mental or physical capacities resulting from the introduction of substances into the body. Model Penal Code, § 2.08.

The fact that a person charged with a crime was in an intoxicated condition at the time the alleged crime was committed is a defense only if such condition substantially incapable of knowing or understanding the wrongfulness of his conduct and of conforming his conduct to the requirements of law. An act committed while in a state of voluntary intoxication is not less criminal by reason thereof, but when a particular intent or other state of mind is a necessary element to constitute a particular crime, the fact of intoxication may be taken into consideration in determining such intent or state of mind.

Under most state statutes dealing with driving while intoxicated, "intoxication" includes such by alcohol or by drug or by both.

Confirmed habits of intoxication caused by voluntary and excessive use of liquor is a ground for divorce under many state divorce statutes.

See also Habitual drunkenness; Intemperance.

Public intoxication. Public intoxication is being on a highway or street or in a public place or public building while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, narcotics or other drug to the degree that one may endanger himself or other persons or property, or annoy persons in his vicinity.

Intoximeter. A trade name for scientific breath testing device that operates on assumption that concentration of blood alcohol bears fixed relation to concentration of alcohol in the deep lung, or alveolar air. Also commonly called breathalyzer test.

Intra /intra/. Lat. In; near; within. "Intra" or "inter" has taken the place of "intra" in many of the more modern Latin phrases.

Intra anni spatium /intra äñay spéysh(iy)am/. Within the space of a year.

In traditionibus scriptorum, non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum est, inspicitur /in tradishiyownbas skriptórám, nón kwó dwik stdam ést, séd kwó dwik jéstim ést, ànspisódar/. In the delivery of writings, not what is said, but what is done, is looked to.

Intra fidem /intra fáydam/. Within belief; credible.

In trajectu /in traék(y)uw/. In the passage over; on the voyage over.

Intraliminal /intralimanál/. In mining law, the term "intraliminal rights" denotes the right to mine, take, and possess all such bodies or deposits of ore as lie within the four planes formed by the vertical extension downward of the boundary lines of the claim; as distinguished from "extraliminal," or more commonly "extralateral," rights.

Intra luctus tempus /intra laktas tempus/. Within the time of mourning.

Intra menia /intra miyn(i)yam/. Within the walls (of a house). A term applied to domestic or menial servants.

Intramural. Within the walls. Existing within. The confines of an institution or governmental body. The powers of a municipal corporation are "intramural" and "extramural"; the one being the powers exercised within the corporate limits, and the other being those exercised without.

In transitu /in tràns(z)at(y)uw/. In transit; on the way or passage; while passing from one person or place to another. In the course of transportation.

Intra parietae /intra paráyadiz(y)ew/. Between walls; among friends; out of court; without litigation.

Intra prasidía /intra prásid(i)yam/. Within the defenses. See Infra prasidía.

Intra quatuor maria /intra kwóduwar màriya/. Within the four seas.

Intrastate commerce. Commerce within a state, as opposed to commerce between states (i.e. interstate). See also Balancing of Interests; Commerce; compare Interstate commerce.

Intra vires /intra várjyiyz/. An act is said to be intra vires ("within the power") of a person or corporation when it is within the scope of his or its powers or authority. It is the opposite of ultra vires (q.v.).

Intrinsecum servitium /ontrínzakam sarvish(iy)am/. Lat. In old English law, common and ordinary duties with the lord's court.

Intrinsic. Internal; inherent. Pertaining to the essential nature of a thing.

Intrinsic fraud. That fraud which occurs within framework of actual conduct of trial and pertains to and affects determination of issues presented therein, and it may be accomplished by perjury, or by use of false or forged instruments, or by concealment or misrepresentation of evidence. Auerbach v. Samuels, 10 Utah 2d 152, 349 P.2d 1112, 1114. Fraud is "intrinsic fraud" where judgment is founded on fraudulent instruments or perjured evidence or the fraudulent actions pertain to an issue involved in original action and litigated therein. Alleghany Corp. v. Kirby, D.C. N.Y., 218 F.Supp. 164, 183.

Species of fraud which renders the document void as, for example, an instrument signed by one who had neither knowledge nor reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge of its character of its essential terms, is not enforceable even by a holder in due course because such fraud is intrinsic. U.C.C. § 3-305(2)(c).

Intrinsic value. The true, inherent and essential value of thing, not depending upon accident, place or person but same everywhere and to everyone. King v. U. S., D.C.Colo., 292 F.Supp. 767, 776. The value of the thing itself, rather than any special features which make its market value different.

Introduction. The part of a writing which sets forth preliminary matter, or facts tending to explain the subject.

Intromission. Introduction; admission.

In English law, term means dealings in stock, goods, or cash of a principal coming into the hands of his agent, to be accounted for by the agent to his principal.

Intruder. One who enters upon land without either right of possession or color of title. In a more restricted sense, a stranger who, on the death of the ancestor, enters on the land, unlawfully, before the heir can enter. Williams v. Alt, 226 N.Y. 283, 123 N.E. 499, 500. Also one who intrudes on office and assumes to exercise its functions without legal title or color of right thereto. State ex rel. City of Republic v. Smith, 345 Mo. 1158, 139 S.W.2d 929, 933; Alleger v. School Dist. No. 16, Newton County, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 660, 663. See Encroachment; Intrusion; Trespass.

Intrusion. Act of wrongfully entering upon or taking possession of property of another. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

At common law, a species of injury by ouster or amotion of possession from the freehold, being an entry of a stranger, after a particular estate of freehold is determined, before him in remainder or reversion. Boylan v. Deinzer, 45 N.J.Eq. 485, 18 A. 119, 121.

Intrust. To confer a trust upon; to deliver to another something in trust or to commit something to another with a certain confidence regarding his care, use or disposal of it. See also Bailment; Fiduciary; Trust.

Intutus /antyûwëdas/. Lat. A view; regard; contemplation. Diverso intuito (q.v.), with a different view.

Inundation. To flood or swamp. The overflow of waters by coming out of their natural bed or confines. See also Backwater; Flood; Water; Water course.

Inuere /inûér/. To take effect; to result. In property law, to come to the benefit of a person or to fix his interest therein.

Inurement /inûrûmënt/. Useful, beneficial; serving to the use or benefit of a person or thing. Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U.S. 578, 25 L.Ed. 618.

Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis /inûýûwûdâs léyôyr ét sânyiû frûk(t)yûw nôn ést afêktâs liyâs/. Useless and fruitless labor is not the effect of law. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, chargeable, and unprofitable.

In utroque jure /in yatrôôkwiw jûriy/. In both laws; i.e., the civil and canon law.

Invadire /inûvûdiyêriy/. To pledge or mortgage lands.

Invadiatâ /inûvûdiyësh(û)yow/. A pledge or mortgage.

Invadiatûs /inûvûdiyëdâs/. One who is under pledge; one who has had sureties or pledges given for him.

Invalid. Vain; inadequate to its purpose; not of binding force or legal efficacy; lacking in authority or obligation. See also Illegal; Void; Voidable.

Invasion. An encroachment upon the rights of another. The incursion of an army for conquest or plunder. Act of invading; intrusion; encroachment.

Invasiones /inûvûz(h)iôôôwnîyi/.. The inquisition of serjeanties and knights' fees.

Invasion of corpus principal. Payments made from the sum created to generate income (e.g. trust res) and not from the income so generated.

Invasion of privacy. The unwarranted appropriation or exploitation of one's personality, publicizing one's private affairs with which public has no legitimate concern, or wrongful intrusion into one's private activities, in such a manner as to cause mental suffering, shame or humiliation to person of ordinary sensibility. Shorter v. Retail Credit Co., D.C.S.C., 251 F.Supp. 329, 330. Violation of right which one has to be left alone and unnoticed if he so chooses. Such invasion may constitute an actionable tort. See Eavesdropping; Privacy Acts.

Invecta et illata /invêktâ èd sleyôys/. Lat. In the civil law, things carried in and brought in. Articles brought into a hired tenement by the hirer or tenant, and which became or were pledged to the lessor as security for the rent.

Inveigle. To "inveigle" means to lure or entice or lead astray, by false representations or promises, or other deceitful means.

Invenlinus libellum famosum et non corrupens punitur /invîyûn(i)yûn(û)dûz lâyêlâm famôwôsm èt nôn kar-åmpôndûz pûwûnôdô/. He who finds a libel and does not destroy it is punished.

Invent. To find out something new; to devise, contrive, and produce something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment; particularly applied to machines, mechanical appliances, compositions, and patentable inventions of every sort. To create. E. W. Bliss Co.
v. United States, 248 U.S. 37, 39 S.Ct. 42, 43, 63 L.Ed. 112. See also Invention; Patent.

Inventio /in'ven(sh)yow/. In the civil law, finding; one of the modes of acquiring title to property by occupancy.

In old English law, a thing found; as goods or treasure-trove. The plural, "inventiones," is also used.

Invention. In patent law, the act or operation of finding something new; the process of contriving and producing something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment. Also the article or contrivance or composition so invented. Smith v. Nichols, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 112, 22 L.Ed. 566; Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901.

Invention is a concept; a thing involved in the mind; it is not a revelation of something which exists and was unknown, but is creation of something which did not exist before, possessing elements of novelty and utility in kind and measure different from and greater than what the art might expect from skilled workers. Pursche v. Atlas Scraper & Engineering Co., C.A.Cal., 300 F.2d 467, 472. The finding out—the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist, and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyment of mankind. Not every improvement is invention; but to entitle a thing to protection it must be the product of some exercise of the inventive faculties and it must involve something more than what is obvious to persons skilled in the art to which it relates. Mere adaptation of known process to clearly analogous use is not invention. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 79 F.2d 948, 952, 953.

Inventive skill has been defined as that intuitive faculty of the mind put forth in the search for new results, or new methods, creating what did not before exist, or bringing to light what lay hidden from vision; it differs from a suggestion of that common experience which arose spontaneously and by a necessity of human reasoning in the minds of those who had become acquainted with the circumstances with which they had to deal. Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901. Invention, in the nature of improvements, is the double mental act of discovering, in existing machines, processes or articles, some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it.

For "Examination of invention", see Examination. See also Patent.

Inventiones /in'ven(sh)iöw'niz/. See Inventio.

Inventor. One who invents or has invented. One who finds out or contrives some new thing; one who devises some new art, manufacture, mechanical appliance, or process; one who invents a patentable contrivance. See Invention.

Inventory. A detailed list of articles of property; a list or schedule of property, containing a designation or description of each specific article; quantity of goods or materials on hand or in stock; an itemized list of the various articles constituting a collection, estate, stock in trade, etc., with their estimated or actual values. In law, the term is often applied to such a list made by an executor, administrator, or assignee in bankruptcy.

Goods held for sale or lease or furnished under contracts of service; also, raw materials, work in process or materials used or consumed in a business. U.C.C. § 9–109(4). Also, written schedule of such goods.

In ventre sa mere /in'ven'tre sa mar/. L. Fr. In his mother's womb; spoken of an unborn child.

Inventus /in'ven(t)us/. Lat. Found. Thesaurus invention, treasure-trove. Non est inventus, [he] is not found.

In veram quantitatem fidejussor teneatur, nisi pro certa quantitate accessit /in viram kwôntatéydam fôðìjyóssar têñìjéyðar, nîsîs prôô sârđa kwôntatéydi skôsést/. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity, unless he agree for a certain quantity.

In verbis, non verba, sed res et ratio, quereunda est /in vêrbös nôn vêrbâ, sêð rîyê tê réysh(i)yôw, kwêrendô ëst/. In the construction of words, not the mere words, but the thing and the meaning, are to be inquired after.

Inventitare /in'venòtràri/. To make proof of a thing.

Inverse condemnation. A cause of action against a government agency to recover the value of property taken by the agency, though no formal exercise of the power of eminent domain has been completed. Lincoln Loan Co. v. State, By and Through State Highway Commission, Or.App., 536 P.2d 450, 451.

Inverse order of alienation doctrine. Under this doctrine, mortgage or other lienor, where land subject to lien has been aliened in separate parcels successively, shall satisfy his lien out of land remaining in grantor or original owner if possible, and, if that be insufficient, he shall resort to parcels aliened in inverse order of their alienation. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A. N.C., 74 F.2d 881, 884.

Invest. See Investment.

Investigate. To follow up step by step by patient inquiry or observation. To trace or track; to search into; to examine and inquire into with care and accuracy; to find out by careful inquisition; examination; the taking of evidence; a legal inquiry. See also Discovery; Inspection.

Investigatory powers. Authority conferred on governmental agencies to inspect and compel disclosure of facts germane to the investigation. See also Inquest; Inspection laws; Search-warrant; Subpoena.

Investitive fact /in'vestîdav fêkt/. The fact by means of which a right comes into existence; e.g., a grant of a monopoly; the death of one's ancestor.

Investiture /in'vestîchár/. A ceremony which accompanied the grant of lands in the feudal ages, and consisted in the open and notorious delivery of possession in the presence of the other vassals, which perpetuated among them the era of their new acquisition at the time when the art of writing was very little known; and thus the evidence of the property was reposed in Investment. An expenditure to acquire property or other assets in order to produce revenue; the asset so acquired. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. Securities & Exchange Commission v. Wickham, D.C.Minn., 12 F.Supp. 245, 247.

To purchase securities of a more or less permanent nature, or to place money or property in business ventures or real estate, or otherwise lay it out, so that it may produce a revenue or income. See also Investment contract.

To clothe one with the possession of a fief or benefice. See Investiture. For "Capital investment", see Capital. See also Legal Investments; Legal list; Prudent Man Rule.

Investment advisor. Any person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who, for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. Uniform Securities Act, § 401(f).

Investment banker. An underwriter, the middleman between the corporation issuing new securities and the public. The usual practice is for one or more investment bankers to buy outright from a corporation a new issue of stocks or bonds. The group forms a syndicate to sell the securities to individuals and institutions. Investment bankers also distribute very large blocks of stocks or bonds—perhaps held by an estate. Thereafter the market in the security may be over-the-counter or on a stock exchange.

Investment banking. Underwriting and selling primarily new issues of stocks and bonds to investors. See Investment banker.

Investment bill. Type of bill of exchange purchased at a discount and intended to be held to maturity in the form of an investment.

Investment company. Any issuer which: (1) is or holds itself out as being engaged primarily, or proposes to engage primarily, in the business of investing, reinvesting, or trading in securities; (2) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face-amount certificates of the installment type, or has been engaged in such business and has any such certificates outstanding; or (3) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of investing, reinvesting, owning, holding, or trading in securities, and owns or proposes to acquire investment securities having a value exceeding 40 percentum of the value of such issuer's total assets (exclusive of Government securities and cash items) on an unconsolidated basis. Investment Company Act, § 3.

A company or trust which uses its capital to invest in other companies. There are two principal types: the closed-end and the open-end, or mutual fund. Shares in closed-end investment companies are readily transferable in the open market and are bought and sold like other shares. Capitalization of these companies remains the same unless action is taken to change. Open-end funds sell their own new shares to investors, stand ready to buy back their old shares, and are not listed. Open-end funds are so called because their capitalization is not fixed; they issue more shares as demanded. See also Mutual fund.

Investment contract. A contract, transaction or scheme whereby a person invests his money in a common enterprise and is led to expect profits solely from the efforts of the promoter or a third party. S. E. C. v. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 298, 66 S.Ct. 1100, 1103, 90 L.Ed. 1244, 1249. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. See also Investment contract; Security.

Recapture of investment tax credit.

Investment trust. A company which sells its own stock and invests the money in stocks, real estate, and other investments. See also Mutual fund; Real estate investment trust.

In vinculis /vin′kyləs/. In chains; in actual custody. Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppression and his necessities impose on him.

Inviolability /in′vələb′lədə. The attribute of being secured against violation. Safe from trespass or assault.

In viridi observania /in vírady óžarvánísh(ly)/. Present to the minds of men, and in full force and operation.

Invitation. In the law of negligence, and with reference to trespasses on realty, invitation is the act of one who solicits or incites others to enter upon, remain in, or make use of, his property or structures thereon, or who so arranges the property or the means of access to it or of transit over it as to induce the reasonable belief that he expects and intends that others shall come upon it or pass over it. Thus the proprietor of a store, theatre or amusement park "invites" the public to come upon his premises for such purposes as are connected with its intended use.

The differences in duties of care owed as between and among licensees, business guests and social guests have been eliminated in many jurisdictions so that today reasonable care is owed to all lawful visitors and this phrase includes all but trespassers. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43.

An invitation may be express, when the owner or occupier of the land by words invites another to come upon it or make use of it or of something thereon; or it may be implied when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe that the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adapted and prepared and allowed to be used.

See also Attractive nuisance doctrine; Invitee.

Invitation to bid. Type of advertisement used by one who desires bids to be submitted for a particular job; it usually contains sufficient specifications to permit an intelligent bid.

Invited error. Underlying basis for rule of "invited error" is that where one party offers inadmissible evidence, which is received, opponent may then offer similar facts whose only claim to admission is that they negative or explain or counterbalance prior inadmissible evidence, presumably upon the same fact, subject or issue. Wynn v. Sundquist, 259 Or. 125, 485 P.2d 1085, 1090. See also Error.

Invitee. A person is an "invitee" on land of another if (1) he enters by invitation, express or implied, (2) his entry is connected with the owner's business or with an activity the owner conducts or permits to be conducted on his land and (3) there is mutuality of benefit or benefit to the owner. Madrazo v. Michaels, 1 Ill.App.2d 583, 274 N.E.2d 635, 638.

The leading English case of Indermaur v. Dames laid down the rule that as to those who enter premises upon business which concerns the occupier, and upon his invitation express or implied, the latter is under an affirmative duty to protect them, not only against dangers of which he knows, but also against those which with reasonable care he might discover. The case has been accepted in all common law jurisdictions, and the invitee, or as he is sometimes called the business visitor, is placed upon a higher footing than a licensee. The typical example, of course, is the customer in a store. There is however a conflict of decisions as to whether certain visitors are to be included in the definition of invitee. The minority view is that there must be some economic benefit to the occupier before his duty to the visitor attaches. The majority view holds however that the basis of liability is not any economic benefit to the occupier, but a representation to be implied when he encourages others to enter to further a purpose of his own, that reasonable care has been exercised to make the place safe for those who come for that purpose; e.g. persons attending free public lectures, persons using municipal parks, playgrounds, libraries and the like. The element of "invitation" however must exist.

See also Licensee; Public invitee.

Invito /invídow/. Lat. Being unwilling. Against or without the assent or consent.

Invito beneficium non datur /invídow bén­fish(i)y/nón déydar/. A benefit is not conferred on one who is unwilling to receive it; that is to say, no one can be compelled to accept a benefit.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur /in vówsébas védéndam nón éy kwéw séd sëd kwid séméyár/. In discourses, it is to be considered not from what, but to what, it is advanced.

Invoice. A written account, or itemized statement of merchandise shipped or sent to a purchaser, consignee, factor, etc., with the quantity, value or prices and charges annexed, and may be as appropriate to a consignment or a memorandum shipment as it is to a sale. Joseph B. Cooper & Son, Inc. v. Finlay Depts., Inc., 11 Misc.2d 382, 174 N.Y.S.2d 265, 269. Document showing details of a sale or purchase transaction. A list sent to a purchaser, factor, consignee, etc., containing the items, together with the prices and charges of merchandise sent or to be sent to him. A writing made on behalf of an importer, specifying the merchandise imported, and its true cost or value. See also Consular invoice.

Invoice book. A book in which invoices are copied.

Involuntary. Without will or power of choice; opposed to volition or desire. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q.v.) or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary, then, which is performed under duress, force, or coercion.

As to involuntary Bankruptcy; Indebtedness; Non­suit; and Trust, see those titles.

Involuntary alienation. A loss of or parting with property by attachment, levy, sale for taxes or other debts. See also Involuntary conveyance.

Involuntary confession. Confession is "involuntary" if it is not the product of an essentially free and unrestrained choice of its maker or where maker's will is overborne at the time of the confession. People v. Pickerel, 32 Ill.App.3d 822, 336 N.E.2d 776, 780.

Term refers to confessions that are extracted by any threats of violence, or obtained by direct or implied promises, or by exertion of improper influence. Phillips v. State, Okl.Cr., 330 P.2d 209, 214. See also Interrogation.
Involuntary conversion. The loss or destruction of property through theft, casualty, or condemnation. Any gain realized on an involuntary conversion can, at the taxpayer's election, be considered nonrecognizable for Federal income tax purposes if the owner reinvests the proceeds within a prescribed period of time in property that is similar or related in service or use. I.R.C. § 1033.

Involuntary conversion for federal income tax purposes must result from (1) destruction of property in whole or in part; or (2) theft; or (3) actual seizure; or (4) requisition or condemnation or threat or imminent of requisition or condemnation. Hitke v. C. I. R., C.A.II., 296 F.2d 639, 643, 644.

Involuntary conveyance. A transfer of real property without the consent of the owner, such as in a divorce, in condemnation, etc. See also Involuntary alienation; Sheriff's sale.

Involuntary deposit. In the law of bailments, one made by the accidental leaving or placing of personal property in the possession of another, without negligence on the part of the owner, or, in cases of fire, shipwreck, inundation, riot, insurrection, or the like extraordinary emergencies, by the owner of personal property committing it out of necessity to the care of any person.

Involuntary discontinuance. A discontinuance is involuntary where, in consequence of technical omission, mispleading, or the like, the suit is regarded as out of court, as where the parties undertake to refer a suit that is not referable, or omit to enter proper continuances.

Involuntary lien. A lien, such as a tax lien, judgment lien, etc., which attaches to property without the consent of the owner, rather than a mortgage lien, to which the owner agrees.

Involuntary manslaughter. The unlawful killing of a human being in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. An unlawful homicide, unintentionally caused by an act which constitutes such disregard of probable harmful consequences to another as to constitute wanton or reckless conduct. Com. v. McCauley, 355 Mass. 554, 246 N.E.2d 425, 428. See also Manslaughter.

Involuntary payment. One obtained by fraud, oppression, or extortion, or to avoid the use of force to coerce it, or to obtain the release of the person or property from detention.

Involuntary servitude. The condition of one who is compelled by force, coercion, or imprisonment, and against his will, to labor for another, whether he is paid or not. Ex parte Wilson, 114 U.S. 417, 5 S.Ct. 935, 29 L.Ed. 88; In re Slaughterhouse Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 69, 21 L.Ed. 394; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U.S. 275, 17 S.Ct. 326, 41 L.Ed. 715. Slavery, peonage, or compulsory labor for debts; all of which are prohibited by the 13th Amendment, U.S.Const.

Involuntary transfer. See Involuntary conveyance.

Involuntary trust. An implied trust which arises because the law imposes trust-like consequences on certain transactions where, for example, an agent breaches his fiduciary duty and buys property in his own name which rightfully should have been purchased for the benefit of his principal (constructive trust) or A supplies the funds for purchase of property by B with the understanding that A will own it but title will be taken in the name of B (resulting trust).

In witness whereof /in witnás (h)wérôv/. The initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands", etc. A translation of the Latin phrase "in cujus rei testimonium".

Iota. The minutest quantity possible. Iota is the smallest Greek letter. The word "jot" is derived therefrom.

IOU. A memorandum of debt, consisting of these letters ("I owe you"), a sum of money and the debtor's signature, is termed an "IOU".

Ipse leges cuplunt ut jure regantur /ipsiy liyijyz kyúwpiyant ât júriy ragentar/. The laws themselves require that they should be governed by right.

Ipsa /ipsiy/. Lat. He himself; the same; the very person.

Ipsa dixit /ipsiy diksat/. He himself said it; a bare assertion resting on the authority of an individual.

Ipsissimus verbi /ipsyssimas vàrbos/. In the identical words; opposed to "substantially".

Ipsa facto /ipsow fáktoj/. By the fact itself; by the mere fact. By the mere effect of an act or a fact.

Ipsa jure /ipsow júriy/. By the law itself; by the mere operation of law.

IRA. Individual Retirement Account.

Ira furor brevis est /âyrya fyüürí briyivas êst/. Anger is a short insanity.

Ira mutus /âyrya mówðas/. Lat. Moved or excited by anger or passion. A term sometimes formerly used in the plea of son assault demesne.

IRAN. Individual Retirement Annuity.

IRB. Individual Retirement Bond.

I.R.C. Internal Revenue Code.

I.R.D. Income in respect of decedent.

Ire ad largum /âyriy âd lárgam/. Lat. To go at large; to escape; to be set at liberty.

Iron-safe clause. A clause in policies of fire insurance, requiring the insured to preserve his books and inventory in an iron or fireproof safe, or in some secure place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the building. This provision casts on the insured the responsibility for the loss of books and records if due to the wrongful act or negligence of himself or his employees in failing to comply with the requirement.

Irrational. Unreasonable, foolish, illogical, absurd; a person may be irrational in such sense, and still not be insane in the legal sense.
Irreconcilable differences. No-fault ground for dissolution of marriage under many state divorce statutes. See also Irretrievable breakdown of marriage.

Irrecusable /irıkuyużabal/. A term used to indicate a certain class of contractual obligations recognized by the law which are imposed upon a person without his consent and without regard to any act of his own. They are distinguished from recusable obligations which are the result of a voluntary act on the part of a person on whom they are imposed by law. A clear example of an irrecusable obligation is the obligation imposed on every man not to strike another without some lawful excuse. A recusable obligation is based upon some act of a person bound, which is a condition precedent to the genesis of the obligation. These terms were first suggested by Prof. Wigmore in 8 Harv.Law Rev. 200.

Irregular. Not according to rule; improper or insufficient, by reason of departure from the prescribed course.

As to irregular Deposit; Indorsement; Process; and Succession, see those titles.

Irregularity. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done. Violation or nonobservance of established rules and practices. The want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding; consisting either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or doing it in an unreasonable time or improper manner. The technical term for every defect in mechanics of proceedings, or the mode of conducting an action or defense, as distinguishable from defects in pleadings. Term is not synonymous with "illegality."

In Canon law, any impediment which prevents a man from taking holy orders.

Irregular judgment. One rendered contrary to the course and practice of the court. Duplin County v. Ezzell, 223 N.C. 531, 27 S.E.2d 448, 450.

Irrelevancy. The absence of the quality of relevancy, as in evidence or pleadings. The quality or state of being inapplicable or inappertinent to a fact or argument. Irrelevancy, in an answer, consists in statements which are not material to the decision of the case; such as do not form or tender any material issue. Such irrelevancy in pleadings may be stricken on motion of party. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f). See also Immaterial; Irrelevant; Irrelevancy.

Irrelevant. Not relevant; immaterial; not relating or applicable to the matter in issue; not supporting the issue or fact to be proved. Evidence is irrelevant where it has no tendency to prove or disprove any issue of fact involved. Irrelevant evidence is commonly objected to and disallowed at trial. Fed. Evid.R. 402. See also Immaterial; Impertinence; Irrelevancy.

Irrelevancy.

An allegation is irrelevant, where the issue made by its denial has no effect upon the cause of action or no connection with the allegation. In this connection, "redundant" is almost a synonym for "irrelevant". Irrelevant matters may be stricken from pleadings on motion of party. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f).

Irrelevant answer. See Answer.

Irreparable damages. See Damages.

Irreparable harm. See Injury (Irreparable injury).

Irreparable injury. See Injury.

Irrepleviable /iraplévıyabal/. That cannot be replevied or delivered on sureties. Spelled, also, "irreplevisable" /iraplévızabal/.

Irresistible force. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as the inroads of a hostile army.

Irresistible impulse. As used as insanity defense, an "irresistible impulse" means an impulse to commit an unlawful or criminal act which cannot be resisted or overcome because mental disease has destroyed the freedom of will, the power of self-control, and the choice of actions. Snider v. Smyth, D.C.Va., 187 F.Supp. 299, 302. The "irresistible impulse" test for insanity is a test which is broader than the M'Naghten test. Under the "irresistible impulse" test a person may avoid criminal responsibility even though he is capable of distinguishing between right and wrong, and is fully aware of the nature and quality of his acts, provided that he establishes that he was unable to refrain from acting. Com. v. Walzack, 468 Pa. 210, 360 A.2d 914, 919. See also Insanity; M'Naghten Rule.

Irretrievable breakdown of marriage. As a no-fault ground for divorce means one in which either or both spouses are unable or unwilling to cohabit and for which there are no prospects for reconciliation. Harwell v. Harwell, 233 Ga. 89, 209 S.E.2d 625. In some jurisdictions, the sole ground for so-called no-fault divorce. See also Irreconcilable differences.

Irrevocable letter of credit. A confirmed irrevocable letter of credit, irrevocable letter, or a confirmed credit is a contract to pay on compliance with its terms, and needs no formal acknowledgment or acceptance other than is therein stated. See also Letter of credit.

Irrigation company. A private corporation, authorized and regulated by statute in several states, having for its object to acquire exclusive rights to the water of certain streams or other sources of supply, and to convey it by means of ditches or canals through a region where it can be beneficially used for agricultural purposes, and either dividing the water among Irrigation district. A public and quasi-municipal corporation authorized by law in several states, comprising a defined region or area of land which is susceptible of one mode of irrigation from a common source and by the same system of works. These districts are created by proceedings in the nature of an election under the supervision of a court, and are authorized to purchase or condemn the lands and waters necessary for the system of irrigation proposed and to construct necessary canals and other works, and the water is apportioned ratably among the landowners of the district.

Irrogare /ɪrˈɡeɪrɪ/. Lat. In the civil law, to impose or set upon, as a fine. To inflict, as a punishment. To make or ordain, as a law.

Irrotulatio /ɪrˈɒtʃəlɪəʃ(ɪ)ˈəʊw/. L. Lat. An enrolling; a record.

I.R.S. Internal Revenue Service.

Is. This word, although normally referring to the present; often has a future meaning, but is not synonymous with "shall have been." It may have, however, a past signification, as in the sense of "has been."

Island. A piece of land surrounded by water. Land in a navigable stream which is surrounded by water only in times of high water is not an island within the rule that the state takes title to newly formed islands in navigable streams.

Isolated sale. Isolated sale which does not entail implied warranty of merchantability is one which occurs only once or at least very infrequently within ordinary course of business. McHugh v. Carlton, D.C.S.C., 369 F.Supp. 1271, 1277.

Is qui cognoscit /ɪs kwʌɪ kɔɡˈnɒs(ə)t/. Lat. The cognizer in a fine. Is cui cognoscitur /ɪs kə(y)ʉwˈʃaɪ kɔɡˈnɒsədər/, the cognizee.

Issuable. Leading or tending to, or producing, an issue; relating to an issue or issues.

Issuable defense. In common law pleading, a technical expression meaning a plea to the merits, properly setting forth a legal defense, as distinguished from a plea in abatement, or any plea going only to delay the case.

Issuable plea. In common law pleading, a plea to the merits; a traversable plea. A plea such that the adverse party can join issue upon it and go to trial. It is true a plea in abatement is a plea, and if it be properly pleaded, issues may be found on it. In the ordinary meaning of the word "plea," and of the word "issuable," such pleas may be called "issuable pleas," but, when these two words are used together, "issuable plea," or "issuable defense," they have a technical meaning, to-wit, pleas to the merits.

Issuable terms. In the former practice of the English courts, Hilary term and Trinity term were called "issuable terms," because the issues to be tried at the assizes were made up at those terms. But the distinction was superseded by the provisions of the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875.

Issue, v. To send forth; to emit; to promulgate; as, an officer issues orders, process issues from a court. To put into circulation; as, the treasury issues notes. To send out, to send out officially; to deliver, for use, or authoritatively; to go forth as authoritative or binding. When used with reference to writs, process, and the like the term is ordinarily construed as importing delivery to the proper person, or to the proper officer for service, etc. With respect to securities, refers to act or process of offering stocks or bonds for sale to public or institutional investors.

In financial parlance the term "issue" seems to have two phases of meaning. "Date of issue" when applied to notes, bonds, etc., of a series, usually means the arbitrary date fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run, without reference to the precise time when convenience or the state of the market may permit of their sale or delivery. When the securities are delivered to the purchaser, they will be "issued" to him, which is the other meaning of the term.

In commercial law, means the first delivery of an instrument to a holder or a remitter. U.C.C. § 1-102(1)(a).

Issue, n. The act of issuing, sending forth, emitting or promulgating; the giving a thing its first inception; as, the issue of an order or a writ.

See also Date of issue.

Pleading and Practice

A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the allegations and pleadings of the parties, is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other. A fact put in controversy by the pleadings; such may either be issues of law or fact. An "issue" is a disputed point or question to which parties to action have narrowed their several allegations and upon which they are desirous of obtaining either decision of court on question of law or of court or jury on question of fact. Muller v. Muller, 235 Cal.App.2d 341, 45 Cal.Rptr. 182, 184.

Real or feigned. A real or actual issue is one formed in a regular manner in a regular suit for the purpose of determining an actual controversy. A feigned issue is one made up by direction of the court, upon a supposed case, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a jury upon some question of fact collaterally involved in the cause. Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, to ascertain the truth of a disputed fact. They are also used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious.

Ultimate issue. Signifies either such an issue as within itself is sufficient and final for the disposition of the entire case or one which in connection with other issues will serve such end. First State Bank of Seminole v. Dillard, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 407, 410.

See also Failure of issue; Feigned issue; Genuine issue; Issue of fact; Issue of law; Issue preclusion; Lawful issue; Legal issue; Ultimate issue.

Descendant’s Estates

All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. Offspring; progeny; descent; lineage; lineal descendants. In this sense, the word includes not only a child or children, but all other descendants in whatever degree, and it is so construed generally in deeds. But when used in wills, it is, of course, subject to the rule of construction that the intention of the testator, as ascertained from the language used by him; and hence issue may, in such a connection, be restricted to children, or to descendants living at the death of the testator, where such an intention clearly appears.

The term “issue” and “descendants” have been held to be co-extensive and interchangeable. In re Radt’s Will, 6 Misc.2d 716, 167 N.Y.S.2d 817, 818.

The word “issue” in a will is generally a word of limitation, and when so used, is sometimes said to be equivalent to “heirs of the body”. But it has been pointed out in other cases that this word is not as strong a word of limitation as the words “heirs of the body”, and yields readily to a context indicating its use as a work of purchase.

The term is commonly held to include only legitimate issue. Large v. National City Bank of Cleveland, Ohio Prob., 170 N.E.2d 309, 312; contra Will of Hoffman, 53 A.D.2d 55, 385 N.Y.S.2d 49. The general rule in most states is that the illegitimate child may inherit from his mother but not from his father, but may inherit from both if legitimated.

Many state intestacy statutes provide that an adopted child is “issue” of his or her adopted parents.

Securities

Any of a corporation’s securities offered for sale at a certain time, or the act or process of distributing (i.e. offering) such for sale. A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted at one and the same time. See also Distribution; Issuer; Offering; Prospectus; Underwriter; When issued.

Hot issue. A public offering where securities, after their initial sale to the public, are resold in the open market at prices substantially higher than the original public offering price.

New issue. A stock or bond sold by a corporation for the first time. Proceeds may be used to retire outstanding securities of the company, for new plant or equipment, or for additional working capital.

Issue of fact. An issue of fact arises when a fact is maintained by one party and is controverted by the other in the pleadings. General Elec. Co. v. Employment Relations Bd., 3 Wis.2d 227, 88 N.W.2d 691, 701. An issue which arises upon a denial in the answer of a material allegation of the complaint or in the reply of a material allegation in the answer.

Issue of law. An issue of law arises where evidence is undisputed and only one conclusion can be drawn therefrom. Chaisson v. Stark, Tex.Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 500, 503. An issue of law arises upon a demurrer to the complaint or answer, or to some part thereof. Cal. C.C.P. § 589.

In making motion for summary judgment, party must show that only issues of law exist for court to consider; i.e. must show that there is no genuine issue of material facts. Fed.R.Civil P. 56.

In pleading, an issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joiner in demurrer on the other. The term “issue” may be so used as to include one of law raised by demurrer to the complaint, as well as one raised by answer.

Issue preclusion. Term means that when a particular issue has already been litigated, further litigation of same issue is barred. Hawkeye Sec. Ins. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., Iowa, 199 N.W.2d 373, 379. As it relates to civil actions, concept of “issue preclusion” is in substance that any fact, question or matter in issue and directly adjudicated or necessarily involved in determination of action before court of competent jurisdiction in which judgment or decree is rendered on merits, is conclusively settled by judgment therein and cannot be relitigated in any future action between parties or privies, either in same court or court of concurrent jurisdiction, while judgment remains unreversed or unvacated by proper authority, regardless of whether claim or cause of action, purpose or subject matter of two suits is same. Palma v. Powers, D.C.Ill., 295 F.Supp. 924, 933. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Res (Res judicata).

Issuer. With respect to obligations on or defenses to a security, “issuer” includes a person who: (a) places or authorizes the placing of his name on a security (otherwise than as authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent or the like) to evidence that it represents a share, participation or other interest in his property or in an enterprise or to evidence his duty to perform an obligation evidenced by the security; or (b) directly or indirectly creates fractional interests in his rights or property which fractional interests are evidenced by securities; or (c) becomes responsible for or in place of any other person described as an issuer in this section. U.C.C. § 8–201(1). Every person who issues or proposes to issue any securities; generally the legal entity owning the securities and which has the responsibility for causing the same to be offered publicly or privately.

Bank or other person issuing a credit. U.C.C. § 5–103(1)(c).

A bailee who issues a document except that in relation to an unaccepted delivery order it means the person who orders the possessor of goods to deliver. Issuer includes any person for whom an agent or employee purports to act in issuing a document if the agent or employee has real or apparent authority to issue documents, notwithstanding that the issuer received no goods or that the goods were misdescribed or that in any other respect the agent or employee violated his instructions. U.C.C. § 7–102(g).

Issue roll. In English practice, a roll upon which the issue in actions at law was formerly required to be entered, the roll being entitled of the term in which the issue was joined. It was not, however, the practice to enter the issue at full length, if triable by the country, until after the trial, but only to make an incipitur on the roll. It was abolished by the rules of Hilary Term, 1834.

Issues and profits. As applied to real estate, comprehend every available return therefrom, whether it arise above or below the surface. “Issues” are goods and profits of the land. Costanzo v. Harris, 71 Wash.2d 254, 427 P.2d 963, 965.

Ita est /āyda ēst/. Lat. So it is; so it stands. In modern civil law, this phrase is a form of attestation added to exemplifications from a notary's register when the same are made by the successor in office of the notary who made the original entries.

Ita lex scripta est /āyda lēks skriptam ēst/. Lat. So the law is written. The law must be obeyed notwithstanding the apparent rigor of its application. 3 Bl. Comm. 430. We must be content with the law as it stands without inquiring into its reasons. 1 Bl. Comm. 32.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio /āyda sēmpar fāyat rālēysh(i)yow āt vāliyat dispazish(i)yow/. Let the interpretation be always such that the disposition may prevail.

Ita te Deus adjuvet /āyda tē diyās ējapvat/. Lat. So help you God. The old form of administering an oath in England, generally in connection with other words, thus: Ita te Deus adjuvet, et sacrosancta Dei Evangelia, So help you God, and God's holy Evangelists. Ita te Deus adjuvet et omnes sancti, So help you God and all the saints.

Ita utere tuo ut alienum non iedas /āyda yūwdray t(y)yūwōw ād ēlijīynam nōn ēydass/. Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbor, or prevent him from enjoying his. Frequently written “Sic utere tuo”, etc. (q.v.)

Item /āydam/. Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. This word was formerly used to mark the beginning of a new paragraph or division after the first, whence is derived the common application of it to denote a separate or distinct particular of an account or bill. One of the portions, equal or unequal, into which anything is divided, or regarded as divided; something less than a whole; a number, quantity, mass, or the like, regarded as going to make up, with others or another, a larger number, quantity, mass, etc., whether actually separate or not; a piece, fragment, fraction, member or constituent. A separate entry in an account or a schedule, or a separate particular in an enumeration of a total. An “item” in an appropriation is an indivisible sum of money dedicated to a stated purpose. Commonwealth v. Dods, 176 Va. 281, 11 S.E.2d 120, 124, 127, 130, 131.

Any instrument for the payment of money, though not negotiable; but not money. U.C.C. § 4–104(1)(g).

Itemize. To set down by items. To state each item or article separately. Used commonly with reference to tax accounting.

Itemized deductions. Certain personal expenditures allowed by the Internal Revenue Code as deductions from adjusted gross income if an individual taxpayer chooses not to use the standard deduction and total itemized deductions exceed the standard deduction (zero bracket amount). Examples include certain medical expenses, interest on home mortgages, state sales taxes, and charitable contributions.

Iter /āydar/. Lat. In the civil law, a way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (præedium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: (1) iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback, or in a litter; (2) actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; (3) via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e.g. via, 8 feet; actus, 4 feet, etc.

In old English law, a journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission.

In maritime law, a way or route. The route or direction of a voyage; the route or way that is taken to make the voyage assured. Distinguished from the voyage itself.

Iteratio /idārēysh(i)yow/. Lat. Repetition. In the Roman law, a bonitary owner might liberate a slave, and the quiritary owner's repetition (iteratio) of the process effected a complete manumission.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum /āydar ēst jās iyānday, āmbyelānday hōmanas, nōn iysh(i)yam jāmēntam sjēnday vēl vahik(y)alam./ A way is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage.

Itinerant /aitynar/. Eyreș, or circuits.

Itinerant. Wandering or traveling from place to place; formerly applied to justices who made circuits. Also applied in various statutory and municipal laws (in the sense of traveling from place to place) to certain classes of merchants, traders, and salesmen.

Itinerant peddling. The going about of a merchant from place to place, meeting and dealing with his customers where he finds them. Good Humor Corporation v. City of New York, 264 App.Div. 620, 36 N.Y.S.2d 85, 91.

Itinerant vendor. This term is variously defined in statutes; e.g., a person engaged in transient business either in one locality or in traveling from place to place selling goods. See also Hawker; Peddler.
J.

Jac. An abbreviation for "Jacobus", the Latin form of the name James; used principally in citing statutes enacted in the reigns of the English kings of that name; e.g., "St. 1, Jac. II."

Jacens /jéȳsan(d)z/. Lat. Lying in abeyance, as in the phrase "hereditas jacens," which is an inheritance or estate lying vacant or in abeyance prior to the ascertainment of the heir or his assumption of the succession.

Jacens hereditas /jéȳsan(d)z har̆iȳdatès/. See Hereditas jacens.

Jack. A kind of defensive coat-armor worn by horsemen in war; not made of solid iron, but of many plates fastened together. Some tenants were bound by their tenure to find it upon invasion.

Jacobus /jákəwbas/. A gold coin an inch and three-eighths in diameter, in value about twenty-five shillings, so called from James I., in whose reign it was first coined. It was also called broad, laurel, and broad-piece. Its value is sometimes put at twenty-four shillings, but Macaulay speaks of a salary of eight thousand Jacobuses as equivalent to ten thousand pounds sterling.

Jactitation /jăktəˈteɪʃən/. Boasting of something which is challenged by another. A false boasting; a false claim; assertions repeated to the prejudice of another’s right. The species of defamation or disparagement of another’s title to real estate known at common law as “slander of title” comes under the head of jactitation, and in some jurisdictions (as in Louisiana) a remedy for this injury is provided under the name of an “action of jactitation.”

Jactitation of marriage. In English ecclesiastical law, the boasting or giving out by a party that he or she is married to some other, whereby a common reputa-sympathy, but adding that any sympathy should be in favor of the arguing counsel's client. Davis v. Franson, 141 Cal.App.2d 263, 296 P.2d 600, 606.

Jaques. In old English law, small money.

Jason clause. Clause in bills of lading which obligates cargo owners to contribute in general average in cases of danger, damage, or disaster resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in management of vessel, her machinery or appurtenances, provided that shipowner shall have exercised due diligence to make vessel in all respects seaworthy, and to have her properly manned, equipped, and supplied. Merklen v. Johnson & Higgins, D.C.N.Y., 3 F.Supp. 897, 898.

Javelin-men /jév(ə)lamén/. In old English law, yeomen retained by the sheriff to escort the judge of assize.

Jay walking. Proceeding diagonally across a street intersection. Also, crossing a street between intersections, or at a place other than a crosswalk.

J.D. Short for "Juris Doctor" or "Doctor of Jurisprudence." This is now the basic law degree, replacing the "L.L.B." in the late 1960's.

Jedburgh justice /jéd(b)arə jəstəs/. Summary justice inflicted upon a marauder or felon without a regular trial, equivalent to "lynch law." So called from a Scotch town, near the English border, where raiders and cattle lifters were often summarily hung. Also written "Jeddart" /jédart/ or "Jedwood" /jédwəd/ justice.

Jencks Act. Following this case, a federal statute was enacted to the same effect; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3500.

Jencks Act or Rule. A criminal defendant in the Federal Court is entitled to access to government documents for assistance in cross-examination of witnesses in order to impeach for prior inconsistent statements. Jencks v. U. S., 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103. Following this case, a federal statute was enacted to the same effect; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3500.

Joefalle /jēfyə/ L. Fr. I have failed; I am in error. An error or oversight in pleading.

Jeopardy. Danger; hazard; peril.

The danger of conviction and punishment which the defendant in a criminal action incurs when a valid indictment has been found, and a petit jury has been impaneled and sworn to try the case and give a verdict in a court of competent jurisdiction. Hanley v. State, 83 Nev. 461, 434 P.2d 440, 442. The condition of a person when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance. For purpose of prohibition against double jeopardy, a court proceeding which may result in incarceration places a person, adult or juvenile, in "jeopardy." Fain v. Duff, C.A. Fla., 488 F.2d 218, 225.

The terms "jeopardy of life and liberty for the same offense," "jeopardy of life or limb," "jeopardy for the same offense," "in jeopardy of punishment," and other similar provisions used in the various constitutions, are to be construed as meaning substantially the same thing.

See also Double jeopardy; Former jeopardy; Legal jeopardy.

Jeopardy assessment. If the collection of a tax appears in question, the IRS may assess and collect the tax immediately without the usual formalities. Also, the IRS has the power to terminate a taxpayer's taxable year before the usual date if it feels that the collection of the tax may be in peril because the taxpayer plans to leave the country.

Jetsam /jétsəm/. Goods which, by the act of the owner, have been voluntarily cast overboard from a vessel, in a storm or other emergency, to lighten the ship. See also Jactus; Jettison.

Jettison /jéstəsən/. The act of throwing overboard from a vessel part of the cargo, in case of extreme danger, to lighten the ship. The thing or things so cast out; jetsam. A carrier by water may, when in case of extreme peril it is necessary for the safety of the ship or cargo, throw overboard, or otherwise sacrifice, any or all of the cargo or appurtenances of the ship. Throwing property overboard for such purpose is called "jettison," and the loss incurred thereby is called a "general average loss." See also Jactus; Jetsam.

Jetty. A projection of stone or other material serving as a protection against the waves.

Jeux de bourse /zhú də buʁ/. Fr. In French law, speculation in the public funds or in stocks; gambling speculations on the stock exchange; dealings in "options" and "futures."

A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things.

J.N.O.V., Abr. Judgment non obstante veredicto; judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Job. The whole of a thing which is to be done. A specific task or piece of work to be done for a set fee or compensation. Employment position. Criminal act (e.g. robbery).

Jobber. One who buys and sells goods for others. One who buys or sells on the stock exchange; a dealer in stocks, shares, or securities. One who buys and sells articles in bulk and resells them to dealers. A merchant buying and selling in job lots. In general, a wholesaler; one who buys and sells small lots; a middleman. Person who does piecework. See also Middleman.

Jocelet /jós(o)lat/. A little manor or farm.

Jocus /jóvkəs/. In old English law, a game of hazard.

Jocus partitus /jóvkəs párdədəs/. In old English practice, a divided game, risk, or hazard. An arrangement which the parties to a suit were anciently sometimes allowed to make by mutual agreement upon a certain hazard, as that one should lose if the case turned out in a certain way, and, if it did not, that the other should gain.
JOHN DOE

John Doe. A fictitious name frequently used to indicate a person for the purpose of argument or illustration, or in the course of enforcing a fiction in the law. The name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment. He was sometimes called "Goodtitle." So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.

The name "John Doe" is, and for some centuries has been, used in legal proceedings as a fictitious name to designate a party until his real name can be ascertained. State v. Rossignol, 22 Wash. 2d 19, 153 P.2d 882, 885.

Join. To unite; to come together; to combine or unite in time, effort, action; to enter into an alliance.

Joinder. Joining or coupling together; uniting two or more constituents or elements in one; uniting with another person in some legal step or proceeding; union; concurrence.

The consent to an agreement or document by a party who has an interest in the subject matter of the agreement or document, but who is not himself an active party to the agreement or document.

Collusive joinder. The joinder of a defendant, commonly a nonresident, for purpose of removal to or confusing jurisdiction on a Federal Court. Bentley v. Halliburton Oil Well Cementing Co., D.C.Tex., 174 F.2d 788, 791.

Compulsory joinder. A person must be joined in an action if complete relief cannot be afforded the parties without his joinder or if his interest is such that grave injustice will be done without him. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a). See Joinder of parties, below.

Joinder in demurrer. In common law pleading, when a defendant in an action tenders an issue of law (called a "demurrer"), the plaintiff, if he means to maintain his action, must accept it, and this acceptance of the defendant's tender, signified by the plaintiff in a similar form of words, is called a "joinder in demurrer."

Joinder in issue. In common law pleading, a formula by which one of the parties to a suit joins in or accepts an issue in fact tendered by the opposite party. Also called "similiter".

Joinder in pleading. In common law pleading, accepting the issue, and mode of trial tendered, either by demurrer, error, or issue, in fact, by the opposite party.

Joinder of claims. Under rules practice, a party asserting a claim to relief as an original claim, counterclaim, cross claim or third party claim may join as many claims as he has against an opposing party whether they are legal or equitable. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(a); New York C.P.L.R. § 601.

Joinder of defendants. Two or more defendants may be charged in the same indictment or information if they are alleged to have participated in the same act or transaction or in the same series of acts or transactions constituting an offense or offenses. Such defendants may be charged in one or more counts together or separately and all of the defendants need not be charged in each count. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(b).

Joinder of error. In proceedings on a writ of error in criminal cases, the joinder of error is a written denial of the errors alleged in the assignment of errors. It answers to a joinder of issue in an action.

Joinder of indictments or informations. The court may order two or more indictments or informations or both to be tried together if the offenses, and the defendants if there is more than one, could have been joined in a single indictment or information. The procedure shall be the same as if the prosecution were such single indictment or information. Fed.R.Crim.P. 13.

Joinder of issue. The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it.

Joinder of offenses. Two or more offenses may be charged in the same indictment or information in a separate count for each offense if the offenses charged, whether felonies or misdemeanors or both, are of the same or similar character or are based on the same act or transaction or on two or more acts or transactions connected together or constituting parts of a common scheme or plan. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(a).

Joinder of parties. The act of uniting as parties to an action all persons who have the same rights or against whom rights are claimed, as either co-plaintiffs or co-defendants. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 and 20.

Necessary and indispensable parties. Prior to 1966 the federal, and most state, courts used classifications to determine if a person should or must be joined in an action. The label "indispensable" was used if the connection to the action of the absentee party was so close that the action should be dismissed unless the party was joined. The label "necessary" was used if the party was one who ought to be joined if this was possible. These classifications proved unsatisfactory and in 1966 Fed.Rule of Civil Proc. 19 was replaced with a new Rule 19, "Joinder of Persons needed for Just Adjudication." Rule 19(a) defines the class of persons who are needed for just adjudication. If an absentee meets this test and is subject to process, the court must require that he be joined. If the absentee is needed for just adjudication and is not subject to process, Rule 19(b) states the factors to be considered in deciding whether to proceed in his absence or to dismiss the action.

Proper parties. If a party has some relation to the action, but it is not so close as to make him a person needed for just adjudication within Rule of Civil Proc. 19(a), he is a "proper" party, and the plaintiff has an option whether to join him if the tests of Rule 20 are met.

Joinder of remedies. Whenever a claim is one therefore cognizable only after another claim has been prosecuted to a conclusion, the two claims may be joined in a single action; but the court will grant relief in that action only in accordance with the relative substantive rights of the parties. In particular, a plaintiff may state a claim for money and a claim to have set aside a conveyance fraudulent as to him, without first having obtained a judgment establishing the claim for money. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(b).

Misjoinder. The improper joining together of parties to a suit, as plaintiffs or defendants, or of different causes of action. Misjoinder, however, is not a ground for dismissal. The improper party is merely dropped on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Civil P. 21. Relief from prejudicial joinder of offenses or defendants in an indictment or information is permitted under Fed.R.Crim.P. 14.

Misjoinder in a criminal prosecution is the charging in separate counts of separate and distinct offenses arising out of wholly different transactions having no connection or relation with each other. Optner v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., 13 F.2d 11, 13.

Nonjoinder. The omission to join some person as party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant, who ought to have been so joined. An omitted party may be added on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Civil P. 21.

Permissive joinder. All persons may join in one action as plaintiffs if they assert any right to relief jointly, severally, or in the alternative in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all these persons will arise in the action. All persons (and any vessel, cargo or other property subject to admiralty process in rem) may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any questions of law or fact common to all defendants will arise in the action. A plaintiff or defendant need not be interested in obtaining or defending against all the relief demanded. Judgment may be given for one or more of the plaintiffs according to their respective rights to relief, and against one or more defendants according to their respective liabilities. Fed.R.Civ.P. 20(a).

Joint. United; combined; undivided; done by or against two or more unitedly; shared by or between two or more; coupled together in interest or liability.

The term is used to express a common property interest enjoyed or a common liability incurred by two or more persons. Thus, it is one in which the obligors (being two or more in number) bind themselves jointly but not severally, and which must therefore be prosecuted in a joint action against them all; distinguished from "joint and several" obligation.

As to joint Ballot; Committee; Contract; Covenant; Creditor; Fiat; Fine; Indictment; Obligation; Obligee; Obligor; Owner; Rate; Resolution; Session; Tenancy; Tenant; Trespass; Trespasser; Trustee; Will, see those titles. As to joint-stock banks, see Bank; joint-stock company, see Company; joint-stock corporation, see Corporation.

Joint action. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants. See Joiner.

Joint adventure. Any association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. A "joint adventure" exists where there is a special combination of two or more persons jointly seeking to profit in some specific venture without actual partnership or corporate designation; it is an association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. Fulton v. Fulton, Mo.App., 528 S.W.2d 146, 155. See also Community of interest; Joint enterprises; Joint venture.

Joint and several contracts. Contracts in which the parties bind themselves both individually and as a unit (jointly).

Joint and several liability. A liability is said to be joint and several when the creditor may sue one or more of the parties to such liability separately, or all of them together at his option. A joint and several bond or note is one in which the obligors or makers bind themselves both jointly and individually to the obligee or payee, so that all may be sued together for its enforcement, or the creditor may select one or more as the object of his suit. Term also refers to the liability of joint tort-feasors. See Contribution; Joint tort-feasors.

Such liability permits the Internal Revenue Service to collect a tax from one or all of several taxpayers. A husband and wife that file a joint income tax return usually are collectively or individually liable for the full amount of the tax liability.

Joint authorship. As to literary property, such exists where there is a common design to the execution of which several persons contribute. Mere alterations, additions or improvements, whether with or without the sanction of the author, will not entitle the person making them to claim to be a joint author of the work. Joint labor in furtherance of a common design. Edward B. Marks Music Corporation v. Jerry Vogel Music Co., D.C.N.Y., 140 F.2d 266, 267.

Joint bank account. An account in the names of two or more persons who have equal right to it, generally with the right of survivorship.

Joint cause of action. See Joinder.

Joint debtors. Persons united in a joint liability or indebtedness. Two or more persons jointly liable for the same debt.

Joint debtors' acts. Statutes enacted in many of the states, which provide that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several defendants, and that, "in an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper". The name is also given to statutes providing that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but jurisdiction is not obtained over the others, the plaintiff may still proceed to trial against those who are before the court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all of the defendants whom he shows to be jointly liable. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 160, 168, 23 L.Ed. 271.

Joint defendants. Persons who are sued and tried together. In criminal law, persons who are indicted for the same crime and tried together. See Joinder; Trial.

Joint enterprise. Also called "common enterprise." The joint prosecution of common purpose under such circumstances that each has authority express or implied to act for all in respect to the control, means or agencies employed to execute such common purpose. Elements necessary to constitute a "joint enterprise" are: (1) an agreement among the group's members, either express or implied; (2) a common purpose that the group intends to carry out; (3) community of pecuniary interest among members of the group in that purpose; and (4) an equal right to a voice in control and direction of the enterprise which gives an equal right of control. Fredrickson v. Kluever, 82 S.D. 579, 152 N.W.2d 346, 348. See also Joint adventure; Joint venture.

Joint estate. Joint estate involves unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession, and joint tenants must have the same interest accruing under the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held under the same undivided possession. Mosser v. Dolsay, 132 N.J.Eq. 121, 27 A.2d 155. See also Joint tenancy.

Joint executors. Co-executors; two or more who are joined in the execution of a will. See also Coexecutor.

Joint feasiors in pari delicto /jóoint fiyzolrz in péray daliktow/. Phrase means as between persons who by concert of action intentionally commit the wrong complained of, there is no right of contribution. Commercial Cas. Ins. Co. v. Leonard, 210 Ark. 575, 196 S.W.2d 919, 920.

Joint indictment. See Indictment.

Joint inventions. These are made when two or more persons jointly work or collaborate in devising and putting into practical form the subject-matter of patent. Altoona Publix Theatres v. American Tri-Ergon Corporation, C.C.A.Pa., 72 F.2d 53, 56.

Jointist. A person established in a definite place of business, for the purpose of illegally selling intoxicants. One who opens up, conducts, or maintains any place for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors.

Joint liability. One wherein joint obligor has right to insist that co-obligor be joined as a codefendant with him, that is, that they be sued jointly. Schram v. Perkins, D.C.Mich., 38 F.Supp. 404, 407. See Contribution; Joinder.

Joint lives. This expression is used to designate the duration of an estate or right which is granted to two or more persons to be enjoyed so long as they both (or all) shall live. As soon as one dies, the interest determines.

Jointly. Unitedly, combined or joined together in unity of interest or liability. Soderberg v. Atlantic Lighter-age Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 15 F.2d 209. In a joint manner; in concert; not separately; in conjunction. To be or become liable to a joint obligation. Kaspar American State Bank v. Oul Homestead Ass'n, 301 Ill.App. 326, 22 N.E.2d 785, 786; Creeton v. Continental Roll & Steel Foundry Co., 155 Pa.Super. 165, 38 A.2d 337, 342. Participated in or used by two or more, held or shared in common.

Jointly acquired property. Property accumulated by joint industry of husband and wife during marriage. See also Community property.

Jointly and severally. See Joint and several contracts; Joint and several liability.

Jointly owned property. See Community property; Joint bank account; Joint tenancy.

Joint offense. One offense committed by two or more persons jointly. Crime committed by the participation of two or more persons. See Conspiracy.

Joint rate. See Joint through rate; Rate.

Jointress, jointuress. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survives him.

Joint return. See Joint tax return.

Joint-stock association. An unincorporated business enterprise with ownership interests represented by shares of stock. It was recognized at common law and by statute is generally treated as an entity for certain purposes.

Joint-stock company. See Joint-stock association.

Joint stock insurance company. An insurance company having a subscribed capital and policyholders having nothing to do with management. Ohio Farmers Indemnity Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ohio, 108 F.2d 665, 667.

Joint tax return. Tax return filed for federal or state taxes by a husband and wife together and each is individually liable. Such return includes the income of both spouses, though one spouse need not have any income. It is normally more beneficial from a tax standpoint for spouses to file a joint return than separate returns.

Joint tenancy. See Tenancy.

Joint through rate. Transportation charge applicable from a point on one transportation line to a point on another transportation line. Occurs when freight is to be shipped to its destination by more than one carrier.

Joint tort. Where two or more persons owe to another the same duty and by their common neglect such other is injured, the tort is "joint." See Joint negligence; Joint tort-feasors.

Joint tort-feasors. Term refers to two or more persons jointly or severally liable in tort for the same injury to Joint trial. The trial of two or more persons for the same or similar offenses conducted within the framework of one trial. See also Joinder; Trial.

Jointure. A freehold estate in lands or tenements secured to the wife, and to take effect on the decease of the husband, and to continue during her life at the least, unless she be herself the cause of its determination. Property provision for wife, made prior to marriage, in lieu of dower.

A one-time grouping of two or more persons in a business undertaking. Unlike a partnership, a joint venture does not entail a continuing relationship among the parties. A joint venture is treated like a partnership for Federal income tax purposes.

See also Community of Interest; Joint adventure; Joint enterprise.

Joint venture corporation. See Corporation.

Joint verdict. Jury verdict covering more than one party to the action and combining two or more verdicts in one. See also Verdict.

Joint will. See Will.

Joker. In political usage, a clause in legislation that is ambiguous or apparently immaterial, inserted to render it inoperative or uncertain without arousing opposition at the time of passage.

Jones Act. Federal statute passed in 1920 which provides that a seaman injured in the course of his employment by the negligence of the owner, master or fellow crew members can recover damages for his injuries. 46 U.S.C.A. § 688. Similar remedies are available under the Act to the personal representative of a seaman killed in the course of his employment. See also Longshoremen’s and Harbor Workers’ Compensation Act.

Jour /zhùwir/. A French word, meaning to enjoy; to have enjoyment of; or to possess.

Jour /zhûr/jûr/. A French word, signifying “day.”

Jour en banc /jûr an bânk/. A day in banc. Distinguished from “jour en pays” (a day in the country), otherwise called “jour en nisi prius.”

Jour in court /jûr an kôrt/. In old practice, day in court; day to appear in court; appearance day. “Every process gives the defendant a day in court.”

Journal. A daily book; a book in which entries are made or events recorded from day to day. The place where transactions are recorded as they occur. The book of original entry.

In maritime law, the journal (otherwise called “log” or “log-book”) is a book kept on every vessel, which contains a brief record of the events and occurrences of each day of a voyage, with the nautical observations, course of the ship, account of the weather, etc. In the system of double-entry bookkeeping, the journal is an account-book into which are transcribed, daily or at other intervals, the items entered upon the day-book, for more convenient posting into the ledger. In the usage of legislative bodies, the journal is a daily record of the proceedings of either house. It is kept by the clerk, and in it are entered the appointments and actions of committees, introduction of bills, motions, votes, resolutions, etc., in the order of their occurrence.

Journal entry. A recording in a journal of equal debits and credits, with, when necessary, an explanation of the transaction.

Journal entry rule. Regularity of enactment of statute may be inquired into by examining legislative journals.

Journalists’ privilege. In the law of defamation, a publisher is protected in actions of defamation if the publication constitutes fair comment on the subject of public officers and employees in matters of public concern. Such privilege is qualified and hence is lost on proof of malice which, in this context, consists in heedless in the reckless disregard of whether it is true or false when, in fact, it is false. New York Times Pub. Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Shield laws.

Journeyman. A craftsman who has progressed through an apprenticeship and is qualified in his trade.

Journeys account. In English practice, a new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court; hence the name of journeys account, that is, journeys accomplished or counted.

Joyriding. The temporary taking of an automobile without intent to deprive owner permanently of the vehicle. People v. Rivera, 185 Colo. 337, 524 P.2d 1082, 1083.
Jubeo /jəbrɪə/. Lat. In the civil law, to order, direct, or command. The word jubeo (I order), in a will, was called a “word of direction,” as distinguished from “precatory words.” To assure or promise. To decree or pass a law.

Judex /jʊwdəks/. Lat. In Roman law, a private person appointed by the prætor, with the consent of the parties, to try and decide a cause of action commenced before him. He received from the prætor a written formula instructing him as to the legal principles according to which the action was to be judged. Hence the proceedings before him were said to be in judicio, as those before the prætor were said to be in jure. A judge who conducted the trial from beginning to end; magistratus.

The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian’s time: therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. The term judex is used with very different significations at different periods of Roman law.

In later and modern civil law, a judge.

In old English law, a juror. A judge, in modern sense, especially—as opposed to justiciarius, i.e., a common-law judge—to denote an ecclesiastical judge.

Judex ad quem /jʊwdəks əd kwɪm/. A judge to whom an appeal is taken.

Judex equitatem semper spectare debet /jʊwdəks lɪkwətɪədəm sɛmpər spektərɪə dɛbət/. A judge ought always to regard equity.

Judex ante oculos equitatem semper habere debet /jʊwdəks əntɪ əkwaɪləʊs ɪkjʊtətəɪm sɛmpər hæbərɪ dɪbət/. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes.

Judex a quo /jʊwdəks ə kwɔ/. In civil law, the judge from whom, as judex ad quem is the judge to whom, an appeal is made or taken.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat, nec proposito domestice voluntatis, sed juxta leges et jura pronomiet /jʊwdəks ˈbəʊnəs ˈnaɪɡ(ə)l əks ɜbətrɪəriʊ s(ə)ˈjʊwəʊw ˈfɛʃɪ(ə)t, nɛk ˈprɒpəstəʊ ˈdəʊməstɪsi ˈvɔlutəntətɪs, sɛd ˈdʒʌksə ˈlɪjɪʒiːz ət ˈjʊra ˈprənəmɪʃɪt/. A good judge should do nothing of his own arbitrary will, nor on the dictate of his personal inclination, but should decide according to law and justice.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvit /jʊwdəks ˈdæmnəʊtər kəm ˈnɒns(ə)z əbˈsɒlvɪt/. The judge is condemned when a guilty person escapes punishment.

Judex datus /jʊwdəks ˈdeɪdəs/. In Roman law, a judge given, that is, assigned or appointed, by the prætor to try a cause.

Judex debet judicare secundum allegata et probata /jʊwdəks ˈdɛbət ˈdʒʌdɪkarə səkəndəm ələɡətə ət ˈprəbətə/. The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex delegatus /jʊwdəks ˈdɛləɡətəs/. A delegated judge; a special judge.

Judex est lex loquens /jʊwdəks ɛst lɛks ˈlʊkwən(d)(ə)z/. A judge is the law speaking [the mouth of the law].
Judge advocate. An officer of the Judge Advocate General's Corps of the Army or the Navy or an officer of the Air Force or the Marine Corps who is designated as a judge advocate. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.

In American usage, the term "judge advocate" no longer refers to any of the parties involved in a court-martial. Instead, it refers to the principal legal adviser on the staff of a military commander (usually with a more definitive title, such as Staff Judge Advocate, Post Judge Advocate, or Command Judge Advocate) or, more broadly, to any officer in the Judge Advocate General's Corps or Department (i.e., branch) of one of the U.S. armed forces. British usage is different.

Judge advocate corps. Staff of Judge Advocate General.

Judge Advocate General. Senior legal officer and chief legal advisor of the Army, Navy, and Air Force and, except when the Coast Guard is operating as a service in the Navy, the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.

Judge de facto. One who holds and exercises the office of a judge under color of lawful authority and by a title valid on its face, though he has not full right to the office, as where he was appointed under an unconstitutional statute, or by an usurper of the appointing power, or has not taken the oath of office.

Judge-made law. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them the legislature never intended. It is perhaps more commonly used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent and decisions. Laws having their source in judicial decisions as opposed to laws having their source in statutes or administrative regulations.

Judge pro tempore /ˈdʒɑːdʒ prəʊ ˈtɛmpərɪ/ One appointed for the term or some part thereof, during which time he exercises all the functions of the regular judge. State ex rel. Hodshire v. Bingham, 218 Ind. 490, 33 N.E.2d 771.

Judge's minutes, or notes. Memoranda usually taken by a judge, while a trial is proceeding, of the testimony of witnesses, or documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence, and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.

Judge trial. Trial conducted before a judge without a jury. Jury waived trial; bench trial; non-jury trial.

The official and authentic decision of a court of justice upon the respective rights and claims of the parties to an action or suit therein litigated and submitted to its determination. The final decision of the court resolving the dispute and determining the rights and obligations of the parties. The law's last word in a judicial controversy, it being the final determination by a court of the rights of the parties upon matters submitted to it in an action or proceeding. Towley v. King Arthur Rings, Inc., 40 N.Y.2d 128, 386 N.Y.S.2d 80, 351 N.E.2d 728, 730. Conclusion of law upon facts found or admitted by the parties or upon their default in the course of the suit. Decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein, Allegheny County v. Maryland Casualty Co., C.C.A.Pa., 132 F.2d 894, 897; State v. Sigle, 196 Wash. 283, 82 P.2d 583, 584. Decision or sentence of the law pronounced by the court and entered upon its docket, minutes or record. Determination of a court of competent jurisdiction upon matters submitted to it. State ex rel. Curran v. Brookes, 142 Ohio St. 107, 50 N.E.2d 995, 998. Determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent judge or court, as the result of an action or proceeding instituted in such court, affirming that, upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not exist.

Term "judgment" under rules practice includes "decree". Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(a). Terms "decision" and "judgment" are commonly used interchangeably.

The term "judgment" is also used to denote the reason which the court gives for its decision; but this is more properly denominated an "opinion."

See also Amendment of judgment; Decree; Enter judgment; Remand; Rendition of judgment; Simulated judgment; Vacation of judgment; Void judgment.

Specific Types of Judgments

Agreed judgment. A judgment entered on agreement of the parties, which receives the sanction of the court, and it constitutes a contract between the parties to the agreement, operates as an adjudication between them and when court gives the agreement its sanction, becomes a judgment of the court. Traveler's Ins. Co. v. U. S., D.C.Tex., 283 F.Supp. 14, 28.

Alternative judgment. One that by its terms might be satisfied by doing either of several acts at the election of the party or parties against whom the judgment is rendered and from whom performance is by the judgment required. A judgment for one thing or another which does not specifically and in a definite manner determine the rights of the parties.

Appealable judgment. One which disposes of all parties and issues in case. Chuning v. Calvert, Mo.App., 452 S.W.2d 580, 582. See also Final judgment, infra.

Arrest of judgment. See Arrest of Judgment.

Assets in futuro, judgment of. One against an executor or heir, who holds at the time no property on which it can operate.
Declaratory judgment. See Declaratory judgment.

Conditional judgment. One whose force depends upon the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties; as, one which may become of no effect if the defendant appears and pleads according to its terms, or one which orders the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mortgagor shall pay the amount decreed within the time limited.

Confession of judgment. At common law, judgment entered where defendant, instead of entering plea, confessed action, or withdrew plea and confessed action. Judgment where a defendant gives the plaintiff a cognovit or written confession of the action by virtue of which the plaintiff enters judgment. The act of a debtor in permitting judgment to be entered against him by his creditor, for a stipulated sum, by a written statement to that effect or by warrant of attorney, without the institution of legal proceedings of any kind; voluntary submission to court's jurisdiction. O'Hara v. Manley, 140 Pa.Super. 39, 12 A.2d 820, 822. Such agreements for confession of judgment are void in many states; e.g. Mass.G.L. c. 231, § 13A.

The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by a term authorizing a confession of judgment if the instrument is not paid when due. U.C.C. § 3-112.

See also Cognovit actionem.

Consent judgment. A judgment, the provisions and terms of which are settled and agreed to by the parties to the action. Hargis v. Hargis, 252 Ky. 198, 66 S.W.2d 59; Matthews v. Looney, 132 Tex. 313, 123 S.W.2d 871, 872. See also Consent (Consent decree); and Agreed judgment, supra.

Contradictory judgment. A judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard, either in support of their claims or in defense. Used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by default.

Declaratory judgment. See Declaratory judgment.

Default and inquiry, judgment by. It establishes right of action of kind properly pleaded in complaint, determines right of plaintiff to recover at least nominal damages and costs, and precludes defendant from offering any evidence on execution of inquiry to show that plaintiff has no right of action. Such type judgment is absolute.

Default judgment. A judgment rendered in consequence of the non-appearance of the defendant. Fed. R.Civl P. 55(a). One entered upon the failure of a party to appear or plead at the appointed time. The term is also applied to judgments entered under statutes or rules of court, for want of affidavit of defense, plea, answer, and the like, or for failure to take some required step in the cause.

Judgments rendered on defendant's default are: Judgment by default; Judgment by non sum informatus; judgment nil dicit. Judgments rendered on plaintiff's default are: Judgment of non pros. (from non prosequitur) and judgment of nonsuit (from non sequitur, or ne suit pas).

Deficiency judgment. A judgment in favor of a creditor for the difference between the amount of the indebtedness and the amount derived from the judicial sale held in order to satisfy the indebtedness. Cameron Brown South, Inc. v. East Glen Oaks, Inc., La.App., 341 So.2d 450, 456. See also Deficiency judgment.

De melioribus damnis. See De melioribus damnis.

Demurrer, judgment on. Such concludes party demurring, because by demurring, a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary and relies on their insufficiency in law. See Demurrer.

Dismissal, judgment of. See Dismissal.

Domestic judgment. A judgment is domestic in the courts of the same state or country where it was originally rendered; in other states or countries it is called foreign. See Foreign judgment, infra.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied or extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment. Or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute.

Execution of judgment. See Execution of judgment or decree.

Face of judgment. See Face of judgment.

Final judgment. One which puts an end to an action at law by declaring that the plaintiff either has or has not entitled himself to recover the remedy he sues for. So distinguished from interlocutory judgments. A judgment which disposes of the subject-matter of the controversy or determines the litigation as to all parties on its merits. A judgment which terminates all litigation on the same right. Appeals in federal courts will only lie from "final" judgments. 28 U.S. C.A. § 1291. See Final decision; Final decision rule.

Foreign judgment. One rendered by the courts of a state or country politically and judicially distinct from that where the judgment or its effect is brought into question. One pronounced by a tribunal of a foreign country, or of a sister state. Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U.S. 287, 11 S.Ct. 92, 34 L.Ed. 670. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act, and also the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act.

General verdict subject to a special case, judgment on. Where at the trial the parties agree on the facts and the only question is one of law and a verdict pro forma is taken and the jury find for the plaintiff generally but subject to the opinion of the court on a special case.

In personam or inter partes. See Judgment in personam or inter partes.

In rem. See Judgment in rem.

Interlocutory judgment. One given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. One which determines some preliminary or subordinate point or plea, or settles some step, question, or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ultimate rights of the parties, or finally put the case out of court. Thus, a judgment or order passed upon any provisional or accessory claim or contention is, in general, merely interlocutory, although it may finally dispose of that particular matter. An "interlocutory judgment" is one which reserves or leaves some further question or direction for future determination. State ex rel. Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Jones, Mo., 396 S.W.2d 601, 603. See Interlocutory appeal.

 Judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

 Judgment of conviction. A judgment of conviction shall set forth the plea, the verdict or findings, and the adjudication and sentence. If the defendant is found not guilty or for any other reason is entitled to be discharged, judgment shall be entered accordingly. The judgment shall be signed by the judge and entered by the clerk. Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(b).

 Judgment on pleadings. After the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings. If, on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c). This device resembles closely a demurrer to the extent that it attacks the pleadings on the same basis as a demurrer.

 Junior judgment. One which was rendered or entered after the rendition or entry of another judgment, on a different claim, against the same defendant.

 Merits, judgment on. One rendered after argument and investigation, and when it is determined which party is in the right, as distinguished from a judgment rendered upon some preliminary or formal or merely technical point, or by default and without trial. A decision that was rendered on the basis of the evidence introduced. Normally, a judgment based solely on some procedural error is not a judgment on the merits. The latter kind of judgment is often referred to as a "dismissal without prejudice." A party who has received a judgment on the merits cannot bring the same suit again. A party whose case has been dismissed without prejudice can bring the same suit again so long as the procedural errors are corrected (i.e., cured) in the later action.

 Money judgment. One which adjudges the payment of a sum of money, as distinguished from one directing an act to be done or property to be restored or transferred. A judgment, or any part thereof, for a sum of money or directing the payment of a sum of money. For enforcement or satisfaction of money judgment, see Execution. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act.

 Nihil dicit. See Nihil dicit.

 Nil capiat per breve or per billa (that he take nothing by his writ, or by his bill). A judgment in favor of the defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

 Nisi. At common law, judgment nisi was a judgment entered on the return of the nisi prius record, which, according to the terms of the postea indorsed thereon was to become absolute unless otherwise ordered by the court within the first four days of the next succeeding term. See also Nihil dicit; Show cause order.

 Nolle prosequi, judgment of. One entered against plaintiff when, after appearance and before judgment, he declares that he will not further prosecute his suit. Merchants Mut. Casualty Co. v. Kiley, 92 N.H. 323, 30 A.2d 681, 683. See also Nolle prosequi.

 Non obstante veredicto. See Non obstante veredicto.

 Non pros. (Non prosequitur [he does not follow up, or pursue]). See Non prosequitur.

 Nonsuit. See Nonsuit.

 Non sum informatus. See Non sum informatus.

 Notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

 Nul tiel record. See Nul tiel record.

 Nunc pro tunc. One entered on a day subsequent to the time at which it should have been entered, as of the latter date. See Nunc pro tunc.

 Offer of judgment. Before trial, a party defending against a claim may serve upon the adverse party an offer to allow judgment to be taken against him for the money or property or to the effect specified in his offer, with costs then accrued. If after service of the offer the adverse party serves written notice that the offer is accepted, either party may then file the offer and notice of acceptance together with proof of service thereof and thereupon the clerk shall enter judgment. Fed.R.Civil P. 68.

 Personal judgment. One imposing on the defendant a personal liability to pay it, and which may therefore be satisfied out of any of his property which is within the reach of process, as distinguished from one which may be satisfied only out of a particular fund or the proceeds of particular property. Judgments in which court has personal jurisdiction over parties. State v. Dreyer, 188 Kan. 270, 362 P.2d 55, 57.

 Pro retorno habendo. A judgment that the party have a return of the goods.

 Quod computat. See Quod computat.

 Quod partes replacitent. See Quod partes replacitent.

 Quod partitio fiat. Interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.

Stet processus. See Stet processus.

Summary judgment. See Summary Judgment.

Verdict, judgment on. The most usual of the judgments upon facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdict. See also Verdict.

Warrant of attorney. See Warrant.

Judgment book. A book required to be kept by the clerk, among the records of the court, for the entry of judgments. Such is called a "civil docket" or "criminal docket" in the federal and many state courts. Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Judgment docket.

Judgment creditor. One who has obtained a judgment against his debtor, under which he can enforce execution. A person in whose favor a money judgment is entered or a person who becomes entitled to enforce it. Owner of an unsatisfied judgment.

Judgment debt. One which is evidenced by matter of record. A debt, whether on simple contract or by specialty, for the recovery of which judgment has been entered up, either upon a cognovit or upon a warrant of attorney or as the result of a successful action.

Judgment debtor. A person against whom judgment has been recovered, and which remains unsatisfied. The term has been construed to include a judgment debtor's successors in interest.

Judgment docket. A list or docket of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection, and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment book.

Judgment, estoppel by. The estoppel raised by the rendition of a valid judgment by a court having jurisdiction. The essence of estoppel by judgment is that there has been a judicial determination of a fact. Price v. Clement, 187 Okl. 304, 102 P.2d 595, 597. It rests upon principles forbidding one to relitigate matter in dispute between parties which has been determined by competent court, on ground that record of judgment imports absolute verity. Where subsequent proceeding is on same cause of action between same parties a former adjudication is conclusive. Kimpton v. Spellman, 351 Mo. 674, 173 S.W.2d 886. Ordinarily, "estoppel" of judgment does not extend to matters not expressly adjudicated. Sonken-Galamba Corporation v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., C.C.A. Mo., 124 F.2d 952, 956; and a judgment or decree without prejudice does not work an "estoppel". In re McDermott, C.C.A.III., 115 F.2d 582, 584. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Issue preclusion; Judicial estoppel; Res (Res judicata).

Judgment execution. The formal or written evidence of the judgment which commands the officer to seize the goods and property of the judgment debtor to satisfy the judgment. Procedure on execution is governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 69. See Execution.

Judgment file. The docket in which the entry of a judgment is recorded and preserved as a permanent court record. Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment docket.

Judgment in personam or inter partes /jajrnant in persónam/*intar párdyz/. A judgment against a particular person, as distinguished from a judgment against a thing or a right or status.

Judgment in rem. An adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular thing or subject matter, by a tribunal having competent authority. Booth v. Copley, 283 Ky. 23, 140 S.W.2d 662, 666. It is founded on proceeding instituted against or on some thing or subject matter whose status or condition is to be determined, Eureka Building & Loan Ass'n v. Shultz, 139 Kan. 435, 32 P.2d 477, 480; or one brought to enforce a right in the thing itself, Federal Land Bank of Omaha v. Jefferson, 229 Iowa 1054, 235 N.W. 855, 857; Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11. It operates directly upon the property. Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11; Guild v. Wallis, 150 Or. 69, 40 P.2d 737, 742. It is a solemn declaration of the status of some person or thing. Jones v. Teat, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 617, 620. It is binding upon all persons in so far as their interests in the property are concerned. Booth v. Copley, 283 Ky. 23, 140 S.W.2d 662, 666; Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11. See also Judgment quasi in rem.

Judgment in retraxit /jajrnant in retráksat/. A judgment which is usually based upon and follows a settlement out of court, and like a judgment on the merits is a bar and estops plaintiff from again proceeding in another suit on same cause of action. Steele v. Beaty, 215 N.C. 680, 2 S.E.2d 854, 856, 857. See Retraxit.

Judgment lien. A lien binding the real estate of a judgment debtor, in favor of the holder of the judgment, and giving the latter a right to levy on the land for the satisfaction of his judgment to the exclusion of other adverse interests subsequent to the judgment. Right to subject land of judgment debtor to satisfaction of judgment. A charge on or attachment of property of one who owes a debt and is subject to a judgment thereon. See also Execution.

Judgment note. A promissory note (also called cognovit note) embodying an authorization to an attorney, or to a designated attorney, or to the holder, or to the clerk of the court, to enter an appearance for the maker and confess a judgment against him for a sum therein named, upon default of payment of the note. Such are invalid in many states. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Judgment paper. In English practice, a sheet of paper containing an incipit of the pleadings in an action at law, upon which final judgment is signed by the master.

Judgment proof. Descriptive of all persons against whom judgments for money recoveries are of no effect; e.g., persons who are insolvent, who do not have sufficient property within the jurisdiction of the court to satisfy the judgment, or who are protected by statutes which exempt wages and property from execution.

Judgment quasi in rem. A judgment based on the court's jurisdiction over the defendant's interest in property within the jurisdiction of the court and not on the court's jurisdiction over the person of the defendant (in personam) or over the thing itself (in rem).

Judgment record. In English practice, a parchment roll, on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. In American practice, the record is signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 79. See also Docket; Judgment docket.

Judgment recovered. A plea by a defendant that the plaintiff has already recovered that which he seeks to obtain by his action. This was formerly a species of sham plea, often put in for the purpose of delaying a plaintiff's action. Under current rules practice, the defense of prior judgment would be raised as an affirmative defense. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(c).

Judgment roll. See Roll.

Judgment void on its face. A judgment or order is "void on its face" when its invalidity is apparent upon inspection of judgment roll. Application of Behymer, 130 Cal.App. 200, 19 P.2d 829, 830.

Judicature acts (England). The acts under which the present system of courts in England was organized and is continued.

The statutes of 36 & 37 Vict., c. 66, and 38 & 39 Vict., c. 77, which went into force November 1, 1875, with amendments in 1877, 40 & 41 Vict., c. 9, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict., c. 78, and 1881, 44 & 45 Vict., c. 68, made very important changes in the organization of, and methods of procedure in, the superior courts of England, consolidating them together so as to constitute one supreme court of judicature, consisting of two divisions,—her majesty's high court of justice, having chiefly original jurisdiction; and her majesty's court of appeal, whose jurisdiction is chiefly appellate.

See also Judicial Acts.

Judicial act. An act which involves exercise of discretion or judgment. It is also defined as an act by court or magistrate touching rights of parties or property brought before it or him by voluntary appearance, or by prior action of ministerial officers. An act by member of judicial department in construing law or applying it to a particular state of facts. State ex rel. Tharel v. Board of Com'r's of Creek County, 188 Okl. 184, 107 P.2d 542, 549. An act of administrative board if it goes to determination of some right, protection of which is peculiar office of courts. Belk's Dept. Store v. Guilford County, 222 N.C. 441, 23 S.E.2d 897, 902. An act which imposes burdens or confers privileges according to finding of some person or body whether a general rule is applicable or according to discretionary judgment as to propriety.
